This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

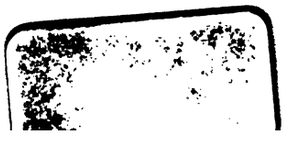
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

60006062/5

399 L. 21



ENCYCLOPÆDIA METROPOLITANA;

OR,

UNIVERSAL DICTIONARY OF KNOWLEDGE,

On an Original Plan:

COMPRISING THE TWOFOLD ADVANTAGE OF

A PHILOSOPHICAL AND AN ALPHABETICAL ARRANGEMENT,

WITH APPROPRIATE ENGRAVINGS.

EDITED BY

THE REV. EDWARD SMEDLEY, M.A.,

LATE FELLOW OF SIDNEY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE;

THE REV. HUGH JAMES ROSE, B.D.,

PRINCIPAL OF KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON;

AND

THE REV. HENRY JOHN ROSE, B.D.,

LATE FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

VOLUME XVII.

[MISCELLANEOUS AND LEXICOGRAPHICAL, VOL. 4.]

LONDON:

B. FELLOWES; F. AND J. RIVINGTON; DUNCAN AND MALCOLM; SUTTABY AND CO.; E. HODGSON; J. DOWDING; G. LAWFORD; J. M. RICHARDSON; J. BOHN; T. ALLMAN; J. BAIN; S. HODGSON; F. C. WESTLEY; L. A. LEWIS; T. HODGES; AND H. WASHBOURNE; ALSO J. H. PARKER, AND T. LAYCOCK, OXFORD; AND J. AND J. J. DEIGHTON, CAMBRIDGE.

1845.

3 9 . d . 21.

LONDON: PRINTED BY WILLIAM CLOWES AND SONS, STAMFORD STREET.

CONTENTS TO VOL. XVII.

THE LEXICON. Dr. Richardson.

ORIENTAL GEOGRAPHY, MYTHOLOGY, AND STATISTICS. AFRICAN GEOGRAPHY. ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY. The Rev. George Cecil Renouard, M.A., F.L.S., late Fellow of Sidney-Sussex College, Cambridge.

EUROPEAN GEOGRAPHY. BRITISH COUNTIES. Thomas Myers, Esq., LL.D.

NORTH AMERICAN GEOGRAPHY. Charles Vignoles, Esq., Civil Engineer.

SOUTH AMERICAN GEOGRAPHY. Captain Bonnycastle, Royal Engineers.

CUBA. Charles Vignoles, Esq., and Captain Bonnycastle.

BOTANY. Thomas Edwards, Esq., F.L.S.

ZOOLOGY. VERTEBRALS. J. F. South, Esq., F.L.S., Lecturer on Anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital.

ZOOLOGY. INVERTEBRALS. Thomas Bell, Esq., F.L.S., and J. E. Gray, Esq., F.L.S.

LAW. Francis Smedley, Esq.

COPT. COSSACK. CRESCENT. DIALECT. The Rev. G. C. Renouard.

COMITIA. CONSUL. CRETE. CROMLECH. CUMÆ. CURIA. DÆMON. DIANA. DICTATOR. The Rev. Henry Thompson, M.A., St. John's College, Cambridge.

CONCORDANCE. CONFESSION. CONGREGATION. CONSECRATION. CONSISTORY. CONVOCATION. COUNCIL. CREED. DEACON. The Rev. Thomas Hartwell Horne, B.D., St. John's College, Cambridge.

CONFIRMATION. The Rev. Archdeacon Hale.

CULDEES. The Right Rev. Bishop Russell.

DIALLING. Peter Barlow, Esq., F.R.S., Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

COHORT. COLIPHIUM. COLOPHON. COLOSSUS. COMET. COMUS. IMMACULATE CONCEPTION. CONCLAVE. CONCORDAT. CONFARREATION. CONFECTIONS. CONFERENCE. CONGIUS. CONSENTES. CONSUS. COOKERY. CORACLE. CORPORALE. CORPUS CHRISTI. COVENANT. COUNT. COURSING. CRAMP. CRANTARA. CROSIER. CROSS. CRYSTAL. CUCKING-STOOL. CUCKOLD. CUIRASS. CUPID. CURFEW. CYBELE. CYCLOPES. CYMBALS. CYNOCEPHALI. DÆMOGORGON. DAGON. DALMATIC. DANCING. DARICK. DEFENDER OF THE FAITH. DEGRADATION. DEGREES. DESPOT. DEVIL. DEVISE. DIADEM. DICE. DIET. ETC., and the BRITISH TOPOGRAPHY. The Editor.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA METROPOLITANA;

OR,

UNIVERSAL DICTIONARY OF KNOWLEDGE.

Fourth Division.

MISCELLANEOUS AND LEXICOGRAPHICAL.

COHORT. COHORT, Vossius and others say, from χόρτος, hortus septum; sepire, to enclose or enfold; and any thing was so called, quod in anteriore domo vel villâ clausum et septum esset. Vossius. And Varro,—Cohors, quod, ut in villâ ex pluribus textis conjungitur, ac quiddam fit unum, sic hæc ex manipulis pluribus copulatur Cohors. lib. iv.

A band, or united body of soldiers.

Whole bands or cohorts, if any of them gave ground and reculed, he tithed, that is to say, executed every tenth man of them: and the rest, he allowed barly instead of wheat to feede upon. Holland. Suetonius. Augustus, fol. 47.

Eight cohorts by themselves consisting of four hundred in a band were enrolled, even the most able and choice men of all others. Id. Livius, fol. 254.

> Hence to the gates cast round thine eyes, and see
> What conflux issuing forth, or entering in,——
> Legions, and cohorts, turmes of horse, and wings.
> Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 66.

The word Cohort in its usual application has wandered far from its original meaning, and the reasons assigned are for the most part fanciful and unsatisfactory. The Cohortes, or Courts in building, are often circular, say the Etymologists; and bodies of men when closing together assume a circular form. This is sufficiently silly, but we have nothing better which we can offer.

Modestus and Vegetius, the great authorities on Roman military antiquities, give ten Cohorts to each Legion. Of these the first consisted of picked men; it was intrusted with the care of the Eagle, and formed on the right. It consisted of 1105 foot and 132 horse, and was termed Cohors militaris. The second consisted of 555 foot and 66 horse, it was called Cohors quinquagenaria; the third was of the same number, but of choicer troops, because it formed on the centre of the front line. The fourth and fifth had each 600 men and 66 cavalry, and the last of these formed on the left. The five remaining Cohorts were posted in the second line. The sixth had 555 foot and 66 horse; these being arranged behind the first Cohort were also picked men. The seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth 555 foot and 56 horse. This mixture of cavalry and infantry explains the words Cohors equitata, which are frequently met with on Inscriptions, and which have puzzled such Antiquaries as have considered Cohors to be applicable to infantry alone. COHORT. — COIF.

Rosinus (Ant. Rom. iv. 5) has fallen into a most unaccountable error, when he says that Cohorts are never mentioned by Livy. The word is of frequent occurrence in that historian. Cohortes auxiliariæ were those furnished by the allied powers. Prætoriana the General's body guard; from which, under Augustus, first proceeded the Prætorian Bands, afterwards so powerful in Imperial Rome. Togata, the police, or gens d'armerie of the Capital. Vigilum, (of which there were seven in Rome, one to each two regions of the City,) a band which acted as night Patrols.

COIF, v. / Coif, n. / Coi'fed, / Cof'fure. } Fr. coife; It. coffia; Mid. Lat. cuphia; Dutch, huve; Ger. haube. Vossius, de Vitiis; from Ger. heben, levare, tollere in altum, to heave, to raise on high. Wachter gives, haube, crista, which was subsequently applied ad mitras, and to other coverings of the head. Belgæ, he adds, dicunt huif and kuif promiscuè; for h and k are interchangeable in all dialects.

Wherefore first I dyd throwe away my quylted cappe, and my other close bonnettes, and onely dyd lye in a thynne coyfe, whiche I haue euer sens vsed both wynter and somer.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book iv.

> Judges of the kinge's lawes
> He countes them foles and dawse,
> Sergeauntes of the coyfe eke,
> He sayeth they are to seke.
> Skelton. Why come ye not to Court.

Ouer that her cappe, (made after the coife fashion of cloth of gold) called Shapka Zempska, edged with some riche furre, and set with pearle and stone.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Maners of the Russes, vol. i. fol. 497.

COIF. COIGN.

Then after the said Archbishop had blessed the Quene's corone, seing, Oremus Deus tuorum, he sett the crowne uppon her hede, whereupon was a coyff put by my seid lady for the conservation of the holy uncion, whiche is afterwarde to be delyverede unto the saide Archebishop.

Leland. Coronation of Lady Elizabeth, King Henry VII.'s Wife, vol. iv. fol. 224.

I must therefore repeat it, that I am pleased with the coiffure now in fashion, and think it shews the good sense which at present very much reigns among the valuable part of the sex.

Spectator, No. 98.

And when th' invidious hand of time
By stealth shall silver o'er my head,
Still pleasure's rosy walks I'll tread,
Still with the jocund Muses rhyme,
And haunt the green Idalian bow'rs,
Whilst wanton boys of Paphos' court
In myrtles hide my staff for sport,
And coif me, where I'm bald, with flow'rs.

Cooper. The Call of Aristippus, epis. 4.

At once, in bright procession spied,
The female world was at my side,
From point, and saucy ermine, down
To the plain coif, and russet gown.

Brooke. Fables. The Temple of Hymen.

In Legal Costume, the Coif is a circular piece of black silk edged with lawn which is worn on the head, as the distinguishing badge of such English Barristers as are called to the degree of Serjeants at Law. As it is now always customary that the Judges should become Serjeants, previous to their elevation to the bench, they also continue to wear this ornament.

The origin of this singular piece of costume has been generally referred to the period when the Civilians, who were all Ecclesiastics, were desirous of pleading in our Courts of Common Law, notwithstanding a canonical inhibition; and it has been supposed that it was adopted by them with a view of concealing the clerical tonsure. This, however, though affirmed by many writers of authority, and even by Sir Henry Spelman, seems very questionable. The early portraits of our Judges exhibit them with this ornament of very much larger dimensions than it is worn at present, (distinct certainly from that black cap, which is now only put on at the moment of passing a capital sentence, though at least as large;) and it seems scarcely probable that an ornament of such size would be necessary for the mere purpose of the concealment of the tonsure.

The Coif is so peculiarly the attribute of the Serjeant, and consequently of the Judge, that in the tables of precedency, rank is assigned to "such Barons of the Exchequer as are of the degree of the Coif;" probably in order to distinguish those who are Judges from the cursitor Barons in the same court. Still it might so happen that the cursitor Baron might be a Serjeant, and this would introduce some difficulty.

There is much curious matter respecting the degree of the Coif, in a work by the late Serjeant Wynne, entitled Observations Touching the Antiquity and Dignity of the Degree of Serjeant at Law, printed in 1765.

COIGN, s. Fr. coing, an angle, a nook or corner, from the Lat. cuneus, a wedge. See Coin.

Mene. See you yond coin o'th' Capitol, yond corner stone?
Sicin. Why what of that?
Mene. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevaile with him. Shakspeare. Coriolanus, fol 29.

——————— No iutty frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed. Id. Macbeth, fol. 134.

COIL, v. the Fr. cuellir; It. cogliere, to gather; from the Lat. colligere, is the common Etymology. It may be connected with, to coll, to embrace. COIL. COIMBATOOR.

——————— Mazy still
We trod through dusky bowels of a rock,
While our conductor gather'd, as he stepp'd,
A clue, which careful in his hand he coil'd.

Glover. Athenaid, book xix.

Coil, v. } The Ger. kollern, seu kolleren, increpare,
Coil, n. } objurgare; and this from the noun koller, q. d. to seize any one by the collar, is the Etymology usually accepted from Skinner. Lye thinks the noun coil may be from the preceding verb; and applied a strepitu, qui fit glomerando.—The Dutch and Ger. quellen, and wellen, (A. S. weallan, weallian, and Eng. well,) are ebullire, to spring out as a well or spring; and then æstuare, fervere. Somner says, "weallan, to be very angry, to be rough, and troublous, to rage, it. to breake or burst out, to seethe, to boil." The consequential usage (placed first by Somner) is obvious from the primitive, and very well accounts for quoile, (as Lye in Junius writes the verb) coyle or coil, as applied in English; sc.

To make any bubbling, bustling, confused, stir, or noise.

For whan they hadde sore coyled hym and had reuiled hym with muche despyteous language, they sent hym also empty home to hys lorde. Udall. Luke, ch. xx.

He is as hote as any man at spoile,
But at a breache he keepeth no such coyle.

Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre, fol. 60.

He challeng'd me; and heere began the broile:
He thought with banding braue to keep the coile,
And that because mens iudgment fauour'd me.

Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 127.

Hales, set by himself, most gravely did smile,
To see them about nothing keep such a coil:
Apollo had spied him, but, knowing his mind,
Passt by and call'd Faulkland, that sat just behind.

Suckling. A Sessions of the Poets.

And now and then sweet Philomel would wail,
Or stock-doves plain amid the forest deep,
That drowsy rustled to the sighing gale;
And still a coil the grasshopper did keep;
Yet all these sounds yblent inclined all to sleep.

Thomson. The Castle of Indolence, can. 1.

To tame each hydra of the soul,
Each lurking pest, which mocks its birth,
And ties its spirit down to earth,
Immers'd in mortal coil.

Whitehead. Ode, 6.

COIMBATOOR, (properly Koyamaturu,) is a small Province on the declivity of the Eastern G'háts, and extending beyond the junction of the two chains of hills bearing that name, which skirt the table-land of the Peninsula. It is bounded by the Mysore, (Maïsúr,) Salem, (Zélem or Chélem,) the southern Districts of the Carnátic, and the Province of Malabar. Its extent is about fifty miles from north to south, and not quite so much from east to west. Its elevation is every where considerable; the Kumbetarine (Kambataraïn ?) hill, in (11° 35½′ north and 77° 10½′ east) is 5548 feet above the level of the sea, by Colonel Lambton's admeasurement, (As. Res. xii. 356—358,) while the lower levels are not more than 700 or 800. About forty miles due west of Dárá-puram, there is a remarkable break in the Western G'háts, called the Páli-g'hát-cherí Pass, which leaves a wide road into Malabar, nearly on a level with the foot of the mountains on each side. This singular defile is about thirty-one miles in length and fourteen in width at its western, which is nearly twice as wide

Situation and boundaries.

Paligautcherry Pass.

COIMBATOOR.

at its eastern extremity; it has therefore the shape of a funnel.

Climate. Notwithstanding the elevation of its level, the climate of this Province is far from temperate. In the coldest months (December and January) the thermometer ranges from 60° to 80°, (Fahrenheit,) and in the hottest from 80° to 100°. Heavy dews and early fogs are experienced in the higher regions in January and February; but a dry soil, little or no stagnant water, and very moderate rains, render Coimbatoor, on the whole, a very healthy country. Some of the southern districts are low and marshy, and of course form an exception to this general character.

Rivers. The plains and vallies of this Province are watered by many streams which join the Kávéri, and by that river itself, which for a considerable extent forms the eastern boundary of Coïmbatúr. Though supplied by sources which are all on the eastern side of the G'háts, that stream is filled by both the monsoons; by the south-west from June to August, and by the north-east from October to December. Next to it the most considerable river is the Amara-vati, which falls into it about ten miles below Karúr, and is therefore often called the Karúr River. The third is the B'haváni, which crosses the northern districts, and joins the Kávéri near B'haváni Kudál.

Cultivation The climate varies much, according to local circumstances; and in the mountainous districts at the northern angle of the Province, is widely different from that of the south-eastern plains. While the latter are parched up with drought, the hills enjoy three rainy seasons; the first one month after the vernal, the second two months before, and the last two months after the autumnal equinox. These districts, though much neglected, and depopulated by war and misrule, are better cultivated, and in a more flourishing condition than most of the neighbouring countries.

Mountains. The mountains are in general rocky, with vertical strata running north and south, much intersected by fissures; and there is but little wood. This is particularly the case in a tract of about thirty miles in length and sixteen in breadth, which separates Coïmbatúr from Maïsúr, and forms the junction between the Eastern and and Western G'háts. Being divided into three Nád'hus or Districts, this tract is commonly called "The Three Naads:" latterly it has been better known by the name of the Neelgherry Mountains, from a remarkable peak to which that term (Nila-giri, the Blue Mountain) particularly applies. This, which is probably the highest land to the south of the Chambal, was, till lately, wholly unknown to the European inhabitants of the Peninsula; and the party who first explored these highlands were not a little astonished to find, when they awoke in the morning, that the water in their pitchers was covered with ice half an inch thick; they unluckily fixed on the worst season of the year for such an expedition, the middle of winter. M. Leschenault de la Tour, a well-known French Naturalist, who was one of the number, has given a very interesting summary of their observations. This tract is evidently a very elevated table-land, almost inaccessible from the singular abruptness of the lower declivities, and from the want of skill with which the paths have been (perhaps intentionally) formed. But when once the traveller has surmounted these difficulties, he finds himself in a richly diversified country, where hills of a gentler and circular outline are separated by vallies watered by clear and rapid streams, while the sloping grounds are covered with woods and corn-fields. Nothing, in short, but a beneficent government is wanting to encourage the industry of the inhabitants, and make this mountainous abode almost a terrestrial Paradise. The climate in summer approaches as nearly as possible to our own, differing, if at all, only by having a lower temperature. In 1818 and 1819, the greatest heat in England was 91° and 86° of Fahrenheit's scale; and in 1820, on these mountains, between the parallels of 11° and 12° north latitude, it never reached 80°, (Asiatic Journal, xii. 142.) Every thing seemed to indicate the salubrity of the climate, and to promise, when proper accommodations for invalids have been provided, an excellent retreat for those whose health has suffered from the oppressive heat of the plains below.

COIMBATOOR.

Neelgherry.

Inhabitants The inhabitants of the three Nád'hus are no less remarkable than the country which they occupy. "They are not numerous," says M. Leschenault, "and they appear to be well-disposed, leading a happy and independent life." They consist of three castes, who are said to differ from each other entirely in language, manners, and customs; the Todevies, Koties, and Bergies; the two former occupy the hills, and the first rank above the second. They are supposed to be the original occupants of these hills. The Todevies are migratory herdsmen, living in circular huts, like those of the Turkmans in Western Asia, whom they resemble in other respects, but are of course less civilized. They are strong and hardy, keep their head and feet always uncovered, and have a cast of features resembling that of Europeans, whom they also approach in fairness of complexion. A plurality of husbands is one of their singular usages. The Koties have more of an Asiatic appearance and complexion than the Todevies, with whom they have scarcely any peculiarity in common, except that of always going bareheaded and barefooted. They are the labourers and artizans, and practise the elegant accomplishments of music and dancing, as well as more useful and indispensable crafts. The Bergies, who are the farmers and landholders, are supposed to be a colony from the Maïsúr, and still pay a sort of corn-rent to the Todevies in the hills. The Bergí language is a dialect of the Canarase or Carnátaca; while those of the mountaineers (who cannot understand each other) are supposed to be related to the Tamil. It is singular that the visitors from Madras should not have determined that point at once. The native productions of the mountains, as may be supposed, are those of cold or temperate climates, whortleberries, bilberries, strawberries, blackberries, anemones, geraniums, plantains, roses, willows, &c. The dyer's barbary and broom-like septospermum (S. scoparium) which bears an eatable fruit, are particularly noticed by M. Leschenault. "The soil," he adds, "is of a reddish or blackish colour, deep, light, and very fertile;" and the vegetables cultivated are much like those of Southern Europe. Buffaloes and black cattle are plentiful, but there were no sheep till some were introduced from Madras. Common poultry and different kinds of game are found in abundance. The air is moist, pure, and so bracing, that it seemed to M. Leschenault like breathing that of Europe; and though he was scarcely recovered from a dangerous illness, it completely restored his health and appetite in a couple of days. One party from Madras,

Vegetable productions.

Animals.

Climate.

COIMBATOOR.

who visited these mountains, in February, 1820, were not so fortunate, as their attendants were attacked with fever and dysentery; but this was evidently owing to a thoughtless exposure to the keen night air; an imprudence which natives of a colder climate than that of the tropics could not have risked without extreme danger.

Soil.

The soil is almost every where impregnated with muriatic salts and nitrates, and the well-water is generally brackish. In some places large isolated masses of rock project from the surface of the ground, and the soil is poor and barren; though in the plains it is usually good, and water is found almost every where on digging. The value of the land depends principally on the facility with which water can be obtained; and in some places it rises at a depth of only twelve, while in others they must dig through twenty-seven feet before they find any. Machines, called Capilli and Yatam, are much used for watering the plantations; and ground so irrigated are called Bagaït. Rice is much cultivated near the Amara-vati, in South Coimbatoor. Sheep are bred in large flocks, especially near Aranasi.

Arts and manufactures.

Of the few arts or manufactures carried on, (for in this respect the inhabitants of this Province are far behind their neighbours in Maïsúr,) weaving is the only one which has attained any degree of perfection: and all appear to have been introduced by foreigners.

In 1817 the revenue was estimated as follows:

Revenue.

	Star pagodas.
Land tax	581,996
Customs	35,224
Spirit monopoly (Ab-cári)	6,169
Tobacco Ab-cári	40,719
Stamps	2,786
	666,894 = £266,757.

But as two heads, the salt duties and smaller branches of revenue, are omitted in this estimate, the whole may be taken at the round sum of £300,000.

The natives are almost exclusively Hindùs, a large Tamil tribe of them, called Vaylalars, being pure Súdras; and the Province seems formerly to have been an independent State, bearing the name of Kanjam. It was conquered by the Rájás of Maïsúr before the middle of the XVIIth century, and having been ceded to Great Britain in 1799, now forms a collectorship under the Madras Presidency.

Coimbatoor.

Coimbatoor, (Kóyamatúru,) in 10° 52′ north and 77° 5′ east, the Capital of the Province, is in an elevated position on the eastern declivity of the mountains which form the western boundary. It is tolerably built, and much recovered from the ravages it sustained in the wars with Tipú. A Temple of great fame at Penura, two miles off, dedicated to Siva, and Mael Chittoombura.

called Maïl Chittumbara, is one of the three spared by Tipú, when he ordered all the Hindù temples to be destroyed. Its walls and gateways are richly sculptured, but in a coarse and wretched style. It is supposed by the natives to have been erected by one of the Kings of Madura, 3000 years ago. Besides the ordinary sorts of produce, two carminative seeds, called Jiva and Danga, common salt, saltpetre, and iron, are exported from this place or its immediate neighbourhood. The District is governed by an hereditary Chief of the Vaylalar caste, and was originally tributary to the Rájá of Madura. It was taken from Tipú in 1783, and in 1790, was retaken by his General, Camar-ed-dín-khán; but was with the rest of the Province finally ceded to the British Government in 1799. It is now the station of a regiment of cavalry. COIMBATOOR.

Produce.

Daraporum.

Daraporam, (D'harápuram, i. e. the city of the rainvat,) at the foot of the G'háts, is a populous town, in a rich open country, in 10° 37′ north and 77° 35′ east. It has a large mud-fort, and two canals, which furnish water for extensive plantations of rice; but tobacco is the staple production of the place. It was taken from Típú in 1783, but restored at the peace of 1784.

Animaley.

Aneï-malaya (Elephant-hill) in 10° 31′ north and 77° 1′ east, is a great thoroughfare between Malabar and the Southern Carnátic, being opposite to the wide passage of Páli-g'hát-cherí. The surrounding country is divided between twelve poligars; but it has been so much desolated by contentions between the Náyirs, that it is almost all overgrown with wood. Its forests contain much excellent timber, but they are too remote from water carriage to allow of its being felled with any advantage.

Caroor.

Karúr is a well-built populous town, on a rising ground not far from the junction of the Amara-vati and Kávéri. It stands in 10° 53′ north and 78° 4′ east, and formerly had a neat fort with a large temple, which was undermined in the siege by the British troops in 1781. The Amara-vati, which was anciently the boundary between the dominions of the Rájás of Maïsúr and Trichinopoly (Tiru-chiná-palli,) is dry at some seasons, so that the crops of rice are not so abundant as the richness of the soil would allow. It has a strong fort, and the command over an extensive district.

B'havaunce kooddaul.

B'haváni-kudál, at the confluence of the B'haváni and Kávéri rivers, in 11° 26′ north and 77° 44′ east, is venerated as a place of great sanctity by the Hindùs. It is a well-built town, of a moderate size, and healthy, notwitstanding its proximity to the rivers. The surrounding country is generally flat, and extremely fertile; but the banks of the B'haváni on the northwest are varied and picturesque. This town has two celebrated temples, one dedicated to Vishnu, and the other to Siva. The latter was built by a feudatory Chief, subject to the Rájá of Madura, when all the country south of Tanjáúr was called Angaraka, and formed a part of that Kingdom.

Eroad.

Eródu, in 11° 21′ north and 77° 45′ east, is a small town, which strongly illustrates the consequences of the continual warfare and oppression by which this country has been desolated. In the time of Haïder Alí it contained about 3000 houses, but during Típú's reign they dwindled away to 1000, and the place was completely ruined in the invasion under General Meadows. In 1801, however, it had recovered so far as to have 400 houses, and it has doubtless increased rapidly since that period. The neighbouring lands are watered by a canal from the B'haváni; and a battalion of seapoys (sipáhís) is stationed in the mud-fort, by which the town is protected.

Seewun Samoodur.

Sivana Samudra, in North Coïmbatúr, is an island in the Kávéri, about nine miles long and one broad. It is the site of an ancient city, which communicated with the opposite bank of the river by a fine bridge 900 feet long; of this bridge, and of several Hindù temples, gates, walls, and houses, extensive ruins still remain, embosomed in a high grass, and intermingled with vast banyan trees (Ficus Indica;) but a large statue of Vishnu in a good style of sculpture, and a waterfall of nearly 150 feet perpendicular height over a rocky bed, in the midst of wild scenery, are the objects which render this place peculiarly worthy of the traveller's attention. This fall is about half a mile from the ruins, and three miles further, at Barà Chúkí, there is another, by no means so considerable.

COIMBATOOR. COIN.

Waterfall.

Sattymungalam.

Sattya-mangalam, in 11° 31′ north and 77° 16′ east, has a stone fort, in which some troops are stationed; and the Pettah, or town, scattered over the plain in which it stands, contains a celebrated temple of Vishnu, and a manufactory of coarse cottons.

See Hamilton's Gazetteer and Hindústán; Asiatic Researches, vol. xxi.; Fra Paolino, Travels; Asiatic Journal; and Rennell, Memoir of a Map of Hindústán.

COIMBRA, an ancient City of Portugal, the present Capital of the Province of Beira, and the former Metropolis of the whole Kingdom. It stands on the acclivity of a hill, near the northern bank of the Mondego, which is here crossed by an elegant bridge, composed of a double row of arches. The Town rises gradually from the side of the river, till it assumes an amphitheatrical form, and the Cathedral, Churches, Convents, and other public buildings, give a handsome appearance when viewed from a distance. But the favourable impression which is thus made upon the approaching traveller, is not supported by the interior; for the streets are narrow, steep, and crooked. Coimbra is a place of great antiquity. It was founded by the Romans about 300 years before the Christian era, and was called Conimbriga, or Coimbrica. The ruins of the old town are still to be seen, in a tolerably distinct state near Condusea. It was fortified at an early period of its history, and some of the walls and towers still remain, and form its only defence. But Coimbra derives its greatest celebrity from its University, which was first founded at Lisbon in 1290, but was transferred to this place a few years afterwards, and is now the only one in Portugal. It comprises eighteen Colleges, supported by very ample funds; and the course of study is divided into six branches. These are Theology, Canon law, Civil law, Medicine, Mathematics, and Philosophy, which are taught by thirty-nine Professors. The number of students in 1804 was 1431, and in 1817, 1400. A Botanical garden, and an extensive Library, also belong to this University. Coimbra used to give the title of Duke to one of the sons of the Kings of Portugal. It has undergone several sieges, and suffered greatly by the fatal earthquake of 1755. The rear of Massena's army was made prisoners here in 1810, when Lord Wellington, after the battle of Busaco, retired to occupy the lines of Torres Vedras. Coimbra is about sixty miles nearly south-east of Oporto, and ninety-six north-east of Lisbon. Latitude 40° 12′ 30″ N. and longitude 8° 25′ W.

COIN, v.
COIN, n.
COI'NAGE, COI'NER,
COI'NING,
COI'NING-HOUSE.

Fr. coigner; It. cuniare; Sp. cunar, acuñar, to wedge, and also to coin. Menage and Spelman agree from the Latin cuneus. "Cuneus; sigillum ferreum, quo nummus cuditur; a forma dictum: atque inde coin quasi cune pro moneta." Spelman.

To coin, metaphorically, is to forge, to invent.

> þe kynge's side salle be þe hede & his name writen, > þe croyce side what cite it was in coyned & smitten.
> R. Brunne, p. 239.

> And everich of thise riotours ran,
> Til they came to the tree, and ther they found
> Of Floreins fine of gold ycoined round,
> Wel nigh an eighte bushels, as hem thought.
> Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12704.

> ——————— And more yet
> Of chapmenhode he fonde the weye,
> And eke to coygne the money
> Of sondry metall.
> Gower. Conf. Am., book iv.

In this viii. yere, the kynge caused, in syluer, the halfepeny to be coygned, where, before tyme other coygnes of other metall ranne amonge the people to theyr great noyaunce and losse; and farthingis of syluer were also coygned the selfe same tyme.
Fabyan. Anno 1280.

False forgers of money for coynage atteynted.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurel.

We likewise of our goodness, have licensed the English merchants in our townes of Mosco, Nouogorod the great, and Plesko, that the coiners of the said townes shall melt dollers, and coine money for them.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Emp. priuiledge, vol. i. fol. 381.

> With them march'd sunk (in deep security)
> Profaneness, to be fear'd, for never fearing;
> And by him, new oaths coining, Blasphemy,
> Who names not God, but in a curse, or swearing.
> P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 7.

And as I remember I have red that Edward the III. or els the IV. was the first coined groats, where before they used all pence, and no bigger coin of silver.
Strype. Life of Sir Thomas Smith. Appendix, p. 268.

> And therewithall this gyft I shall thee giue
> In this world now little prosperitie,
> And cuoyne to kepe, as water in a sive.
> Wyat. How to vse the Court and himselfe therin, &c.

SAM. Your coming, friends, revives me, for I learn
Now of my own experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are who friends
Bear in their superscription (of the most
I would be understood) in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head,
Not to be found, though sought.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 189.

BARD. This bottle makes an angell.
FALST. And if it doe, take it for thy labour: and if it make twentie, take them all. I'le answere the coynage.
Shakspeare. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 67.

> And being of uncouth termes a seaslesse coyner,
> Thou cal'st thyselfe unproperly a loyner,
> Whose verse hath quite disserv'd rime and reason.
> Harrington. Orlando. Epigram, 43.

The said congregation shall cause the irons of thy coyning-house taken away by them, be rendred and delivered to Master Robert Richeson.
Knox. History of Reformation, book ii. fol. 163.

> The image on the medal plac'd
> With its bright round of titles grac'd,
> And stampt on British coins shall live,
> To richest ores the value give,
> Or, wrought within the curious mold,
> Shape and adorn the running gold.
> Addison. To Sir Godfrey Kneller. On his Picture of the King.

Cheapness of coinage in England, where it costs nothing, will indeed make money be sooner brought to the mint, than any where else; because there I have the convenience of having it made into money for nothing.
Locke. Considerations of Interest, &c.

For though the schools have introduc'd animalitas, humanitas, corporietas, and some others, yet they hold no proportion with that infinite number of names of substances, to which they never were ridiculous enough to attempt the coining of abstract ones.
Id. Imperfection of Words, book iii. ch. viii.

COIN. — COINQUI-NATE.

It may not be improper to prefix an explanation of some uncommon terms, which I shall be obliged to use, as well as others which I have been under the necessity of coining.

Barrington. To Dr. Maty. On singing Birds.

COINCI'DE, v. Coi'NCIDENCE, Coi'NCIDENCY, Coi'NCIDENT, Coi'NCIDER. } Con, and incidere, (in, and cadere,) to fall into or upon; with any thing else. To fall upon the same point, the same line, the same superficial space; to be equivalent to, to agree with, to concur.

I cannot forbear to denote the strange coincidence that there is between Scripture expressions in this matter, some main stroaks of the orthodox doctrine, and this philosophical conjecture of the state and place of the wicked.

Glanville. The Pre-existence of Souls.

Imitation supposes a copy, and those are two terms of a relation, and cannot be coincident, as, like is not the same.

J. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. vii. sec. 5.

XII. If a rational being, as such, is under an obligation to obey reason, and this obedience or practice of reason, coincides with the observation of truth, these things plainly follow.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, sec. 3.

If any man should suppose that a right line cuts another in two points; it will be found after all, that those two pretended points must co-incide, and make but one point.

Clarke. Leibnitz's Fifth Paper.

Those who discourse metaphysically of the nature of truth, as to the reality of the thing, affirm a perfect coincidence between truth and goodness; and I believe it might be easily made out, that there is nothing in nature perfectly true but what is also really good. South. Sermons, vol. vii. p. 89.

The latter of these may be owing to the will or efficacy of a prior cause, but the former cannot, except we shall maintain with our author, that cause and effect may be co-eval, i. e. co-incident, or the very same thing.

Law. Enquiry, ch. v.

To support this, a view is given to the universal dispensation of God to man as a religious agent: and the coincidency and dependence of his several revelations to him are explained and illustrated.

Warburton. Appendix to the first Edition of the Alliance, (1736.)

I venerate the man whose heart is warm,
Whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life
Coincident, exhibit lucid proof,
That he is honest in the sacred cause.

Cowper. The Task, book ii.

From its [the verb's] readiness συμβδιεω, to co-incide with its noun in completing the sentence, they called it Σύμβαμα, a co-incider. Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. ix. notes.

COINHABITANT, see COHABIT. One who dwells or abides with, one or more, others.

Our being co-inhabitants of the same element, the earth, proves nothing: for by the same reason, worms and fleas should live out of their bodies, and fishes should not.

More. Immortality of the Soul, book ii. ch. xvii.

COI'NHERITANCE, Coi'NHERITOR. } See COHEIR. One who inherits, who is heir with, one or more, others.

For by one spirit we are all baptized into one body, that is, the Spirit of God moves upon the water of baptism, and in that sacrement adopts us into the mysticall body of Christ, and gives us a title to a coinheritance with him.

J. Taylor. The Liberty of Prophecying, sec. 18.

Which [the day of judgment] shal be for the accomplishment of glory both to them and to all other elect of God to be his children and coinheritors with Christ.

Foxe. Martyrs. The Answere of John Lambert, fol. 1013.

COINQUINATE, con, and inquino, from in, and cunio. Festus. And cunio, from the Gr. κοινεῖν, (to make common,) quo notat polluere, contaminare. Vossius in V. Cœnum.

Fr. coinquiner, to coinquinate; pollute, soyle, defile; also to defame. Cotgrave. COINQUI-NATE. — COIT.

——— Halfe heretikes
That wold intoxicate
That wold coinquinate.

Skelton. The Boke of Colin Clout.

COJOIN, Conjoin, so written in Shakspeare.

——— Then 'twas very credent,
Thou may'st co-iogne with something.

Shakspeare. Winter's Tale, fol. 278.

COISTRELL, a kestrel or kastrel, (q. v.) so written in Shakspeare.

He's a coward and a coystrell that will not drinke to my neece, till his brains turne o' th' toe, like a parish top.

Shakspeare. Twelfth Night, fol. 256.

COIT, v. Coit, n. Coi'TING. } Dr. Jamieson thinks that to coit, is to butt, to justle; and derives the word from the Isl. kueita, violenter jactare. The primitive meaning, then, will be To toss, to throw, to cast. And a coit or quoit, Any thing tossed, thrown, or cast.

I am called Chyldhod, in play is all my minde,
To cast a coyte, a cockstele, and a ball,

Sir Thomas More. Workes, c. 3.

HUM. My waiters coited off by you, you flea them!

Ford. The Sun's Darling, act iii. sc. 1.

CARD. With whom?
FER. Happily, with some strong thigh'd bargeman?
Or one o' th' wood-yard, that can quoit the sledge.

Webster. Dutchesse of Malfy, act ii. sc. 5.

Some men wolde say, that in a mediocritie, which I have so muche praised in shootynge, why should not bouling, claishe, pyanes, and koytynge, be as moche commended?

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, fol. 93.

PIST. Thrust him down stayres?
FALS. Quoit him downe (Bardolph.)

Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, act ii. sc. 4.

Another kind of them [blazing starres,] named Discus (resembling a dish or coit, whereof it beareth the name, but in colour like to amber) putteth forth here and there (raies or beames) out of the brimmes and edges thereof.

Holland. Plinie, vol. i. fol. 15.

Strutt is most grave and precise in his description of the game of COITS. "The Quoit seems evidently to have derived its origin from the ancient Discus, and with us in the present day it is a circular plate of iron, perforated in the middle; not always of one size, but larger or smaller to suit the strength or conveniency of the several candidates. To play at this game, an iron pin, called a Hob, is driven into the ground, within a few inches of the top; and at the distance of eighteen, twenty, or more yards, for the distance is optional, a second pin of iron is also made fast in a similar manner, and two or more persons, who are to contend for the victory, stand at one of the iron marks, and throw an equal number of Quoits to the other, and the nearest of them to the Hob are reckoned towards the game. But the determination is discriminately made; for instance, if a Quoit belonging to A lies nearest to the Hob, and a Quoit belonging to B the second, A can claim but one towards the game, though all his other Quoits lie nearer to the mark than all the other Quoits of B; because one Quoit of B being the second nearest to the Hob, cuts out, as it is called, all behind it; if no such Quoit had interfered, then A would have reckoned all his as one each. Having cast all their Quoits, the candidates walk to the opposite side, and determine the state of the play; then taking their stand there, throw their Quoits back again, and continue to do so alternately, as long as the game remains undecided.

COIT. — COLANDER.

"Formerly in the country, the rustics not having the round perforated Quoits to play with, used horse-shoes; and in many places, the Quoit to this day is called a Shoe.

"It is to be observed that Quoits are not only made of different magnitudes to suit the poise of the players, but sometimes the marks are placed at extravagant distances, so as to require great strength to throw the Quoit home; this, however, is contrary to the general rule, and depends upon the caprice of the parties engaged in the contest." (Sports and Pastimes, 69.)

COITION, co, and ire, itum, to go together, to move in unison. Coiture occurs several times in Warner's Albion's England.

Now on this side of the equator, that extream which is next to the earth is animated into the north, and the contrary into the south; so that in coition it applies itself quite oppositely, the coition or attraction being contrary to the verticity or direction.
Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. ii.

And also of their coiture
Surmise directed lawes,
He seem'd in conscience toucht, and sought
To rid him of the cause.
Warner. Albion's England, book viii. ch. xxxvii.

will not speak of coiture,
Nor of conception, naither
It fits I should, for neuer made
I grandsier of my father.
Id. Ib. book v. ch. xxvii.

COJUROR, a fellow juror, or swearer. The Example sufficiently explains the usage.

The solemn forms of oaths: of a compurgator, or cojuror, which kind of oath was very much used by the Anglo-Saxons. The form of this oath is this, "I swear by God, that the oath which N. swore was honest and true."
Wotton. View of Hickes's Thesaurus, by Shelton, p. 59.

COIX, in Botany, a genus of the class Monoecia, order Triandria, natural order Gramineæ. Generic character: male flower, in remote spikes; calyx, glume two-flowered, awnless; corolla, glume awnless: female flower, calyx, glume two-flowered; style two-parted; seeds covered by the calyx

Willdenow describes three species, natives of the East Indies. C. lachryma produces those remarkable seeds called Job's tears; they are of a pale purple colour, perforated at each end; their outer coat resembles porcelain, and is as hard.

COKE, or Coak, Charred Coal, is used in all operations which require intense heat without smoke. It is frequently made from the small dust of coal, which, when roasted in a kiln, runs together and forms masses. In Scotland it is charred in piles. Twelve or fourteen days are sufficient for its production, and a ton of coals furnishes from 700 to 1100 lbs. of Coke.

CO'LANDER, or Cu'llender. Fr. couloir; It. colatojo; Sp. coladero; from the Lat. colare, to strain. Fr. colature, a strainer; used in English by Evelyn.

Whereas contrariwise, many men do let their fortunes run (as it were) through a colander or strainer, wherein the worst stick and remaine in the way behind, whiles the better do passe and run out. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 223.

———For first an ozier colendar provide
Of twigs thick wrought, (such toiling peasants twine,
When thro' streight passages they strein their wine.)
Dryden. Virgil. Georgic, 2. l. 328.

COLAN-DER. — COL-CHESTER.

The brains, from nose, and mouth, and either ear
Came issuing out, as through a colendar
The cruddled milk; or from the press the whey,
Driven down by weights above, is drain'd away.
Id. Ovid. Metamorphoses.

COLASPIS, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Coleoptera, family Chrysomelinæ. Generic character: antennæ nearly the length of the body, almost filiform; maxillary palpi having the last joint larger than the preceding one, and sub-ovoid; body oval, narrowed before.

Type, C. flavicornis, Fab.

COLCHAGUA, a Province of the new Republic, Chili, having the Andes for its eastern limits, the Pacific Ocean forming its western boundary, whilst the Cachapoal river separates its northern frontier from Rancagua, and the Teno divides it on the south from the province of Maule, being about twenty leagues in breadth, north and south, by forty-three in length from east to west.

Its climate is temperate, and soil fertile, watered by numerous small rivers, of which the principal are the Rio Claro, Tinguiririca, Chimbarongo, Teno, and Nilahuc, with several lakes, of which Taguatagua and Caguil are the largest; the former being noted for abundance of water fowl, which frequent its numerous beautiful islands, and for its trout. Caguil abounds also with fish.

This country was formed out of part of the country of the Promaucians, who vigorously resisted the attacks of the first conquerors; but having been compelled to make peace, they have since been faithful allies to the Europeans, and enemies to the unconquered Americans. To form an idea of the territory they so courageously defended, it is worth while to mention that the word Promaucian in Chilese, signifies "Nation of the Country of Delight."

The Capital of Colchagua is San Fernando, in lat. 34° 18′ S. inhabited by 1500 families; it was built in 1742, and has a parish Church, an old Convent, with College, and a handsome Church built by the Jesuits.

The other towns of any note are Rio Clarillo, Roma, Malloa, Topocalma, and Navidad.

Topocalma is a port at the mouth of a River bearing the same name, which passes near the Capital of Chili, and enters the Pacific in 33° 31′ south latitude.

Rapel, a small village near Rapel-lagoon, is noted for a hill in its vicinity, in which there is a singular cavern 150 feet long, and from ten to fifteen wide, with a natural door-way six feet high.

COLCHESTER, an ancient Borough in the County of Essex, the Camulodunum of the Romans, and the Capital of the Trinobantes. As the first Roman colony planted in Britain in the reign of Claudius, A. D. 44, it is sometimes called Colonia only. Scarcely four years after its foundation it was sacked, and its inhabitants massacred in the struggle which Boadicea raised against the tyrants of her country. (Tac. Ann. xiv. 32.) It was, however, very soon rebuilt, and few places in England preserve more extensive vestiges of Roman habitations. A tradition, which is sufficiently refuted by Gibbon, (ch. xiv.) makes Caer Coel, as it was then called by the Britons, the birth-place of Constantine the Great. Helena his mother was once thought to be the daughter of King Coil, and to have attracted the love of Constantius during a three years' siege of her father's Capital. The Saxons gave the town the name of Colon ceaster, or Colone ceaster. It was much harassed by the Danish invasions; but at the time of the compilation of Domesday Book it appears to have been populous and flourishing. In 1218 it was taken by Louis, son of Philip II. of France, who had landed in order to assist the Barons against King John. During the civil war of the Commonwealth, although the townsmen were favourable to the Parliament, the town was occupied by the Royalists, under the gallant Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lisle in 1648. Fairfax besieged it closely for eleven weeks, and when famine compelled the garrison to surrender, these brave and loyal officers who defended it were most foully sentenced to be shot by a Council of War. They are buried in the church of St. Giles, where is a tablet to their memory.

COL-CHESTER. — COLCHIS.

The Town occupies the north side of an eminence on the river Colne, which is crossed by three bridges. It has been encircled by walls, still partly standing, though greatly decayed. Their circumference is one mile and three-quarters; and contains a castle, which was once a place of great strength, and has for a long time past been used as a House of Correction. Colchester consists of sixteen parishes; eight being within the walls, four without them, and four in the liberties; and it contains twelve parish Churches. St. Peter's is considered the chief. It existed previous to the Norman Conquest, and in the reign of Edward the Confessor, was held by two Priests for a small quit rent. Excepting St. Peter's, St. James's, and St. Mary's, which are spacious and handsome within, especially the two former, the churches are of indifferent architecture, having been built partly of Roman brick and the rubbish of other edifices. Colchester is a place of considerable trade and manufacture, about a third of the families inhabiting it being engaged in business. The principal manufacture consists of woollen cloths, particularly baize, which was introduced by the Dutch in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and formerly afforded employment to 20,000 persons; but owing to the late war their number has considerably decreased. Oysters, dredged from the Colne, are carried as an article of traffic to London, where they are highly esteemed. Several large vessels have been built here. There is a fine quay on the river, which has been rendered navigable, and the water flows from five to seven feet at neap, and from nine to ten feet at spring tides. Vessels of 100 tons or more can come up to it; and Colchester is considered a port, though eight or nine miles from the nearest sea. Colchester is a liberty in itself, divided into four wards; and it is a borough, returning two Members to Parliament, which privilege has been enjoyed since the 23d of Edward I. The right of election is vested in the Mayor, Aldermen, Common Council, and free Burgesses not receiving alms, who in the whole now exceed 1500.

Population in 1821, 6046. Distant eighteen miles south-west from Ipswich, fifty-one north-east from London

COLCHIS, an ancient Kingdom, bounded on the west by the Euxine Sea, and on the east by Iberia. The range of Caucasus enclosed it on the north as far as Dioscurias or Sebastopolis, hod. Isgaour, and on the south it stretched to Trebisond, the seat of the later Greek Emperors. By the writers of the lower Empire, Colchis is called Lazica. It is now partly known as Mingrelia, partly as Guria, and partly as Imeriti. The chief river is the Phasis, hod. Faxz, on the mouth of which stood a city of the same name. Æa on the same river. Cyta, hod. Cotatis, the birth-place of Medea, on the Rheon, a branch of the same stream. Sarapana. Scanda, which retains the same title. Archæopolis, hod. Ruki. Pityus, hod. Pitchinda. And a passage between the sea and a mountain, Validus Murus, hod. Derbend, of the same meaning. The ancient celebrity of Colchis was derived from the Argonautic expedition. For its Geography, may be consulted Strabo, xi.; Pliny, vi. 5. 19, &c.; Chardin, Voyage en Perse, i.; and Peyssonnel, Sur la Commerce de la Mer Noire; and all the particulars which can be traced of its history and revolutions, are skilfully compressed into a narrow compass by Gibbon in his XLIId Chapter.

COLCHICUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Trigynia, natural order Juncı. Generic character: calyx a spathe; corolla deeply six-cleft; tube arising from the root; capsules three, connected and inflated.

There are ten species, natives of Europe. C. autumnale is found in meadows in Suffolk.

COLCOTHAR, Arab.; Gr. χαλκῖτις, and in middle Gr. χολκοθάριον, the substance which remains after either the natural or the artificial calcination of vitriol. It is called by artists Crocus martis, and is used as a polisher of glass, steel, &c.

COLD, adj
COLD, s.
CO'LDLY,
CO'LDNESS,
COLD-BLOODED,
COLD-HEARTED,
COLD-KIND,
COLD-COMPLEXIONED.

The past participle from A. S. kel-an; to keel or cool, coled, col'd, cold; Ger. kulen, frigefacere, to stiffen. It is applied metaphorically to the passions. See to COOL.

He ne dorste þo carȝe nogt of þe wynter cours.
R. Gloucester, p. 313.

The slowe caȝtȝf for colde. wolde ne corn talȝe
In somē for hus slewthe. he shal have defaut.
Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 141

What is this world? what axen men to have?
Now in his love, now in his cold grave
Alone withouten any compagnie.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2780.

And with that word his speche faille began,
For from his feet up to his brest was come
The cold of deth, that had him overnome.
Id. Ib. v. 2802.

In frostie weather I was warme
and burning whot,
But when the bees and birds did swarme,
full cold God wot.
Turbervile. Of the time he first began to Loue, &c.

Couldlie, and to to tymerous his sentence he doth geue.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetrye.

For also they thought that he hadde bene negligent in causyng the confederates to assemble, and that he had coldly encouraged the armye. Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 51.

Either we must think him [Adam] worse provided for by his Maker, or else that Paradice should have ever been in such a celestial serenity, that there would have been no need of any thing to defend him against the hard and sharp, the heat and cold, of the air and changing season. Feltham. Resolves, 52.

COLD. — COLE-RAINE.

——————Thou cold-blooded slaue,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Beene sworne my souldier, bidding me depend
Vpon thy starres, thy fortune, and thy strength,
And dost thou now fall ouer to my foes?
Shakspeare. King John, fol. 9.

CLEO. Not know me yet?
ANT. Cold-hearted toward me?
Id. Antony and Cleopatra, fol. 358.

Down he descended from his snow-soft chair,
But all unwares with his cold-kind embrace
Unhous'd thy virgin soul from her fair biding place.
Milton. Ode. On the Death of a Fair Infant, l. 20.

When thou impressest, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? when thou wilt inflame,
How coldly these impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame.
Shakspeare. A Lover's Complaint.

Those glances worke on me like the weake shine
The frosty sun throws on the Appennine,
When the hills active coldnesse doth go neere
To freeze the glimmering taper to his spheare.
F. Beaumont. The Glance.

This unequalness in acting, these heats and these colds in religion, when once they appear, (and how can they chuse but appear some time or other?) will draw upon a man the suspicion, of hypocrisy and dissimulation. Atterbury. Sermon, 11. vol. iv.

All o'er confus'd the guilty lover stood,
The light forsook his eyes, his cheeks the blood;
An icy horrour shiver'd in his look,
As to the cold-complexion'd nymph he spoke.
Garth. The Dispensary, can. 6. l. 263.

We may take it for granted, that we are not so disposed as we ought to be towards them [spiritual interests] if we can forget them for any long time, or reflect on them with indifference and coldness. Atterbury. Sermon, 1. vol. ii.

When strength decays, and optics fail,
And cold and penury prevail,
Our labours spare the matron's sight,
We ask but faint supplies of light.
Cotton. Riddles.

It is in vain that we would coldly gaze
On such as smile upon us; the heart must
Leap kindly back to kindness, though disgust
Hath wean'd it from all worldlings.
Lord Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, can. 1. st. 53.

COLDENIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Tetragynia, natural order Borragineæ. Generic character: calyx, four-leaved; corolla, funnel-shaped; styles four; nuts two, two-celled.

One species, C. procumbens, an annual, native of the East Indies.

COLDSTREAM, a Town in the Shire of Berwick, in Scotland, on the river Tweed, which is passed by a handsome bridge, making it a great thoroughfare. It was anciently called Lennox. The town is remarkable only as having been the head-quarters of General Monk before he marched into England to restore Charles II., and as having its name preserved to the present day as the title of the Regiment of Guards,—nulli secundus,—which he then raised in it. Distant forty-six miles south-east from Edinburgh, 334 north from London. Population in 1801, 2269; in 1811, 2384; in 1821, 2801. Coldstream once had a Cistertian Nunnery, of which a vault only is now remaining.

COLEOPTERA, in Zoology, a class of insects including all those whose wings are covered by coriaceous elytra, or wing-covers.

COLERAINE, a Town of Ireland, in the County of Londonderry. It is agreeably situated on both sides of the river Bann, about four miles from the sea. The rapidity of the river repels the tide, and renders the navigation up to the town difficult; on this account it has but little trade. The salmon fishery, however, is one of the most extensive in the Island. Coleraine was formerly a place of great consideration, and the See of a Bishop. It was repaired and walled in during the administration of Sir John Perrot, and was made the chief Town of the County; but it is now only the head of one of the Baronies in the Shire of Londonderry. In the year 1213 a castle was erected here, and in the year 1224 a monastery was built. It returns one Member to the Imperial Parliament. Distant 145 miles north from Dublin.

COLE-RAINE, — COLICK.

COLEUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Gymnospermia. Generic character: calyx, two-lipped, superior lip four-cleft; corolla, superior lip four-cleft, inferior lip ovate, concave; filaments, joined in a tube; style sheathed.

One species, native of Amboina. Rumph. Amb.

COLHUACAN, a small State of ancient America, which is celebrated in the history of that country for having retained the Aztecs, (founders of Mexico,) in subjection in the XIVth century, during their pilgrimage in search of a resting-place. In following the traditionary history of these people, many very singular coincidences with the Mosaic account may be traced. The King of Colhuacan, who is represented on the Mexican hieroglyphic drawing, illustrative of these events, (see plate XXVIII.) is another Pharaoh, who enslaves and irritates the wanderers by every possible device; and in the course of the details which have been handed down to posterity, we also find a very similar relation to that given in the sacred volume, of the slaying of the Egyptians by the future lawgiver of the Israelites. But the best authenticated, and most curious of all the traditions which are now possessed by the aboriginal Mexican race, is that relating to the Peak of Colhuacan, a mountain near the Capital of Mexico, on which the Ark or cypress boat of Coxcox, the Aztec Noah, is said to have rested after an universal deluge; this event being clearly depicted on all the copies of the hieroglyphic pictures which have survived the destruction of Montezuma and his Empire.

COLIAS, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Lepidoptera, family Papilionidæ. Generic character: palpi very compressed; the last joint much shorter than the preceding.

Type, Papilio Rhamni, Lin.

The insect which forms the type of this genus is one of the most elegant of our British Butterflies, and is common in the spring.

C. Hyale is another indigenous species, and is very common.

CO'LICK, n. } Gr. κωλικὸν; Lat. colicus; Fr. co-
CO'LICK, adj. } lique; a painful windiness in the stomach or entrails,—from the Gr. κῶλον, alvus, itself from κοῖλον, cavum; hollow.

Let the hop be their bane,
And a rope be their shame,
Let the gout and collick pine 'um,
That offer to shrink
In taking their drink,
Seu Græcum, sive Latinum.
F. Beaumont. In the Praise of Sack.

COLICK. — COLIUS.

To come now to millet, it is a graine, which being torrified aforehand for the purpose, stoppeth the laske, and dispatcheth all collicke paines and torments of the bellie.

Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 139.

See colic, gout, and stone, a cruel train,
Oppos'd by all the healing race in vain;
Their various racks and lingering plagues employ,
Relieve each other, and by turns annoy.

Blackmore. The Creation, book v.

The must of pallid hue declares the soil
Devoid of spirit; wretched he that quaffs
Such wheyish liquors; oft with colic pangs,
With pungent colic pangs distress'd he'll roar,
And toss and turn, and curse th' unwholesome draught.

Philips. Cider, book i.

He soon fell into his distemper, an habitual colick, and languished, though with many intervals of ease and cheerfulness, till a violent fit at last seized him, and hurried him to his grave, as Arbuthnot reported, with more precipitance than he had ever known. Johnson. Life of Gay.

COLIMA, a Volcano of Mexico, with two sharp peaks or summits, which is the most striking feature of the Province of Gaudalaxara, and the last of those to the west on the continent, which lie on the same parallel; for on consulting the best modern maps of the New Republic, it will be observed that a regular line of active or extinct volcanoes, at nearly equal intervals, exist from the shores of the Mexican Gulf, on the parallel of 19° north, to the Revillagigedo groupe of Isles in the Pacific. Colima is nearly 10,000 feet above the level of the sea, and its crater continually ejects smoke and ashes; it is also isolated from the neighbouring branch of the main Cordillera.

There is a small Town named Colima, in 103° 20′ west longitude and 18° 54′ north latitude, 450 miles west of Mexico, and six miles west of the volcano, in a very fruitful valley, but not otherwise of much note, containing only 360 families.

COLIPHIUM, κῶλα, ἴφι, quasi, membra roborans. The bread upon which the athletæ used to feed during their training. Philænis, a lady of whom Martial does not speak with any great gentleness, after her exercise in the palæstra, would eat sixteen of these loaves, (vii. 66;) and the old Scholiast on Juvenal (ii. 53) has assigned to them a particular shape, which may account for the greediness with which she devoured them. Another derivation has been given of this word from κώλητψ, which Suidas interprets the hinder parts of animals; these being supposed to contain most nutriment. Coliphium was made of unsifted meal, in which the gluten furnished by the bran increased the nutritive quality. Such bread is still used in Westphalia under the name Bonpournickel, good for nothing.

COLIUS, from the Greek κολοιὸς, a little Rook, Gmel.; Coly, Lath. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Conirostres, order Passeres, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak short, thick, conical, slight, compressed, and the mandibles arched without crossing; tail-feathers very long and graduated; hind toe capable of motion forwards with the others.

These birds are natives of Africa and the Indies, they climb like Paroquets; live in societies, build their nests near each other in the same bushes, and roost with their heads downwards, clinging by one foot, and close together; their plumage is fine and silky. They live on fruit; and at the Cape of Good Hope are called Mouse Birds, from their creeping about the roots of trees like Mice. They are very heavy, and cannot fly to any height, as their wings are very short. Their size is about that of a Thrush. COLIU — COLL

There are six or eight species, but the genus is not of any importance; the C. Capensis may be chosen as a specimen.

See Cuvier, Règne Animal; Latham, General History of Birds.

COLL, v. Co'LLING, Co'LLINGLY. Fr. accoller, to embrace, coll or clip about the neck. Cotgrave. Lat. collum, q. d. collare, (i. e.) collum brachiis ligare, seu vincire. Skinner. It is also written Accoll.

Proverbes of Salomon also openly teacheth, how sometime an innocent walked by the way in blindness of a darke night, whom met a woman (if it be lefely to say) as a strūpet arraied;—saying in this wise, Come and be we dronkē of our sweet paps, use we coueitous collings.

Chaucer. Testament of Loue, book ii. fol. 307.

Thrise raught I with mine armes tacoll her neck,
Thrise did my hands vaine hold thimage escape.

Surrey. Æneis. The Second Boke.

We coll, we chip,
We kisse with lip,
Delighted,
Requighted,
And merely spend the day.

Turbervile. The Louer obtaining his Wish.

It is said that in Croydon there did sometyme dwell,
A collier that did al other collyers excel.
For his riches thys collier might have been a knight,
But in the order of knighthood he had no delight.
Would God al our knights did mind colling no more,
Then thys collyer did knighting, as is sayd before.

The Collier of Croydon.

Yea Phylomene set forth
The force of his request,
And crayde (with sighes) hir father's leaue
To be hir sister's guest.
And hoong about his necke,
And collingly him kist.

Gascoigne. The Complaint of Philomene.

To kisse and coll, hang about her neck, protest, sweare, and wish, are but ordinary symptomes.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 485.

He making much of her, asked her why she wept: the poor girle answered, colling him about the neck, and kissing him; alas father, wot you wot? our Persius is dead.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 209.

So having sayd, her twixt her armes twaine,
She straightly strayn'd and colled tenderly;
And every trembling joynt and every vaine
She softly felt, and rubbed busily,
To do the frozen cold away to fly.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 2. st. 34.

COLL, sometimes written COLLA, one of the western Islands of Scotland, forming a part of Argyleshire. It is about fourteen miles in length, from north-east to south-west, and from one mile to three and a half in breadth. Its surface contains an area of about twenty-eight square miles, and contains nearly 13,000 individuals. The surface of the Island is varied by heathy hills, rocks, lakes, corn-fields, and patches of grass. The number of small lakes is nearly fifty. Not more than one-third of it is in a state of cultivation, the other two-thirds are occupied by waters, and waste lands of various kinds. The pastures are generally good, and support a considerable number of black cattle, of which more than 200 are annually exported. Oats, barley, potatoes, and a small quantity of flax are its chief products, in addition to cattle and kelp. The east and south-east districts are the most rugged, and present steep cliffs to the Atlantic; while the opposite side is chiefly flat, and almost one entire bed of unproductive sand; which for the space of 3000 acres is merely diversified by scanty patches of coarse grass. The quantity of kelp yearly made on its shores is about sixty-five tons. Fish are found in most of its lakes, rabbits and hares are common, and aquatic birds abound, but no venomous creature is known in the Island. Coll is situated about six miles and a half from Mull, and is merely separated from Tiry by a channel three miles in width. Population in 1811, 1277; in 1821, 1264.

COLIUS. — COLLAR.

COLLADOA, in Botany, a genus of the class Polygamia, order Monoecia. Generic character: calyx of one valve, two-cleft, three-flowered, the central flower male, the two lateral flowers hermaphrodite: hermaphrodite flower, calyx none; corolla two-valved, awned; stamens three; styles two; one seed: male flower, calyx none; corolla two-valved, awnless; stamens three.

One species, native of the Phillipines.

CO'LLAPSE, Co'LLAPSED. Con, and lapsus; past participle of labor, to fall.

To fall together; generally applied when things so fall through disease. And then, met.

To decay, to fall into ruin, to wither.

> Then did he seeke to reerect againe
> The ruines of his crowne's collapsed state.
> Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 588.

What else do our papists, but, by keeping the people in ignorance, vent and broach all their new ceremonies and traditions, when they conceal the Scripture, read it in Latine, and to some few alone, feeding the slavish people in the mean time with tales out of legends, and such like fabulous narrations? Whom do they begin with but collapsed ladies, some few tradesmen, superstitious old folks, illiterate persons, weak women, &c.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 655.

Will not a brave golden showr of cordials dispel poysons, raise a collapsed habit of soul, infuse a new stock of spirits, more probably far than a course of steel or quicksilver?
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. serm. 3.

CO'LLAR, v. Co'LLAR, n. Co'LLAR-BONE, Co'LLARED, adj. Lat. collum; of which the Latin Etymologists give no satisfactory account. Ihre considers it akin to the A. S., Ger., Dutch, and Swed. hals, Alem, halsian; Dutch and Ger. kalsen, amplecti, to embrace; Fr. colleter, to embrace about the neck.

To collar, is to seize by the collar, &c. of the coat, &c. i.e. the part which is round, or which surrounds the neck.

> Twenty and mo, [dogs] as gret as any stere,
> To hunten at the leon or the dere,
> And folwed him, with mosel fast ybound,
> Colered with gold, and torettes filed round.
> Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2154.

> And colers of crafty werke.
> Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 9.

The kyng entendinge to stoppe two gappes with one bushe, sent Syr Gylbert Talbot and the other two ambassadours, principally to Bishop July, and by theim sent also to the Duke Urbyne, the whole habite and coller of the noble ordre of the gartier.
Hall. Henry VII. The twenty-second Yere.

Such thereof as can bring their fore feet and meat therein into their mouths, as most can do that have the clavicles or collar-bones.
Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. i.

The invention was this: A post was set up by the standard in Cheap, to which he was tied, with a collar of iron about his neck, fastened to a chain, and that chain fastened to a post; and two men, with two whips, whipping him about the said post.
Strype. Memoirs. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

> When Ceres' ripen'd fruits abound,
> And plenty waves her sheaves around;
> True to my collar, home I bear
> The treasures of the fruitful year.
> Cotton. Fable 6.

COLLAR. — COLLATE.

Mem. To send in return some collared eel, which I know both the old lady, and Miss are fond of. Johnson. Idler, No. 33.

They conducted us to a house, where we found a man who had been shot through the shoulder, but not dangerously, as the ball had entered a little above the inner part of the collar-bone, and passed out obliquely backward.
Cook. Voyage, vol. v. book ii. ch. viii.

CO'LLATE, v. Co'LLATING, Co'LLATIVE, Co'LLATOR, Co'LLATION. Lat. collatus, past participle of confero, (latum, from tolo, tolatum, tlatum, latum. Vossius, de Anal. c. 37.) To bring together, to bring into a state for examination and comparison, and thus to compare; also to bring together or collect,—to confer. Philosophy (says Cicero) consists ex collatione rationum. Tusc. iv. 38; and by our early writers, collation is applied to discourses, comparing or examining one thing by another,—to a conference. See also the usage explained by Blackstone, in the Example quoted below.

A collection of various articles for repast or refreshment is also called a collation. Also when each individual confers or collates his share.

> Than wol I, quod this markis softely,
> That in thy chamber, I, and thou, and she,
> Have a collation, and wost thou why?
> Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8201.

> The vice of supplantation,
> With many a fals collacion,
> Which he conspireth all vnknowe,
> Full ofte tyme hath overthrowe
> The worship of another man.
> Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 41.

Here haue ye hard good deuout Christen people, a pece of Tindalle's deuote godly collacio, in which the man is not so farre fallen into deuocion, but he is much forther fallē from his wit.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 599.

And the archebysshoppe of Canterbury sang the masse; and after masse, y^e^ bisshoppe made a collasyon.
Froissart. Cronycle, ch. cl.

Because those heretical bishops being deposed and reduced into lay-communion, could not therefore collate baptism for their want of holy orders: as appears in S. Basil's Canonical Epistle to Amphilochius, where he relates their reason, and refutes it not.
Taylor. Sermons, part iv. fol. 19.

Tenthlie, for mandats granted by the pope to ordinaries, whereof euery ordinarie, if he haue the collation or presentation of ten, maie receiue one mandat. Fox. Martyrs, fol. 3.

Than he thynkynge this reporte to be true, anon with great deuocion began there a colacion, and therof when he came to the ende, the stonys by dyuyne powar, in lykenes of a great multitude of people, sayd, "Amen." Fabyan, ch. clxix.

> But, alas! he had been feasted
> With a spiritual collation,
> By our frugal mayor,
> Who can dine on a prayer,
> And sup on an exhortation.
> Denham. News from Colchester.

After his [Henry Bagshaw] return, he was made chaplain to Rich. Archbishop of York, was collated to the Prebendary of Barnby in the cathedral church there, on the death of Robert Bunning, the 12th of Aug. 1667.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon., fol. 1041.

So such passages, as I am speaking of, in the law, the prophets, and the gospel, at first survey appear very distinct things, but upon a second inspection, and the access of more light, from an attentive collation of things, they do all, as it were, vanish into Christ; of whom (to use an Apostle's terms) Moses in the law and the prophets did write; and at whom those types, and those predictions pointed.
Boyle. Some considerations touching the style of Holy Scriptures.

COLLATE. — COLLATERAL.

Survivances and reservations in bulls were never to be admitted · only one benefice might be reserved from a collator of ten, and two for one of fifty.

Burnett. History of Reformation, Anno 1516.

For besides the collating of manuscripts, the collator, in his Dissertations, had opened three other fountains of criticism, by which the waters of the sanctuary were to be healed; the ancient versions, the Samaritan Pentateuch, and sound criticism.

Bishop Horne. Life.

In this way, indeed, the materials will be ready prepared to my hands, but the collating of the several historians will be a work of great labour. Melmoth. Plinie, book v. let. 8.

From this time Pope became an enemy to editors, collators, commentators, and verbal criticks; and hoped to persuade the world, that he miscarried in this undertaking only by having a mind too great for such minute employment.

Johnson. Life of Pope.

When the ordinary is also the patron, and confers the living, the presentation and institution are one and the same act, and are called a collation to a benefice.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book i. ch. xi. vol. i. p. 391.

An advowson collative is where the bishop and patron are one and the same person; in which case the bishop cannot present to himself; but he does by one act of collation or conferring the benefice the whole that is done in common cases, by both presentation and institution.

Id. Ib. book ii. ch. iii. vol. ii. p. 22.

COLLATION, in Canon Law, conferring a Benefice by a Bishop; such Benefice being part of his own patronage; this he does jure pleno. Collation differs both from presentation and institution: presentation is the act of a Patron of a Benefice offering a Clerk to the Bishop for institution; Collation is the act of the Bishop himself. Institution is performed by the Bishop after presentation by the Patron; Collation on the Bishop's own motion. Collation is giving the Church to the Clerk; presentation is offering the Clerk to the Church. Collation supplies the place both of presentation and institution and amounts to the same as institution, where the Bishop is both Patron and Ordinary.

COLLATION, in Common Law, is the comparing a Copy with its Original, to ascertain whether it is conformable. A Collated act is often equivalent to an Original; provided all parties concerned were present at such Collation.

COLLA'TERAL, } Con, and latus, lateris, the side.
COLLA'TERALLY. } Fr. collateral, not direct, on the side. Cotgrave.

Not immediately dependent upon, or derived from, but so connected, or conjoined, as to give and confer additional force, strength, or security. Connected, conjoined, concurrent.

And a collateral comfort.

Piers Ploughman. Vision, fol. 270.

With many a blustering blast he seemed to have beene tossed, which painted an horizon with all the cardinall and collaterall windes blowing, and in the middes RAPIUNTQUE FERUNTQUE. Camden. Remains. Impreses.

And in a word, all, or most of the kings have their beginnings placed in some other year of their collaterals than the Scriptures have determined.

Ralegh. History of the World, book ii. ch. xxvi. sec. 6.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection, and beget
Like of his like, his image multiplie,
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love, and dearest amity.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 426.

But I said, conscience relies not upon the will [directly] yet it cannot be denied, but the will hath force upon the conscience collaterally and indirectly.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. i.

And yet he knows withal that faith is requisite that he may be justified, and that without it all the grace which is in God's heart would never justify nor save him, whilst yet he hath nothing in his eye view'd in himself either directly or collaterally to move him to believe.

Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part i. fol. 172.

The chancellor, who had procured his daughter to be married to the Duke of York, and was therefore suspected of having made the match with the Infanta of Portugal, that he might make way for the succession of the collateral line, sent for the Duke of Richmond. Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. fol. 169.

Add to this, that when words denote time, not collaterally, but principally, they cease to be verbs, and become either adjectives or substantives. Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. vi.

COLLAUD, v. Collaudo; con, and laudo; from laus, laudis; for which the Latin Etymologists offer three unsatisfactory Etymologies. Tooke thinks laus is A. S. hlios, the past participle of hliosan, celebrare. To laud or praise in unison with others.

For though we live among the tongues of praise,
All troops of smoothing people that collaud
All that we do; yet 'tis within our hearts
Th' ambushment lies, that evermore betrays
Our judgments, when ourselves become t' applaud
Our own ability, and our owne parts.

Daniel. To Lady Anne Clifford.

Let all thy fragrant flowers
Grow sweeter by this air;
Thy tallest trees and bowers
Bud forth and blossom fair;
Beasts wild and tame
whom lodgings yield
house, dens or field,
Collaud his name.

Howell. Letters, book i. sec. 5. A Gradual Hymn, &c.

COLLE'AGUE, v. } Collegæ, quod una lecti sint, id
CO'LLEAGUE, n. } est, creati. Malim tamen a com
CO'LLEAGUESHIP. } et lex, quod iisdem legibus aliquid agant. Martinius

One chosen to act in unison with another; or, one acting under the same laws; the same rules or orders, in the same service, office, or employment with another.

They would geue no more place to the fruites of infidelitie then S. Paule gaue to Peter hys colleague, when he left the table of the Gentiles and went to the Jews.

Frith. Workes, fol. 61.

The king's pleasure is, that ye then proceed to the protestations mentioned in the first instructions given to Mr. Stevins, for you and the residue of your colleagues.

Burnett. Records. Despatch of the Cardinals concerning Divorce.

Colleagued with a dreame of his aduantage;
He hath not fayl'd to pester vs with message
Importing the surrender of those lands
Lost by his father.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 153.

Hence like a lusty flood, most absolutely free,
None mixing then with me, as I do mix with none,
But scorning a colleague, nor near me any one,
To Neptune's court I come.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 29.

These great saints [Paul and Barnabas] joined by nature, friendship, religion, high providence, and revelation, could not so govern a casual difference, a sudden passion, but must in wisdom divide from the outward duties of a friendship, or a colegueship in the same family, or in the same journey, lest it should grow to a worse division.

Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

Being yet very young, (says Plutarch,) I was joined in commission with another in an embassy to the Proconsul, and my colleague, falling sick, was forced to stay behind; so that the whole business was transacted by me alone.

Dryden. The Life of Plutarch.

——————Pisander; who in days of yore
From old Amyclæ to the Lesbian shore
And Tenedos, colleagued in high command
With great Orestes, led th' Æolian band.

West. The Eleventh Nemean Ode.

CO'LLECT, v.
Co'LLECT, n.
Co'LLECTEDLY,
Co'LLECTEDNESS,
COLLE'CTION,
COLLE'CTIVE,
COLLE'CTIVELY,
COLLE'CTOR,
COLLE'CTORY,
COLLE'CTORSHIP.

Lat. collectum, past participle of colligere; from con, and legere, (Gr. λέγειν,) to gather.

To gather, or put together; to bring, or bear into one place, one mass, or heap, or sum.

To gather, or bring together, things dispersed; met. as to collect the thoughts; resume command over them, to collect one thought from or in consequence of another; to infer one from another.

For Church Collects, see the example from Comber.

As we haue takē in hand to collect and set forth his whole workes togither, so we thought it not vnconuenient, to collecte likewise some briefe notes concerning the order of his lyfe and godly conuersation.

Tyndall. Life, a. iii.

It is also ordened that the colects for the preservation of the King and Queen by name, be from henceforth comunely and usuallie used and sayed in every cathedrall churche, &c.

Burnett. Records. An order for Preaching, and bidding of the Beades.

And against the next day of collection [the parish clerk] shall hang up somewhere in the church in open place, to the intent the poor having knowledg therby, by whose charity and alms they be relieved, may pray for the increase and prosperity of the same.

Id. Ib. Injunctions given by the King's Majesty's visitors, &c.

If we shall make enquirie into his reuenues and tributes, true it is, that this king, of all others, is endued with the greatest and the richest, both in regard of the fertilitie & greatnes of his dominions, & also by reason of the seuere collection and exaction of his duties.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. A description of China.

These payd the pence gathered to the bp; and the bp payd to the collector, and had his acquietance, by the name of Peterpence.

Strype. Memoirs. Instructions to Lord Privy Seal, &c. No. 79.

(They) are generally so exactly suted to them [the epistle and gospel] that some think they take their name from being collected out of those parts of Holy Writ. But the use of the word in the Bible and the Fathers, being applied to denote the gathering together of the people in religious assemblies, thence some ritualists say, The collects are prayers made among the people collected or gathered together. Others think they are named collects because of their comprehensive brevity, because the priest in them sums up the desires of the people in a little room. I may add, in this variety, my own conjecture, that these prayers have been named collects from their being used so near the time of making the collection before the Holy Communion.

Comber. A Companion to the Temple, part i. sec. 20.

Yet seeing the composers of our liturgy thought fit to abbreviate,—Turning from all sin, and keeping all God's statutes, and doing that which is lawful and right,—into this one word Repenting, it is easie and obvious to collect from hence, as I did before, from the other place, that by Repentance, they understood not only sorrow for sin, but conversion from it.

Chillingworth. Sermon, 1.

COLLECT.

Therefore I watch'd thy footsteps from that hour,
And follow'd thee still on this vast wild;
Where by all best conjectures I collect
Thou art to be my fatal enemy.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 524.

The soul is of such subtlety,
And close collectednesse.

More. Song of the Soul, song 4. ch. iii. sec. 17.

But wee saye, There is no case in religion so darke, and doubteful, but it maie necessarily be either proued or reproued by collection, and conference of the Scriptures.

Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, fol. 58.

Nowe I pray you iudge of the sequele of these reasons; and compare them with T. C. his waywarde collection, and tell me truely whether he dealeth simply or no.

Whitgift. Defence of the Answer, fol. 28.

If he be much our superior; tis good to do it sometimes in parables; as Nathan did to David. So let him by collection, give himself the censure.

Feltham. Resolve 7. Reprehension.

But the place is very obscure, and whether thereby be not meant the river Euphrates, is not without good controversie, as is collectible from the subsequent words.

Sir Thomas Brown, book vi. ch. viii.

The difference of their concretion is collectible from their dissolution, which being many wayes performable in ice, is few ways effected in crystal.

Id. book ii. ch. i.

But he that after a patient continuance in well doing, adds charity or martyrdome to the collective body of his other graces, he hath made them perfect with this kind of perfection.

J. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. i. sec. 3.

Of this oak, or rather collectively Quercetum or oaken-holt of Sichem, is twice mention made elsewhere in Scripture.

Mede. Works, book i. disc. 18.

To these eight or any five of them was intrusted the full and free administration of the whole rents and duties pertaining to the officers of controllery and collectory, resigned and committed by the four officers in his majesty's hands.

Spotswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1595. book vi.

For it is easy to be collected, from what has been said, that confessing our sins, in this manner, is, in the reason of the thing, a point so necessary, that we are no ways qualified for the obtaining forgiveness of them without it.

Sharp. Works, vol. v. disc. 6.

But we may learn the whole mystery of it from our church, which in the collect for the second Sunday in Advent, directs us to pray to God, who hath caused all Scriptures to be written for our learning.

Bishop Beveridge. Sermon, 110.

And Thomas Sternhold, one of the King's servants set forth his Psalms; being a collection of some of David's Psalms, which he, for his own private entertainment, had composed into English verse, and set them to tunes, and had sung and played by himself, for his own godly solace.

Strype. Memoirs. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

You will find that no law can restrain or tie up the supreme authority of a nation, but what ought to restrain and tie up the whole collective body, supposing it possible for that whole body to meet, and hear, and determine the same causes, before one written or customary law in being; because the body representative is in effect that body collective, as to its powers and privileges.

Hoadly. Works. Political Pieces, vol. iii. fol. 116.

But then, tho' these names being put in the singular number, seem to denote some single evil spirit, that bears ill-will to mankind; yet we are always to remember, that they are to be expounded collectively, that is to say, to signify the whole body of these apostate spirits, of which there are a vast number.

Sharp Works, vol. iii. serm. 4.

But the King of Great Britain obeys no other person; all other persons are individually, and collectively too, under him, and owe to him a legal obedience.

Burke. On the Revolution in France.

COLLATE. — COLLATERAL.

Survivances and reservations in bulls were never to be admitted · only one benefice might be reserved from a collator of ten, and two for one of fifty.

Burnett. History of Reformation, Anno 1516.

For besides the collating of manuscripts, the collator, in his Dissertations, had opened three other fountains of criticism, by which the waters of the sanctuary were to be healed; the ancient versions, the Samaritan Pentateuch, and sound criticism.

Bishop Horne. Life.

In this way, indeed, the materials will be ready prepared to my hands, but the collating of the several historians will be a work of great labour. Melmoth. Plinie, book v. let. 8.

From this time Pope became an enemy to editors, collators, commentators, and verbal criticks; and hoped to persuade the world, that he miscarried in this undertaking only by having a mind too great for such minute employment.

Johnson. Life of Pope.

When the ordinary is also the patron, and confers the living, the presentation and institution are one and the same act, and are called a collation to a benefice.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book i. ch. xi. vol. i. p. 391.

An advowson collative is where the bishop and patron are one and the same person; in which case the bishop cannot present to himself; but he does by one act of collation or conferring the benefice the whole that is done in common cases, by both presentation and institution.

Id. Ib. book ii. ch. iii. vol. ii. p. 22.

COLLATION, in Canon Law, conferring a Benefice by a Bishop; such Benefice being part of his own patronage; this he does jure pleno. Collation differs both from presentation and institution: presentation is the act of a Patron of a Benefice offering a Clerk to the Bishop for institution; Collation is the act of the Bishop himself. Institution is performed by the Bishop after presentation by the Patron; Collation on the Bishop's own motion. Collation is giving the Church to the Clerk; presentation is offering the Clerk to the Church. Collation supplies the place both of presentation and institution and amounts to the same as institution, where the Bishop is both Patron and Ordinary.

COLLATION, in Common Law, is the comparing a Copy with its Original, to ascertain whether it is conformable. A Collated act is often equivalent to an Original; provided all parties concerned were present at such Collation.

COLLA'TERAL, COLLA'TERALLY. } Con, and latus, lateris, the side. Fr. collateral, not direct, on the side. Cotgrave.

Not immediately dependent upon, or derived from, but so connected, or conjoined, as to give and confer additional force, strength, or security. Connected, conjoined, concurrent.

And a collateral comfort.

Piers Ploughman. Vision, fol. 270.

With many a blustering blast he seemed to have beene tossed, which painted an horizon with all the cardinall and collaterall windes blowing, and in the middes RAPIUNTQUE FERUNTQUE.

Camden. Remains. Impreses.

And in a word, all, or most of the kings have their beginnings placed in some other year of their collaterals than the Scriptures have determined.

Ralegh. History of the World, book ii. ch. xxvi. sec. 6.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection, and beget
Like of his like, his image multiplie,
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love, and deerest amity.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 426.

But I said, conscience relies not upon the will [directly] yet it cannot be denied, but the will hath force upon the conscience collaterally and indirectly.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. i.

And yet he knows withal that faith is requisite that he may be justified, and that without it all the grace which is in God's heart would never justify nor save him, whilst yet he hath nothing in his eye view'd in himself either directly or collaterally to move him to believe.

Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part i. fol. 172.

The chancellor, who had procured his daughter to be married to the Duke of York, and was therefore suspected of having made the match with the Infanta of Portugal, that he might make way for the succession of the collateral line, sent for the Duke of Richmond. Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. fol. 169.

Add to this, that when words denote time, not collaterally, but principally, they cease to be verbs, and become either adjectives or substantives. Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. vi.

COLLAUD, v. Collaudo; con, and laudo; from laus, laudis; for which the Latin Etymologists offer three unsatisfactory Etymologies. Tooke thinks laus is A. S. hlios, the past participle of hliosan, celebrare. To laud or praise in unison with others.

For though we live among the tongues of praise,
All troops of smoothing people that collaud
All that we do; yet 'tis within our hearts
Th' ambushment lies, that evermore betrays
Our judgments, when ourselves become t' applaud
Our own ability, and our owne parts.

Daniel. To Lady Anne Clifford.

Let all thy fragrant flowers
Grow sweeter by this air;
Thy tallest trees and bowers
Bud forth and blossom fair;
Beasts wild and tame
whom lodgings yield
house, dens or field,
Collaud his name.

Howell. Letters, book i. sec. 5. A Gradual Hymn, &c.

COLLE'AGUE, v. Co'LLEAGUE, n. Co'LLEAGUESHIP. } Collegæ, quod una lecti sint, id est, creati. Malim tamen a com et lex, quod iisdem legibus aliquid agant. Martinius

One chosen to act in unison with another; or, one acting under the same laws; the same rules or orders, in the same service, office, or employment with another.

They would geue no more place to the fruites of infidelitie then S. Paule gaue to Peter hys colleague, when he left the table of the Gentiles and went to the Jews.

Frith. Workes, fol. 61.

The king's pleasure is, that ye then proceed to the protestations mentioned in the first instructions given to Mr. Stevins, for you and the residue of your colleagues.

Burnett. Records. Despatch of the Cardinals concerning Divorce.

Colleagued with a dreame of his aduantage;
He hath not fayl'd to pester vs with message
Importing the surrender of those lands
Lost by his father.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 153.

Hence like a lusty flood, most absolutely free,
None mixing then with me, as I do mix with none,
But scorning a colleague, nor near me any one,
To Neptune's court I come.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 29.

These great saints [Paul and Barnabas] joined by nature, friendship, religion, high providence, and revelation, could not so govern a casual difference, a sudden passion, but must in wisdom divide from the outward duties of a friendship, or a colleagueship in the same family, or in the same journey, lest it should grow to a worse division.

COL-LEAGUE. — COLLECT.

Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

Being yet very young, (says Plutarch,) I was joined in commission with another in an embassy to the Proconsul, and my colleague, falling sick, was forced to stay behind; so that the whole business was transacted by me alone.

Dryden. The Life of Plutarch.

——Pisander; who in days of yore
From old Amyclæ to the Lesbian shore
And Tenedos, colleagued in high command
With great Orestes, led th' Æolian band.

West. The Eleventh Nemean Ode.

CO'LLECT, v.
CO'LLECT, n.
CO'LLECTEDLY,
CO'LLECTEDNESS,
COLLE'CTION,
COLLE'CTIVE,
COLLE'CTIVELY,
COLLE'CTOR,
COLLE'CTORY,
COLLE'CTORSHIP.

Lat. collectum, past participle of colligere; from con, and legere, (Gr. λέγειν,) to gather.

To gather, or put together; to bring, or bear into one place, one mass, or heap, or sum.

To gather, or bring together, things dispersed; met. as to collect the thoughts; resume command over them, to collect one thought from or in consequence of another; to infer one from another.

For Church Collects, see the example from Comber.

As we haue takē in hand to collect and set forth his whole workes togither, so we thought it not vnconuenient, to collecte likewise some briefe notes concerning the order of his lyfe and godly conuersation. Tyndall. Life, a. iii.

It is also ordened that the colects for the preservation of the King and Queen by name, be from henceforth comunely and usuallie used and sayed in every cathedrall churche, &c.

Burnett. Records. An order for Preaching, and bidding of the Beades.

And against the next day of collection [the parish clerk] shall hang up somewhere in the church in open place, to the intent the poor having knowledg therby, by whose charity and alms they be relieved, may pray for the increase and prosperity of the same.

Id. Ib. Injunctions given by the King's Majesty's visitors, &c.

If we shall make enquirie into his reuenues and tributes, true it is, that this king, of all others, is endued with the greatest and the richest, both in regard of the fertilitie & greatnes of his dominions, & also by reason of the seuere collection and exaction of his duties.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. A description of China.

These payd the pence gathered to the bp; and the bp payd to the collector, and had his acquietance, by the name of Peterpence.

Strype. Memoirs. Instructions to Lord Privy Seal, &c. No. 79.

(They) are generally so exactly suted to them [the epistle and gospel] that some think they take their name from being collected out of those parts of Holy Writ. But the use of the word in the Bible and the Fathers, being applied to denote the gathering together of the people in religious assemblies, thence some ritualists say, The collects are prayers made among the people collected or gathered together. Others think they are named collects because of their comprehensive brevity, because the priest in them sums up the desires of the people in a little room. I may add, in this variety, my own conjecture, that these prayers have been named collects from their being used so near the time of making the collection before the Holy Communion.

Comber. A Companion to the Temple, part i. sec. 20.

Yet seeing the composers of our liturgy thought fit to abbreviate,—Turning from all sin, and keeping all God's statutes, and doing that which is lawful and right,—into this one word Repenting, it is easie and obvious to collect from hence, as I did before, from the other place, that by Repentance, they understood not only sorrow for sin, but conversion from it.

Chillingworth. Sermon, 1.

COLL

Therefore I watch'd thy footsteps from that hour,
And follow'd thee still on this vast wild;
Where by all best conjectures I collect
Thou art to be my fatal enemy.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 524.

The soul is of such subtlety,
And close collectednesse.

More. Song of the Soul, song 4. ch. iii. sec. 17.

But wee saye, There is no case in religion so darke, and doubteful, but it maie necessarily be either proued or reproued by collection, and conference of the Scriptures.

Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, fol. 58.

Nowe I pray you iudge of the sequele of these reasons; and compare them with T. C. his waywarde collection, and tell me truely whether he dealeth simply or no.

Whitgift. Defence of the Answer, fol. 28.

If he be much our superior; tis good to do it sometimes in parables; as Nathan did to David. So let him by collection, give himself the censure.

Feltham. Resolve 7. Reprehension.

But the place is very obscure, and whether thereby be not meant the river Euphrates, is not without good controversie, as is collectible from the subsequent words.

Sir Thomas Brown, book vi. ch. viii.

The difference of their concretion is collectible from their dissolution, which being many wayes performable in ice, is few ways effected in crystal. Id. book ii. ch. i.

But he that after a patient continuance in well doing, adds charity or martyrdome to the collective body of his other graces, he hath made them perfect with this kind of perfection.

J. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. i. sec. 3.

Of this oak, or rather collectively Quercetum or oaken-holt of Sichem, is twice mention made elsewhere in Scripture.

Mede. Works, book i. disc. 18.

To these eight or any five of them was intrusted the full and free administration of the whole rents and duties pertaining to the officers of controllery and collectory, resigned and committed by the four officers in his majesty's hands.

Spotswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1595. book vi.

For it is easy to be collected, from what has been said, that confessing our sins, in this manner, is, in the reason of the thing, a point so necessary, that we are no ways qualified for the obtaining forgiveness of them without it.

Sharp. Works, vol. v. disc. 6.

But we may learn the whole mystery of it from our church, which in the collect for the second Sunday in Advent, directs us to pray to God, who hath caused all Scriptures to be written for our learning. Bishop Beveridge. Sermon, 110.

And Thomas Sternhold, one of the King's servants set forth his Psalms; being a collection of some of David's Psalms, which he, for his own private entertainment, had composed into English verse, and set them to tunes, and had sung and played by himself, for his own godly solace.

Strype. Memoirs. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

You will find that no law can restrain or tie up the supreme authority of a nation, but what ought to restrain and tie up the whole collective body, supposing it possible for that whole body to meet, and hear, and determine the same causes, before one written or customary law in being; because the body representative is in effect that body collective, as to its powers and privileges.

Hoadly. Works. Political Pieces, vol. iii. fol. 116.

But then, tho' these names being put in the singular number, seem to denote some single evil spirit, that bears ill-will to mankind; yet we are always to remember, that they are to be expounded collectively, that is to say, to signify the whole body of these apostate spirits, of which there are a vast number.

Sharp Works, vol. iii. serm. 4.

But the King of Great Britain obeys no other person; all other persons are individually, and collectively too, under him, and owe to him a legal obedience.

Burke. On the Revolution in France.

COLLATE. — COLLATERAL.

Survivances and reservations in bulls were never to be admitted · only one benefice might be reserved from a collator of ten, and two for one of fifty.
Burnett. History of Reformation, Anno 1516.

For besides the collating of manuscripts, the collator, in his Dissertations, had opened three other fountains of criticism, by which the waters of the sanctuary were to be healed; the ancient versions, the Samaritan Pentateuch, and sound criticism.
Bishop Horne. Life.

In this way, indeed, the materials will be ready prepared to my hands, but the collating of the several historians will be a work of great labour. Melmoth. Plinie, book v. let. 8.

From this time Pope became an enemy to editors, collators, commentators, and verbal criticks; and hoped to persuade the world, that he miscarried in this undertaking only by having a mind too great for such minute employment.
Johnson. Life of Pope.

When the ordinary is also the patron, and confers the living, the presentation and institution are one and the same act, and are called a collation to a benefice.
Blackstone. Commentaries, book i. ch. xi. vol. i. p. 391.

An advowson collative is where the bishop and patron are one and the same person; in which case the bishop cannot present to himself; but he does by one act of collation or conferring the benefice the whole that is done in common cases, by both presentation and institution.
Id. Ib. book ii. ch. iii. vol. ii. p. 22.

COLLATION, in Canon Law, conferring a Benefice by a Bishop; such Benefice being part of his own patronage; this he does jure pleno. Collation differs both from presentation and institution: presentation is the act of a Patron of a Benefice offering a Clerk to the Bishop for institution; Collation is the act of the Bishop himself. Institution is performed by the Bishop after presentation by the Patron; Collation on the Bishop's own motion. Collation is giving the Church to the Clerk; presentation is offering the Clerk to the Church. Collation supplies the place both of presentation and institution and amounts to the same as institution, where the Bishop is both Patron and Ordinary.

COLLATION, in Common Law, is the comparing a Copy with its Original, to ascertain whether it is conformable. A Collated act is often equivalent to an Original; provided all parties concerned were present at such Collation.

COLLA'TERAL, COLLA'TERALLY. Con, and latus, lateris, the side. Fr. collateral, not direct, on the side. Cotgrave.

Not immediately dependent upon, or derived from, but so connected, or conjoined, as to give and confer additional force, strength, or security. Connected, conjoined, concurrent.

And a collateral comfort.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, fol. 270.

With many a blustering blast he seemed to have beene tossed, which painted an horizon with all the cardinall and collaterall windes blowing, and in the middes RAPIUNTQUE FERUNTQUE.
Camden. Remains. Impreses.

And in a word, all, or most of the kings have their beginnings placed in some other year of their collaterals than the Scriptures have determined.
Ralegh. History of the World, book ii. ch. xxvi. sec. 6.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection, and beget
Like of his like, his image multiplie,
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love, and deerest amity.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 426.

But I said, conscience relies not upon the will [directly] yet it cannot be denied, but the will hath force upon the conscience collaterally and indirectly.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. i.

And yet he knows withal that faith is requisite that he may be justified, and that without it all the grace which is in God's heart would never justify nor save him, whilst yet he hath nothing in his eye view'd in himself either directly or collaterally to move him to believe.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part i. fol. 172.

The chancellor, who had procured his daughter to be married to the Duke of York, and was therefore suspected of having made the match with the Infanta of Portugal, that he might make way for the succession of the collateral line, sent for the Duke of Richmond. Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. fol. 169.

Add to this, that when words denote time, not collaterally, but principally, they cease to be verbs, and become either adjectives or substantives. Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. vi.

COLLAUD, v. Collaudo; con, and laudo; from laus, laudis; for which the Latin Etymologists offer three unsatisfactory Etymologies. Tooke thinks laus is A. S. hlios, the past participle of hliosan, celebrare. To laud or praise in unison with others.

For though we live among the tongues of praise,
All troops of smoothing people that collaud
All that we do; yet 'tis within our hearts
Th' ambushment lies, that evermore betrays
Our judgments, when ourselves become t' applaud
Our own ability, and our owne parts.
Daniel. To Lady Anne Clifford.

Let all thy fragrant flowers
Grow sweeter by this air;
Thy tallest trees and bowers
Bud forth and blossom fair;
Beasts wild and tame
whom lodgings yield
house, dens or field,
Collaud his name.
Howell. Letters, book i. sec. 5. A Gradual Hymn, &c.

COLLE'AGUE, v. Co'LLEAGUE, n. Co'LLEAGUESHIP. Collegæ, quod una lecti sint, id est, creati. Malim tamen a com et lex, quod iisdem legibus aliquid agant. Martinius

One chosen to act in unison with another; or, one acting under the same laws; the same rules or orders, in the same service, office, or employment with another.

They would geue no more place to the fruites of infidelitie then S. Paule gaue to Peter hys colleague, when he left the table of the Gentiles and went to the Jews.
Frith. Workes, fol. 61.

The king's pleasure is, that ye then proceed to the protestations mentioned in the first instructions given to Mr. Stevins, for you and the residue of your colleagues.
Burnett. Records. Despatch of the Cardinals concerning Divorce.

Colleagued with a dreame of his aduantage;
He hath not fayl'd to pester vs with message
Importing the surrender of those lands
Lost by his father.
Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 153.

Hence like a lusty flood, most absolutely free,
None mixing then with me, as I do mix with no
But scorning a colleague, nor near me any
To Neptune's court I come.
Drayt

These great saints [Paul and B friendship, religion, high providen so govern a casual difference, a sud

COLLATE. — COLLATERAL.

Survivances and reservations in bulls were never to be admitted · only one benefice might be reserved from a collator of ten, and two for one of fifty.

Burnett. History of Reformation, Anno 1516.

For besides the collating of manuscripts, the collator, in his Dissertations, had opened three other fountains of criticism, by which the waters of the sanctuary were to be healed; the ancient versions, the Samaritan Pentateuch, and sound criticism.

Bishop Horne. Life.

In this way, indeed, the materials will be ready prepared to my hands, but the collating of the several historians will be a work of great labour. Melmoth. Plinie, book v. let. 8.

From this time Pope became an enemy to editors, collators, commentators, and verbal criticks; and hoped to persuade the world, that he miscarried in this undertaking only by having a mind too great for such minute employment.

Johnson. Life of Pope.

When the ordinary is also the patron, and confers the living, the presentation and institution are one and the same act, and are called a collation to a benefice.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book i. ch. xi. vol. i. p. 391.

An advowson collative is where the bishop and patron are one and the same person; in which case the bishop cannot present to himself; but he does by one act of collation or conferring the benefice the whole that is done in common cases, by both presentation and institution.

Id. Ib. book ii. ch. iii. vol. ii. p. 22.

COLLATION, in Canon Law, conferring a Benefice by a Bishop; such Benefice being part of his own patronage; this he does jure pleno. Collation differs both from presentation and institution: presentation is the act of a Patron of a Benefice offering a Clerk to the Bishop for institution; Collation is the act of the Bishop himself. Institution is performed by the Bishop after presentation by the Patron; Collation on the Bishop's own motion. Collation is giving the Church to the Clerk; presentation is offering the Clerk to the Church. Collation supplies the place both of presentation and institution and amounts to the same as institution, where the Bishop is both Patron and Ordinary.

COLLATION, in Common Law, is the comparing a Copy with its Original, to ascertain whether it is conformable. A Collated act is often equivalent to an Original; provided all parties concerned were present at such Collation.

COLLA'TERAL, COLLA'TERALLY. } Con, and latus, lateris, the side. Fr. collateral, not direct, on the side. Cotgrave.

Not immediately dependent upon, or derived from, but so connected, or conjoined, as to give and confer additional force, strength, or security. Connected, conjoined, concurrent.

And a collateral comfort.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, fol. 270.

With many a blustering blast he seemed to have beene tossed, which painted an horizon with all the cardinall and collaterall windes blowing, and in the middes RAPIUNTQUE FERUNTQUE. Camden. Remains. Impreses.

And in a word, all, or most of the kings have their beginnings placed in some other year of their collaterals than the Scriptures have determined.

Ralegh. History of the World, book ii. ch. xxvi. sec. 6.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection, and beget
Like of his like, his image multiplie,
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love, and deerest amity.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 426.

But I said, conscience relies not upon the will [directly] yet it cannot be denied, but the will hath force upon the conscience collaterally and indirectly.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. i.

And yet he knows withal that faith is requisite that he may be justified, and that without it all the grace which is in God's heart would never justify nor save him, whilst yet he hath nothing in his eye view'd in himself either directly or collaterally to move him to believe.

Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part i. fol. 172.

The chancellor, who had procured his daughter to be married to the Duke of York, and was therefore suspected of having made the match with the Infanta of Portugal, that he might make way for the succession of the collateral line, sent for the Duke of Richmond. Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. fol. 169.

Add to this, that when words denote time, not collaterally, but principally, they cease to be verbs, and become either adjectives or substantives. Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. vi.

COLLAUD, v. Collaudo; con, and laudo; from laus, laudis; for which the Latin Etymologists offer three unsatisfactory Etymologies. Tooke thinks laus is A. S. hlios, the past participle of hliosan, celebrare. To laud or praise in unison with others.

For though we live among the tongues of praise,
All troops of smoothing people that collaud
All that we do; yet 'tis within our hearts
Th' ambushment lies, that evermore betrays
Our judgments, when ourselves become t' applaud
Our own ability, and our owne parts.

Daniel. To Lady Anne Clifford.

Let all thy fragrant flowers
Grow sweeter by this air;
Thy tallest trees and bowers
Bud forth and blossom fair;
Beasts wild and tame
whom lodgings yield
house, dens or field,
Collaud his name.

Howell. Letters, book i. sec. 5. A Gradual Hymn, &c.

COLLE'AGUE, v. Co'LLEAGUE, n. Co'LLEAGUESHIP. } Collegæ, quod una lecti sint, id est, creati. Malim tamen a com et lex, quod iisdem legibus aliquid agant. Martinius

One chosen to act in unison with another; or, one acting under the same laws; the same rules or orders, in the same service, office, or employment with another.

They would geue no more place to the fruites of infidelitie then S. Paule gaue to Peter hys colleague, when he left the table of the Gentiles and went to the Jews.

Frith. Workes, fol. 61.

The king's pleasure is, that ye then proceed to the protestations mentioned in the first instructions given to Mr. Stevins, for you and the residue of your colleagues.

Burnett. Records. Despatch of the Cardinals concerning Divorce.

Colleagued with a dreame of his aduantage;
He hath not fayl'd to pester vs with message
Importing the surrender of those lands
Lost by his father.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 153.

Hence like a lusty flood, most absolutely free,
None mixing then with me, as I do mix with none,
But scorning a colleague, nor near me any one,
To Neptune's court I come.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 29.

These great saints [Paul and Barnabas] joined by nature, friendship, religion, high providence, and revelation, could not so govern a casual difference, a sudden passion, but must in wis-

COL-LEAGUE. COLLECT.

dom divide from the outward duties of a friendship, or a colleagueship in the same family, or in the same journey, lest it should grow to a worse division.

Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

Being yet very young, (says Plutarch,) I was joined in commission with another in an embassy to the Proconsul, and my colleague, falling sick, was forced to stay behind; so that the whole business was transacted by me alone.

Dryden. The Life of Plutarch.

——— Pisander; who in days of yore
From old Amyclæ to the Lesbian shore
And Tenedos, colleagued in high command
With great Orestes, led th' Æolian band.

West. The Eleventh Nemean Ode.

CO'LLECT, v.
Co'LLECT, n.
Co'LLECTEDLY,
Co'LLECTEDNESS,
COLLE'CTION,
COLLE'CTIVE,
COLLE'CTIVELY,
COLLE'CTOR,
COLLE'CTORY,
COLLE'CTORSHIP.

Lat. collectum, past participle of colligere; from con, and legere, (Gr. λέγειν,) to gather.

To gather, or put together; to bring, or bear into one place, one mass, or heap, or sum.

To gather, or bring together, things dispersed; met. as to collect the thoughts; resume command over them, to collect one thought from or in consequence of another; to infer one from another.

For Church Collects, see the example from Comber.

As we haue takē in hand to collect and set forth his whole workes togither, so we thought it not vnconuenient, to colleete likewise some briefe notes concerning the order of his lyfe and godly conuersation.

Tyndall. Life, a. iii.

It is also ordened that the colects for the preservation of the King and Queen by name, be from henceforth comunely and usuallie used and sayed in every cathedrall churche, &c.

Burnett. Records. An order for Preaching, and bidding of the Beades.

And against the next day of collection [the parish clerk] shall hang up somewhere in the church in open place, to the intent the poor having knowledg therby, by whose charity and alms they be relieved, may pray for the increase and prosperity of the same.

Id. Ib. Injunctions given by the King's Majesty's visitors, &c.

If we shall make enquirie into his reuenues and tributes, true it is, that this king, of all others, is endued with the greatest and the richest, both in regard of the fertilitie & greatnes of his dominions, & also by reason of the seuere collection and exaction of his duties.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. A description of China.

These payd the pence gathered to the bp; and the bp payd to the collector, and had his acquietance, by the name of Peterpence.

Strype. Memoirs. Instructions to Lord Privy Seal, &c. No. 79.

(They) are generally so exactly suted to them [the epistle and gospel] that some think they take their name from being collected out of those parts of Holy Writ. But the use of the word in the Bible and the Fathers, being applied to denote the gathering together of the people in religious assemblies, thence some ritualists say, The collects are prayers made among the people collected or gathered together. Others think they are named collects because of their comprehensive brevity, because the priest in them sums up the desires of the people in a little room. I may add, in this variety, my own conjecture, that these prayers have been named collects from their being used so near the time of making the collection before the Holy Communion.

Comber. A Companion to the Temple, part i. sec. 20.

Yet seeing the composers of our liturgy thought fit to abbreviate,—Turning from all sin, and keeping all God's statutes, and doing that which is lawful and right,—into this one word Repenting, it is easie and obvious to collect from hence, as I did before, from the other place, that by Repentance, they understood not only sorrow for sin, but conversion from it.

Chillingworth. Sermon, 1.

COLLECT.

Therefore I watch'd thy footsteps from that hour,
And follow'd thee still on this vast wild;
Where by all best conjectures I collect
Thou art to be my fatal enemy.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 524.

The soul is of such subtlety,
And close collectednesse.

More. Song of the Soul, song 4. ch. iii. sec. 17.

But wee saye, There is no case in religion so darke, and doubteful, but it maie necessarily be either proued or reproued by collection, and conference of the Scriptures.

Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, fol. 58.

Nowe I pray you iudge of the sequele of these reasons; and compare them with T. C. his waywarde collection, and tell me truely whether he dealeth simply or no.

Whitgift. Defence of the Answer, fol. 28.

If he be much our superior; tis good to do it sometimes in parables; as Nathan did to David. So let him by collection, give himself the censure.

Feltham. Resolve 7. Reprehension.

But the place is very obscure, and whether thereby be not meant the river Euphrates, is not without good controversie, as is collectible from the subsequent words.

Sir Thomas Brown, book vi. ch. viii.

The difference of their concretion is collectible from their dissolution, which being many wayes performable in ice, is few ways effected in crystal.

Id. book ii. ch. i.

But he that after a patient continuance in well doing, adds charity or martyrdome to the collective body of his other graces, he hath made them perfect with this kind of perfection.

J. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. i. sec. 3.

Of this oak, or rather collectively Quercetum or oaken-holt of Sichem, is twice mention made elsewhere in Scripture.

Mede. Works, book i. disc. 18.

To these eight or any five of them was intrusted the full and free administration of the whole rents and duties pertaining to the officers of controllery and collectory, resigned and committed by the four officers in his majesty's hands.

Spotswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1595. book vi.

For it is easy to be collected, from what has been said, that confessing our sins, in this manner, is, in the reason of the thing, a point so necessary, that we are no ways qualified for the obtaining forgiveness of them without it.

Sharp. Works, vol. v. disc. 6.

But we may learn the whole mystery of it from our church, which in the collect for the second Sunday in Advent, directs us to pray to God, who hath caused all Scriptures to be written for our learning.

Bishop Beveridge. Sermon, 110.

And Thomas Sternhold, one of the King's servants set forth his Psalms; being a collection of some of David's Psalms, which he, for his own private entertainment, had composed into English verse, and set them to tunes, and had sung and played by himself, for his own godly solace.

Strype. Memoirs. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

You will find that no law can restrain or tie up the supreme authority of a nation, but what ought to restrain and tie up the whole collective body, supposing it possible for that whole body to meet, and hear, and determine the same causes, before one written or customary law in being; because the body representative is in effect that body collective, as to its powers and privileges.

Hoadly. Works. Political Pieces, vol. iii. fol. 116.

But then, tho' these names being put in the singular number, seem to denote some single evil spirit, that bears ill-will to mankind; yet we are always to remember, that they are to be expounded collectively, that is to say, to signify the whole body of these apostate spirits, of which there are a vast number.

Sharp Works, vol. iii. serm. 4.

But the King of Great Britain obeys no other person; all other persons are individually, and collectively too, under him, and owe to him a legal obedience.

Burke. On the Revolution in France.

COLLATE. — COLLATERAL.

Survivances and reservations in bulls were never to be admitted · only one benefice might be reserved from a collator of ten, and two for one of fifty.

Burnett. History of Reformation, Anno 1516.

For besides the collating of manuscripts, the collator, in his Dissertations, had opened three other fountains of criticism, by which the waters of the sanctuary were to be healed; the ancient versions, the Samaritan Pentateuch, and sound criticism.

Bishop Horne. Life.

In this way, indeed, the materials will be ready prepared to my hands, but the collating of the several historians will be a work of great labour. Melmoth. Plinie, book v. let. 8.

From this time Pope became an enemy to editors, collators, commentators, and verbal criticks; and hoped to persuade the world, that he miscarried in this undertaking only by having a mind too great for such minute employment.

Johnson. Life of Pope.

When the ordinary is also the patron, and confers the living, the presentation and institution are one and the same act, and are called a collation to a benefice.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book i. ch. xi. vol. i. p. 391.

An advowson collative is where the bishop and patron are one and the same person; in which case the bishop cannot present to himself; but he does by one act of collation or conferring the benefice the whole that is done in common cases, by both presentation and institution.

Id. Ib. book ii. ch. iii. vol. ii. p. 22.

COLLATION, in Canon Law, conferring a Benefice by a Bishop; such Benefice being part of his own patronage; this he does jure pleno. Collation differs both from presentation and institution: presentation is the act of a Patron of a Benefice offering a Clerk to the Bishop for institution; Collation is the act of the Bishop himself. Institution is performed by the Bishop after presentation by the Patron; Collation on the Bishop's own motion. Collation is giving the Church to the Clerk; presentation is offering the Clerk to the Church. Collation supplies the place both of presentation and institution and amounts to the same as institution, where the Bishop is both Patron and Ordinary.

COLLATION, in Common Law, is the comparing a Copy with its Original, to ascertain whether it is conformable. A Collated act is often equivalent to an Original; provided all parties concerned were present at such Collation.

COLLA'TERAL, COLLA'TERALLY. } Con, and latus, lateris, the side. Fr. collateral, not direct, on the side. Cotgrave.

Not immediately dependent upon, or derived from, but so connected, or conjoined, as to give and confer additional force, strength, or security. Connected, conjoined, concurrent.

And a collateral comfort.

Piers Ploughman. Vision, fol. 270.

With many a blustering blast he seemed to have beene tossed, which painted an horizon with all the cardinall and collaterall windes blowing, and in the middes RAPIUNTQUE FERUNTQUE.

Camden. Remains. Impreses.

And in a word, all, or most of the kings have their beginnings placed in some other year of their collaterals than the Scriptures have determined.

Ralegh. History of the World, book ii. ch. xxvi. sec. 6.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection, and beget
Like of his like, his image multiplie,
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love, and deerest amity.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 426.

But I said, conscience relies not upon the will [directly] yet it cannot be denied, but the will hath force upon the conscience collaterally and indirectly.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. i.

COL TER — COL LEAG

And yet he knows withal that faith is requisite that he may be justified, and that without it all the grace which is in God's heart would never justify nor save him, whilst yet he hath nothing in his eye view'd in himself either directly or collaterally to move him to believe.

Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part i. fol. 172.

The chancellor, who had procured his daughter to be married to the Duke of York, and was therefore suspected of having made the match with the Infanta of Portugal, that he might make way for the succession of the collateral line, sent for the Duke of Richmond. Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. fol. 169.

Add to this, that when words denote time, not collaterally, but principally, they cease to be verbs, and become either adjectives or substantives. Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. vi.

COLLAUD, v. Collaudo; con, and laudo; from laus, laudis; for which the Latin Etymologists offer three unsatisfactory Etymologies. Tooke thinks laus is A. S. hlios, the past participle of hliosan, celebrare. To laud or praise in unison with others.

For though we live among the tongues of praise,
All troops of smoothing people that collaud
All that we do; yet 'tis within our hearts
Th' ambushment lies, that evermore betrays
Our judgments, when ourselves become t' applaud
Our own ability, and our owne parts.

Daniel. To Lady Anne Clifford.

Let all thy fragrant flowers
Grow sweeter by this air;
Thy tallest trees and bowers
Bud forth and blossom fair;
Beasts wild and tame
whom lodgings yield
house, dens or field,
Collaud his name.

Howell. Letters, book i. sec. 5. A Gradual Hymn, &c.

COLLE'AGUE, v. Co'LLEAGUE, n. Co'LLEAGUESHIP. } Collegæ, quod una lecti sint, id est, creati. Malim tamen a com et lex, quod iisdem legibus aliquid agant. Martinius

One chosen to act in unison with another; or, one acting under the same laws; the same rules or orders, in the same service, office, or employment with another.

They would geue no more place to the fruites of infidelitie then S. Paule gaue to Peter hys colleague, when he left the table of the Gentiles and went to the Jews.

Frith. Workes, fol. 61.

The king's pleasure is, that ye then proceed to the protestations mentioned in the first instructions given to Mr. Stevins, for you and the residue of your colleagues.

Burnett. Records. Despatch of the Cardinals concerning Divorce.

Colleagued with a dreame of his aduantage;
He hath not fayl'd to pester vs with message
Importing the surrender of those lands
Lost by his father.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 153.

Hence like a lusty flood, most absolutely free,
None mixing then with me, as I do mix with none,
But scorning a colleague, nor near me any one,
To Neptune's court I come.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 29.

These great saints [Paul and Barnabas] joined by nature, friendship, religion, high providence, and revelation, could not so govern a casual difference, a sudden passion, but must in wisdom divide from the outward duties of a friendship, or a colleagueship in the same family, or in the same journey, lest it should grow to a worse division.

COL-LEAGUE. — COLLECT.

Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

Being yet very young, (says Plutarch,) I was joined in commission with another in an embassy to the Proconsul, and my colleague, falling sick, was forced to stay behind; so that the whole business was transacted by me alone.

Dryden. The Life of Plutarch.

——Pisander; who in days of yore
From old Amyclæ to the Lesbian shore
And Tenedos, colleagued in high command
With great Orestes, led th' Æolian band.

West. The Eleventh Nemean Ode.

CO'LLECT, v.
CO'LLECT, n,
CO'LLECTEDLY,
CO'LLECTEDNESS,
COLLE'CTION,
COLLE'CTIVE,
COLLE'CTIVELY,
COLLE'CTOR,
COLLE'CTORY,
COLLE'CTORSHIP.

Lat. collectum, past participle of colligere; from con, and legere, (Gr. λέγειν,) to gather.

To gather, or put together; to bring, or bear into one place, one mass, or heap, or sum.

To gather, or bring together, things dispersed; met. as to collect the thoughts; resume command over them, to collect one thought from or in consequence of another; to infer one from another.

For Church Collects, see the example from Comber.

As we haue takē in hand to collect and set forth his whole workes togither, so we thought it not vnconuenient, to collecte likewise some briefe notes concerning the order of his lyfe and godly conuersation. Tyndall. Life, a. iii.

It is also ordened that the colects for the preservation of the King and Queen by name, be from henceforth comunely and usuallie used and sayed in every cathedrall churche, &c.

Burnett. Records. An order for Preaching, and bidding of the Beades.

And against the next day of collection [the parish clerk] shall hang up somewhere in the church in open place, to the intent the poor having knowledg therby, by whose charity and alms they be relieved, may pray for the increase and prosperity of the same.

Id. Ib. Injunctions given by the King's Majesty's visitors, &c.

If we shall make enquirie into his reuenues and tributes, true it is, that this king, of all others, is endued with the greatest and the richest, both in regard of the fertilitie & greatnes of his dominions, & also by reason of the seuere collection and exaction of his duties.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. A description of China.

These payd the pence gathered to the bp; and the bp payd to the collector, and had his acquietance, by the name of Peter-pence.

Strype. Memoirs. Instructions to Lord Privy Seal, &c. No. 79.

(They) are generally so exactly suted to them [the epistle and gospel] that some think they take their name from being collected out of those parts of Holy Writ. But the use of the word in the Bible and the Fathers, being applied to denote the gathering together of the people in religious assemblies, thence some ritualists say, The collects are prayers made among the people collected or gathered together. Others think they are named collects because of their comprehensive brevity, because the priest in them sums up the desires of the people in a little room. I may add, in this variety, my own conjecture, that these prayers have been named collects from their being used so near the time of making the collection before the Holy Communion.

Comber. A Companion to the Temple, part i. sec. 20.

Yet seeing the composers of our liturgy thought fit to abbreviate,—Turning from all sin, and keeping all God's statutes, and doing that which is lawful and right,—into this one word Repenting, it is easie and obvious to collect from hence, as I did before, from the other place, that by Repentance, they understood not only sorrow for sin, but conversion from it.

Chillingworth. Sermon, 1.

Therefore I watch'd thy footsteps from that hour, COLLECT.
And follow'd thee still on this vast wild;
Where by all best conjectures I collect
Thou art to be my fatal enemy.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 524.

The soul is of such subtlety,
And close collectednesse.

More. Song of the Soul, song 4. ch. iii. sec. 17.

But wee saye, There is no case in religion so darke, and doubteful, but it maie necessarily be either proued or reproued by collection, and conference of the Scriptures.

Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, fol. 58.

Nowe I pray you iudge of the sequele of these reasons; and compare them with T. C. his waywarde collection, and tell me truely whether he dealeth simply or no.

Whitgift. Defence of the Answer, fol. 28.

If he be much our superior; tis good to do it sometimes in parables; as Nathan did to David. So let him by collection, give himself the censure.

Feltham. Resolve 7. Reprehension.

But the place is very obscure, and whether thereby be not meant the river Euphrates, is not without good controversie, as is collectible from the subsequent words.

Sir Thomas Brown, book vi. ch. viii.

The difference of their concretion is collectible from their dissolution, which being many wayes performable in ice, is few ways effected in crystal. Id. book ii. ch. i.

But he that after a patient continuance in well doing, adds charity or martyrdome to the collective body of his other graces, he hath made them perfect with this kind of perfection.

J. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. i. sec. 3.

Of this oak, or rather collectively Quercetum or oaken-holt of Sichem, is twice mention made elsewhere in Scripture.

Mede. Works, book i. disc. 18.

To these eight or any five of them was intrusted the full and free administration of the whole rents and duties pertaining to the officers of controllery and collectory, resigned and committed by the four officers in his majesty's hands.

Spotswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1595. book vi.

For it is easy to be collected, from what has been said, that confessing our sins, in this manner, is, in the reason of the thing, a point so necessary, that we are no ways qualified for the obtaining forgiveness of them without it.

Sharp. Works, vol. v. disc. 6.

But we may learn the whole mystery of it from our church, which in the collect for the second Sunday in Advent, directs us to pray to God, who hath caused all Scriptures to be written for our learning. Bishop Beveridge. Sermon, 110.

And Thomas Sternhold, one of the King's servants set forth his Psalms; being a collection of some of David's Psalms, which he, for his own private entertainment, had composed into English verse, and set them to tunes, and had sung and played by himself, for his own godly solace.

Strype. Memoirs. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

You will find that no law can restrain or tie up the supreme authority of a nation, but what ought to restrain and tie up the whole collective body, supposing it possible for that whole body to meet, and hear, and determine the same causes, before one written or customary law in being; because the body representative is in effect that body collective, as to its powers and privileges.

Hoadly. Works. Political Pieces, vol. iii. fol. 116.

But then, tho' these names being put in the singular number, seem to denote some single evil spirit, that bears ill-will to mankind; yet we are always to remember, that they are to be expounded collectively, that is to say, to signify the whole body of these apostate spirits, of which there are a vast number.

Sharp Works, vol. iii. serm. 4.

But the King of Great Britain obeys no other person; all other persons are individually, and collectively too, under him, and owe to him a legal obedience.

Burke. On the Revolution in France.

COLLECT. Not that I shall make a merit with you in having perused these barbarous volumes myself; much less would I impose the ungrateful task upon you. Thanks to the curiosity of certain painful collectors, this knowledge may be obtained at a cheaper rate.
Hurd. Works. On Chivalry and Romance, let. 4.

In one collectorship out of twenty-four, and that by no means the largest or best cultivated, there have lately been found, by an actual enumeration, a million and three hundred thousand native inhabitants; whence it should seem that in all India there cannot now be fewer than thirty millions of black British subjects.
Sir William Jones. Tenth Anniversary Discourse.

The following Tables of the COLLECTS for Sundays, and other Holydays, used in our English Liturgy, was partly formed by Bishop Cosins, and was published by Dr. Comber.

I.

Collects retained from ancient Liturgies at the Reformation.

Collects for	Whence taken.
4 Sunday in Advent.	In some old Offices for the first Sunday in Advent.
St. John's day.	St. Greg. Sacr. and Gothick Liturgy.
The Epiphany.	St. Greg. Sacr.
1, 2, and 3 Sunday after Epph.	The same, and St. Ambros. Liturgy.
5 Epiphany.	St. Greg. Sacr.
Septuagesima.	The same.
Sexagesima.	The same.
2, 3, 4, 5 Sunday in Lent.	The same.
6 Sunday in Lent.	The same; but in St. Ambros. Liturgy for Good Friday.
Good Friday, the three Collects.	They are in all Offices with little variation: but are left out of the Breviaries of Pius V. and Clem. VIII.
Easter Day.	St. Greg. Sacr. and a Collect almost the same in the Gallic. Liturgy.
3 Sunday after Easter.	St. Greg. Sacr. St. Ambros. Liturgy.
5 Sunday after Easter.	St. Greg. Sacr.
Ascension Day.	The same.
Whit-Sunday.	The same.
1 Sunday after Trinity.	The same. This in some old Offices is called the second after Pentecost: in others the first after the Octaves of Pentecost.
The 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 after Trinity.	Are all in St. Greg. Sacr.
The Purification.	The same.
St. Michael's Day.	The same.

II.

Collects taken from ancient models, but considerably altered and improved by our Reformers, and the Reviewers of the Liturgy.

Collects for	Time of Improvement.	How it stood before.
St. Stephen's Day.	Beginning added 1662.	Grant us, O Lord, to learn to love our enemies, &c.
4 Sund. after Epiph.	End improved 1662.	Grant to us the health of body and soul, that all those things which we suffer for sin, &c.
4 Sund. after Easter.	Improved 1662.	Who makest the minds of all faithful people to be of one will, &c.
Sund. after Ascension.	A little varied 1549.	This had been of old the Collect for Ascension Day, on which our venerable Bede repeated it as he was dying.
2 Sund. after Trinity.	The order inverted 1662.	Lord make us to have a perpetual fear and love of thy holy name, for thou never fallest, &c.
8 Sund. after Trinity	Beginning improved 1662.	Whose providence is never deceived, &c.
11 Sund. after Trinity.	Improved 1662.	That we running to thy promises, may be made partakers of thy heavenly treasure, &c.
18 Sund. after Trinity.	Improved 1662.	To avoid the infections of the devil, &c.
19 Sund. after Trinity.	Improved 1662.	That the workings of thy mercy may in all things, &c.
St. Paul's Day.	Improved 1549 and 1662.	In the Breviaries (Missals) a new prayer was added mentioning St. Paul's intercession; in the year 1549 the old prayer alone out of Greg. Sacr. was restored, which had our walking after his example only, which was a little varied in the year 1662.
The Annunciation.	Improved 1549.	The Breviaries had put in a new prayer about the B. Virgin's intercession, which was cast out in 1549, and the form being in St. Greg. Sacr. restored.
St. Philip and James.	Improved 1662.	As thou hast taught St. Philip and the other apostles, &c.
St. Bartholomew.	Improved 1662.	To preach that which he taught, &c. was altered, because there is no writing of his extant.
Trinity Sunday.		This Collect is no older than the Sacramentary ascribed to Alcuinus. The old Offices have another Collect for it, and call it the Octave of Pentecost.

III.

Collects composed anew, and substituted in the place of those, which, containing either false or superstitious doctrines, were on this account rejected.

Collects for	Composed in
1 Sunday in Advent.	First Book of Edward VI. 1549.
2 Sunday in Advent.	The same time.
3 Sunday in Advent.	1662.
Christmas Day.	1549.
Circumcision.	The same time.
6 Sunday after Epiphany.	1662. Before this time they repeated the Collect for the fifth Sunday.
Quinquagesima.	1549.
Ash Wednesday.	The same time.
1 Sunday in Lent.	The same time.
Easter Even.	1662. No Collect for it ever before then.
Easter Sunday.	The first sentence (1 Cor. v. 7.) was added 1662.
1 Sunday after Easter.	1549. Then it was used on Easter Tuesday, and in 1662, was fixed for this Sunday.
2 Sunday after Easter.	1549.
St. Andrew's Day.	1552. Second Book of Edward VI.
St. Thomas's Day, St. Matthias, St. Mark, St. Barnabas, St. John Baptist, St. Peter, St. James, St. Matthew, St. Luke, St. Simon and St. Jude, All Saints,	All composed anew in 1549.

The Sacramentary of St. Gregory was composed before the year 600, and most of the Collects which he adopted, were taken or altered from still older Liturgies.

The Second Collect, both in Morning and Evening service is taken from St. Gregory's Sacramentary; the Third, from the Greek Euchologion.

COLLECT. COLLEGE.

CO'LLEGE, COLLE'GIAN, COLLE'GIATE, n. COLLE'GIATE, adj. CO'LLEGE-AWKWARDNESS, CO'LLEGE-EDUCATION, CO'LLEGE-GARDEN, CO'LLEGE-LECTURES, CO'LLEGE-RULES, CO'LLEGE-WEAL.

See COLLEAGUE. As Colleague is applied individually, so College is collectively, to A number of persons acting or living under the same laws; the same rules or orders; applied more especially to those who devote themselves to learning or religion. Collegian is written by Bale Colligener.

Brother Skelton your endeuorment
So haue ye done, that meretoriously
Ye haue deserued to haue an emplement
In our collage aboue the sterry skye.
Skelton. The Crown of Laurel.

For what thou makest an hospitall, that will he shortly make a colledge of priestes, or a place of religion, or what he lusteth.
Tyndall. Works, fol. 359.

Next vnto that, they enacted, that no archdeacō, (they spake of no bishoppes,) priest, deacon, subdeacon, colligener, nor canou, shoulde from thence fourthe marry a wife.
Bale. English Votaries, part iii. fol. 76.

King Richard the III. endowed this colledge [Saint Margaret and Saint Barnard, commonly called Queen's] with 500 markes the yeere lands. Stowe. Of the Vniuersitie, fol. 954.

On barbed steeds they rode in proud array,
Thick as the college of the bees in May,
When swarming o'er the dusky fields they fly,
New to the flowers and intercept the sky.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

COLLEGE. — COLLET.

Dr. Haywood was buried in the collegiate church of S. Peter at Westminster, near to the bottom of the stairs leading up to the pulpit. Wood. Athenæ Oxon., vol. ii. fol. 325.

Which made him merrily to tell them who observ'd the thriving of his body, (which in his latter years was very apparent) that they might see what college-commons could doe.

Meede. Works. Life, fol. 45.

Dishes, with names not known in books
And less among the college-cooks.

Suckling. Upon my Lord Brohall's Wedding.

If we consult the collegiates of Morefields, we shall find most of them are beholden to their pride for their introduction into that magnificent palace. Tatler, No. 127.

Consider what it is to bear
The powder'd courtier's witty sneer;
To see th' important man of dress
Scoffing my college-awkwardness.

Swift. An Apology, &c.

I know several gentlemen, who, since their appearance in the world, have spent as much time in rubbing off the rust and pedantry of a college-education, as they had done before in acquiring it. Berkeley. Minute Philosopher, dial. 1.

When we consider the greatness of our wants in this kind, we should be tempted to wish for a college, destined for the supplial of a sufficient number of able missionaries in constant succession, brought up from their early youth in such a discipline as may be judged best fitted for such a service.

Warburton. Sermon, 20. vol. x.

See on each page her beauteous volume bear
The golden characters of good and fair.
All human knowledge (blush collegiate pride!)
Flows from her works, to none that reads denied.

Langhorn. The enlargement of the Mind, epist. 1.

I swear and promise that I will preserve in it [the doctrine taught and decided by the national synod of Dort] all my life long, and defend it with all my power, and never depart from it in my sermons, college-lectures, writings, or conversation, or in any other manner, public or private.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History. Preface.

Our pupil's hopes, tho' twice defeated,
Are with a scholarship completed:
A scholarship but half maintains,
And college-rules are heavy chains.

Warton. The Progress of Discontent.

Where Smith in hoary reverence presides,
Whose mild and bright benevolence of soul,
By reason cool, and by religion warm,
And generous passion for the college-weal,
More than a muse inspire.

Thomson. Sickness, book iii.

A Roman consul, a polished emperor's friend, and a man of elegant literature and taste, delighted in what the mob now scarce admire in a college-garden.

Walpole. On Modern Gardening.

COLLET, n. Mid. Lat. colletus, collare. Du Cange. Fr. collet, "The throat or fore part of the neck; also the collar of a jerkin, &c." Cotgrave. From the Lat. collum, the neck. Minshew says, "The collet or beazil of a ring. It seems to have the name q. Collar; for as the collar doth compasse the necke, so doth the collet the stone in the ring."

Also the small collar or band worn by the inferior Romish Clergy.

How loaded hives are with their honey fill'd,
From divers flowers by chymic bees distill'd!
How full the collet with his jewel is,
Which, that it cannot take by love, doth kiss.

Cowley. Translation of verses upon the Blessed Virgin.

A great genius must tread in unbeaten paths, and deviate from the common road of life: otherwise, surely a diamond of so much lustre (Stella) might have been publickly produced, although it had been fixed within the collet of matrimony.

Orrery. On Swift, Letter 2.

COLLETES, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Hymenoptera, family Andrenetæ. (Mellitta * a, Kirby.) Generic character: hinder feet pollinigerous; three submarginal cellules; third articulation of the antennæ longer than the second. COLLETES. — COLLIER.

Type, Mellitta succincta, Kirby.

Like all the insects of this most interesting group, the mode of nidification of this genus of Bees is very curious and beautiful. Reaumur, whose observation was so accurate, and whose knowledge of the habits of insects was so extensive, gives a very amusing account of the nests, which is abridged by Mr. Kirby in his most valuable work on English Bees, (Monographia Apum Angliæ.) They make their nests in the earth that fills the vacuities in stone walls. The nests are cylindrical, consisting of from two to four cells placed end to end, shaped like a thimble, the end of the second fitting into the mouth of the first: the cells are not all of equal length, some being four, others five lines in length, and about two in diameter. The cylinder is usually placed horizontally. It is partly coloured, the colours being laid in bands; and as the cells are composed of several layers of thin transparent membrane, they assume a general reddish colour from being filled with a red substance of the consistence of paste, or sometimes nearly liquid, formed of pollen and honey. After the larva is hatched it soon consumes this substance; and afterwards when arrived at its full growth quits its cell. Grew found these nidi in the middle of the pith of an old elder branch. Reaumur, tom. vi. Mem. 5. p. 131. tab. 12. fig. 1—13; Grew, Rar. p. 154.

COLLETIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rhamni. Generic character: calyx, pitcher-shaped, five-cleft, interior of the base hairy; petals five, like scales, sometimes the petals are wanting; berry dry, three-parted, three-seeded.

Four species, natives of South America. Persoon.

COLLI'DE, COLLI'SION. } Lat. collidere, (from con, and lædere,) to dash, or strike against.

So may wee truly say, before Luther arose and awakened the world, divines spoke and wrote more loosely than since they have done: the sparks of truth being forced out of contention, as the sparks of fire are out of the collision of the flint and steele.

Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 237.

The outward [ayre] being strucke or collided by a solid body, still strikes the next ayre.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 274.

To the sound, which is a collision of the ayre, three things are required; a body to strike, as the hand of a musician; the body strucken, which must be solid and able to resist; as a bell, lute string; nor wooll, or spunge: the medium, the ayre.

Id. Ib.

Such were Cyanean isles, when Typhis steer'd,
Betwixt their straits, and their collision fear'd.

Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book xv.

The alliance between church and state; in which we pretend to have discovered a plain and simple truth, of the highest concernment to civil society, long lost and hid under the learned obscurity arising from the collision of contrary false principles.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book ii.

CO'LLIER, n. Co'lliery. } See Coal. A worker or labourer among coals; a dealer in them; also, a vessel that conveys or carries them.

As the sayinge is, lyke wyl to lyke, as the deuyl fyndeth out the colyer.

Bale. Apology, fol. 93.

So broad her mouth was: as she stood and cride,
She tore her elvish knots of hayre, as blacke
And full of dust as any collyer's sacke.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 1.

Letters, that 100 colliers were gone with a convoy to London.
Whitelock. Memoirs. Anno 1652. September.

He could transform himself in colour
As like the devil as a collier:
As like as hypocrites, in show,
Are to true saints, or crow to crow.
Butler Hudibras, part i. can. 2.

The collieries on the Tyne lay exposed for several miles, and could not be preserved at a great charge, and with a great force.
Burnett. Own Times, Anno 1707.

Consult his person, dress and air,
He seems, which strangers well might swear,
The master, or by courtesy
The captain of a colliery.
Churchill. The Duellist, book iii.

CO'LLIGATE, } Lat. colligare, (con, and ligare, COLLIGA'TION. } Gr. λυγ-εῖν, to bind,) to bind together.

All the members of their church are so colligated and bound together in a kind of subjection and subordination to one head, that you shall seldom hear of any contention among them that ever breaks out into open flames.
Quelch. Church Customs Vindicated, (1636.) fol. 8.

These therefore the midwife cutteth off, contriving them into a knot close under the body of the infant; from whence ensueth that tortuosity or complicated nodosity we usually call the navel; occasioned by the colligation of vessels before mentioned.
Sir Thomas Brown, book v. ch. v.

The more blessed colligation of the kingdoms, than that of the roses, we owe to the happiness of your father, who even for that alone were to be remembered ever with highest veneration. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 143.

COLLINSONIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Diandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: corolla unequal, inferior; lip many-cleft, capillary; one perfect seed.

This genus named in honour of Peter Collinson, the friend of Linnæus, contains seven species, natives of North America. Pursh. Am. Fl.

CO'LLIQUATE, v.
CO'LLIQUABLE,
COLLIQUA'TION,
COLLI'QUATIVE,
COLLIQUEFA'CTION.
} Colliquere, (con, and liquere, to melt,) to melt together, to melt or dissolve.

But ice will dissolve in any way of heat; for it will dissolve with fire; it will colliquate in water, or warme oyl.
Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. i.

For simply all goods are not common amonge all friends, but those only who being severed apart in body, conjoyn and colliquate as it were per force, their souls together, neither willing nor beleeving that they should be twain but one.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 941.

That which is coagulated by a fiery siccity, will suffer colliquation from an aqueous humidity.
Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. i.

Such a broth or sipping is this, as there is not in the world a more soveraigne restorative for all colliquations and consumptions whatsoever, nor that will sooner set upon their feet againe those who be farre gone and spent that way.
Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 139.

The getting forth, or spreading of the spirits, (which is a degree of getting forth,) hath five differing operations. If the spirits be detained within the body, and move more violently, there followeth colliquation; as in metals, &c.
Bacon. Natural History, Cent. iv. sec. 328.

After the incorporation of metals by simple colliquefaction, for the better discovery of the nature and consents and dissents of metals, it should be likewise tried by incorporating of their dissolutions. Bacon. Physiological Remains.

And thus Agricola in divers places informs us, when copper, or the ore of it is colliquated by the violence of the fire with cadmia, the sparks, that in great multitudes do fly upwards, do some of them stick to the vaulted roofs of the furnaces, in the form of little and (for the most part) white bubbles.
Boyle. The Sceptical Chymist.

The tender consistence renders it more colliquable and consumptive. Harvey. On Consumptions.

And so when sand and ashes are well melted together and suffered to cool, there is generated by the colliquation that sort of concretion we call glass.
Boyle. On the relative nature of Physical Qualities.

A colliquative fever is such as is attended with a diarrhœa, or sweats, from too lax a contexture of the fluids. Quincy.

COLLIURIS, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Coleoptera, family Cicindeletæ. Generic character: body elongate; thorax long, very narrow, cylindrico-conical, narrowed behind.

Type, Collyris Conjicollis, Fab.

CO'LLOCATE, adj. } Lat. collocatus, past parti-
COLLOCA'TION. } ciple of collocare, (from con, and locare,) to place together.

In which doing beside the laud and praise that ye shall consecute thereby of all good men, we shall so have your acquitals in our remembrance, as ye shall have cause to think your travels, pains and studies herein in the best wise collocate and employed.
Burnett. Records. The King's Letter to his Ambassadors, about his appearance before the Legates, 1529.

When he had perfighte knowledge where the earle with his armye was soiourneynge, he hauynge continuall repaire of his subiectes to hym, beganne incontynently withoute delaie to marshall and collocate in order his battailes (lyke a valyaunt capteine and polletique leader.)
Hall. The third Yere of King Richard III.

They supposed their Gods by the power of spells and magicall consecrations to be retained and shut up in their temples, as birds in a cage, or the devil in a circle, that so their suppliants might know where to have them when they had occasion to seeke unto them; and that, for such retaining or circumscribing of them in a certain place, an idol was necessary as the centre of their collocation.
Mede. Works. Objections Answered, book ii. fol. 427.

We have not this assistance as to the accusative, which in modern languages (a few instances excepted) is only known from its position, that is to say, it being subsequent to its verb, in the collocation of the words.
Harris. Hermes, book ii. ch. iv.

With respect to your style, if elegance consists in the choice and collocation, of words, you have a most indubitable title to it; for you have on all occasions selected the most appropriate expressions, and have given to them the most beautiful arrangement; and this is almost the greatest praise, which a composition can claim. Sir William Jones. Works. To R. Orme.

COLLOP, n. The Fr. charbonnée is a carbonado (q. v.) or collop. Charbonner, is to collow, or make black with a coal. Cotgrave. As carbonado, from charbonnée, so collop (by corruption) from the obsolete Collow, to colly (q. v.) or make black with a coal. And then applied to Any thing of similar form and shape to a collop.

BUST. Safe? do you hear? take notice what plight you find me in, if there want but a collop or a steek o'me, look to't.
Beaumont and Fletcher. Maid of the Mill, act iv. sc. 1.

They were driven to use great extremity to the poor souldiers (which had travelled sore and taken great pains in the wars) to make them restore back such a collop out of their gain, and the rather, because many of them had already spent it every peny.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch. Camillus, fol. 116.

I heare also that some other flitches haue forgone the like collops, but let such matters be scanned by men of more discretion. Holinshed. Description of England, ch. ii.

Because he hathe covered his face with his fatnes, and hathe collopes in [his] flăcke. Geneva Bible. Job, ch. xv. v. 27.

T'involve the lean in cauls, and mend the lard.
Sweet-breads and collops were with skewers prick'd
About the sides; imbibing what they deck'd.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad.

COLLO'GUE, n. } Lat. colloqui, to speak together,
COLLO'GUING. } to parley; con, and loqui, to speak, (is loquitur, qui suo loco quodque verbum sciens ponit. Varro, lib. v.) As generally applied,
To confer, or converse;—with deceitful or delusive designs.

If [a mistaken notion of Divine goodness meets] with more soft and timerous natures, men of base and slavish minds, it puts such men on to flatter and collogue with him [the Deity] and to propitiate his favour by their zeal in lesser matters.
Bishop Wilkins. Of Natural Religion, book i. ch. xiv.

Such base flattery, stupend parasiticall fawning and colloguing, &c. brawles, conflicts, desires, contentions, it would aske an expert Vesalius to anatomize every member.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 74.

It is a good mark of a spurious epistle (whereof we have good store, devised by colloguing knaves, and fathered on the first popes) when any of them talketh in an imperious strain, or arrogateth such a power to himself.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy, sec. 19.

CO'LLOQUY, } See COLLOGUE, above. A con-
COLLO'QUIAL, } ference, conversation, or discourse
CO'LLOQUIST, } together.
COLLOCU'TOR. }

In 1540 he [Symon Gryne] was joined, as an assistant, to Ph. Melancthon, Mart. Bucer, Jo. Calvin, &c. when they went to Wormes to the colloquy there about religion.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon., vol. i. fol. 58.

In the midst of this divine colloquy he was commanded to look down on the plain below. Spectator, No. 237.

And in his book de Legibus Cicero brings in his collocutor, saying, Sit igitur hoc a principio persuasum, &c. i. e. Let this be what every member of the commonwealth is fully convinced of from the beginning, that the Gods are lords and governours of all things, &c. Derham. Astro-Theology, book viii. ch. iii.

He has taught Samson the tales of Circe, and the Syrens, at which he apparently hints in his colloquy with Delilah.
Johnson. The Rambler, No. 140.

Ye powers who rule the tongue, if such there are,
And make colloquial happiness your care,
Preserve me from the thing I dread and hate,
A duel in the form of a debate.
Cowper. Conversation.

The colloquists in this dialogue being all real persons, though concealed under feigned names, as Dryden has hinted in the introduction, we are prompted by that curiosity which delights in the investigation and discovery of literary secrets, to try whether by some circumstance or other the persons whom he had here in contemplation, may not be ascertained.
Malone. Life of Dryden.

COLLUCTATION, colluctatus, past participle of colluctari, (con, and luctari; of uncertain Etymology,) to struggle, to wrestle.

Phlegm transforms her [the phansie] into water and fishes; and the shadowy melancholy intangles her in the colluctation with old hags and hobgoblins, and frights her with dead men's faces in the dark.
Henry More. Antidote against Atheism, book ii. ch. ix.

Unless peradventure it may seem still easier, if we superadde also, That the being assimilated to these cherubick orders is not without considerable colluctation and conflict, the soul not being able to approach the angelical nature in her inward advances but with pain and agonie.
Henry More. Appendix to Defence, ch. xi.

COLLU'DE, v. } Colludere;—con, and ludere;—
COLLU'DER, n. } (ludere, a Lydis, who first intro-
COLLU'DING, n. } duced them (ludi) into Hetruria,
COLLU'SION, } whence the Romans received
COLLU'SIVE, } them.)
COLLU'SIVELY. }
To play together, to game together; to unite in the same play, game, or trick; and thus, to unite for purposes of fraud or deception.

If fals fickil tunges, suche cloked collusion
Hath brought nobil princes to extreme confusion.
Skelton. The Crown of Laurel.

Well let vs now leue the cloked collusion, that remayned in Fraunce, & returne to the open dissimulacion, which now appeared in Englande.
Hall. Henry VI. The thirty-sixth Yere.

Colluders yourselves, as violent to this law of God by your unmerciful binding, as the Pharisees by their unbounded loosening. Milton. Tetrachordon.

Your goodly glozings and time-serving colludings with the state, are but like watermen upon the Thames, looking one way, rowing another way.
Richard Mountague. A Just Appeale.

This notwithstanding, ye reasons, that M. Hardinge hath here founde out, are so sclender & so simple, & so guilefully, & vntruely gathered, that his frendes of yt side may happily suspecte, he had vsed some collusion, to betraie their cause.
Jewell. Replie to M. Hardinge.

For if they would simplie and heartelie search for the truth, they would not vse these craftie collusions and deceitful iugglings.
Fox. Martyrs, fol. 1071.

This would authorize marriage in both parties after divorce for adulterie, which is a matter not fully resolved on among diuines, and may breed collusive divorces or willfull breache of wedlock, to the intent to marye elsewhere.
Strype. Life of Bishop Whitgift. Articles presented to the Queen's Majesty, No. 17.

A second character is, that they [miracles] be done publickly in the face of the world, that there may be no room to suspect artifice and collusion. Atterbury. Sermon, 11. vol. iii.

If they let things take their course, they will be reprcsented as colluding with sedition, or at least tacitly encouraging it. If they remonstrate against persecution, they propagate rebellion.
Burke. Letter on the Affairs of Ireland.

But the gentlemen on the other side of the house know as well as I do, and they dare not contradict me, that the nabob of Arcot and his creditors are not adversaries, but collusive parties, and that the whole transaction is under a false colour and false names. Id. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

If this had been permitted, the land might have been aliened collusively without the consent of the superior. Blackstone.

COLLUTION, colluere; con, and luere, lutum, to wash. A wash; or, as it is now called, a Lotion.

If the teeth be ill affected, a collution made with goat's milke, or bull's gall, is thought to be a remedie of great efficacie.
Holland. Plinie, book xxviii. ch. xii. fol. 327.

COLLY. On Midsummer's Night Dream, act i. sc. 1, "Brief as the lightning in the collied night;" Mr. Steevens remarks, "Collied, i. e. black, smutted with Coal; a word still used in the Midland counties." So in B. Jonson's Poetaster, "Thou hast not collied thy face enough." Shakspeare, v. 5. p. 184. See COLLOP.

COLLY. — COLOGNE

Oth. Now by heaven,
My blood begins my safer guides to rule,
And passion (having my best judgement collied)
Assaies to leade the way.
Shakspeare. Othello, fol. 320.

Suppose thou saw her in a base beggar's weed, or else dressed in some old hirsute attires out of fashion, fowle linnen, course raiment besmeared with soot, colly, &c.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 554.

COLLYBIST, Gr. κόλλυβος, παρὰ τὸ κολλᾶσθαι βοῦν, quod æri illi quasi agglutinatus esset bos, id est, imago bovis incusa;—a species of small brazen coin, used for change, upon which the image of an ox was impressed. Hesychius. See also Martinius. And hence applied pecuniæ permutationi, to the exchange of money. Vossius.

Κολλυβιστὴς, a money changer; one who changes money of greater value into that of less. Parkhurst.

See now how his eyes sparkle with holy anger, and dart forth beams of indignation, in the faces of these guilty collybists; see how his hands deale strokes and ruin?
Hall. Cont. Christ's Procession to the Temple, fol. 242.

Pollux, iii. 9, mentions a coin called Τρίκολλυβος, which probably was thrice the weight of the Κόλλυβος. Cicero, In Verr. iii. 76, applies the word Collybus, to exchange.

COLLYRIUM, κόλλα, glue, ῥέω, I flow; anciently a pastille, or cake, designed to dilute any glutinous discharge. The name is now applied to Eye-water, as well as to Ointment.

COLN, a River of England, which originates from several small streams in Hertfordshire. These unite on the north of Mims, where the Coln, after receiving the Ver, passes Watford, and then assuming a more westerly course, it soon afterwards enters Middlesex, and joins the Thames at Staines. The chief feature of this River is a short subterranean passage, which commences near its entrance into Colney Park; in the same park it again issues from its dark bed, and flows gently towards the Thames. Coln is also the name of a River in Essex, which rises on the north side of that County, and passing Colchester, soon afterwards expands into a large estuary, which admits ships of considerable burden within three miles of that town.

COLOBICUS, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Coleoptera, family Necrophagi. Generic character: antennæ club-shaped, the club bi-articulate, ovate; a process covering the mouth; mandibules not projecting; body depressed; back flattish, horizontal.

Type, Nitidula hirta, Ross.

COLOGNE, or Cologn, a secularized Archbishopric and Electorate of Germany, now included in the Prussian Duchy of the Lower Rhine, and divided into several distinct parts by the interposition of the contiguous States. Its length is about ninety miles and its medium breadth fifteen. The greater part of this district was situated on the Rhine, between the Duchies of Juliers and Berg. Another part lay between Juliers and Treves; while the Duchies of Recklinghausen and Westphalia constituted a third. The whole population of the Archbishopric was nearly 220,000. Much of the upper part of the Province is covered with mountains and forests; the soil of the lower is very unequal, being composed of sandy heaths and fertile fields; but, in many places, it yields good crops of grain and flax, besides containing mines of lead and iron. The principal river is the Rhine, which is here augmented by the Nethe, the Aar, the Erp, and Neuse. Game, fish, and mineral springs abound, and there are also vineyards, from which good wine is made. Cologne was erected into a Bishop's See as early as the IVth century, and raised to Metropolitan rank in the VIIIth. The dignities of Archbishop and Elector were united in the same person, who was always Archchancellor of the Empire, and held the third place in the College of Electors. Cologne is also the name of one of the Prussian Governments of the Lower Rhine, which is chiefly composed of the former Archbishopric. It is divided into eleven Circles, and includes an area of 1462 square miles, and contains 321,600 inhabitants. COLOGNE

Cologne, the Capital of the preceding District, and the ancient Colonia Agrippina, is situated in a flat country on the left bank of the Rhine, along which it extends in the form of a crescent. It is supposed to have been founded by the Ubii, and is fortified in the ancient manner. The walls are about seven miles in circuit, but they enclose several gardens and vineyards. It is one of the oldest towns in Europe, but bears lamentable marks of decay. The streets are narrow, winding, and gloomy, and the houses ill-constructed. The Cathedral is a vast and magnificent, although unfinished pile of Gothic architecture, originally founded in the XIIIth century. The church of St. Mary is noted for its antiquity, and that of St. Gestian for having another church beneath its choir. Cologne has long held a conspicuous rank in Catholic Germany, as well from its University as from the number and zeal of its Clergy. The number of places dedicated to religious worship is nearly one hundred, besides numerous monasteries and nunneries. The University of Cologne was established in 1388, but was suppressed after this city and territory fell into the hands of the French in 1794, and a Lyceum was substituted in its stead, with an extensive Library, a Museum, a Philosophical apparatus, and a Botanic Garden. In 1802 the whole population was about 39,000, and these included more mendicants than any other city of Germany of the same number of inhabitants; latterly the population has diminished. Cologne was early comprised in the Hanseatic League, and was considered as one of the four principal Hanse towns. The chief exports are wine, timber, earthenware, slates, hardware, and fire-arms. The manufactures are silk, linen, woollens, lace, and thread, besides the celebrated eau de Cologne, and Cologne earth, a deep brown earth dug up in its neighbourhood, and used by painters in water-colours. This City has frequently suffered from the inundations of the Rhine, and after having been in possession of the French for about twenty years, was restored to Prussia in 1814. It stands about 20 miles south-east of Dusseldorf, and nearly 96 north-west of Frankfort on the Main; in latitude 50° 55′ north and longitude 6° 56′ east.

Cologne is celebrated in the legends of the Romish Church, for the possession of the bodies of the Magi by whom our Saviour was adored at his Nativity. They have been termed the three Kings of Cologne, and even their names have been preserved, Gasper, Melchior, and Balthazar, although Scripture is equally silent respecting their rank, their number, and their names. Sir Thomas Brown (Vulgar Errors, vii. 8) explains this tradition, by stating that the Magi after their return to their own country, were baptized by

COLOGNE — COLOMBIA.

St. Thomas; that their bodies 300 hundred years afterwards were translated by the Empress Helena to Constantinople, thence by Eustathius to Milan, and in the end by Renatus to Cologne. In the Cathedral of St. Peter, in a Chapel built by the Elector Maximilian, their monuments are still shown to strangers as those of the three Kings of Cologne. See Collection des pierres antiques dont la caisse des Saints trois Rois Mages est enrichie dans l'église Metropolitaine à Cologne, gravées après leurs empreintes avec un discours historique Analogue par Bonn. In the Church of the Cordeliers are interred the remains of the once celebrated Duns Scotus, and in that of St. Ursula are shown the bones of the imaginary 11,000 English Virgins, who were martyred here A. D. 382, a legend which is explained by supposing that there was one Virgin Martyr named Undecimilla, or that there were eleven, of whom a record was made by the cypher XI. M. V., The eleven martyred Virgins. The last supposition is corroborated by the 11 torches which anciently were borne as the arms of Cologne; for it is said that during a siege of the City in 1206, each of the martyrs appeared coming to its assistance with a torch. The story of the daughter of King Dionnol and her companions, will be found at large in Archbishop Usher's Britt. Eccl. Antiquitates.

COLOGNE — COLOMBIA.

COLOMBIA.

COLOMBIA. After ages of illiberality towards the memory of that great man who risked fame, fortune, and existence in his successful attempt to discover one-half of our globe, posterity has in some measure retrieved the odium so deservedly attached to the race which was contemporary with Columbus, by affixing his name to one of the largest and fairest portions of the New World.

Colombia, the first territory which has completely emancipated itself from the bondage in which the Spaniards have for more than three centuries held the Western Indies, is composed of the former Kingdoms or Viceroyalties of Caracas and Nueva Granada; and to no part of the Transatlantic regions could this new designation be better applied; since on these shores the mighty navigator first displayed the civilisation of Europe, to the barbarous inhabitants of the west.

This new Republic is divided into three distinct States, CARACAS, CUNDINAMARCA, and QUITO, which compose the Union, and are subdivided into ten Departments. Four of these Departments, viz. Orinoco, Caracas, Zulia, and the Magdalena: 1. containing the Provinces of Guiana, Cumana, Barcelona, and Margarita; 2. Caracas and Varinas; 3. Coro, Merida, Truxillo, and Maracaibo; and 4. Rio Hacha, Santa Marta, and Carthagena, are represented as being in every respect the most eligible for colonists. Colombia extends over a space comprising all the continent embraced between the fourth degree of south, and the twelfth degree of north latitude.

As it was in Caracas, that the first attempt to restore liberty to the southern hemisphere was perfected, we shall commence a description of Colombia by this District, which though the smallest, is not the least renowned of the Union.

Caracas.

CARACAS, or VENEZUELA, is subdivided into the following provinces, Cumana, Barcelona, Venezuela, Maracaibo, including Merida, Margarita, Varinas, and Guiana. It is bounded on the north by the Caribbean Sea, east by the Atlantic, south by the Amazons and Dutch Guiana, and west by New Granada.

Boundaries

Features, &c. of the country.

The coast of Caracas, which is of very great extent, is exceedingly rocky and mountainous, affording some of the most magnificent prospects, and also some of the most tremendous precipices in the world; that of the Silla de Caracas being 8000 feet in altitude above the sea, which washes its base. The chain of the Andes, traversing the whole country in the direction of its shores, elevates itself in the most western parts, and is lost in the sea opposite to the great Island Trinidad, which appears, however, to be a continuation of it, as it is very mountainous. The average height of the Cordillera of Caracas may be estimated at 4500 feet, though it occasionally exceeds 8000; its breadth varies from ten to twenty leagues, and it forms many extensive and beautiful vallies from its being broken into parallel ridges.

Owing to this elevation of the land, the tropic heat is much diminished; along the lower coast it is, of course, very great, but on ascending, the traveller finds that it sensibly decreases, and thus the vegetable productions of different countries offer themselves in full perfection to his view, concentrated in a small space. But the great plain which bounds the Cordillera to the south, and inclines to the banks of the Orinoco, suffers from intense heat, the thermometer rising even to 115°. This part of Caracas is emphatically named Los Llanos, (the Plains;) and nature has here spread almost the whole breadth of this vast continent into a surface, which as far as the eye can reach from any one point of it, appears perfectly level. On it wander innumerable herds of cattle, tended, or rather hunted, by the servants of the owners, who live in the towns and villages of the high country.

These servants are an almost savage race of people, who pass their whole existence on the plains, and on horseback, with very little other covering than a hat to shield their heads from the sun

Climate, &c.

The seasons are divided into rainy and dry, the former lasting from March to November, not however without some interruption; but during the days of incessant rain, it descends with such volume and rapidity, that streams which have been dried to their lowest channels, assume in a few hours the appearance of large rivers; and the plains which descend to the Orinoco and its tributaries, are inundated by fresh water seas, extending three or four hundred miles in length.

Rivers.

Caracas possesses more rivers than almost any other country of similar extent. These rise chiefly in the Andes, and traverse almost all the vallies. The ridge which divides the mountainous portion of Caracas, or that near the Caribbean Sea, into two portions, furnishes abundance of resources on both its declivities. Those rising on the northern face of this high branch of the Andes, fall into the Spanish Main or Carib Sea, whilst those on the southern flank flow towards the great Orinoco. The main body of the Andes on the COLOMBIA. west gives forth numerous giant rivers equal to any in the world, which rush to enlarge the volume of the immense Maranon.

The isolated chain of El Dorado, or rather of Guiana, on the eastern frontier, gives birth to the Orinoco, and to many of those smaller rivers which join its waters.

The rivers of the northern coast of Caracas are principally the Manzanares, Tuy, Guiges, Tocuyo, Aroa, Yaracuy, and Neveri; but the Zulia, which flows into Lake Maracaibo, is the only one of importance.

The southern flank of the Venezuelian chain gives birth to the Portuguesa, Guarico, Manapire, Guarapiche, Unara, Pao, Mamo, and Chivata; and the Andes on the west, is the source whence the Arauca, the Capanaparo, Sinaruco, Apura, Meta, and Casanare flow to join the Orinoco. The Arauca, Apura, and Meta will soon become of great importance to commerce, as they afford an almost uninterrupted communication with the mines of New Granada.

Orinoco. The Orinoco, or Oronoco, is not only one of the largest, but is one of the finest of the rivers in the New World, and is distinguished by its very singular and intricate course. The place in which it rises is conjectured by La Cruz to be a small lake called Ipava, in 5° 5′ north latitude; but this is uncertain, as fierce tribes of the aborigines prevent all access for several hundred miles from its origin. The great internal lake Parima, so much talked of by those who went in search of El Dorado, and finding a place in the old maps which are otherwise correct, is omitted in all those framed recently; and whether the Orinoco flows through it, or whether even it really exists, is still unknown; it is, however, nearly certain that the Orinoco rises near or in the Parima mountains in the centre of Indian Guiana; that it runs in a course almost semicircular, and receives the Cassiquiari, an arm of the Rio Negro, (which communicates with the Amazons,) from the south; and then in 3° 30′ north latitude (see CASSIQUIARI) continues its circular course till it receives the Guaviari from the west, at San Fernando de Atabapo, a mission in 4° north latitude, whence it proceeds northward with increased volume, till the Vichada from the west, in 5° north longitude, also joins it. The Orinoco now turns north-west and falls, near the sixth degree, by the tremendous cataracts of Maypure and Ature into a lower channel. Here nature displays herself in unusual grandeur, and elevates the second branch of the Andes, called the Cordillera of the Cataracts of the Orinoco, into a lofty range which occupy the immense space between that river and the boundary of Portuguese Guiana.

The mountain of Duida, in about 3° 30′, which overlooks the last Spanish settlement (Esmeraldas) on the Orinoco, is the highest point which has yet been seen, by Europeans, of this Cordillera; it is volcanic, but has not been examined minutely, though its height has been found to be no less than 8465 feet above the sea. This chain is remarkable for the abrupt descent of its southern face; and as far as Humboldt explored it, that is from the Rio Negro to the frontier of Gran Para, a distance of 600 miles, it exhibited no rock of secondary formation, nor any petrifactions or organic remains, consisting only of granite, gneiss, mica, slate, and hornblende.

From the Cataracts, the Orinoco pushes forward till it receives the Meta, in 6° 35′ north latitude, and then bends its course to the north-east, receiving the Arauca and several other streams, until on its junction with the Apure, in about 7° 45′, it turns to the east, and after meeting the rivers of Upper Caracas and those of Indian Guiana, it flows into the Atlantic Ocean by numerous mouths, opposite to the Island of Trinidad. The principal entrance is in 8° 30′ north latitude and 59° 50′ west longitude. COLOMBIA.

The Orinoco is subject to a periodical inundation, which begins in April and ceases in August; in October the flood is low, and arrives at its shallowest point in February; the rise is equal to thirteen fathoms at the distance of 270 miles from the ocean, the total length of this great river being supposed to be about 1250 miles.

The mouths of the Orinoco are dangerous to ships; the largest are six leagues in width, and seven of them are navigable for vessels of considerable burden, but their course is intricate beyond description, and they form, by their numerous channels, islands of considerable extent, inhabited by the Guaraounos and Mariusos Indians.

Every traveller who has been on this river, describes the scenery as grand beyond the power of man to depict. Forests of evergreen and aromatic trees are filled with birds of the greatest variety and most brilliant plumage; herds of monkies follow the astonished wanderer along the shores, whilst the animals peculiar to the New World are in such numbers that they are almost constantly seen from the decks of a vessel navigating the river. Alligators of a most formidable size and great ferocity are also observed in shoals; whilst the untamed Indians, and the almost barbarous descendants of Europeans, infest the few landing places which can be found from the Atlantic to the present Capital of Caracas. Beyond the Capital (Angostura) the river flows through a mixed scenery of plains and mountain regions; but from that place to Esmeraldas, mosquitoes and every other insect or reptile plague that can be conceived, combine to interrupt the progress of commerce. The first question asked as the salute of the day, on meeting in the morning, in this part of Caracas, is "how were the flies last night?" and a missionary or a criminal sent to some parts of the river, from the more elevated country, is said to be "abandoned to the flies."

The only rivers of any consequence which flow into the Orinoco from Guiana, are the Caroni and the Caura, the former a very great, but almost unknown stream, which rises in the country of the warlike Caribs, on the frontiers of the Portuguese territory.

Lakes. Caracas possesses few lakes of any consequence excepting Maracaibo, which is properly an inland sea of an oval form, and communicating with the Gulf of Venezuela by a narrow channel. In length it is 150 miles, in breadth 90, and 450 in circumference; its waters being always fresh, excepting during violent gales from the outer gulf. The depth of this lake is very great, and it is, consequently, navigable for the largest ship; but tremendous storms, especially with northerly winds, occur on it. Maracaibo.

Venezuela. Venezuela, (Little Venice,) takes its name from an Indian town which the first conquerors observed built on piles amid the waters of Maracaibo, a mode of construction to which the aborigines seem to have been addicted, as four similar villages still remain on the surface of its waters.

COLOMBIA.

A vein or mine of mineral tar exists on the north-west shore of this lake, and is of such an inflammable nature, that corruscations are seen arising from it during the hot weather, which at night have the appearance of quickly repeated lightnings, and are called by the native sailors the Lanterns of St. Antony, as they serve them to steer by during the dark nights so prevalent in the torrid zone.

Valencia.

Valencia, or Tacarigua, near the tenth degree of north latitude, is the only other lake of any importance in Caracas. Mountains enclose it, excepting on the west; and it receives, in a space of forty miles long by twelve broad, the waters of twenty small rivers, for which it has no visible outlet.

Population.

The population of Caracas, including Spanish or Indian Guiana, extends over a space equal to about 48,000 square leagues, and amounts, excluding the nomadic tribes of Guiana, to about a million of souls, of whom 60,000 are slaves, lately emancipated, and about one-ninth Indians, the remainder chiefly the descendants of Spaniards.

The principal Indian tribes are the Caribs, who occupy an immense portion of Guiana and Caracas, the Chaymas, Guayquerias, Pariagotoes, Quaquas, Araucas, Cumanagotoes, Paleukas, Piritoos, Tomoozas, Topocuares, Chacopatas, and Guarivas, who chiefly inhabit Caracas.

The Cumanagoto language prevails in the western part, and the Caribbean and Chayman in the southern and eastern portions. The northern part being inhabited by Europeans, Spanish is more generally adopted.

Capital. Angostura.

Angostura, or San Tomé, is at present the Capital of all Caracas, but it is, nevertheless, a small and inconvenient place, ninety leagues from the Atlantic Ocean, on the right bank of the Orinoco, and at the foot of a small mountain, where the Great River is much reduced in width, (whence the name Angostura, or Strait,) which obstacle is increased by a low rocky islet in the centre, leaving still, however, a channel 200 yards broad for large vessels. The population amounts to about 6000 or 7000 souls. San Tomé is in 8° 8′ 11″ north latitude and 63° 54′ 2″ west longitude.

Caracas.

The City of Caracas is seated in 10° 30′ 15″ north latitude and 67° 4′ 45″ west longitude, at the elevation of 2903 feet above the ocean, and on the commencement of a fine plain which extends for nine miles to the eastward, and through which the small river Guayra flows. The site of the town is so uneven and precipitous that the inhabitants seldom use carriages. The city is, however, well supplied with water, as three streams run through it; though owing to a fancied peculiar medicinal quality in another which is at the distance of three miles, the richer classes seldom use the waters of these rivulets.

Caracas is well built, the streets being, as is usual in the Spanish towns of the New World, wide, straight, and forming regular squares of buildings. The Cathedral is a fine structure, and there are eight other handsome Churches, a large Theatre, and several other public edifices. Since the last earthquake which, it is well known, nearly destroyed this beautiful town, the population has not exceeded 20,000 souls; and it is probably much diminished by the sanguinary struggles of which it has been the arena since the revolution first commenced.

COLOMBIA.

The climate of Caracas is generally so good, that it may be said to enjoy a perpetual spring: November, December, June, and July are, however, the choicest months of the year; the former from the coolness which then prevails, and the fineness of their mornings, the latter for the beauty and serenity of their nights: April, May, and part of June constitute the rainy season; hail seldom or ever falls. This general state of the atmosphere is finely contrasted with the dreary and savage appearance of the neighbourhood, where the tremendous precipice of the Silla or Saddle, and the disrupted and confused appearance of the country on the right of the highly cultivated plain, in which almost every species of tropical and European fruits abound, present scenes not to be equalled for variety and magnificence in any other part of the world.

Port of La Guayra.

The port of Caracas, by which it holds communication with the Atlantic is La Guayra, a small town in 10° 36′ 19″ north latitude, 67° 6′ 45″ west longitude; at the very base of the immense and precipitous mountain on which the city is built, and at about the length of two hours journey, in descending, from the latter.

La Guayra is built on a narrow ledge projecting into the ocean, and only about 900 feet broad; at the back of the town the rocky Mountain rises almost perpendicularly, and from this peculiar situation it is capable of being, and has been, strongly fortified, whilst the access from it to the city, being through narrow passes in the precipice, may easily be rendered unapproachable to an enemy.

Chief Towns.

The chief Towns and places of Caracas after the Capital, are, in Cumana and Barcelona; Barcelona, Cariaco, Cumana, Cumanacoa, Caracas, and Pao. In Venezuela; Araura, Burburata, Barquisimeto, Carora, Calabozo, Caracas, Cocorata, Coro, Cura, Guanara, Los Reyes, Maracay, Nirgua, Ocumara, Puerto Cabello, San Carlos, San Juan del Pao, Tocuyo, Tulmero, Valencia, and Victoria. In Maracaibo; Barbacoas, Gibraltar, Grita, Maracaibo, Merida, Paraute, Perija, Rosario, San Christoval, San Pedro, and Truxillo. In Varinas; Guanara, Pedraza, San Antonio, San Fernando de Apure, San Jayme, and Varinas. And in Guiana, besides the Capital; Real Corona, Alta Gracia, and Vieja Caycara.

Cundinamarca.

The next great division of Colombia, and the primary State of the Union is CUNDINAMARCA, so called in commemoration of the Republic of the Muyscas, an ancient and nearly civilized nation, who inhabited the principal portion of (what was recently termed) NEW GRANADA, prior to the conquest. This immense country extends to Guatimala and the Atlantic on the north; is bounded by the Pacific on the west; by Caracas, Indian and Portuguese Guiana on the east; and by the State of Quito on the South; being above 1000 geographical miles in length, and 240 in mean breadth. It contains some of the richest gold mines in the world, with a population amounting, however, at present, exclusive of the unconquered Indians, to not more than a million of souls.

Boundaries.

Territorial divisions.

It comprehends the Provinces of Veragua,* Panama, Darien, Biruquite, Choco, Carthagena, Santa Marta,

* According to Colonel Hall, Veragua is now a constituent Province of the Republic of Guatimala; recent maps, however, include it, as before, in Colombia.

COLOMBIA.

Rio Hacha, Coro,* San Juan de los Llanos, Bogota or Cundinamarca, Antioquia, Pamplona, Socorro, Tunja, Mariquita, Casanare, Caguan, and the immense tracts lying between the Andes, the Maranon, and the Orinoco.

Andes.

The great feature of the State of Cundinamarca is that astonishing range of mountains, the Cordillera of the Andes, which crosses it from north to south, and runs also through the third portion of Colombia, (Quito.) These have already been described.

Cataract of Tequendama.

At the cataract of Tequendama, on this range, near the Capital of Colombia, a volume of water of great extent is suddenly dashed from the plains of Bogota, through an opening of the Cordillera into a gulf 600 feet below. Here the climate is so much changed, that the wheat and plants of European origin, which grow on the plain above, are suddenly succeeded by the palm and vegetables of the tropics. The face of the rock which finishes and borders the plain of Bogota, near this cataract, is so steep, that three hours are occupied in the descent from the River Funza, or Bogota, to the River Meta, which is the new name the water assumes after it issues from the dark and unfathomable abyss into which it has been precipitated. The Funza is 140 feet in breadth, just before it enters the chasm in the Andes through which it falls; its width below it is not so clearly ascertained, as the basin or gulf cannot be approached very closely; the rapidity of the water, the deafening tumult of the fall, and the dense mass of agitated vapours which it sends up, rendering it impossible to get nearer the edges of the abyss than 500 or 600 feet.

Climate.

The climate of this State, of course, varies as the Andes increase or decrease in altitude. On the plains in Veragua, Panama, Darien, and Biruquite, the heat is excessive; but in Santa Marta and Merida, all the variations from constant summer to eternal winter may be met with in ascending the Cordillera. The plain on which the Capital is seated enjoys, like that of Caracas, an almost everlasting spring.

Rivers.

The rivers of Cundinamarca are extremely numerous and important. In Veragua and Panama there are, however, none of much importance, excepting the Rio Chagres, the ancient high road for the gold and silver from Peru to Europe, which has been already fully noticed. In Darien, the mouth and a considerable part of the Atrato afford a convenient channel for the contraband trade in the gold of Choco, through which that large, but shallow river flows. In Carthagena are the Cauca and the Magdalena, two very great and important rivers; the latter being styled the Danube of the New World. It divides Carthagena from Santa Marta, and rises about thirty miles east of Popayan in Quito, near the sources of its rival the Cauca, and in about 2° north latitude. They are separated from each other by the impassable chain of the central Andes, till they have crossed the Sierra de Guamosco, when in about 9° 30′ north longitude they flow into each other with very rapid currents, and join the Caribbean Sea by several branches, the great or main channel being in 11° north latitude and 74° 40′ west longitude. Steam navigation has commenced, through the power of British enterprise and capital, on this fine river, which, notwithstanding the difficulty experienced in contending with its powerful current, will soon become one of the most useful in the New World. The Magdalena is subject to overflow in December, when it rises thirteen or fourteen feet above its usual level near the mouths; and fertilizing, like the Nile, all the neighbouring lands, produces vast harvests of chocolate and other objects of commerce.

COLOMBIA.

The Andes of the Province of Cundinamarca give birth to the Apure, and several other large rivers which have been mentioned as flowing through the plains of Caracas; and the Llanos de San Juan is crossed by the Meta, the Vichada, and Casanare, all of which join the Orinoco, but have not yet been sufficiently frequented to be well known; though it is probable that they will soon become highly important, as affording the means of communication between Cundinamarca and Caracas. Caguan affords a channel for the Guaviari, which rises in the Andes near the 4° of north latitude, and flowing through a tract of almost unknown country, called El Ayrico, or Selva Grande, (the Great Forest,) joins the Orinoco after a course of very great length.

Choco possesses several rivers of minor size, which flow, after a short course, from the Andes into the Pacific; but they are of consequence, as containing in their beds, or being used for extracting, the gold for which that Province is so famous. The natural canal which unites the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans in this district, has been noticed in the article Choco.

Productions.

The most valuable plants, or those chiefly attended to, are the excellent dye-woods of the northern shores, which are reckoned even superior to those of Yucatan; timber for ship-building; the mahogany of Panama, better and more beautiful than that of Honduras; chocolate or cacao from the borders of the great river Magdalena; excellent cotton, some tobacco,* cochineal, coffee, and medicinal drugs, amongst which are cinchona, and contrayerva. Cassava, or manioc roots, and maize form the bread of the Indians, whilst European wheat is cultivated by the Whites and their descendants; and the tropical and European plants are produced in as much abundance as they are in Mexico. The animals are such as are common to the southern parts of the New World; immense numbers of horses and mules are bred for the commerce with Peru; and countless herds of cattle on the great plains are slaughtered merely for their hides. The rivers and lakes are well stored with fish, and the woods and plains with game; but notwithstanding all these natural advantages, it is from the poorest, wildest, and almost inaccessible parts of the country that its principal importance is derived, as in these solitary and sterile districts, gold is universally produced.

Mines.

This State is as rich in mineral treasures as any other part of the New World. Antioquia and Choco produce gold, and the silver procured here is remarkably pure; lead and copper are also found; emeralds† and other jewels are exported, and platina was long thought to be peculiar to the Province of Choco. Mercury, so useful in a mining country, has been lately discovered

* Coro is included, by Colonel Hall, in New Granada; but it is more frequently included in Venezuela.

* The first regular cargo of tobacco from Colombia has just arrived in an English port, Nov. 1824. It is said to be equal to that of Havannah.

† Emeralds have lately been found in the bed of a little river twenty leagues from Bogota, on the road to the plains, where almost every stone contains an emerald.

COLOMBIA.

in several places. Iron and coal are plentiful, but the mines are not worked; the former, as a native produce, having been a forbidden article during the Spanish reign, and the latter is not yet requisite, as the woods are sufficiently extensive to supply fuel to the inhabitants for centuries.

Gold is chiefly extracted by washing the sand brought down by the mountain torrents, though two mines have been discovered of this metal in the mountains of Antioquia and Guamoco.* The principal lavaderos or washing-places are to the west of the Central Andes in Antioquia and Choco, in the valley of the Cauca and Novita. Zitara and Taddo are the mining stations of most importance in the latter Province. The ravine of Oro in Choco yields the greatest quantity of platina, whilst the silver of Colombia is principally taken from the province of Antioquia at the Vega de Supia, a mine twenty leagues from Carthago; but there are some extensive unworked silver mines near the town of Mariquita. At Buritoca, San Pedro, and Arenas, in the same Province, gold is found in micaceous slate; but is not worked, as the Province is only accessible on foot, and the alluvial grounds of Santa Rosa, Trinidad, and Los Oros supply the washings in sufficient quantity. In the valley of Santa Rosa sulphuretted mercury also exists in considerable quantity.

Population, ancient and modern.

The present population of Cundinamarca we have already stated, exclusive of the nomadic tribes, as amounting to about a million; but it will not be uninteresting to trace some parts of the history of that ancient race, from whom the lawgivers of the New Republic of Colombia have taken a name, which designates the fairest and richest portion of the Union.

When the Europeans first penetrated into the mountain regions of what they then termed New Granada, they observed with surprise that cities of considerable extent, with several large towns and villages were occupied by a race of people, who had nearly arrived at that state of civilisation beyond which a few steps more, would have advanced them to the same rank amongst the natives of the world, as that held by their powerful invaders.

Muyscas.

Of all the tribes which then inhabited this country, the people of Quito, and the Moscas or Muyscas were the most civilized and the most numerous. The traditions of the Muyscas had descended from very early ages; and the most remarkable point in their history was the mysterious appearance of their great legislator Bochica, son of the Sun, who came suddenly amongst them whilst they were disputing who should be their King. He is represented as a white man, clothed in long garments, with a venerable beard; who, having patiently listened to the contending parties, advised them to choose Huncahua, which they accordingly did; and this Chief subdued the country extending from the plains of San Juan to the mountains of Opon. Bochica lived amongst them two thousand years, and then suddenly disappeared near the town called Hunca, since named Tunja by the Spaniards. The Kingdom of Huncahua was called Cundinamarca, and the ruler had the title of Zaque, analogous to that of Inca among the Peruvians; but the High-priest who succeeded Bochica was, in fact, the Supreme Governor, and his authority has not unaptly been compared to that of the Grand Lama. The other Princes or Chiefs of tributary tribes were called Zippas. Bochica invented the Calendar of the Muyscas, and regulated their festivals; divided the day and night into four parts; and constituted weeks of three days; whilst he separated the year into moons, the common year consisting of twenty, the ritual year, or that of the Priests, consisted of thirty-seven; and twenty years formed a cycle.

COLOMBIA.

These people were sanguinary in their worship of their Deities and of Bochica; at the end of every fifteen years they sacrificed a boy of that age, who had been previously educated in the chief temple from his birth. Columns were erected by them in various places for the purpose of marking the progress of time; and to one of these the boy-victim was always attached previous to the inhuman sacrifice, at which his heart was torn out.

The Muyscas had attained some proficiency in sculpture, as their Calendar, (of one of which Humboldt has given a drawing and description,) was engraved on stone, and various other specimens of their progress in this art have occasionally been found.

Gonzalo Ximenes de Quesada was the person who, as another Cortez, reduced these warlike people under the sovereignty of Spain. In this conquest, in all probability he would have found much difficulty, from the nature of the country, and the spirit of the natives, had they not, like the Mexicans, been unfortunately at constant war with the Muzos, a powerful, but not equally civilized tribe of New Granada.

The foundation of the Spanish power was laid by Quesada in 1537, when he defeated Bogota, the Zaque or Inca of the country, in a pitched battle for which that ruler had collected his chief force.

Capital.

From Santa Fé, the city which the Spaniards built on the ruins of his Capital, the Metropolis of New Granada received its name, now again called after its Indian founder Bogota, which, as it has also been lately erected into the rank of chief City and Capital of the Union, we shall now describe.

Bogota.

Bogota is situated in 4° 6′ north latitude and in 78° 30′ west longitude, near the River Funza or Pati, in a spacious and luxurious plain to the east of the Great Cordillera, and between it and its first parallel branch. Although only four degrees from the equator, the elevation of 8694 feet above the sea renders its climate rather cold. It is large, and handsomely built, with four great squares, and wide and regular streets. Two small rivers, the San Francisco and the San Augustin, run through the city and join the Funza at a short distance from it; over these streams five handsome bridges are erected.

The Cathedral is a magnificent structure of yellow stone, and forms the chief ornament of the place, which contains twenty-six Churches, and many public edifices; amongst them are an University, two Colleges, and a public Library. The Mint, Courts of Justice, and State Offices, are also worthy of the traveller's notice; but the inhabitants, amounting to about 30,000, are not in general wealthy, owing to the navigation of the Magdalena having hitherto been so little attended to, as to prevent the agricultural and mineral products of the country being exported largely. They are, however, industrious, as may be seen by the rich aspect of the surrounding plain, which yields two harvests in the year, from the unwearied labour bestowed upon it.

* Gold is now found to be much more extensively dispersed in Colombia, than was formerly imagined. In Rio Hacha, the river that washes the town of that name contains it. Sucia, a rivulet which joins the Chama, near Laguilla, in Merida, is also said to be rich in it.

COLOMBIA.

The other Towns and Cities of Cundinamarca are very numerous, and but little known. The most extensive and important are, (commencing from the north at Veragua, and proceeding southwards,) El Angel, Puebla Nueva, and Santiago de Veragua, or Veragua. In Panama; Los Santos, Nata, Panama, and Puerto Bello. In Darien; Santa Cruz de Cana. In Carthagena; Barancas, Buenavista, Cartagena, Guamoço, Mompox, Remedios, Santa Maria, Tolu, Turbaco, Zamba, Zimiti, and Zinu. In Santa Marta; Cordova, Giron, Hacha, Los Reyes, Ocana, Puebla Nueva, Santa Marta, Tamalameque, and Teneriffe. In Cundinamarca; Ibague, Leiva, Mariquita, Muzo, Neyva, Palma, Pamplona, Purificacion, San Gil, Bogota, the Capital, Socorro, Toca, Honda, Tocayma, Tunja, and Velez. In Antioquia; Arma, Cartago, Medellin, and Santa Fé de Antioquia. In Choco; Quibdo: and in San Juan de los Llanos; Caguan, Medina, Poré, and San Juan.

Quito.

The third great division of the Union of Colombia is QUITO, in point of ancient fame and consequence, the most renowned of the whole.

Territorial divisions, extent, and population.

Quito contains within its confines the subordinate Provinces of Popayan, Raposo, Atacames, Pastos, Quito Proper, Guayaquil, Loxa, Maynas, Macas and Quixos, Mocoa and Jaen de Bracamoros, and extends over a space equal to 600 geographical miles in length, and 2000 in breadth, without including the territory occupied by the wandering tribes on the east of the Cordillera, exclusive of whom, the population of the State is calculated at about a million of souls.

Passes of the Andes.

The great central branch of the three parallel chains of the Andes, runs through the northern part of Popayan, in which they all commence; this branch is the highest of the whole, and its summits are above the lower limits of congelation; of these, Barangan, Quindiu, and Guanacas, are the most lofty. In order to go from Popayan to Santa Fé de Colombia, the central Cordillera must be crossed, the most frequented pass being that of Guanacas in 20° 34′ north latitude, between Popayan and the village of La Plata. It is impossible to traverse this road without being impressed with the awfulness of the scene; summits every where present themselves covered with eternal snows, and in passing the nineteen or twenty leagues, of which the journey consists, more than an equal number of days are usually occupied. To surmount the most tremendous part of this range, however, does not require more than one day; but here for the space of two leagues, the road is so covered with the carcasses and bones of the mules which have sunk under their exertions in conveying passengers, that it is impossible to avoid treading over them. At the top of the pass is a small lake or pond. of which the water never freezes; and at less than 700 feet distant from this on each side, are the sources of the Cauca and the Magdalena.

The pass of Quindiu, infinitely more terrific, has already been mentioned in the description of the ANDES.

The chain of the Cordillera, which divides into three branches near Popayan, unites again to the south, in the district of Pastos, where, near Tulcan, is the elevated valley of Pastos, crowned by the Azufsal, Gambal, and Pasto, burning volcanoes, and by the extinguished one, named Chiles, and then stretches far beyond the equator in its utmost magnificence; here its most lofty summits form two lines, separated by a series of valleys, from 10,600 to 13,900 feet in height, as far as the third degree of south latitude, in which the chief towns of Quito are situated. On the western side of this great chain of vales or plains rise the summits of Casitagua, Pichincha, Atacazo, Corazon, Ilinissa, Carguirazo, Chimborazo, and Cunambay; whilst on the east are the peaks of Cayambe Urcu, over which the equator passes, Guamani, Antisana, Passuchoa, Ruminavi, Cotopaxi, Quelendama, Tunguragua, and Capac Urcu or El Altar, all of which, excepting three or four, are higher than Mont Blanc; and the constant temperature of the air is such, that their summits entering the region of perpetual snow, have the line of congelation so distinctly marked, as to add a most singular feature to the grandeur of the scene.

COLOMBIA.

Climate.

The climate of course varies as the land ascends in these mountain regions. The great valley which contains almost the whole population of the State of Quito enjoys nearly a perpetual spring; but the country extending from the feet of the Andes to the Maranon and the Orinoco is subject to almost unvarying heat. In the elevated tract which we have just mentioned, rapid and violent alterations in the atmospheric phenomena are frequent; and such is the force of the winds, that huge fragments of rock are hurled from their beds, amid whirlwinds of icy snow.

The French Academicians, who conducted the geodesic operations, in the reign of Louis XV., which are so well known to every lover of science, made choice of the plain of Yuranqui, 1592 feet lower than the city of Quito, (itself 9510 above the ocean,) and four leagues north-east of that Capital, for the scene of their operations, which were attended to with unremitting exertions for several years, amid constant perils and labour; the Indians often even deserting their villages to prevent being forced to accompany the survey, which though carried on under the equator was nevertheless conducted through a climate of such intense cold, that even speaking aloud, in some situations, always brought blood from the mouth and lips.

Popayan

Popayan produces tobacco, grain of various kinds, and tropical as well as European fruits in abundance, with numbers of cattle, horses, and sheep; but the great staple of this Province is the coca, or betel of the New World, which is an indispensable portion of an Indian miner's subsistence. There is also a gum tree, which yields so tenacious a resin, that when used to varnish ornamental work, it resists boiling water, or even most acids; for which reason, tables, cabinets, &c. made by the Indians, and lacquered with it, are highly valued in Quito.

Pastos and Raposo.

Pastos and Raposo are similar in their sources of national wealth to Popayan, of which the second originally formed a large district; and lying along the coast of the Pacific, in the lower lands it consequently is better fitted by its climate for the fruits of hot countries. Its rivers, moreover, bring down some gold from the mountains.

Atacames.

Atacames, or Tacames, being chiefly inhabited by Indians, who live in freedom in its forests, has not been so accurately examined by naturalists as other portions of Quito. Vanilla, achiotte, indigo, sarsaparilla, cacao, and many other kinds of fruits and drugs are exported from it; and timber for every ornamental or architectural purpose exists in its vast and lofty woods, which cover the greater part of the country. Wild wax of excellent quality is gathered in large quantities by the natives, and is sent to all the neighbouring countries; whilst a famous mine of emeralds, long supposed to be fabulous, really exists twenty miles south of Tacames, its chief town.

COLOMBIA.

Quito Proper.

Quito Proper, which lies almost entirely, as far at least as regards its inhabited part, in the great valley of the Andes, is chiefly productive of cotton, cochineal, maize, sugar, wheat, barley, tropical and European fruits, sheep, horses, and cattle. In its southern division (Loxa) Quinquina, Cinchona, or the Jesuit's bark, renders this State known to the whole world, the forests of Loxa producing three kinds of this valuable medicine. Gold and silver are found throughout the State; but the mines have been little attended to, as most of the villages in Quito Proper are inhabited by Indians, who are not, in general, anxious either to point out, or assist in, the mines.

Guayaquil.

Guayaquil being mostly a continued plain between the Pacific Ocean and the Andes, is well adapted to the cultivation of the grains and fruits of a hot region; and owing to the numerous rivers that inundate its flatter parts, it yields abundantly the greatest luxury of the New Republics, chocolate or cacao. Tobacco, wax, cotton, excellent timber for naval and architectural purposes, sugar, maize, and plantains, are its other principal vegetable products; cattle are reared in large quantities, and the rivers and coast are well supplied with fish.

Jaen de Bracamoros.

Jaen de Bracamoros, Maynas, Macas, and Quixos, being situated principally on the descending country, and on the immense plains to the east of the Cordilleras of the Andes, are but little known. Jaen is represented as being very fertile, wherever it is cultivated, but it is almost one continued forest. Tobacco of the finest flavour seems almost peculiar to its soil, the cigars of Jaen being sought after throughout Peru, Chili, and Colombia. Cotton trees are very abundant, and their produce constitutes a great part of the traffic of the few inhabitants. Mules are raised in great numbers, and exported to Peru and Quito.

Maynas is less known than Jaen, it is chiefly remarkable as being the country through which the brother of Pizarro led the way to the discovery of the Maranon, when he endeavoured to find the forests of cinnamon, with which Maynas was supposed to abound.

Quixos and Macas are covered with forests of immense trees, in which also a species of cinnamon is found; but the chief occupation of the settlers, is the culture of tobacco for the Peruvian market. They also export storax, copal, and wild wax; and the rivers are said to abound in golden sands.

Rivers.

The rivers of Quito are large and numerous, but being principally situated on the eastern flank of the Andes, have not been much explored. The most noted are the Cauca, which flows through a part of Popayan, the Pusambio, a small river remarkable for its cataracts, and for its waters being warm, and so acid near the source, as to destroy the fish in the Cauca for more than four leagues after it joins it, hence it has obtained the appellation of the Vinegar River. In Guayaquil there is a very fine stream oearing the same name, which rises in the Andes, receives all the minor rivers of their western flank in the Province, and after fertilizing the whole country by its periodical inundations, flows into the Pacific, by a mouth not less than three miles in width. COLOMBIA.

The Lauricocha, or False Maranon, is also another famous river of the State of Quito, affording a channel through which in some future time it is probable that the commerce of the western States will flow to Brazil and Europe. This river passes through a natural canal in the Andes, called the Pongo de Manseriche, which appears to create the only difficulty in the course of a journey from the plains of Quito to the Atlantic Ocean, and that difficulty a very inconsiderable one. The Yapura, or Caqueta, the Putamayo, or Ica, the Napo, Curaray, Piguena, or Tigre, the Pastaca, and the Zamora, are all immense, but almost unknown rivers, rising in the Andes of Quito, and which all swell the flood of the greater Maranon.

Capital of Quito.

The Capital of the State of Quito is Quito, built at thirty-five leagues from the Pacific, on the side of Pichincha, in 78° 10′ 15″ west longitude and 0° 13′ 27″ south latitude. Its altitude above the neighbouring ocean is 9510 feet, and there is a singular conic mountain called the Sugar Loaf of Javirac, 729 feet higher than the city, and immediately behind it, whilst the summit of Pichincha, enveloped in eternal snow, rises 6000 feet above this singularly situated Capital. The streets of Quito are very irregular and uneven, and the crevices in the side of the great volcano so numerous, that most of the houses in the suburbs are built on arches; but some of the streets stand on the neck of land formed by the junction of the great plains, called Turubamba and Inna Quito, which are covered with country seats and cultivation. The principal square is ornamented with a fine Cathedral, the Episcopal residence, the Town-hall, Palace of Justice, and a magnificent fountain; and the four streets which terminate at the angles of this square are broad, straight, and well built for about four hundred yards, when the crevices, breaches, and acclivities commence, on which account carriages cannot be used. There is, however, another fine square, and several smaller ones, wherein the churches are situated. The streets of Quito are all paved, and the houses are generally large and convenient, but not more than one story in height, and erected of unburnt bricks and clay, cemented by a very hard and solid mortar, which was used by the ancient Indians. Quito is divided into seven parishes; it has an Exchequer, Treasury, and Courts of Justice, with a large Hospital, and many other public buildings; and is well supplied with water, by means of the small river Machangara, and several streams which are conveyed to the city.

In the old church of the Jesuits is an alabaster slab, with a Latin inscription, commemorating the united labours of the French and Spanish Mathematicians in 1736, and the following years till 1742, and enumerating the signals, angles, and other circumstances connected with the measurement of a degree of the meridian, which was performed in those years; and in the church of St. Francis, the Priests still show as a sacred relic, the vase in which Father Rixi brought the first wheat from Europe.

Inhabitants.

Quito contains about 70,000 inhabitants, many of whom are the descendants of the first conquerors, or of persons who came at an early period from Spain. The whites compose about a sixth part, the Mestizoes a third, the native Indians of the suburbs another third, and the mixed race from Negroes, Indians, &c. the remaining sixth; the Mestizoes and Indians form the working class; the former rise occasionally to some eminence in the arts on which manufactures depend; and the latter are peculiarly gifted with an extraordinary facility in attaining knowledge of the different trades in which they are employed.

COLOMBIA.

The whites of Quito are not in general rich, but great magnificence is affected by this class, their clothes shining with gems and lace. The second, or middle order dress, however, very neatly, and usually carry a long Spanish cloak; whilst the Indians are clad in a black cotton frock and white drawers. Both the males and females of Quito are esteemed a fine-looking and even handsome race of people; and are better instructed than before the revolution; but idleness and gaming still continue prevalent vices, in a population whose existence seems always to hang on a thread, from the frequent recurrence of earthquakes.

Earthquakes, &c.

The temperature of the city of Quito was suddenly changed on the 4th of February 1797, from sixty-six or sixty-eight degrees, at which the thermometer had generally stood, to forty or forty-five, above which, since that period, it seldom rises. During this tremendous effort of nature, the ground opened in all directions, and vomited out sulphur, mud, and hot water, which changed the whole face of the neighbourhood, and in the space of one second hurled forty thousand persons into eternity.

Climate.

To compensate for the danger of its situation, the climate of Quito is so mild, that an eternal spring prevails, which is very seldom accompanied by heavy rains, whilst unvarying light winds waft the odours of the plains to the city; and these plains, composed of the diluted clay thrown from Pichincha, are so fertile, that a constant succession of fruits, flowers, and verdure, appears during the whole circuit of the year, and even on the same tree. Corn is reaped and sown at the same time; and such is the goodness of the pasture, that beef, mutton, &c. of most excellent quality, are to be found in the markets, luxuries almost unknown in the warmer regions of the new world. Good butter and cheese, the latter in very large quantities, are also made, and these such important articles to Europeans, have been but little attended to in other parts of Colombia and the States of the south.

The Towns of the State of Quito are nearly as numerous, and even generally larger than those of Caracas or Cundinamarca. The chief are, in Popayan; Popayan, Almaguer, Timana, La Plata, and Mercaderes. In Pastos; San Juan de Pasto, Mira, and Ibarra, near which is the great crevice of Chota 4922 feet in depth. In Raposo; Buenaventura, and Barbacoas. In Quito Proper; besides the Capital, Otabalo, Latacunga, Riobamba, Hambato, Chimbo, Cuenca, Atuncanar, Loxa, and Alausi. In Tacames; Esmeraldas, and San Miguel. In Guayaquil; Puerto Viejo, Santa Elena, Caracol, Baba, Machala, Narangal, Puna, Yaguache, Saruma, Tumbez, Babahoyo, Daule, and Guayaquil. Jaen contains Jaen its chief Town, Valladolid, Loyola, and Santiago. Borja is the Capital of Maynas, as Macas is of the Province of the same name, and Quixos has Baeza and Archidona.

Having thus given a general outline of its constituent States, the population, trade, commerce, revenue, and government of this immense country, will now naturally engage our attention. Unfortunately we possess very little satisfactory information on these and other points, connected with the domestic and foreign policy of the new Republics, and indeed it can scarcely be expected that their resources should be developed, whilst the torch of Civil war retains a spark of that devastating fire, which has depopulated many of their fairest Provinces.

COLOMBIA.

Population.

In Colombia, as it exists at present, the mass of inhabitants to each Province, is, according to Mollien, who is the latest author of any repute on this subject:

In the Department of the Orinoco	175,000	Guiana	45,000
		Cumana	70,000
		Barcelona	45,000
		Margarita	15,000
Venezuela	430,000	Caracas	350,000
		Varinas	80,000
Zulia	161,400	Coro	30,000
		Truxillo	33,400
		Merida	50,000
		Maracaibo	48,000
Bogota	394,000	Tunja	200,000
		Socorro	100,000
		Pamplona	75,000
		Casanare	19,000
Cundinamarca	371,000	Bogota	172,000
		Antioquia	104,000
		Mariquita	45,000
		Neyva	50,000
Cauca	193,000	Popayan	171,000
		Choco	22,000
Magdalena	239,500	Carthagena	170,000
		Santa Marta	62,500
		Rio Hacha	7,000
In Panama and Veragua	50,000
In Quito*	150,000
In Quixos and Macas	35,000
In Cuenca	78,000
In Jaen	13,000
In Maynas	36,000
In Loxa	48,000
In Guayaquil†	90,000

Which gives a total of 2,463,900; but another recent author, Colonel Hall, who from his situation in the employment of the Colombian Government, must have equally good resources for ascertaining this point, makes the aggregate of the Provinces in 1810, 2,430,000 for New Granada and Quito, and 825,000 for Caracas, or a total population for Colombia, exclusive of the nomadic tribes, of 3,255,000. Now as M. Mollien gives 2,463,900 as the result of his recent calculations from an actual census, Colonel Hall 3,255,000 for 1810, Humboldt 2,700,000 a little anterior, and a native author, Pombo, who published an Essay on the Statistics of New Granada in 1811, 3,400,000, three millions has been assumed as the nearest to the truth in our statement.

The whites of Colombia, excluding Caracas, are said to amount to about 250,000, the Creoles to 400,000, the Indians to 450,000, the Mulattoes to 550,000, and the Negroes to 94,600. In Caracas the number of European whites is very inconsiderable, nearly two-thirds of the million of souls it contains being Creoles and Mestizoes, and the remainder, with the exception of about 60,000 Negroes, are Indians, their number amounting to about 111,000.

Army.

In a population of three millions, spread over such an immense surface as 112,376 square leagues, which

* The Pacific and southern Departments were not formed into Grand Divisions when Mollien, the most recent author on Colombia, left the country. It is difficult also to say, whether the large District of Pastos is included in that of Quito or not.

† Ibid. The Indios Bravos, or unconquered Indians are not included in the above calculations.

equals that of all the European maritime States, except Russia, the means of military organization must be in a ratio vastly inferior to that of equal population on a concentrated space, and no judgment, by comparison, can therefore be formed. The last returns of the Republic* exhibit a force of regulars (if such an undisciplined mass of Europeans, Indians, Creoles, Mestizoes, Sambos, and Negroes, can be so styled,) of 32,466 men, of which 25,750 are infantry, 4296 cavalry, and 2590 artillery, with a corps of Engineers. Each department has a General commanding, with a staff of one General of Division, two Adjutant Majors, and two Secretaries.

The infantry consists of twenty-five battalions of the line, five of light troops, (according to the exploded system of Europe;) and each battalion has eight companies, one being light, one grenadiers, and six fusileers. Each company should muster four officers, and 100 rank and file.

The cavalry consists of twenty-four squadrons; a brigade of six squadrons of this force forming, with two battalions of the infantry, the guard of the President, which consists of picked men; six squadrons, one light dragoons, and the remainder heavy, and lancers, the latter predominating.

The artillery, originally composed of English, Scotch, and Irishmen, is in a very bad state, but are said to be the only troops wearing a regular uniform in the Republic, they are chiefly in the sea-ports.

The engineer corps has at present only four or five officers.

The militia force is composed of Indians, who are very averse to a soldier's life, and of the citizens of the large towns; but the number cannot be stated, as the Indians avoid the conscription by every possible method.

The public departments of the army are in a very inefficient condition, and there is, as yet, no regular arsenal; sixty thousand stand of bad muskets being the whole the ordnance possesses, but two powder-mills are established near Bogota and Quito.

Navy.

The naval force of Colombia is on a par with its army, consisting only of nineteen ships of war, or six very small frigates, seven brigs, and six sloops or galliots, to defend a thousand leagues of coast. It is manned almost entirely by foreigners, and is commanded by Admiral Padilla, a Mulatto, who has distinguished himself by his exertions.

Manufactures, agriculture, and commerce.

Nature has provided such vast and increasing treasures in Colombia, that it only requires a cessation of the horrors of Civil war, and a stimulus to exertion, for its inhabitants to render it the most wealthy and important portion of the New World. Platina, gold, silver, and most other ores, jewels, and pearls, are abundant throughout its confines. Chocolate, coffee, sugar, tobacco, corn, wine, and oil, may be produced to an unlimited degree. Vast herds of cattle roam, unowned and worthless, excepting for their hides and tallow, on the unexplored plains of the Orinoco and of Casanare. Peruvian bark of a superior quality, countless drugs, of the most valuable properties in Medicine and for the Arts; and varieties of fruits and vegetables, which will perhaps create a new era in the agriculture of Europe, are constantly being discovered, and brought into use. The plough is now generally introduced into the service of the farmer in the temperate districts, particularly around Bogota, where large barns and cattle sheds well stocked, give the European traveller lively recollections of his native land.

Revenue.

It is impossible to give a satisfactory account of the exports and imports of Colombia, or of its revenue. Just before the Revolution, two millions and a half in British sterling was the utmost value of the agricultural produce; the value of exported gold was about £600,000. and of other exports £250,000. The European goods imported yielded a total value equal to about £600,000. The surplus revenue never exceeded £125,000. Mollien thinks that the diminution in the exportations has at least equalled, since the war, the surplus revenue previous to it; and is of opinion that this state of things must continue for a considerable time, on account of the deficiency of the Colombians in the knowledge of Chemistry and Mechanics.

Fine cloths, kerseymeres, calicoes, dimities, nankeens, printed cottons of fine colours, ribands, handkerchiefs, stockings, camblets, muslins, cambrics, velvets, Irish linen, men's hats, women's shoes, bar iron, steel, tin, paper, brandy, Spanish and French wines, almonds, and raisins, meet with a certain sale.

Agricultural implements, such as spades, shovels, pick-axes, forks, &c. are eagerly sought for, as well as carpenter's and smith's tools.

A new silver money of lower standard has recently been issued, but the gold coin retains its form and purity; whilst for the purposes of internal traffic, nearly £300,000. worth of copper has passed through the mint, being the first money of that metal seen in the country.

The chief commmercial Ports are, La Guayra in Caracas, Rio Hacha, Santa Marta, Carthagena, Puerto Bello, and Chagres, on the Main, with Panama and Guayaquil on the Pacific Ocean. English Consuls have been appointed to La Guayra, Maracaibo, Carthagena, and Panama. The other ports, viz., San Tomé, in Guiana, Puerto Cabello, on the Main, Maracaibo, the Port of the Great Cordilleras, and San Buenaventura on the Pacific, are but little frequented as yet by foreigners.

Manufactures.

The manufactures of Colombia are confined at present chiefly to the coarse cloths, baizes, blankets, hats, and other articles of clothing, &c. used by the peasantry.

Government.

The present Constitution of Colombia was decided by Congress at Cucuta, a small Town on the Zulia, in Maracaibo, situated on the great road to the Cordilleras, which is to be called Bolivar, and is to be the Capital of the Union. This Congress was held in 1821. It declared the independence of the Republic, the Sovereignty of the People, the responsibility of the Magistrates, and an equality of rights, and lodged the legislative power in a Senate and House of Representatives. The President to be elected every four years, and intrusted with the executive power, assisted, but not shackled, by a Vice-president, and four Secretaries of State, Home, Foreign, Finance, and War. The freedom of the Press is declared a fundamental law, and the citizens are secured in their persons and property; trials by jury are recommended; and the offspring of slaves born since the 21st of July 1821 are declared free.

Bolivar may be styled the Dictator of this Republic.

* Memoria del Ministro de la Guerra, (War-office returns.)

He is forty-two years of age, and possessed of the kind of talent most suited to the career he has embarked in,—a quick conception, a knowledge of mankind, much liberality, and great mental and bodily energies. His literary attainments do not, however, rank very high. Mollien compares him to Sertorius. In fact, he is rather a good Partizan, than a great General; his highest eulogy being perhaps found in the title by which he is universally acknowledged, "The Liberator."

The following works contain the best information on Colombia: Raleigh, Guiana, London, 1596; Herrera, Historia General de las Indias, Madrid, 1601; Piedrahita, Historia del Nuevo Regno de Granada; Acuña, Amazonas, Madrid, 1641; Rodriguez, Amazonas, Madrid, 1684; Wafer, Isthmus of Darien, London, 1699; Blanco, Conversion de Yndios, &c. Madrid, 1690; Oviedo, La Conquista de Venezuela, Madrid, 1723; Gumilla, Orinoco Illustrada, Madrid, 1734; Alcedo, Madrid, 1740, and for Guayaquil, 1741; Don Juan y Don Ulloa, Viage a la America Meridional, Madrid, 1748; Bouguer, Figure de la Terre, Paris, 1749; Condamine, Voyage à l'Equateur, Paris, 1751, and Voyage dans l'intérieure de l'Amérique; Bancroft, Guiana, London, 1769; Robertson, History of America, London, 1788; Munoz, Historia del Nuevo Mundo, 1793; Estalla, El Viagero Universal, Madrid, 1796; Depons, Voyage à la Terre Ferme, Paris, 1806; Pombo, Constitucion de los Estados Unidos, 1810; Pombo, Statistica de la Nueva Granada, Bogota, 1811; Humboldt, Personal Narrative of Travels in America, 1814 and 24; Humboldt, Vue des Cordilleres, Paris, 1814; Humboldt, Researches on the Antiquities of America, London, 1814; Lavaysse, Voyage à la Marguerite et Venezuela, Paris, 1813; Letters from Colombia, London, 1824; Colonel Hall, Colombia London, 1824; Mollien, Colombia, London, 1824.

CO'LONEL, } Also anciently written Coronel.
Co'lonelship. } Fr. colonel; It. colonello; Sp. coronel; Dutch, kolonel, koronel; Mid. Lat. coronellus. So called, says Minshew, because he is exercitus columna. Junius derives from columella; a name given to certain domestic servants; because on them, veluti in columellas, the weight of domestic management was reposed.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seise,
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms.
Milton. Sonnet 8. l. 1

Spite of his lordship, and his colonelship,
Or the judge's favour, I will make him render
A bloody and a strict accompt.
Massinger. A New Way to pay Old Debts, act iii. sc. 2.

When he forsook the peaceful dwelling,
And out he went a colonelling,
Strange hopes and fears possest the nation,
How he could manage that vocation,
Until he show'd it to a wonder,
How nobly he could fight and plunder.
Butler. Hudibras's Elegy.

He now supports, by scores, and dozens,
His very honourable cousins,
And entertains, with wine and cards,
Half the gay colonels of the guards.
Cawthorn. The Temple of Hymen.

CO'LONER, n.
Co'lonize, v.
Co'lonial,
Co'lonical,
Co'lonist,
Coloniza'tion,
Co'lonizing, n.
Co'lony.
} Fr. colonie; It. and Sp. colonia; Lat. colonus. So called a colendo, because the persons of which it consisted removed from one country and settled in another, for the purpose of cultivating the latter.

They that would thus colonize the stars with inhabitants, do place in the body of the sun, as was said before, the purest, the most immaterial, and refined intellectual creatures, whence the Almighty calls those he will have to be immediately about his persons, and to be admitted to the hierarchy of angels.
Howell. Letter, 9. book iii. sec. 1.

At our first cōming to anker on this shore we saw a great smoke rise in the Isle Raonoak neere the place where I left our colony in the yeere 1587, which smoke put us in good hope that some of the colony were there expecting my return out of England. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. John White, vol. iii. fol. 291.

When they had registered and placed the coloners, they remained still themselves in the same colonie, which they had as witness of their innocence, and just dealings.
Holland. Livius, fol. 147.

For there was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account, as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries. [America.] Bacon. Of an Holy War.

Colonieal services were those which were done by the Ceorls and Socmen, (that is husbandmen) to their lords (the King and Thanes) of all sorts, for some portions also of their outlands.
Spelman. On Feuds and Tenures, ch. xxv.

[They] proposed an act concerning the bringing of a colonie to Cales: and when, as the senate had ordained, that two thousand and five hundred men should bee enrolled and assigned thither; they created triumvirs for to bring them thither, and to divide the lands. Holland. Livius, fol. 293.

As when some great and gracious monarch dies,
Soft whispers first, and, mournful murmurs rise
Among the sad attendants; then the sound
Soon gathers voice, and spreads the news around,
Through town and country, till the dreadful blast
Is blown to distant colonies at last.
Dryden. Eleonora.

This furnished an opportunity for examining into the value of the French constitution, either considered as applicable to colonial government or in its own nature.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

From the free, I come now to the barbarians in bonds. By these I mean the vast multitudes stolen yearly from the opposite continent, and sacrificed by the colonists to their great idol, the God of Gain. Warburton. Works, vol. x. serm. 20.

Our ministers are of opinion that the increase of our trade and manufactures, that our growth by colonization, by conquest, have concurred to accumulate immense wealth in the hands of some individuals.
Burke. Thoughts on the Present Discontents.

If the dominions of Spain in the New World had been of such moderate extent, as bore a due proportion to the present state, the progress of her colonizing might have been attended with the same benefit as that of other nations.
Robertson. America, vol. iv. book viii.

In their manners and internal policy, the colonies formed a perfect representation of their great parent; and they were soon endeared to the natives by the ties of friendship and alliance; they effectually diffused a reverence for the Roman name, and a desire, which was seldom disappointed, of sharing, in due time, its honours and advantages.
Gibbon. Decline and Fall, &c. ch. ii.

COLONIA DEL SACRAMENTO, a Town of South America, of some importance, situated in 34° 22′ south latitude and 57° 52′ west longitude, with a small tract of country round it, thirty-three miles north-east of Buenos Ayres, and on the opposite bank of La Plata. It was first colonized by the Portugueze in 1678, when they built a city on it; was taken from them by the Spaniards in 1684, recovered again soon afterwards, but lost once more in 1704, and not restored until the peace between the rival nations. It was then strongly fortified, and sustained a vigorous attack from the Spaniards by sea and land in 1706, but was taken in 1762, and again restored at the subsequent peace; but the Spanish Government, still viewing it with a jealous eye, took it, for the last time, in 1777, when they destroyed the city and fortifications. The Portugueze have, however, again occupied this important post, which has the advantage of a tolerable harbour formed by the river. The fortress of the Island of San Gabriel, which protects the harbour, is very strong.

COLONNADE, It. colonnata, colonna; Fr. columne; Lat. columna. See COLUMN.

> The sun shines, broken, through yon arch that rears
> This once-round fabric, half deprived by years,
> Which rose a stately collonade, and crown'd
> Encircling pillars now unfaithful found;
> In fragments, these the fall of those forbode,
> Which, nodding, just up-heave their crumbling load.
> Savage. The Wanderer, can. 4.

COLONSAY AND ORONSAY, two small Islands of Scotland, belonging to the Hebrides, and included in the County of Argyle. They are separated from each other by a narrow channel, which is dry at low water; they are on that account frequently considered as one island. Their greatest extent from the northern extremity of Colonsay to the southern end of the opposite island, is about twelve miles, while their breadth varies from one mile to three. They contain about 12,000 English acres of land, nearly 4000 of which are laid out in meadows. Most of the other parts are covered with rugged hills, which often present a picture of hopeless sterility; but from their decomposition, and the shelter which they afford the vallies, are generally covered with a productive soil; and Colonsay has, therefore, by comparison, obtained the character of fertility. The improvements of agriculture have lately been successfully introduced, and the pastures have rapidly encroached upon the waste grounds. Coral is found in some places near the shores, and about 120 tons of kelp are annually made on the coasts. Among the principal antiquities were the remains of a Cistertian Monastery, founded by the Lord of the Isles, on Colonsay, and those of a Priory on Oronsay. The ruins of the former have been employed in the erection of a modern building; but those of the latter still remain; and, next to I-Colm-Kill, are esteemed the finest remains in the Hebrides. It contains several sculptured tombs, and a rich and lofty cross. LITTLE COLONSAY is also an Islet in the bay of Lochnankell, south of Ulva, and is distinguished by its basaltic columns similar to those of Staffa. It is merely the residence of a shepherd. Population in 1801, 805; 1811, 786; 1821, 904.

COLOPHON, a City of Ionia, on the river Hales, built by Mopsus, the grandson of Tiresias, (Paus. vii. 3,) a soothsayer, whose superior excellence in this art occasioned the jealousy and the death of Calchas, (Strabo, xiv.) It was afterwards colonized by Damasichthon and Prometheus, the sons of Codrus, at the same time with Miletus, 1119 years A. C. (Marm. Ox.) This city was one of the seven claimants to the honour of having given birth to Homer. It was celebrated also for an Oracle of Apollo. The responses were uttered by a Priest selected from particular families, and generally of Milesian origin; who before uttering them descended into a cave, and drank of its dark waters. Assisted by these he is said to have predicted an early death to Germanicus, (Tac. Ann. ii. 34,) and to have been silenced for ever not long after the occurrence of that event.

The inhabitants of Colophon were so celebrated for their horsemanship, that victory was always said to incline to the part which they joined in the course of battle; and hence arose a proverb, τὸν Κολοφῶνα ἐπέθηκεν, applied whenever a person has made an assured end of any work. (Strabo, loc. cit.)

For the same reason the term Colophon has been employed by Bibliographers to denote the concluding lines of early printed books, which usually contain the title of the work, the name of the author, of the printer, and of the place, with the date of the completion of the book. In Latin books they frequently occur in verse; many of them are both curious and amusing, and prove the admiration which the first productions of the press excited. From frequently containing the name of the work, the Colophon comes in aid of the Bibliographer, when describing copies of rare early printed books, which happen to be defective at the beginning.

The Colophon to Cicero's Officia, printed in 1465, runs thus:

Presens Marci tulij clarissimi opus. Johannes fust Mogũtinus, ciuis. nõ atramẽto. plumali cãna neq; aerea. Sed arte quadam perpulcra. Petri manu pueri mei feliciter effecti finitum. Anno MCCCCLXV.

The following is the poetical Colophon to the Philippics of Cicero, printed by Ulric Han, (Latinè GALLUS) about 1470.

Anser Tarpeii custos Jovis: unde qz alis
Constreperes Gallus decidit: ultor adest
Udalricus Gallus: ne quem poscantur in usum
Edocuit pennis nil opus esse tuis.
Imprimit ille die quantum non scribitur anno.
Ingenio haud noceas: omnia vincit homo.

The City of Colophon produced a strong odoriferous yellow resin, which derived its name from the city itself, (Plin. xiv. 25.) The name is still preserved in Pharmacy for the Caput mortuum of distilled resin.

COLORADO, or RIO COLORADO DE LOS MARTYRES, a large and important River of Mexico, which rises in the Sierra Verde, or Green Ridge of the Cordillera, about the 40° of north latitude, on the opposite side to the source of the Great Rio del Norte, and waters the almost uninhabited, or rather unknown country which lies between the Columbian Andes and the Californian Gulf, into the upper extremity of which the Colorado flows. The course of this fine River may be computed at about 600 miles, generally flowing from north-east to south-west. It is called Colorado, or Coloured, from its water being tinged by the red clay of its banks. It is navigable for an immense distance inland, and is very deep at the period at which it receives the Gila. Zaguanamas and Nabajoa are the other principal names, which the different sources of this River take from the mountains to their confluence in the main stream. The Colorado, though now little known, will probably some day become one of the most important of North American rivers.

COLORADO DE TEXAS, a large River of the Province San Luis Potosi, of the State of Mexico, which rises in a branch of the Sierra de los Mimbres, or main Cordillera, in 49° north latitude; and, after a very long course towards the south-east, falls into the Bay of San Bernardino in the Gulf of Mexico, in 29° 30′ north latitude; very little is yet known either of this great River, or of its numerous rivals in this extensive but almost uninhabited Province.

COLORADO DE TEXAS — COLOSS.

There are many other rivers of Spanish America having this designation.

COLO'SS, n. / COLO'SSUS, / COLO'SSAL, / COLOSSE'AN, / COLO'SSICK, / COL'OSSUS-WISE. — Fr. colosse; It. and Sp. colosso; Lat. colossus; Gr. κολοσσὸς; ad verbum sonat frangeoculum, (says Vossius,) παρὰ τὸ κολάειν τὰ ὄσσα; because, on account of its immense heighth, oculorum aciem frustraretur. See Martinius, and Vossius.

But the colosse of the sun, which stood at Rhodes, and was wrought by Chares of Lyndes, apprentice to the above-named Lyssippus, was above all others most admirable; for it carried seventie cubits in height: well, as mightie an image as it was, it stood not on end above threescore years and six; for in an earthquake that then happened it was overthrowne: but lying as it doth along, a wonderfull and prodigious thing it is to view and behold. Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 495.

The huge colosses, conduits, and
Else-what, that shew'd a state
Beyond beleefe of ruin'd Rome
In part repair'd of late,
They wonder at.
Warner. Albion's England, book xii. ch. lxxivi.

Who, rapt with wonder of their famous praise
Admire their statues, their colossoes great:
Their rich triumphal arcks which they did raise,
Their huge pyramids, which do heaven threat.
Spenser. On Scandenberg, son. 3.

——— Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner.
And stands colossus-wise wauing his beame
Vpon the pashed corses of the kings.
Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 103.

——— Men merely great
Think they bear all the kingdom's worth before them;
Yet differ not from those colossick statues,
Which, with heroick forms without o'erspread,
Within are nought but mortar, flint, and lead.
Chapman. Trag. of Bussy, D'Ambois.

Though Britain's genius the wide wave bestrides,
And like a vast colossus, towering stands
With one foot planted on the continent;
Yet be not wholly wrapp'd in public cares.
Young. Reflections on the Public Situation of the Kingdom, &c.

——— Credulous, the train,
Surrounding, in religious rapture see
The colossean image of their god
Smile on the hero, meriting the smiles
Of deities and mortals.
Glover. The Atheniad, book x.

The great hall, with the flight of steps at the upper end, in which he [Kent] proposed to place a colossal Jupiter was a noble idea. Walpole. Architects in Reign of George II.

Herodotus makes very frequent mention of Colossi in Egypt. At Thebes the Priests in his time were accustomed to show 341 wooden Colossal statues of their predecessors, each of which was termed Πίρωμις ἐκ Πίρωμιος, (ii. 143.) In Sais were twenty wooden Colossi of the concubines of King Mycerinus, (Id. 130.) The peristyle of the hall of Apis at Memphis was supported by Colossi, eighteen feet in height, instead of columns, (Id. 153.) Before the Temple of Vulcan, in the same city, Amasis erected a Colossus seventy feet in height, which, when the Historian saw it, had been overthrown; on the same base with it were erected two other figures, each twenty feet high, (Id. 176.) Rhampsinitus also decorated the propylæa of the Temple of Vulcan with two Colossi, each more than thirty-six feet high. One represented Summer, and was an object of popular love and adoration. The other was an image of Winter which, on the contrary, was treated with every kind of indignity. (Id. 121.)

COLOSS

No Colossus on record, however, can compete with the magnificent image erected by the Rhodians. To the description of it, which has been cited above from Pliny, (xxxiv. 18,) may be added a few other particulars. When Demetrius Poliorcetes voluntarily raised the siege of Rhodes, (vol. ix. 210,) he left behind him as a boon to the islanders property amounting to 300 Attic talents, (about £70,000.) The citizens resolved to dedicate this sum to a statue in honour of their tutelary Deity, Apollo; and they applied to the sculptor Chares for that purpose. Sextus Empiricus (Advers. Math. vii.) differs from Pliny respecting the Artist. He says that Chares, having made an estimate of the sum necessary for a statue, according to the proposed dimensions, only doubled this sum when an image of double the size was required from him. This money was rapidly exhausted, and, Chares having hung himself in shame and despair, his fellow-citizen Laches, completed the great work in twelve years. The two lines which Simonides is said to have inscribed on the base of the statue, (and that they were so inscribed rests on the authority of Theophanes, in a fragment of his Chronicle, to be found in Constantinus Porphyrogenites, de Administ. Imperii, xxi.) corroborate this account.

Τὸν ἐν Ῥόδῳ Κολοσσὸν ὀκτάκις δέκα
Λάχης ἐπόιει πηχέων ὁ Λύνδιος.

It should be stated, however, that Χάρης has been read instead of Λάχης, and ἑπτάκις instead of ὀκτάκις, in order to produce an agreement with the narrative and the measurement of Pliny.

An earthquake, which desolated the Archipelago, A. C. 224, overthrew this image. The cause of the fall is stated by Polybius, (v. 88,) by Orosius, (iv. 13,) and by Paulus Diaconus, (Hist. Misc. iii.;) the date is fixed by Eusebius. When Pliny wrote, the image was yet on the ground. Few persons, he says, could embrace the thumb; the fingers were as large as the bodies of most statues. Huge cavities were seen in the fractures; and immense stones had been placed within the trunk to balance it while standing. Pliny, (loc. cit.) Strabo, (xiv.) who cites the words of Simonides in accordance with Pliny, and Isidorus of Seville, all three of which writers lived while the statue yet existed, agree in fixing its height at seventy cubits, (105 feet.)

Neither the ornaments, nor even the position of this Colossus are described by any ancient writer; and it is most probably to the imaginations of Vigenaire and Du Choul, two Antiquaries of the XVIth century, that we may refer the stride of fifty feet, from rock to rock; the vessels which passed under it in full sail; the blazing lamp in its right hand; the internal spiral staircase leading to its summit; and the glass suspended round the neck, in which ships might be discerned as far off as the coast of Egypt. After its overthrow, all Greece, and even the King of Egypt offered to contribute large sums towards its restora-

COLOSSI. tion, (Polybius, v.;) but the Rhodians declined the donation, being prohibited, as they said, by an oracle, (Strabo, xiv.)

The fragments lay scattered on the ground for nearly 880 years. When the Saracens became masters of the Archipelago in the VIIth century, Mabias, an officer of Othman, collected these valuable materials, and sold them to a Jew of Edessa, A. D. 655. (Zonaras, Annal. ii.) The purchaser is said to have laden 900 camels with the brass; and the reader may find in one of Bayle's notes (ad voc. Catius. I.) an explanation of a singular error into which Scaliger has fallen, while computing the weight of metal of the Colossus from these data. The fullest and most minute particulars respecting Rhodes itself, and this its great marvel, will be found collected in the third volume of the works of the indefatigable Meursius, (Rhodus, i. 15;) and the doubts which Muratori has thrown upon the reality of the existence of any such statue at all, (Annal. Ital. iv. 111,) are skilfully removed in the Encyclopédie Méthodique Antiq. ad voc. Colosses.

Pliny counted in Rhodes 100 other smaller Colossi, each of which, he adds, wherever it might be placed, would confer celebrity on its station. He then proceeds to mention some Colossi which were to be found in Italy. Among them was an Apollo in the Capitol, brought by Lucullus from Apollonia in Pontus. It stood forty-five feet high, and cost 500 talents, £96,875. A Hercules, at Tarentum, the work of Lysippus, sixty feet high, and poised with such nicety that, like our Druidical rocking stones, though no hurricane could root it from its base, yet the touch of a finger might give it a sensible motion. The Apollo of the Palatine Library, fifty feet high. The Capitoline Jupiter of Carvilius, made from the corslets, greaves, and helmets won by Papirius Cursor from the Samnites; this image was so large that it could be distinctly seen from the Mons Albanus. Another Jupiter, erected by Claudius, and from its vicinity to the Theatre of Pompey called Pompeianus. A Mercury, made by Zenodorus at Auvergne, the labour of sixteen years. The excellence of this statue called forth the patronage of Nero to the artist: he was summoned to Rome, and there erected a Colossal figure of the Imperial monster, to which Pliny ascribes a height of 110 feet,—Suetonius, 120, (Nero, 31.) After the death of Nero, his head was removed; and in the reign either of Vespasian or of Commodus, it was replaced by one of the radiated Apollo, to whom the image was dedicated. Concerning this statue, Allacci has fallen into a strange mistake; in his edition of Philo Byzantinus, de Septem Orbis Spectaculis, he mentions that the Colossus of Rhodes was restored in the seventh Consulate of Vespasian; and that Commodus, having removed the original head, replaced it by his own: for which assertion he refers to the authority of Syncellus. It seems that Dio states, that Vespasian moved the Colossus of Zenodorus from Nero's Palace, ἐν ἱερᾷ ὁδῷ, in the Via Sacra; and this has been transcribed, or read, ἐν Ῥοδίῳ.

In modern times, the statue of St. Charles Borromeo is (we believe) the most Colossal which has been executed. It stands on the summit of a hill, near Arona, and represents the Archbishop turned towards Milan, and, with an extended arm, imploring a benediction upon its inhabitants. The statue itself is of bronze, seventy feet in height, the marble pedestal which supports it is forty-two.

COLOSSÆ, a City of Phrygia, on the banks of the Lycus, at the spot in which that river loses itself awhile in the earth, (Herod. vii. 30.) Xenophon, in his Anabasis, (i. 2, § 6,) describes it to be populous, wealthy, and extensive. It passed successively from the Persians to the Macedonians; and after the death of Alexander to the Seleucidæ. On the defeat of Antiochus, at Magnesia, it submitted to Eumenes. After the bequest of his dominions by Attalus to the Romans, it was included in the Proconsulate of Asia; and in the new division of Phrygia, on the death of Constantine, it was esteemed the sixth town in the district Pacatiana. Its name was afterwards changed to Chones, which it almost preserves, in its present reduced and miserable state, as Konos. It is to his Christian converts at Colossæ that St. Paul addresses one of his Epistles.

COLOSTRUM, Κόλον, food, because it is the earliest food—the first milk—beastings—prima a partu spongiosa densitas lactis. (Plin. xxviii. 33.)

COLOUR. COLOUR, v. Co'LOUR, s. Co'LOURABLE, Co'LOURABLENESS, Co'LOURABLY, Co'LORATE, adj. Co'LORATION, Co'LORIFICK, Co'LOURING, Co'LOURIST, Co'LOURLESS, Co'LOURLESSNESS, Co'LOURLY, Co'LOUR-MAN, Co'LOURISHING.

Fr. couleur; It. colore; Sp. colór; Dutch, koleur; Lat. color. Of uncertain Etymology. Vossius suggests the Gr. χρωννύω, by metathesis, and the change of n into l. Scheidius thinks from κόλω, (quod idem ac κείλω, vel κέλλω, tundendo percutio,) and that color is—perculsio, species oculos percellens

To colour was used early in our language, metaphorically,

To give a fair or specious appearance; sc. for purposes of deception, of delusion; to remove unpleasing, offensive appearances: to render pleasing and agreeable; worthy of favour or approbation.

——— As hym þouȝte, in þe world hire pere nas,
So whit, ne of such colour, ny in eche maner so gent.
R. Gloucester, p. 24.

King Knout þoȝte how he myȝte best herof do
To bynyme hem her erytage, he adde some colour of ryȝte.
Id. p. 313.

Eche man sotelej sleiþe. synne to huyde,
And colorej hit for a connynge.
Piers Ploukman, fol. 390.

For with the rose colour strof hire hewe;
I n'ot which was the finer of hem two.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1042.

Min English eke is unsufficient,
It muste ben a Rethor excellent,
That coude his colours longing for that art,
If he shuld hire descriven ony part.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10353.

——— And this malice
Under the colour of iustice
Is hid. Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 11.

Like vnto the camelion,
Whiche vpon euery sondrie hewe,
That he beholt, he mote newe
His colour. Id. Ib. book i. fol. 23.

Thei hadden sent a litil boat in the sea undir colour as thei schulden bigynne to streeche forth their ancris fro the former part of the schip. Poul seide to the centurien and to the knyghtis, but these men dwellen in the schip ghe moun not be maad saaf
Wiclif. The Dedis of Apostlis, ch. xxvii.

COLOUR.

And had let downe the bote into the sea, vnder the couloure as thoughe they wouldе haue cast ankers out of the fore ship; Paul said vnto the vnder captayne and the souldiers, excepte these abyde in the shyp, ye cannot be safe. Bible, 1551.

Specially sir Wyllyam of Dormans preched the sayd quarell fro cite to cite, and fro towne to towne, so wysely and so notably, that all that harde hym lent themselfe to his opinion, so that the businesse of the realme was by him and by his wordes so coloured that it was marueile to speke therof.

Froissart. Cronycle, ch. cclii.

In coloryng the warre betwene lordes, to make their warre the fayrer, the prince of Wales, father to kyng Richarde of Englande, it was sayd, he consented to the takyng of the lady of Burbone, mother to the French quene. Id. Ib. ch. 369.

But lastly by colour or fleynge backe, they brought Edfryde into a streite among hyllys and mountaynes, and slewe hym there with a great parte of his people. Fabyan, vol. i. ch. xxxv.

It is a colour of rhetorike, and is called Anæntopodosis, that is to saye, an answer to an obiection that a man might haue here made, on this maner. Frith. Workes, fol. 64.

It appereth, what manifest injurie and dishonour they did to the queen's majesty, to assign the arms of England and Ireland to the French queene, and that in all their pageants: and being admonished thereof by the ambassador, would neither make colourable excuse, nor leave it.

Burnett. Records. A short Discussion of, &c. August, 1559.

In publishing this treatise, my labor principally tendeth to this end; to remoue all fig-leaues from our vnbeliefe, that either it may haue cause to shake off the colourable pretences of ignorance: or if we will not be perswaded; that our selfe-will may rest inexcusable.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Laurence Keymis, vol. iii. fol. 667.

The prophet Jeremie forbiddeth the Jewes captiues to come neare the abhominacions of the Chaldeans, or colourably and feinedly to geue anye consent to them.

Calaine. Foure Godlie Sermons, serm. 1.

He wil geue you his good thiges frely, if your yl thinges displease you hartily. Onely he wiileth y^t there be no colourings, which shall preuail nothing w^t him. Udall. Matthew, ch. iii.

But I wyll tell you, maistre persone. Mentiri spiritui sancto, is to face downe the Holy Ghoste wyth a lye, to seke to deceyue God by a falsehede, colourly and slyely to dyssemble.

Bale. Apology, p. 117.

Such end had the kidd, for he nould warned be
Of craft, coloured with simplicitie.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. May.

Then did I see a bridge made all of gold
Ouer the sea, from one to other side,
Withouten prop or pillour it t' vphold,
But like a coloured rainbowe arched wide.

Id. The Ruins of Time.

But say what mean those colour'd streaks in heaven,
Distended as the brow of God appeas'd,
Or serve they as a flowrie verge to binde
The fluid skirts of that same watrie cloud
Least it againe dissolve and show'r the earth?

Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 879.

I took it for a faery vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live.

Id. Comus, l. 300.

Let them be well assured that the honie which they eate with fraude, shall turne in the end into true gall, for as much as lawes are the sacred image of his wisdom, who most seuerely punisheth those colourable and subtle crimes that seldome are taken within the walke of humaine justice.

Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book v. fol. 453.

You oppose figure to plainness and colourableness.

Fulke against Allen, fol. 83.

But rather thought best to blanch the storie, and colourablie to hide the simple truth thereof. Fox. Martyrs, fol. 142.

For had the tunicles and humours of the eye, all or any of them been colorate, many of the rays proceeding from the visible object would have been stopt and suffocated before they could come to the bottom of the eye, where the formal organ of vision is situate. Ray. On the Creation, part ii. COLOUR — COLT.

Amongst curiosities, I shall place colouration, though it be somewhat better: for beauty in flowers is their preheminence.

Bacon. Natural History, Cent. vi. sec. 506.

But when this vsuall practise of the papistes was once accomplished, there wanted then no secret shifts, no worldlie wyles for the craftie colouring of this mischief. Id. Ib. fol. 737.

Would truth dispense, we could be content, with Plato, that knowledge were but remembrance, that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscential evocation, and new impressions but the colourishing of old stamps which stood pale in the soul before.

Sir Thomas Brown. To the Reader.

In this composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorifick qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton. Optics.

That then God should visit him [man] by sending his son into the world that the world through him might be saved; this is so far above our imaginations as well as deserts, that it seems to be the most colourable pretence for infidelity, that it is too great a thing for mankind to believe.

Stillingfleet. Sermon, 9. vol. iv.

The queen was not yet of age; and in her minority, they pretended that the government of the kingdom belonged to the states: and therefore they gathered together many of her mal-administrations, for which they might the more colourably put her out of the government.

Burnett. History of the Reformation, Anno 1559.

Nay, I would not have our experimenter employ none but vegetable substances about his colourations, but sometimes make use of animal ones, and (more often) of minerals.

Boyle. Short Memoirs, &c. Of Mineral Waters.

But the next time I came, though it were upon appointment, his metal proved again unserviceable, and instead of being colourless, when it was cold, looked as if it had been stained with blue and yellow, and was besides brittler than it ought to have been.

Id. Of Unsuccessful Experiments.

And I thought, that, if opportunity had not been wanting, this salt would have appeared purgative, as some factitious salts, that resemble it in transparency, colourlessness, and figure, have been observed to be. Id. Short Memoirs, &c. Of Mineral Waters.

He showed as little judgment as that painter would be found to do, who should apply his simple colours just as he received them from the colourman; without forming them into those curious

"Lights and shades whose well-accorded strife
Gives all the strength and colour of our life."

Warburton. The Divine Legation.

Vain is the hope by colouring to display
The bright effulgence of the moontide ray,
Or paint the full-orb'd ruler of the skies,
With pencils dipt in dull terrestrial dyes.

Mason. Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

Shortly before the first edition of these works was published, some hopes were entertained that the process employed by the great colourists of former times had been preserved; and I was furnished by an eminent artist with an account of the manner in which it had been discovered.

Malone. Life of Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Water, when simple, is insipid, inodorous, colourless, and smooth. Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful.

COLPODA, in Zoology, a genus of infusory animalcules. The body is extremely small, simple, flat, pellucid, irregularly sinuated. There are plates of eleven species in the Encyclopédie Méthodique. Lamarck, An. sans Vert. tom. i.

COLT, v. } Ihre seems to consider the A.S. and English colt, the Swe. kult, and English, child, A. S. cild, i. e. any thing borne or begotten.—to be the same word differently written and applied. See CHILD.
COLT, n.
COLT'S-TOOTH,
CO'LTISH.

COLT — COLUBER.

The young male of the horse is called a colt; and it is consequently applied to

That which has the frolicksomeness, wantonness, wildness, or other distinguishing quality of that animal.

"From Decker's Bellman's Night Walks, &c. 1616, it appears (Mr. Steevens says) that the technical term for any innkeeper or hackney-man who had been cheated of horses, was a colt."

Hence to colt, is to befool, to trick.

> And yet have I alway a coltes tothe,
> As many a yere as it is passed henne,
> Sin that my tappe of lif began to renne.
> Chaucer. The Reves Prologue, v. 3886.

> And seide to hem, go ye into the castel that is agens you, and anoon ye schulen fynde an asse tied and a colt with hir, untye ye, and bryngith to me. Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxi.

> Go into the towne that lyeth ouer against you, and anone ye shal fynde an asse bound, and her colte with her: loose them & bring them vnto me. Bible, 1551.

> He was al coltish, full of ragerie.
> Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 2521.

> ——— And from a tender colt they take the knap
> That from the front at foaling first the damme for loue doth snap,
> Whom now thei do preuent. Phaer. Æneidos, book iv.

> But there was Cicero finely colted, as old as he was, by a young man, when he was contented to sue for the consulship in his behalf, and to make the senate agreeable to it.
> Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 728.

> What bootes it to breake a colte, and to let him straight runne loose at randome. Being straight left unto themselves, and their owne inordinate life and manners they eftsoones forgot what before they were taught, and so soone as they were out of sight, by themselves shooke off their bridles, and beganne to colte anew, more licenciously than before.
> Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

> L. Cham. Well said Lord Sands,
> Your colt's tooth is not cast yet?
> Shakspeare. Henry VIII. fol. 210.

> She has a colt's-tooth still, I warrant,
> And will not disapprove your errand.
> King. Orpheus and Eurydice.

> His free born vigour yet unbroke
> To lordly man's usurping yoke,
> The bounding colt forgets to play,
> Basking beneath the noon-tide ray,
> And stretch'd among the daisies pied
> Of a green dingle's sloping side.
> Warton. Odes. The first of April, ode 10.

COLUBER, Lin.; Snake, Pen. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Serpentes, order Ophidia, class Reptilia.

Generic character. Scales arranged in a double row beneath the tail.

These, according to Cuvier's arrangement, include all those Snakes which have the scales on the under part of the tail arranged in pairs, at whatever part of the tail they may be found, either throughout its whole length, at its base, or at its tip; they are none of them venomous.

They have been divided into several subgenera.

α Pythons.

Have the little claws near the vent; and the ventral scales very narrow.

C. Javanicus, Shaw; le Python Améthyste, Daud.; Ular Sawa of the natives, Java Snake. This remarkable Snake was first described by Wurmb, in the Acta Societatis Indico-Batavicæ, 1787; according to his account it grows to the length of nine feet, and is found in the woods and rice-fields, from which latter circumstance the name Ular Sawa, Rice-field Snake, is given to it by the natives, who say that they grow to the length of thirty feet. The head is large and flat, covered with polygonal scales, the upper part of it grey mixed with blue; two dark blue lines pass from behind the eyes to the root of the neck, and uniting, form an arch; another stripe of the same colour passes from the snout to the occiput, where it divides into two, surrounding a yellow spot marked with blue specks; the rest of the body is divided into compartments of a greyish colour, with changeable reflections of yellow, blue, and green, by latticed stripes of deep blue edged with gold, and each side of the body is marked with a row of white spots. It is a native of Java. Cuvier considers it very similar to the Python Tigre, Daud., or Pedda-Poda of Bengal, the Boa Castanea Albicans of Schneider, the Coluber Boaformis of Shaw. COLUBER.

C. Ordinatus, Cuv.; Boa Ordinata, Schneid.; Python Ordinè, Daud.; Symmetrical Snake. Of a whitish colour beautifully spotted with brown; the subcaudal scales are first doubled, then single, and the remainder as many as fifty-four or fifty-six double. Schneider, who has given an account of this animal, has described it in a very loose way.

C. Rhombeatus, Cuv.; Boa Rhombeata, Schneid., belongs to this division.

C. Reticulatus, Cuv.; Boa Reticulata, Schneid.; Reticulated Snake. Schneider gives no account of the dimensions or country of this Snake; it has a dusky black line on the middle of the head, which becomes broader on the neck, and two similar rays from the eyes, which unite behind the spot on the neck, and interlacing on the back and sides give them an appearance like network.

C. Orbiculatus, Cuv.; Boa Orbiculata, Schneid.; Bora of Bengal, Russ. The head is covered with numerous and very large scales; the colour is dusky above with spots of the same on the back, which are lighter in the middle, and edged with dusky yellow; the sides whitish and spotted with brown. It is about four feet in length, and was found by Dr. Russel at Calcutta.

Some of the species of Snakes approach more nearly to the Boæ than others, by the small scales on the top of the head, and the clefts in the edges of the lips.

β Hurriahs.

The subcaudal scales single at the base, and double at the apex.

C. Irregularis, Menem; Hurria Pseudoboiga, Daud.; Irregular Snake. Thin, like a whip-lash in shape, of a greyish purple colour, marked with white spots in transverse rows; belly yellowish.

The C. Schneideriana, or Hurria Schneideriana, Daud.; and the C. Bilineata, or Hurria Bilineata, Daud.; belong to this subdivision.

γ Dipsas.

Body compressed and narrower than the head, and the scales extending along the spine broader than those of the other parts.

C. Dipsas, Lin.; Dipsas, Shaw. About a foot long, of a bright blue colour, with the edges of the scales white. Native of Surinam. The Greeks had a Snake called Δίψας, which they believed caused death by producing excessive thirst; this species, however, has been awkwardly named by Linnæus, as it is not an African species, which that of the Ancients was.

C. Bucephalus, Shaw; Dipsas Indica, Seba; Bull-headed Snake. Is about four feet and a half long; the head very large, depressed and covered with large scales; the neck thin; along the middle of the back is a single row of hexagonal scales, extending from head to tail, whilst those on the other parts of the body are ovate; the colour of the Snake is reddish brown, with transverse broadish bands, marked at their junction with the abdominal scuta by a white spot. Native of Ceylon.

δ Snakes Proper.

The upper parts of the body covered with rhomboidal reticulated scales, often carinated; no anal hooks.

C. Natrix, Lin.; la Coleuvre à Collier, Lacep.; Ringed Snake, Pen. Is the largest of the English Snakes, sometimes attaining to four feet in length; the neck is slender, the body and sides thicker; the colour of the back and sides are of a dusky brown; around the neck is a collar of three white spots; the middle of the back marked with two rows of small black spots running from head to tail, and from them many transverse lateral lines; the scales are generally carinated; the plates on the belly are dusky, and those on the sides of a bluish white; on either side of the neck is a spot of pale yellow, and at the base of it a triangular black spot, the apex of which points towards the tail. This Snake is very inoffensive and timid; it is often destroyed by mistake for the Viper, from which it may easily be distinguished by the black zigzag line on the back, and the triangular black spots on the sides, and black belly of the Viper. The Snake may be easily tamed, and Mr. White mentions that he knew a gentleman who kept a tame Snake, which was in its person as sweet as any animal; but as soon as a stranger or a Dog or Cat came in, fell to hissing, and filled the room with such nauseous effluvia as rendered it hardly supportable!

C. Atro Virescens, Lin.; la Coleuvre vert et jaune, Lacep.; French Snake, Shaw. Very similar to the preceding, but differs in being of a dark green colour, marked on the sides with irregular yellow specks, which become more like lines towards the tail; the eyes and edges of the mouth bordered with yellow, of which colour also is the belly. This species, like the last, is easily tamed, and Lacepede relates that a lady kept one, which came to her when called, followed her in her walks, and slept in her bosom.

C. Austriacus, Gmel.; la Lisse, Lacep.; Smooth Snake, Shaw. Very much resembles the C. Natrix, but has the scales smooth; the abdomen is dashed with red; the eyes reddish, with a line of the same colour passing through them from the nostril to the back of the cheek. It is a fierce animal, and will bite any which may happen to meddle with it.

COLUBER. — COLUMBA.

C. Viperinus, Latr.; la Viperine, Id.; Viper-headed Snake, Shaw. About three feet long; the scales carinated; of a greyish brown colour, and marked like the Viper with a zigzag line of black spots along the back, and a row of eyed spots on each side; a longitudinal black stripe extends on each side of the head, across the eyes to the first dorsal bar; the belly is chequered with black and grey.

The four last species are found in the neighbourhood of Paris.

C. Girondicus, Daud.; Bordelaise Snake. This resembles the Viperine Snake very much, except in the scales being smooth, and the spots on the back smaller and more distant from each other. Native of the south of France and Italy.

C. Elaphis, Shaw; la Quatre Raies, Lacep.; Dun Snake. Is the largest of the European Serpents, and sometimes as long as six feet; the scales on the back are carinated, whilst those on the sides are smooth; it is of a dun colour, and has four longitudinal dark brown or black stripes extending down the back. Native of Italy and France.

C. Æsculapii, Shaw; le Serpent d'Esculape, Lacep.; Æsculapian Snake. Larger, but not so long as the last described; of a rufous colour above, and pale yellow on the sides and belly; the back marked on each side with a dusky longitudinal band; the scales nearest the belly are white, edged below with black, forming a kind of border along each side of the body; the dorsal scales almost smooth. This is the Snake represented by the Ancients in the statues of Æsculapius. It is native of Illyria, Hungary, and Italy.

These are some of the principal of this genus, and as a further description would merely consist of difference in size and colour, the reader must be referred to the under-written authorities; at the same time however, he must be cautious in admitting all he will find as distinct species, for many of them are the same animals, whose appearance has been altered by accidental circumstances.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ; Schneider, Historia Amphibiorum; Daudin, Histoire des Reptiles; Cuvier, Règne Animal; Shaw, General Zoology; Pennant, British Zoology; Russel, Natural History of Indian Serpents.

COLUMBA.

COLUMBA, from the Gr. κολυμβάω, to swim, Lin.; Pigeon, Willugh. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Columbinæ, order Gallinaceæ, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak moderate-sized, thin, vaulted, slightly compressed, with a soft bulbous projection at its junction with the jaws; toes distinct, four in number, the inner the longest; tail having twelve quills.

This genus, which is very numerous, and which furnishes so many of our poultry yards, may be considered as an easy gradation from the Gallinacei to the Passeres; they have the arched beak of the former, and the nostrils are situated in a broad membranous space, at the root of the beak, and covered by a cartilaginous scale, which is prominent, and forms a bulbous projection at the junction of the beak with the jaws; the toes have no membrane at their base, but that produced by the junction of their edges; the tail is composed of twelve quills. They are very good flyers, and perhaps the Romans derived their name from the circumstance of their appearing to swim through the air. They live in pairs, and seldom have more than two young ones at a time, breeding in the wild state about twice in the year, and if the eggs be destroyed or COLUMBA. removed they lay again; the male takes his turn with his mate in sitting during the time of incubation; and when the young ones are hatched, after about fourteen days sitting, they are fed by both the parent birds, for the first few days with a substance resembling curdled milk, which afterwards becomes mixed with the half-digested food thrown up from the gizzard. In the domestic state they breed four, five, or six times, annually, and occasionally as many as nine times; in which case a single pair of Pigeons will, according to Stillingfleet, produce in the course of four years 14,762 young ones, or by Linnæus's computation more than 18,000. They live upon pulse of different kinds, and go out into the fields to seek their food. Vast quantities of them are domesticated for the table; and many curious varieties are carefully kept in close cotes by Pigeon-fanciers, who will give enormous prices for them, of which eighty guineas given for an Almond Tumbler, a variety of the C. Gyratrix, and twenty guineas for a pair of Powters, C. Gutturosa, are strong examples. Pigeons dung has been used for manure; so valuable is it esteemed for this purpose that a load of coals has been given for it, and it has been fetched sixteen miles.

α Gallina Pigeons.

Nearly approach the other Gallinaceæ by the length and uprightness of their tarsus; by their living in flocks, and seeking their food on the earth without perching; beak thin and flexible.

C. Carunculata, Tem.; le Colombi Galline, Le Vaill.; Carunculated Pigeon, Lath. About the size of the Turtle Dove; bill red and tipped with black; forehead furnished with a red skin extending to the ears; under the throat a red wattle, in which it resembles the Common Fowl; the eye also surrounded with a red skin; the plumage generally of a deep grey; tail short and slightly cuneiform; legs red, with crooked claws. Native of the interior of the Cape of Good Hope. It makes its nest in a small hollow upon the ground, with sticks and fine grass; the young run like Partridges, and are called by the old ones as Chickens are by a Hen.

C. Coronata, Gmel.; le Colombihocco, Le Vaill.; Great Crowned Pigeon, Lath. Nearly as large as a Turkey; upper parts of the body deep ash colour, shaded with purplish chestnut; at the bend of the wing a horny excrescence; head, breast, and belly of a dull blue, the former marked through the eyes with a black stripe; irides red; beak black; head feathers in length about five inches, with loose webs, forming a beautiful crest; tail deep ash colour, but paler at its tip; legs dusky, and occasionally spotted with red. Native of the Moluccas and New Guinea, and not unfrequent in Amboina, but they will not propagate in Europe.

Brisson and Buffon have placed this bird among the Pheasants.

C. Nicobarica, Lin.; le Colombi Galline à Canail, Le Vaill.; Nicobar Pigeon, Lath. About the size of a Fowl; beak dusky; head, neck, and under-part, of a bluish purple colour; belly very dark green; back and wings green, adorned with gold and copper; tail short and white; the feathers of the neck very long, like those of the Domestic Cock; legs reddish, large, and scaly. Native of Sumatra; it runs quickly on the ground, but flies heavily; is occasionally brought to Europe, and at first is very delicate, but afterwards becomes more hardy.

C. Cyanocephala, Lin.; le Colombi Perdrix à cravate noire, Le Vaill.; Blue-headed Pigeon, Lath. Eleven inches long; back of the neck, rump, wing and tail coverts, brown; belly, sides, thighs, and under-part of the tail coverts, rufous; fore part of the neck, except the middle, and breast, vinaceous; tail ash-coloured above and dusky beneath; crown, throat, and middle of the neck blue, beneath which the feathers are black, and some of them striped transversely with white; bill red at the base, and ash-coloured before; a stripe of white passing from the lower jaw to the back of the head through to the eye; legs and claws red. Native of Jamaica. COLUMBA.

C. Hottentota, Lath.; le Colombi Caille, Le Vaill.; Hottentot Pigeon, Lath. Size of a Quail; irides reddish; plumage above reddish brown, forehead and throat, white; neck and sides greyish brown; breast, belly, thighs, and under tail-coverts, light red; legs red. Native of Africa.

C. Montana, Lin.; le Colombi Perdrix roux violet, Le Vaill.; Mountain Partridge, Edwards; Mountain Pigeon: Eight or nine inches in length; general colour, rufous, with purplish tinge; throat and neck flesh-coloured; legs red, and claws brown. Native of Jamaica.

C. Martinica, Lin.; le Pigeon violet de la Martinique, Buff.; Martinico Pigeon, Lath. About the size of a Turtle; head, neck, and upper parts, chestnut colour, with a violet gloss; chin and throat flesh-coloured; breast and belly purplish flesh-coloured; tail violet chestnut; a long flesh-coloured streak beneath each eye; legs red. Native of Martinico, where it is called a Partridge.

C. Passerina, Lin.; le Petite Tourterelle, Buff.; Ground Dove or Pigeon, Lath. A very small species, about six inches long; upper parts of the head and neck ash-coloured; back and rump the same, but deeper; forehead, throat, and under-parts, vinaceous, spotted with brown on the neck and chest; wing coverts, ash-coloured and vinaceous, marked with deep green or purplish spots; middle tail feathers deep ash colour, others black, the outer one edged round the exterior margin with white; bill and legs red; irides orange. Native of the warmer parts of America. It feeds on the ground like a Partridge, and springing like them, takes a short flight, and returns to the ground again; they are caught in clavanies, or traps made of reeds, and baited with the seeds of the wild cassada (Jatropha elastica.) It is known among the French by the name of Ortolan, and accounted a great delicacy. Bancroft says, this is the only Dove found in Guiana.

C. Minuta, Lin.; le Colombi Galline Pigmé, Tem.; Passerine Turtle, Lath. About five inches long; upper parts brown; under, rufous white, spotted with steel colour. Native of St. Domingo.

β Common Pigeons.

Beak slender and flexible, like the preceding; but the feet shorter.

C. Palumbus, Lin.; le Pigeon Ramier, Briss.; Ring Dove, Will.; Ring Pigeon, Pen. The largest of our Pigeons, its length being eighteen, and its breadth thirty inches; the head, back, and wing coverts, of a bluish ash colour; the throat and chest of a purplish red; on the hind part of the neck a semicircular white line; the belly of a dirty white; the greater quill feathers dusky, the others ash-coloured; the sides of the neck and wings white. This species builds in the boughs of trees; attempts have been made to domesticate them, by hatching the eggs under the Domestic Pigeon in Pigeon-houses, but they have failed, as the birds as soon as they can fly, take to their proper haunts.

COLUMBA.

C. Œnas, Lin.; le Colombin, Tem.; Stock Pigeon, or Stock Dove, Pen. According to Colonel Montague, this is the bird from which all our varieties of Domestic Pigeons spring; it is about fourteen inches long; the head, the upper part of the back, and wings, are dull ash colour; the fore part of the neck, the lower part of the back, the rump, and upper tail coverts, of the same colour, but paler; the back, and sides of the neck, green gold, glossed with copper in different lights; lower parts of the neck and breast vinaceous; belly, thighs, and under tail coverts, ash-coloured; the four or five outer quills black, with white external edges, the rest ash colour tipped with black, and reaching to the end of the tail, which is like the quills, with its extreme third black; legs red, and claws black. It inhabits many parts of England, living in hollow places in the rocks, among ruined houses, or holes of trees. Out of the varieties of this species, among which we find Tumblers, Jacobines, Croppers, Powters, Runts, Turbits, Owls, Nuns, Carriers, Dragoons, cum multis aliis; we shall give some account of two or three.

a C. Domestica, Willugh.; le Pigeon Commun, Buff.; Common Pigeon, Pen. The head of a bluish ash colour; irides yellow; the neck presenting a variety of changeable and resplendent colours, as the light falls upon it; throat reddish; chest and belly ash-coloured; the feathers about the vent white; the scapulars grey; and the others black, with a slight mixture of grey; feet and toes red; the legs feathered almost down to the toes in front.

In their wild state Pigeons breed twice a year; but when domesticated, three, four, six, or even ten times; they live in the holes of rocks, or the hollows of trees, hence the different names Rock and Wood Pigeon; and migrate towards the south in the winter.

It is matter of dispute whether this be the original breed, merely a variety of the preceding, or the same species, and Colonel Montague, who is good authority, inclines to the latter opinion; whilst Brisson considers the C. Œnas, Lin., to be the Paterfamilias of this species; but others again, amongst whom is Dr. Latham, make that a variety of the C. Domestica, which he makes a distinct species, and the parent of the numerous varieties of the Domestic Pigeon.

Pigeons are domesticated in great numbers in most parts of Europe, but Egypt and Persia seem the countries wherein they are most numerous; Savary, in his Letters on Egypt, says, that they are in such vast flights as almost to darken the air; which appears not improbable, as according to Pococke, they are esteemed the principal part of the estate of a husbandman, and a man, he says, who is so rich as to have a Pigeon-house, need not be careful about the disposal of his daughter. At Ispahan there are reckoned at least 3000 Pigeon-houses.

Pigeons are usually kept in cotes or houses, and frequently left in the country to seek their food in the fields; but those who are great Pigeon-fanciers confine them in rooms, and do not allow them to fly abroad. In most Pigeon-houses it is usual to have a Salt-cat, which is made by mixing salt in a lump of clay; and it is said that Pigeons will never leave it. They lay rarely more than two eggs at a time, and breed about five or six times a year.

During the time the Squab, as the young Pigeon is called, is supported by the parent birds, it is at first fed on a substance similar to curdled milk, so that the old joke of sending people on a fool's errand for Pigeon's milk on the first of April has its origin in fact; of this circumstance Mr. Hunter, in his Observations on certain parts of the Animal Economy, has given the following interesting account:

"During incubation, the coats of the crop, in the Pigeon, are gradually enlarged and thickened, like what happens to the udder of females of the class Mammalia, in the time of uterine gestation. On comparing the state of the crop when the bird is not sitting, with its appearance during incubation, the difference is very remarkable. In the first case it is thin and membranous; but by the time the young one is about to be hatched, the whole, except what lies on the trachea, becomes thicker, and takes on a glandular appearance, having its internal surface very irregular. It is likewise evidently more vascular than in its former state; that it may convey a quantity of blood, sufficient for the secretion of the substance, which is to nourish the young brood for some days after they are hatched.

"Whatever may be the consistence of this substance, when just secreted, it must probably very soon coagulate into a granulated white curd; for in such a form I have always found it in the crop; and if an old Pigeon is killed just as the young ones are hatching, the crop will be found as above described, and in its cavity, pieces of white curd mixed with some of the common food of the Pigeon, such as barley, beans, &c. If we allow either of the parents to feed the brood, the crop of the young Pigeons, when examined, will be discovered to contain the same kind of curdled substance as that of the old ones; which passes from thence into the stomach, where it is to be digested.

"The young Pigeon is fed for a little time with this substance only; as about the third day, some of the common food is found mingled with it; as the Pigeon grows older, the proportion of common food is increased; so that by the time it is seven, eight, or nine days old, the secretion of the curd ceases in the old ones, and of course no more will be found in the crop of the young. It is a curious fact, that the parent Pigeon has at first a power to throw up this curd without any mixture of common food, although afterwards both are thrown up according to the proportion required for the young ones.

"I have called this substance curd, not as being literally so, but as resembling that more than any thing I know; it may, however, have a greater resemblance to curd than we are perhaps aware of; for neither this secretion, nor curd, from which the whey has been pressed, seem to contain any sugar, and do not run into the acetous fermentation.

"The property of coagulating is confined to the substance itself, as it produces no such effect when mixed with milk.

"This secretion in the Pigeon, like all other animal substances, becomes putrid by standing; though not so readily as either blood or meat, it resisting putrefaction for a considerable time; neither will curd, much pressed, become putrid so soon as either blood or meat."

COLUMBA.

Wild Pigeons make their appearance later than any other birds of passage; not visiting our coasts till November, and they retire in the spring. Pennant imagines their summer haunts to be in Sweden; because M. Eckmark's observation of their migration from that country agrees with the time of their appearance here. But very many breed in this country in the woods and the clefts of rocks.

β C. Tabellaria, Lin.; le Pigeon Polonois, Buff.; Carrier Pigeon, Lath. Is well worthy particular notice. This Pigeon is of a dusky colour, and has a number of remarkable tubercles about the eyes and bill; the irides are scarlet, and the legs red. The Carrier Pigeon has long been employed for the purpose of speedily conveying letters from one place to another, as it is said to travel at the rate of twenty-six miles an hour. In an experiment made with one of these birds some years since, the flight from Salisbury to London was accomplished in three hours and seven minutes, a distance of eighty-three miles; so that the bird must have travelled at the rate of more than twenty-seven miles per hour. In 1819 a Carrier Pigeon flew from Norwich to London, 109 miles, in four hours and fifty-five minutes; the same bird had arrived in London a short time before from Bury, seventy-two miles, in three hours. This will give some notion of the speed at which these birds fly, and may perhaps induce us to listen with some attention to Lithgow's account of a Pigeon's flight from Babylon to Aleppo, a thirty day's journey, in forty-eight hours. The use of the Carrier Pigeon was well known to the ancients, and we find Anacreon describing it in his Ode Εἰς Περιστεράν, as his ready messenger to the boy Bathyllus.

Εγὼ δ' Ἀνακρέοντι
Διάκονω τοσαῦτα·
Και νῦν οἷαν ἐκείνω
Ἐπιστολὰν κομίζω.

It served a better purpose when Brutus, shut up in Modena, contrived to correspond with Hirtius, who was without, at the time his couriers were intercepted by Antony.

By the Orientalists they were formerly much used, and a quaint account of them is given by Sir John Maundeville, who travelled in the East during the reigns of Edward II. and III.

"In that contree," says he, "and other contrees bezonde, thei han a custom, whan thei schulle usen werre, and whan men holden sege abouten cytee or castelle, and thei withinnen dur not senden out messagers with lettere, fro lord to lord, for to aske sokour, thei maken here letters and bynden hem to the nekke of a Colver, and leten the Colver flee; and the Colveren ben so taughte, that thei fleen with tho letters to the verry place that men wolde send hem to. For the Colveres ben norryscht in tho places, where thei ben sent to; and thei senden hem thus, for to beren here letters. And the Colveres retournen azen, where as thei ben norryscht and so thei don comounly."

Formerly the Pigeon was employed by the English Factory at Scanderoon, to carry intelligence of the arrival of their ships in that port to Aleppo, a journey which it would perform in two hours and a half. Dr. Russel, in his Natural History of Aleppo, states, that "the name of the ship, the hour of her arrival, and whatever else could be comprised in a small compass, being written on a slip of paper, was secured in such a manner under the Pigeon's wing as not to impede its flight; and her feet were bathed in vinegar, with a view to keep them cool, and prevent her being tempted by the sight of water to alight, by which the journey might have been prolonged, or the billet lost." He further mentions that the Pigeon had a young brood at Aleppo, and being sent down to Scanderoon in an open cage, from which, as soon as she was set at liberty, she made her way with all speed to her nest. The natives stated that the Pigeons were brought down at once to Scanderoon without any education; but Dr. Russel believed that they were rather taught to fly short distances at first on the Scanderoon road. He also observed that the Pigeon, when let loose, instead of making her way to the high mountains in the neighbourhood, towered almost perpendicularly at once, as if to get its sight free from all obstacles. And Bochart, in his Hierozoicon gives a similar account.

"Cum mittitur e loco (Columba) valde dissito, ascendit in summum aerem. Et ascensus ejus fit in orbem. Neque ascendere et circumspicere desinit, donec regionis suæ signum aliquod animadvertat. Tum vero ad illud descendit brevi tempore."

Maillet, in his Description de l'Egypt, mentions the circumstance of a Pigeon despatched from Aleppo to Scanderoon, which mistook its way, and being absent three days "had in that time made an excursion to the island of Ceylon; a circumstance then deduced from finding green cloves in the bird's stomach."

Formerly when the execution of criminals took place at Tyburn, it was customary to let Carrier Pigeons loose to inform their friends of the moment at which the culprit was turned off; and Hogarth has made use of this incident in the last picture but one of his Industry and Idleness, in which Thomas Idle finishes his career.

The Dragoon Pigeon, or Dragon as it is usually called, a cross-breed between the Carrier and Horseman Pigeon, has the same inclination to return home; and has been known to come from Bury to London in two hours and a half.

C. Turtur, Lin.; la Tourterelle, Briss.; Turtle, Pen. Its length about twelve inches, and breadth twenty-one; the chin and forehead whitish; top of the head ash-coloured, mixed with olive; irides of a bright yellow, and the eyes surrounded with a crimson circle; back ash-coloured and bordered with olive brown; scapulars and coverts, reddish brown spotted with black; breast purplish red, with the tip of each feather yellow; belly white; sides and inner coverts of the wings bluish; the two middle tail-feathers dusky brown the others black, with white tips; the end and exterior side of the outermost feathers, white. It is very common in Buckinghamshire, Gloucestershire, Shropshire, and Kent. The Turkish Government is said to allow a certain rate of per centage in the duty on corn, on account of the Turtles, which constantly alight on the corn vessels crossing the Port of Constantinople, uncovered, to the granaries and mills.

C. Risoria, Lin.; la Tourterelle à collier, Buff.; Collared Turtle, Lath. Rather larger than the Common Turtle, of a reddish white or cream colour, with the beak black, and a collar of black feathers on the back of the neck. Native of India and the Cape of Good Hope.

C. Migratoria, Lin.; le Pigeon de Passage, Buff.; Passenger Pigeon, Lath. About the size of the Common Pigeon; throat and upper parts cinereous; under parts vinaceous, but the belly paler than the throat; tail cuneiform; the two middle feathers pale lead colour; the others merging to white, with a black mark on the inner web; legs red. Native of North America. They build in the trees, and are good eating. Are seen in large flocks during the time of their migration, when they are knocked down from their roosts, being either very tame or much tired. In Louisiana, parties of pleasure are made to take them in the woods, which is done by having dishes of lighted sulphur placed under the trees, the fumes of which stifling the bird, it falls to the ground, and is easily taken. This species is said to have only one young at a time, which was found to be the case in cutting down timber at Shelbyville, in the State of Kentucky; but the nests are in such numbers, that by cutting down a single tree 200 Squabs may be procured, which are very fat, and the fat being melted down serves for butter and lard.

COLUMBA. — COLUMBIA.

C. Canadensis, Lin.; C. Dominicensis, Lin.; and C. Capensis, Lath.; belong to this subdivision, and have the tails wedge-shaped.

COLUMBA. — COLUMBIA.

γ Colombars.

Beak thicker, more solid, and compressed laterally; tarsi short, feet broad, and well edged.

C. Abyssinica, le Colombar, Le Vaill.; Waalia Pigeon, Lath. About eleven inches long; general colour of the plumage green; the belly of a bright yellow; bill bluish white; irides dark orange; toes red. It inhabits the low parts of Abyssinia in large flocks, being found, according to Mr. Salt, among the Daro trees near a stream.

C. Australis, Lath.; C. Aromatica, Lath.; and C. Vernans, Lath.; all belong to this subdivision.

These are the principal species, and for the rest,

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ; Willughbeii Ornithologia; Le Vaillant, Histoire des Oiseaux d'Afrique; Brisson Ornithologie; Buffon, Histoire Naturelle des Oiseaux; Latham's General History of Birds; Pennant's British Zoology.

COLUMBARIE, Lat. columbaria, sc. domus. See above, COLUMBA.

For that it containeth very much salt; as beside the effects before expressed, is discernable by taste; and the earth of columbaries or dove-houses, so much desired in the artifice of salt-petre. Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. iii.

COLUMBELLA, in Zoology, a genus of the class Gasteropoda, order Pectinibranchia of Cuvier, family Columellaria. Generic character: shell oval, spire short; aperture emarginate at the base; no canal; columella plicated; aperture contracted by a thickening on the inner side of the right lip; animal having two tentacula, bearing the eyes nearer to the base than the apex; a syphon above the head for respiration; operculum very small, elliptical, and thin.

Type, Voluta Mercatoria, Lin.

The shells of this genus are small, short, thick, and strong, of various colours, and usually striated transversely. The species, which are numerous, are inhabitants of the sea-shore. Sowerby, Genera of Shells; Lamarck, Anim. sans Vert. vii. p. 294.

COLUMBIA, a District, precisely ten miles square, situated on both sides of the Potomac River, in Chesapeake Bay, in the United States of North America. It was ceded to the Federal Government of the United States in 1790, by the States of Maryland and Virginia, and in 1800 it became the seat of the general Government. It is under the immediate jurisdiction of the American Congress.

Under the old Confederation by which the several States were nominally bound together, the Congress, (or Assembly of Representatives and Senators deputed from each State,) was obliged to the several independent Sovereignties for a local habitation, and might have been to many purposes dissolved by the mere refusal to permit the occupation of certain public buildings. It seemed becoming to the dignity, and necessary to the strength and permanence of the Federal Government, that its legislature should exercise its powers at some spot where it should neither be liable to interruption from a State Government, nor from a faction, nor likely to favour local views at the expense of the public good. Under these considerations the District of Columbia was formed, and the City of Washington, the Metropolis of the United States of North America, was planned under the direction of General Washington, then President.

Washington. WASHINGTON City, (as it is usually called by the Americans,) is located upon the north or left bank of the Potomac, three miles below the head of tide water, at its junction with the eastern branch; it extends nearly four miles along the shore, according to the original plan, which is, however, but faintly filled up, bounded on the east by the eastern branch, on the west by a mountain stream, called Rock Creek. It is nearly equally divided by an insignificant rivulet of water, which has received the magnificent appellation of the Tiber, and washes the base of the hill on which the Capitol is situated. Washington City is regularly laid out in streets, running due north and south, numbered 1, 2, 3, &c., intersected by others at right angles, named after the letters of the alphabet; besides these streets, which are from eighty to 110 feet wide, there are avenues, named from the different States of the Union, from 130 to 160 feet broad, which diverge from centres, at which are spacious squares, and cross the other streets obliquely. The ground embraced in the plan of the City is very extensive, but only a small portion of it is yet occupied with buildings, the number of houses in 1823 not exceeding 3000, of which about one-half are brick.

The principal public buildings are, 1st, the Capitol, which is finely situated on an eminence, commanding a view of every part of the City, and a considerable portion of the adjacent country. It contains the Halls for the sittings of the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and all the Offices connected with them, and a fine Public Library. 2. The President's house. 3. The public Offices of the Executive department. 4. The Marine Barracks. 5. The Navy Yard. 6. The Fort at Greenleaf Point. 7. The General Post Office.

COLUMBIA. COLUMBO.

Beside the above, Washington contains a City-hall, a Theatre, a Circus, a Penitentiary, a female Orphan Asylum, an extensive Cannon foundery, a Lancasterian school, and twelve places of worship; viz. three Presbyterian, two Episcopalian, (Church of England,) two Baptist, two Methodist, two Catholic, and one for the Friends. Adjoining the City is Columbia College. Among other literary institutions, are a Medical Society, a Botanical Society, and the Columbian Institute. There is a wooden bridge over the Potomac, a mile in length, built on piles in 1819; three over the eastern branch, and two over Rock Creek; also a Canal partly executed, connecting Tiber Creek and the eastern branch.

The public buildings of Washington were burnt during the late American War, when the city was taken on the 23d of August, 1814; but they have been since rebuilt. The population of the City of Washington is about 14,000, including 2000 slaves and 1700 free persons of colour. The centre of the Capitol is in latitude 38° 52′ 45″ north and longitude 76° 55′ 30″·54 west of Greenwich, or 79° 15′ 41″·69 west of Paris. Besides the Metropolis, the District of Columbia contains the towns of Georgetown, immediately adjacent to Washington on the west, and Alexandria, celebrated for its good harbour and trade in flour, seven miles south of the City.

The exports from the District of Columbia amounted in 1820 to 1,204,915 dollars; flour being the principal article of domestic produce.

The shipping in 1821 was 25,000 tons. The value of the manufactures in 1820, was 500,000 dollars, principally leather, paper, cabinet ware, carriages, and iron work, employing 400 persons.

The whole population of the District is 34,000, of which number 6500 are slaves, and 4000 free persons of colour.

Columbia, in Botany, a genus of the class Polyandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx five-leaved, coloured internally, deciduous; corolla, petals five, scaly at the base; fruit four-winged, four-parted, cells containing one or two seeds.

One species, native of the Philippine Islands. Persoon, Syn.

COLUMBINE, Fr. columbin, so called, says Skinner, because the flowers appear to represent the form or figure (columbarum) of doves.

> Come forth now with thin eyen columbine.
> Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10015.

COLUMBITE, a Mineral first brought from North America, and in which Mr. Hatchett discovered a new metal, which he termed Columbium; the same Mineral has been since found in Finland and in Bavaria, and has been named Tantalite by Berzelius.

COLUMBO, or Colombo, (Kólambó, in Sing'halese) is the Capital of the European Establishments in Ceylon, (Silán or Sing'hala,) is placed nearly in the middle of the western coast, in 6° 57′ north and 80° east. A very fertile district of about sixty miles in length and thirty in breadth, lies between the city and the border of the central mountains, which was formerly the limit of the Sing'halese Empire. A peninsula stretching out into the sea, and united with the main land by an isthmus not 600 yards broad, is nearly covered by the fort, which from its exposure to the sea breezes always enjoys a temperate and healthy atmosphere. This fortress was erected by the Portuguese on the ruins of a smaller one built by the natives. Its position is very strong by nature, and its works have been improved by the labours of many European engineers. A high surf and rocky beach render any approach impossible on the south, and numerous batteries well placed, completely protect the west side of the bay, where there is usually smooth water. The centre of the narrow isthmus connecting this peninsula with the rest of the island, is occupied by a lake extending three or four miles into the neighbouring country, so that there is only a narrow causeway left on each side of it, and the site of the fort might be easily insulated. A small island in the centre of the lake, abounding in cocoa-nut trees, and called Slave Island, because it was used by the Dutch as a hospital for sick slaves, serves as a sort of stepping-stone from the fort to the cinnamon gardens in the adjoining district, as it lies directly between them. COLUMBO.

The town within the fort is regularly built, having all its streets at right angles, and two which are spacious extend from side to side quite across the town, and therefore divide the whole into four nearly equal quarters. A broadway at the foot of the ramparts, communicating with the bastions and barracks, leaves open areas for parades on a small scale. The Grand Parade, which is too small for the garrison, is surrounded by public buildings, such as the Stadt-huys or Town-hall, War-office, Go-downs, (gódongs,) or store-houses belonging to the State. On one side is a church begun by the Dutch, but never finished. The Town-hall is the place in which the Courts of Justice are held; and the British officers, when the Town was taken from the Dutch in 1796, found, in one of its apartments, instruments of torture, the use of which has never been abolished by the Dutch Government. The Governor's house, facing the harbour, is a long range of buildings more remarkable for convenience than beauty, and possessing an excellent garden in an open area behind it, which was designed to be converted into a tank in case of a siege. The water in the wells within the walls is uniformly brackish, and a spring about a mile off is the nearest fresh water that can be procured, of this almost all the inhabitants have a supply brought in daily, in leathern bags carried by bullocks. The town has more of an European appearance than almost any other place in the East Indies; and the double rows of trees which line the principal streets, are an ornament and convenience for which the inhabitants are probably indebted to the Dutch. The chúnam, or shell-lime, with which the houses are white-washed, is peculiarly white, and contributes materially to keep them cool, though it is disagreeable and injurious to the eyes. There are large and convenient mansions appropriated to the military commanders, and there is also a spacious hospital. The harbour is an open road, exposed to the north-west monsoon, and therefore insecure from May to November, when that wind has set in. At that season the weather is extremely variable, and the transitions from heat to cold are very sudden; torrents of rain frequently pouring down at night, while the heat by day is intolerable. Fevers, fluxes, dysenteries, and other diseases are the consequence of these alterations of heat and moisture; and the béri-béri, an inflammatory complaint accompanied by an extraordinary swelling of the limbs, and generally fatal in twenty-four hours, is peculiar to this country at that season. The

COLUMBO. COLUMN.

Petta or Black Town is remarkable for its extent, regularity and neatness; one part of it extends from the esplanade to the Kenman's-port, a gate in an old mud rampart; and the other, outside of that wall, stretches along the lake, in the isthmus already mentioned. Most of the principal European settlers have their habitations in the former of these divisions; and the latter contains the Orphan school, an excellent institution, where the children of indigent Europeans, especially soldiers and sailors, are educated and put out to some useful trade or service. It is very difficult to estimate the number of the inhabitants; for besides the fixed residents, there is a large floating population, collected from almost every country in Europe and Asia; and there are few places where the stranger is amused by such a continual variety of dress, features, habits, and languages. Moghuls and Hindùs from all the widely scattered provinces of India; Malays and Búgíses from the Indian Isles; Pársés and Shíâhs, the worshippers of Fire and partisans of Alí, from Persia; and various tribes of savages from Mozambique and Madagascar crowd the streets of Columbo; and to these must be added the half-castes, a truly spurious brood, the progeny of Europeans of almost every nation, but chiefly of the Portuguese; a most corrupt and wretched dialect of whose language is still the lingua Franca of this country. This motley assemblage is estimated by Mr. Cordiner at 50,000 souls.

Columbo, though its port be not accessible for a large portion of the year, is still a place of very great commerce. Its convenient position with respect to the coast of India, and the fertility of the neighbouring districts, render it a sort of emporium for the produce of Ceylon, and the merchandise imported from other parts of the world. The largest and most valuable plantations of cinnamon are the gardens, as the Dutch term them, in this District. They commence within half a mile of the fort, and the principal garden stretches over an extent of country from ten to fifteen miles in length, where "nature," as has been said by one of the travellers in Ceylon, "seems to have concentrated all the riches and beauty of the Island." The flat lands between the sea and hills are covered with the low cinnamon laurel, over which at an inconsiderable distance rise groves of ever-greens interspersed with clumps of palms, and occasionally with forests of lofty trees. Small lakes, rice-grounds, and pastures, are scattered over the whole space, through which an excellent road makes a circuit of seven miles from the west to the southern gate of the fort, and affords a delightful drive for the wealthier inhabitants.

The authorities for Columbo may be found at the close of the article on CEYLON, vol. xix. 455.

COLUMELLIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Diandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx five-parted; corolla wheel-shaped; capsule double; valves double.

Two species, natives of Peru. Persoon, Syn.

CO'LUMN, n. Co'LUMNAR, Co'LUMNARY, Co'LUMNED. Fr. colomne; It. colonna; Sp. columna; Lat. columnæ, so called, because they support (culmina) the top or roof. Festus. And culmina, so called because the ancients covered their buildings with straw or thatch, (culmo.) See the Example from Wotton.

It is also applied to any thing which stands as columns do;—firmly, regularly, side by side, as the columns of a page, a column of troops.

Pillars which we may likewise call columnes, for the word among artificers is almost naturalized, I could distinguish into simple and compounded. Wotton. Elements of Architecture.

COLUMN. COLYBUS

Then having learned the Hebrew tongue, and procured a copy of the Hebrew code, he added two more columns; in one, the Hebrew text and letters, in the other, the same text, in Greeke letters: and this he called hexapla.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iv. ch. i.

Which is in some way not beyond the contrivance of art, in submersions and inlays, inverting the extremes of the plant, and fetching the root from the top, and also imitated in handsome columnary work in the inversion of the extremes.

Sir Thomas Brown. Cyrus Garden, ch. iii. fol. 58.

O'er this a vocal organ mounted high
On marble columns, strikes the wond'ring eye,
And feeds at once two senses with delight,
Sweet to the ear, and splendid to the sight.
Hughes. The Triumph of Peace.

Here columns heap'd on prostrate columns, torn
From their firm base, increase the mould'ring mass,
Far as the sight can pierce, appear the spoils
Of sunk magnificence!
Warton. Pleasures of Melancholy.

His floating robe around him folding,
Slow sweeps he through the column'd aisle;
With dread beheld, with gloom beholding
The rites that sanctify the pile.
Lord Byron. Giaour.

COLUMN, in Military Language, is a body of troops formed in deep files and narrow front. A close Column is a compact solid Column without intervals between the divisions; an open Column is a Column with intervals between the divisions equal to their respective fronts.

COLUMNEA, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia, natural order Scrophulariæ. Generic character: calyx five-parted, spreading; corolla gaping, superior; lip three-parted, intermediate laciniæ arched, gibbous above the base; capsule one-celled; seeds clustering.

Five species, natives of the West Indies and one of Cochin-China. Persoon, Syn.

COLURES, n. Lat. coluri; Gr. κόλυροι, curtailed. Circles drawn through the poles, cutting the equinoctial into equal parts, the zodiack into unequal; called κόλυροι, (Vossius) as if κόλοι τὴν ὑρὰν, caudâ mutili. Because part of them is invisible to us, and of such part they seem to be (mutili) deprived or destitute.

——— Thence full of anguish driven
The space of seven continu'd nights he rode
With darkness, thrice the equinoctial line
He circl'd, four times cross'd the carr of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ix.

Correct old time alludes to that great man's Grecian Chronology, which he reformed on those two sublime conceptions, the difference between the reigns of kings, and the generations of men, and the positions of the colures of the equinox and solstices, at the time of the Argonautic expedition.

Warburton. A Commentary on Mr. Pope's Essay on Man, ii. 69.

COLUTEA, in Botany, a genus of the class Diadelphia, order Decandria, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx five-cleft; legume inflated, bursting from the base, (a heart-shaped spot in the centre of the standard)

Thirteen species, shrubs, mostly natives of Europe, the C. arborescens, Bladder Senna, is a common shrub generally cultivated

COLYBUS, an offering of corn and boiled pulse made by the Greek Church in honour of Saints and for the souls of the dead.

COLYDIUM, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Coleoptera, family Xylophagi. Generic character: antennæ scarcely longer than the head, eleven-jointed; palpi very short, the maxillary palpi scarcely projecting.

Type, C. elongatum, Fab.

COLYMBUS, from the Greek κολυμβάω, I swim, Lin.; Grebe, Pen. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Brachypteres, order Palmipedes, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak smooth, straight, compressed, and pointed, the nostrils linear; tail none; legs flat, thin, and serrated behind; feet tetradactyle, the outer toe the longest, the toes lobated.

This genus according to Willoughby and Linnæus, included both the Grebes and Divers, and in the arrangement of the latter, two other genera; but they have been very properly separated by Brisson from the form of the feet which differs much. In the Grebe genus the feet are not webbed, but the toes are increased considerably in their breadth by the expansion of a lateral membrane, which is found on both sides of the inner toe broad, whilst on the outer edge of the other toes the membrane is very narrow; the claws or nails are very short, that of the middle toe three times broader than the others, that of the hind toe the smallest.

These birds inhabit marshy districts, building their nests among the rushes, but loose upon the water, with which they rise and fall. Their flesh is very rank, but in consequence of the beautiful metallic lustre of their plumage, the skins are manufactured into muffs and tippets.

C. Cristatus, Lin.; le Grèbe Huppé, Briss.; Greater Crested and Horned Doucker, Willugh.; Great Crested Grebe, Pen. About the size of a Goose; the bill rather more than two inches long, red at the base, and black at the point; between it and the eyes a stripe of black naked skin, on the head a large dusky crest divided in the middle; hind part of the neck and back sooty; the breast and belly of a silvery white, looking like satin; rump covered with soft down instead of a tail; wing feathers dusky, excepting the coverts of the second and third joints, and the under coverts, which are white; outside of legs and soles of feet dusky, inside and toes pale green. These birds are very common in the fens of Shropshire and Cheshire, and the East Fen in Lincolnshire, where they are called Gaunts. They make their nests amongst the flags, and as it is quite loose among them it is sometimes blown into the middle of the water, and to it may be applied Statius's account of the Halcyon's nest.

> Fluctivagam sic sæpe domum, madidosque penates
> Halcyone deserta gemit; cum pignora sævus
> Auster, et algentes rapuit Thetis invida nidos.
> Thebaid. lib. ix. 360.

It is a very careful nurse, feeding its young with small Eels, and when tired carrying them on its back or under its wings. The Tippet Grebe, Pen., is considered to be the young of this species.

C. Cornutus, Gmel.; la Grèbe Cornu, Buff.; Eared or Horned Dobchick, Edwards; Horned Grebe, Pen. Similar to the preceding in form; head full of feathers of a mallard green colour; a tuft of yellow feathers passing back from each eye, and nearly meeting behind, beneath which is a collar of black feathers; neck and breast of an orange red before, and dusky behind, as is also the back; belly silvery; legs ash-coloured before, flesh-coloured behind. Native of Hudson's Bay, and migrates towards the south in the autumn; it is known by the natives as the Sekeep, and at New York is called the Water Witch, from its quickness in diving.

C. Rubricollis, Gmel.; le Grèbe à joues grises, Buff.; Red-necked Grebe, Pen. Cheeks, throat, secondaries, and abdomen white; under-part of neck red; collar grey, and tufts small and black. Native of Norway.

C. Minor, Gmel.; le Petit Grèbe ou Castagneux, Briss.; Dobchick, or Small Doucker, Willugh.; Little Grebe, Pen. Length ten inches; head well-feathered; cheeks long; top of the head, upper part of body, neck, and breast of a ferruginous brown; belly ash-coloured, mixed with silvery white and red; legs dirty green; the young have the throat black.

The C. Obscurus and C. Caspicus are nearly the same as the C. Cornutus. The C. Subcristatus and C. Parotis similar to the C. Rubricollis.

C. Auritus, Lin.; le Grèbe à Oreilles, Briss.; Eared Grebe, Pen. Has a tuft of long loose ferruginous feathers behind each eye, hanging backwards.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ; Brisson, Ornithologie; Cuvier, Règne Animal; Pennant's British and Arctic Zoology.

COMA. Κῶμα, from κοίμημα, sleep; or from the old verb κῶ, the radix of κεῖμαι, I lie; or from κωμάτω, I revel, since revellers in the end fall asleep. A degree of apoplexy which produces an inclination to sleep. In the Coma vigil, the patient though drowsy is unable to sleep; in the Coma somnolentus, he sleeps frequently; and in the Coma lethargus, almost without interruption.

COMART, n. is the reading of the quarto, 1604. The folio (as quoted below) cou'nant, which has been rejected by the Editors, because it "makes a tautology;" though comart is confessedly a word not found elsewhere. It is probably merely a misprint of the folio.

> ——— Which had return'd
> To the inheritance of Fortenbras,
> Had he bin vanquisher, as by the same cou'nant
> And carriage of the article design'd,
> His fell to Hamlet. Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 153.

COMARUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Icosandria, order Polygynia, natural order Rosaceæ. Generic character: calyx ten-cleft; corolla of five petals, less than the calyx: receptacle of the seeds ovate, spongy, permanent.

The only species known is C. Palustre, native of England; it is a handsome plant, growing in bogs in the northern counties. Eng. Bot. 172.

COMASPERMA, in Botany, a genus of the class Diadelphia, order Octandria. Generic character: calyx five-parted, two of the segments large; corolla irregular, upper lip cleft, inferior lip concave; stigma two-cleft; capsule somewhat spoon-shaped, two-celled; seeds solitary, hairy; flowers in a racemed spike.

Four species, natives of the South Sea Islands.

COMATE, n. Co, and mate; which Skinner derives from the A. S. metan, to meet; invenire, occurrere; because like is easily associated with like.

> Duc. Sen. Now my coe-mates, and brothers in exile,
> Hath not old custome made this life more sweete,
> Then that of painted pompe.
> Shakspeare. As You Like it, fol. 187.

COMATE. — COMB.

COMATE, hairy; Lat. coma, the hair; perhaps from the Gr. κοσμεῖν, to ornament, to adorn. The Example has been already quoted under Caudate, q. v.

COMATULA, in Zoology, a genus of the class Echinodermata, order Pediculata of Cuvier; being one of the modern divisions of the Linnæan genus Asterias. Generic character: body orbicular, depressed, radiated; the rays of two kinds, dorsal and marginal, all having calcareous joints; the dorsal rays very simple, filiform, very small, forming a sort of crown on the back of the disk; marginal rays pinnate, much larger than the dorsal, generally divided to the base; inferior division elongate, bent downwards, surrounding the ventral disk; mouth inferior, central, membranaceous, tubular, slightly prominent.

The animals composing this genus, differ in many points from all others of the group to which they belong. One of the most striking distinctions is the membranous bladder-like mouth, which sufficiently separates them from Euryale and Ophiura, whilst it appears to give them a certain relation to some of the Medusiform animals.

CO′MB, v.
Co′MB, n.
Co′MB-MAKER,
Co′MBER,
Co′MBING, n.
Co′MBLESS.

A. S. camb, pecten; Dutch, kammen, kemmen; Ger. kammen, pectinare; Dutch and Dan. kam; Ger. kamm, pecten. Junius thinks that camb (crista avium) is so called, a καμπὴ, flexus, curvatura; and that comb, for the hair, is so used from its likeness, dentatæ serratæque cristæ gallinaceæ.—Wachter;—that the ancient Ger. kam, manus, (whence han, and then hand,) was the primitive word, and has remained to us,—applied to things, which have incisions (incisuras) similar to the hand, pectini, cristæ, &c.

To comb is to draw a comb through the hair or wool, so as to separate, and disentangle it.

> Up riseth Damian the nexte morwe,
> Al passed was his sicknesse and his sorwe.
> He kembeth him, he proineth hem & picketh,
> He doth all that his lady lust and liketh.
> Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9885.

> She had bathe, she had reste,
> And was arraied to the beste.
> But with no craft of combes brode
> Thei might hir hore lockes shode.
> Gower. Conf. Am., book i. fol. 18.

Yet he kembyng his olde white heares, one of the teeth of the combe entered into his hed, wherby grew an impostume, by occasion wherof, he ended his honorable life for so small a case.
Golden Book, B b. 5.

They would bryng our men earthen pottes of the quantitie of two gallons, full of hony and hony combes for 100 shelles.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Antonie Ingram, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 129.

So after that repentaunce hath cast down our combe, and hath well shaken our disease, whā baptisme hath scoured or pourged vs and made vs emptie and voyde from al synnes, there bee suche thinges ministred, and geuen to vs as maye holsomlye repleniah the soule agayne beeyng now well clensede and made voyde.
Udall. Luke. Pref. fol. 236.

For Livia tooke closely an egge from under an hen that was sitting, and kept it warme sometime in her owne, otherwhiles in her woman's hands by turns one after another, so long, untill there was hatched a cock-chicken with a notable combe upon the head.
Holland. Suetonius. Tiberius, fol. 95.

> But now in her owne fountaine bathes her faire
> And shapefull; now kembs her golden haire.
> Sandys. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book iv.

> But oft would bathe her in the crystal tide,
> Oft with a comb her dewy locks divide.
> Eusden. Ib.

COMB. — COMBAT.

And Clemens Alexandrinus is as severe against old men that with black-lead combes put a lie upon their heads; and so disgrace their old age, which ought to be relied upon, believ'd and reverenc'd for truth.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. ii.

> And fair Ligea's golden comb,
> Wherewith she sits on diamond rocks
> Sleeking her soft allaring locks.
> Milton. Comus, l. 880.

Combers of wooll, made use hereof [spermaceti] and country people for cuts, aches and hard tumours.
Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xxiv.

The baldness, thinness, and (as both men and women think) the deformity of the hair is usually supplied by borders and combings; also by whole perukes, like artificial sculls, fitted to their head.
Bishop Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, fol. 44.

KATE. What is your crest, a coxcombe?
PET. A combleese cocke, so Kate will be my hen.
Shakspeare. Taming a Shrew, fol. 216.

> From their o'erflowing combs you'll often press
> Pure luscious sweets, that, mingling in the glass,
> Correct the harshness of the racy juice,
> And a rich flavour thro' the wine diffuse.
> Addison. Virgil. Georgic 4.

It serves divers comb-makers to die hornes (as we have tried by the mixture of litharge, quick lime, and sharp vinegar.)
Boyle. That the Goods of Mankind may be much increased, &c.

Demaratus informed him, that it was a custom among the Spartans to comb down and adjust their hair, when they were determined to fight till the last extremity.
Glover. Leonidas. Preface.

> Behold the fleece beneath the spiky comb
> Drop its long locks, or from the mingling card,
> Spread in soft flakes and swell the whiten'd floor.
> Dyer. The Fleece, book iii.

> If any wool peculiar to our Isle
> Is given by nature 'tis the combers lock,
> The soft, the snow-white, and the long-grown flake.
> Id. Ib. book ii.

COMB, A. S. comb; a valley enclosed on all sides with hills. Somner.

> And then to Ina call'd: O if the roomes,
> The walks and arbours in their fruitful coombes,
> Have famous been through all the westerne plaines,
> In being guiltlesse of the lasting staines
> Pour'd on by lust and murther: keepe them free?
> Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii.

> No small delight the shepheards toke to see
> A coombe so dight in Flora's livery,
> Where faire Peronia honour'd in the woods,
> And all the deities that haunt the floods,
> With powerful nature strove to frame a plot,
> Whose like the sweet Arcadia yielded not.
> Id. Ib. book ii. s. ii.

CO′MBAT, v.
Co′MBAT, n.
Co′MBATANT, n.
Co′MBATANT, adj.
Co′MBATER,
Co′MBATERIE,
Co′MBATACY.

Fr. combat, combattre; It. combattere; from con, and batuere, says Skinner, to fight, to strike; and batuere, from A. S. batte, fustis. Spelman. Of this, the A. S. beat-an, to beat, supplies the root. See BATTLE.

To fight, to battle; to be or cause to be in fight or battle, to engage in battle, to strive, to struggle with or against, to contend, or contest, to conflict.

> But scorning all these kinds
> I would become a cat
> To combat with the creeping mouse > and scratch the screeking rat.
> Turbervile. The Lover, whose mistresse feared a mouse.

There came an holy man, termed Hascoir-Hamshe, a kinseman to one of the sophies, who mounted the sayd hill, and combating with the sayd giant, did binde not onely him in chaines but also his woman called Lamis-ache, with his son named After.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Anth. Jenkinson, vol. i. fol. 347.

Then darts we gan to sling
In wide and weightless skies,
And then the fiercest fight of all
And combat did arise.

Turberville. The Louer to Cupid for mercie.

In the which combatterie were taken two nobles of France.

Strype. Memoirs. Richd Pace the King's Ambassador to the Emperor.

And is there any such sweeping triumphant conqueror in the world as the regenerate Christian? νικᾷ κόσμον, he overcometh the world: overcomes himself, that lion and that bear that David combated with, his furious rageful passions, Achelous in all his shapes.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. serm. 2.

——— What had I
To oppose against such powerful arguments?
Only my love of thee held long debate;
And combated in silence all these reasons
With hard contest.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 846.

(O sacred Muse) my hanty thoughts inspire
And make a trumpet of my slender quill
To thunder out this furious combat shrill.

Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book vi. st. 39.

And valient Essex this bold challenge sent,
As combatant in his great soueraigne's name,
To know, who durst of noble borne descent,
Stand forth amongst the rest to fight for fame.

Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 846.

It may be too, i' the ordinance of nature,
Their valours are not yet so combatant,
Or truly antagonistick, as to fight.

Ben Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, act iii. sc. 5.

And the Sicambri (which are now the people of Geldria) seem rightly in their owne German language to have been Sigheampers, that is, combatters or fighters for victory, for that sigh, in the ancient Teutonicke, is victory, and a camper, a combater.

Verstegan. Restitution of decayed Intelligence, fol. 14.

This sayd, the kings did marke and make
A profit of the same,
And did conclude by combacy
To winne or loose the game.

Warner. Albion's England, book iv. ch. xxii.

Or if combattenzie not please,
The land is rich and large,
And they copernicers may live,
And vs of death discharge. Id. Ib.

God himself (as I may so speak) undertook the quarrell and fought his battels, and that brought him [Paul] off not only safe, but triumphant, which surely was as much more honourable than to have the combat ended by parting the combatants, as it is for a generous and brave enemy to have his quarrel decided by the verdict of a victorious sword, then took up and compromised by the mean expedients of reference and arbitration.

South. Sermon, 8. vol. vi.

Plato, combating the atheistical objections about the origin of evil, employs this argument in defence of Providence; "That, amongst an infinite number of possible worlds in God's idea, this which he hath created, and brought into being, and admits of a mixture of evil is the best."

Warburton. Commentary on Mr. Pope's Essay on Man.

"The tide of nature returning strongly on both, the father in his turn embraced his son, and bathed him with his tears; whilst the combatants on either side, astonished at so unusual a spectacle, suspended the fight, applauded this striking act of filial piety and paternal tenderness, and pressed that it might become the prelude of a lasting peace.

Burke. An Abridgement of English History, Anno 1083.

CO'MBER, or Cu'MBER, v. Co'MBER, n. Co'MBERMENT, Co'MBROUS, Co'MBRANCE. } Sw. kymmer; Dutch, kommeren, komberen; Ger. kummern; Fr. encombrer; and Ital. ingombrare, q. d. (Skinner thinks) incumulare, that is cumulo rerum impedire. See to ENCUMBER.

To overload, to oppress with a load or burthen; with toil or trouble; with vexation; to embarrass, to harass.

By his craft thei comen in, to combren the chirche.

Piers Ploukman. Creed, D. 1.

——— And ze þat hop' wolde,
Is cause of all combraunce.

Id. Vision, fol. 85.

Why ne haddest thou my father king of Troy
Biraft the life, or done my brethren die
Or slain myself, that thus complaine and crie
I combre world, that may of nothing serue
But euer die, and neuer fully sterue.

Chaucer. Troilus, book iv. fol. 177.

But and if these humane lawes loke to destroye the Crysten lybertie, to combre mēs consciences and to oppresse the glory of Cryste.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. vi.

For if thou were not brought sometime into combraunce whence God onely could deliuer thee, thou shouldst neuer see thy fayth.

Tyndall. Workes, fol. 117.

But this, after he was admytted, was so proude & so cōbrous, y^t he rulyd all by wyll & nothyng by ryght or goodlye ordre of reason or conscience.

Fabyan. Caroli VI. Anno 14.

Wherefore they were afrayed lest his innocēt blode wold be auenged and required at their handis, & therfore to be defended, they (as now do all siche lyke combrouse conscienced clerkis and bisshopes) be setting vp of these their baners and images of the emprours and kinges contend and siewe to gette their fauour, but all was in vayne.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. ix.

Which Arthegal perceuing, strooke no more,
But losing soone his shield, did it foregoe,
And whiles he combred was therewith so sore,
He gan at him let driue more fiercely then afore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 12. st. 22.

I pray then let me only by this bearer know it, that I may provide you some fit lodgings at a good distance from Whitehall, for the preservation of blessed liberty, and avoidance of the cumber of kindness; which in troth (as we have privately discoursed) is no small one.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 429.

For if my lord of Suffolk should remove from the king's privacy to a place of much distraction and cumber, without leaving a friend in his room, he might peradventure take cold at his back.

Id. fol. 437.

And as they stand in desp'rate comberment,
Environ'd round with horrour, blood and shame;
Cross'd of their course, dispairing of th' event,
A pardon (that smooth bait for baseness) came.

Daniel. History of Civil War, book vi.

And straight his combrous armes aside did lay
Vpon the ground, withouten doubt or dread,
And in his homely-wise began to assay
T'amende what was amisse, and put in right array.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 5. st. 10.

Looke as a well-growne stately headed bucke,
But lately by the woodman's arrow strucke,
Runs gadding o'er the lawnes, or nimbly strayes
Among the combrous brakes a thousand wayes.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book v. song 4.

The working about the frames called Vines, and the raising of mounts (considering other urgent occasions) was most laborious, painfull and combersome.

Holland. Ammianus, fol. 245.

There is no facilitie or wealth in this mortall world so perfite, which is not darkened with some clowde of combrance and aduersitie.

Grafton. Henry II. The thirty-third Yere.

COMBINE. — COMBRETUM.

CO'MBINE, v. } Combinare, barbarum pro jungere, connectere. Vossius, de Vitiis, iv. 4. "Bina jumenta jungere." See Martin. "Combinage," Cotgrave says, "is a coupling, uniting, or joining of pairs." To combine, then, was to join, unite, connect, or fasten two together, as we now use the word to couple.
Co'MBINABLE, Co'MBINATE, adj. Co'MBINATION.

It is now applied, generally,—
To join, to connect, to counite, to coalesce.

Adew myne owne dere spouse my worthy lorde
The faithful loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
In mariage and peasable concorde,
Into your handes here I cleane resyne,
To be bestowed vpon your children and myne.
Sir Thomas More. A ruful Lamentatiō.

—— Old duke Cedicus (men say) whan he furst did combyne
In absence freendly league with Rēmulus of Tyburt coast:
He sent that present then, for he of wealth had ryches moast.
Phaer. Æneidos, book ix.

It is an undeniable proof that they neither combin'd together, as wary knaves would have done, nor transcribed one from another; but are four distinct witnesses of what they have writ.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book v. ch. ii.

We must our patience exercise, and worke, ourselves with them,
Jove in our births combin'd such care, to eithers diadem.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book x. fol. 132.

Let us not then suspect our happy state
Left so imperfect by the Maker wise
As not secure to single or combin'd:
Frail is our happiness, if this be so.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ix. l. 339.

There she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his loue toward her, euer most kind and naturall: with him the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage dowry: with both her combynate-husband, this well-seeming Angelo.
Shakspeare. Measure for Measure, fol. 72.

The impediments were, First the negligence of the pastors; secondly combinations, that is, double benefices, when men having two cures could not sufficiently attend both.
Hale. Letter from Synod at Dort, fol. 3.

These two fair isles distinct in their creation,
Yet one extracted from the other's side,
Are oft made one by love's firm combination.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 3.

Ordain we then two sorrows to combine,
And in one point th' extremes of grief to join;
That thence resulting joy may be renew'd,
As jarring notes in harmony conclude.
Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

Since to your uncompounded atoms you
Figures in number infinite allow,
From which by various combination, springs
This unconfined diversity of things;
Are not, in this, design and counsel clear?
Blackmore. The Creation, book iv.

Pleasures are very combinable both with business and study.
Chesterfield.

Few painters have obliged us with finer scenes, or have possessed the art of combining woods, lakes, and rocks, into more agreeable pictures, than G. Poussin.
Hurd. Works, vol. i. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

Can I doubt, that he who had the courage to withstand a combination of the most powerful men in Rome, who had conspired my ruin, will not be able to beat down the envious and malignant efforts of a little contemptible party, that may endeavour to oppose my honours.
Melmoth. Cicero. Letter, 12. book ii.

COMBRETUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Octandria, order Monogynia, natural order Combretaceæ. Generic character: calyx four-toothed, bell-shaped, superior; corolla petals four, inserted into the calyx; stamens very long; capsules four-angled, angles membranaceous, one-celled; one seed, oblong. COMBRETUM. — COMBUSTIBLE.

Willdenow describes five species, tropical plants.

CO'MBURGER, Co'MBURGERSHIP. } A fellow burgher. See BURGH.

If Jaffa merchants, now comburgers seem
With Portugal's and Portugal's with them.
Du Bartas. The fifth day of the first week.

The canton of Bernes espoused their concern with a spirit and zeal, that was not expected from them: they declared, they were in a comburgership with them; and upon that, they sent a body of 3000 men, to defend them. Burnett. Own Times, Anno 1707.

COMBU'STIBLE, adj. Combu'stible, n. Combu'stibility, Combu'stion, Combu'st. } Et uro et buro dixere, says Vossius. Buro, he derives from the Gr. πῦρ, and uro, from the Hebrew.

A combustible is any thing that may be burnt; generally applied to things easily ignited or set on fire; and which also spread their fire so as to communicate it rapidly to other materials.

Combustion; to the heat, noise, and confusion of a fire or conflagration; met. to the heat, noise, and confusion of violent passions.

And if I had, O Venus ful of mirth,
Aspects badde of Mars or of Saturne
Or thou combust.
Chaucer. Troilus, book iii. fol. 170.

Faith hath alwai good hope & charitie with it, and cannot but worke well, no more than the fire can be wᵗ out heate and light and burne al combustible thinges that it may touch and tary with.
Sir Thomas More. Works, fol. 264.

All those other smaller fires, which are lodg'd in several parts of the lower regions joyning themselves with this mighty flame, shall prey upon whatever is combustible, and so rage first within the bowels of the earth, beginning the tragick execution upon those damned spirits that are there confined.
Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatizing, part ii. fol. 174.

Yellow amber, jet, and the like; all which are all of a bituminous unctuous nature; as appears by their easie combustibility and smell when they are burned.
Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xix.

For noble descriptions there are hereof in the Grecian funerall of Homer. In the formal obsequies of Patroclus, and Achilles; and somewhat elder in the Theban war, and solemn combustion of Meneceus, and Archemorus, contemporary unto Jair the eighth judge of Israel. Sir Thomas Brown. Urne Burial, ch. i.

They burnt not children before their teeth appeared, as apprehending their bodies too tender a morsell for fire, and that their gristly bones would scarce leave seperable relicks after the piral combustion. Id. Ib. ch. iv.

There being great combustions and divisions among the heads of the university in preparation to the commencement, each party being desirous to get the advantage in the election of the answerers, and so to fit the questions to their mind, and the more Calvinian party having prevailed upon this occasion.
Mede. Life, fol. 34.

Guianerius had a patient could make Latine verses when the moon was combust, otherwise illiterate.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 192.

It is here just as if any combustible matter, which is set on fire; if we take the flame presently, it is soon extinguished; but give it a little scope, and it proves often beyond your power to quench it, till it hath done mischief. Sharp. Works, vol. v. disc. 5.

What may we conceive the inward disturbance is, where the outward shew (which usually dissembles the inward passion,) betrayed so much rage and disorder; for when such flames break out, what combustion may we conceive within?
Stillingfleet. Sermon, 10. vol. i.

The suddenness, horror, and universality of their destruction are set forth by the similitude of a "fire" consuming the dry trees in a "forest," or some combustible matter on the "mountains." Horne. Commentary on the Psalms. Psalm 83.

First through the shoulders, or whatever part
Was seiz'd the first, a fervid vapour sprung.
With rash combustion thence, the quivering spark
Shot to the heart, and kindled all within;
And soon the surface caught the spreading fires.
Armstrong. The Art of preserving Health, book iii.

COME, v. }
COME, n. }
CO'MER, }
CO'MING, n. }
CO'ME-OFF, }
CO'ME-SHORT. }

A. S. coman; Dutch, komen; Ger. kommen; Swe. komma. Come is a complex term, expressing a particular species of motion. We see a thing in motion; the distance lessens, the thing approaches, and it comes; if the distance increases, the thing departs and it goes. Such is the broad distinction between to come and to go.

To come is usually interpreted in conjunction with prepositions following, and even with other words connected with it; but the signification of the expression is entirely consequential, and must be deduced from the context. He came to me; he came to the block; in these instances came means literally the same; the consequences to the moving body were different, and are by usage implied.

And met. the reckoning came to a pound; i. e. amounted. He came to his senses; i. e. he regained or recovered them. In these expressions, amount, and regain, are by usage implied.

For þer nys in þi kyndam so wys mon ywys,
To segge soþ of þinges, þat to commene beþ.
R. Gloucester, fol. 145.

þer duelled he no more, tille Acres went our kyng.
þe Cristen þat þer wore wer faȝn of his comyng.
R. Brunne, fol. 227.

For knowing his comers.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, fol. 36.

At night was come into their hostelrie
Wel nine and tweaty in a compagnie
Of sondry folk, by aventure yfalle
In felawship, and pilgrimes were they alle,
That toward Canterbury wolden ride.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 23.

And for comers hereafter shullen fully out of denwere all the sothe knowe of these thinges in acte, but as they werne, I haue put it in Scripture, in perpetual remembraunce of true meaning.
Id. The Testament of Loue.

But she, whiche knewe to fore the houde
The circumstance of all this thynge,
Ageyn the comyng of the kynge
Into the temple, hath shape so, &c.
Gower. Conf. Am. book v. fol. 107.

But wite ye this, that if the housebondeman wiste in what our the theef were to come, certis he wolde wake and suffre not his hous to be undermyned. Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxiv.

Of this be sure, that yf the good man of ye house knewe what houre the thefe would come, he would surely watche, and not suffre his house to be broken vp. Bible. Anno 1551.

I comaunde to thee before God that quickeneth alle thingis & bifore Crist Jesu that gheldide a witnessyng undir Pilat of Pounce a good confessioun that thou kepe the comaundement without wemme without repreef into the comyng of oure Lord Jesu Crist whom the blessid and aloone myghti Kyng of Kyngis and Lord of Lordis schal schew in hise tymes. Wiclif. 1 Timothy, ch. vi.

I gine the charge in ye sight of God, whych quyckeneth all thynges, & before Jesu Christ, which vnder Pōcius Pilate wytnessed a good wytnessyng that thou kepe the commaundmente, and be wythout spot & vnrebukeable, vntyl the appearynge of our Lord Jesus Christ, which appearynge (whē the tyme is come) he shall shewe that is blessed and myghtye onelye, Kyng of Kinges, and Lord of Lordes, which only hath immortalitye.
Bible. Anno 1551.

Moost dere I biseche you as comelingis and pilgryms to absteine you fro fleishli desires that fighten agens the soul.
Wiclif. 1 Petir, ch. ii.

There they assembled by great companyes, the whiche were called the late commers bicause they hadde as than but lyttel pylled in the realme of France.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. ccxiv.

And he still on was led, but with such thoughts
Accompanied of things past and to come,
Lodg'd in his brest as well might recommend
Such solitude before choicest society.
Milton. Paradise Regained, l. 300.

MAN. Come, come no time for lamentation now;
Nor much more cause; Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroicly hath finish'd
A life heroic. Id. Samson Agonistes, l. 1708.

So with the squire, th' admirer of his might,
He marched forth towards that castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut, no living wight
To ward the same, nor answer commer's call.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 8. st. 3.

This kingdom's angel I, who since that day
That ruthless fate thy parent reft away,
And made a star, appear'd not any where
To gratulate thy coming, come am here.
Drummond. The Speech of Caledonia.

And this I dare confidently averre, that there are no such enemies to the king's prerogative as those who, advancing it beyond due bounds, do necessarily draw it into dispute, in which it commonly comes off with losse and diminution in the end, as in the late cases of loanes, ship-money, and the like.
Prinne. That the Parliament and Kingdom are the Sovereign Power.

But suppose David himself suborned Joab to do what he did, that he might have a fair come off, and manifest his love to his son, if David had done so; why God himself did so.
Goodwin. Works, vol. i. part ii. serm. 10.

——————To attain
The highth and depth of thy eternal wayes
All human thoughts come short, Supreme of things.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 414.

This will not only make you beloved and esteemed by the present age, but this will endear your memories to posterity, and make ages to come rise up and call this a happy session.
Stillingfleet. Sermon, 4. vol. ii.

The trumpets, next the gate, in order plac'd,
Attend the sign to sound the martial blast;
The palace yard is fill'd with floating tides,
And the last comers bear the former to the sides.
Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

Dodona's oaks, inspir'd by Jove,
A learned and prophetic grove,
Turn'd vegetable necromancers,
And to all comers gave their answers.
Churchill. The Ghost, book i.

CO'MEDY, }
COME'DIAN. }

Gr. κωμῳδία; according to Festus, from κώμη, i. e. vicus, a village, and ᾠδη, cantus, a song; a village song; because these plays (ludi) were usually performed in villages before they were introduced into cities, (urbes.) See the Life of ARISTOPHANES, vol. ix. p. 321.

A comodie is thought to be a thinge of lesser payne,
Because out of our dayly deedes
the most therof is tayne.
A comodie is so much more
of great, and weightie charge,
Because her libertie is strayte,
at least not very large.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Augustus.

As for that part of poetry which dealeth in representation of personages in plaies upon a stage, so small account they made at Athans of the commedians and their profession; nay, they disdained and scorned it so much, that a law there was enacted, forbidding expresly that no senatour of the counsell Areopagus might make a comedy: contrariwise, the tragedy flourished, and was in much request. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 807.

The great success which tragic writers found,
In Athens first the comedy renown'd;
Th' abusive Grecian there by pleasing ways,
Dispers'd his natural malice in his plays.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

Among the causes which he pleaded before his quæstorship, was that of the famous comedian Roscius, whom a singular merit in his art had recommended to the familiarity and friendship of the greatest men in Rome. Middleton. Life of Cicero, sec. 1.

Whenever Aristotle speaks of comedy, we must remember that he speaks of the old, or middle comedy, which was no other than what we should call farce, and to which his definition of comedy was adapted: μιμησις φαυλοτερων; that is, as he explains himself, "an imitation of ridiculous characters."
Twining. Aristotle, vol. i. note 28.

CO'MELY, adj. Co'MELY, adv. Co'MELILY, Co'MELINESS, Co'MELY-DISTANT. Junius and Skinner agree from become, in its consequential usage; viz. to be fit, decent, appropriate, suitable; graceful, handsome. And see the Examples from Davies, on Dancing, and Strype.

A comely creature.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 345.

Though he kilde a comly knyght.
Id. Crede, D. 4.

How so his mouthe be comely,
His worde sitte euermore a wrie,
And saith the worste that he maie.
Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 30.

Wel shaped were her lims, ful comly was her face,
Eche little vain most lively couch't, eche part had semely grace.
Uncertaine Auctors. The Tale of Pygmalion, &c.

SICIN. This is a happier and more comely time
Than when these fellowes ran about the streets,
Crying confusion. Shakspeare. Coriolanus, fol. 23.

CHOR. O how comely it is, and how reviving
To the spirits of just men long oppress't!
When God into the hands of thir deliverer
Puts invincible might
To quell the mighty of the earth, th' oppressour.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1268.

How fought great Rupert, with what rage and skill!
Enough to have conquer'd, had his cause been ill!
Comely young man! and yet his dreadful sight
The rebels blood to their faint hearts does fright.
Cowley. On the late Civil War.

I see him through an adverse battle thrust,
Bedeck'd with noble sweat and comely dust.
Id. Upon the happie Birth of the Duke.

So slides he down upon his grained bat,
And comely-distant sits he by her side;
When he again desires her, being sat,
Her grievance with his hearing to divide.
Shakspeare. A Lover's Complaint.

It was then that the simple and beautiful young shepherdesses went without other apparel than that which was requisite to cover comelily, that which modesty wills and ever would have concealed.
Shelton Don Quixote, vol. i. book ii. ch. iii.

For comeliness is a disposing fair
Of things and actions in fit time and place.
Davies. On Dancing.

Never made body such haste to confess
What a soul was; all former comeliness
Fled in a minute when the soul was gone,
And, having lost that beauty, would have none.
Donne. Hymn. To the Saints.

Wherein surely hee noted wel the comelynes of apparel to be, when it was fashioned like the bodie, and grete folie, when a square cappe was set upon a round head.
Strype. Life of Archbishop Parker, No. 25.

——————On either side,
The bright attendants, rang'd with comely pride
Advance in just array, and grace the pompous tide.
Hughes. The Court of Neptune.

But this [decency] shews virtue in her first original form, adds a comeliness to religion, and gives its professors the justest title to the beauty of holiness. Spectator, No. 292.

G. Douglas left behind him great approbation of his virtues, and love of his person, in the hearts of all good men; for besides the nobility of his birth, the dignity and comeliness of his personage, he was learned, temperate, and of singular moderation of mind. Hume. History of the Douglasses, fol. 220.

COMESSATION, from the Gr. κῶμος. Varro. And κῶμος, (Lennep) quasi conventus, concio, et in primis hominum ebriorum, noctu vagantium cum cantu. Comessatio, in Suetonius, Vit. Domitiani, c. 21. Holland renders "Reare banquets."

Is it a small benefit that I am placed .—Where I see no drunken comessations, no rebellious routs, no violent oppressions, no obscene rejoicings, nor ought else that might either vex or affright my soul. Hall. The Free Prisoner, sec. 3.

COMESTIBLE, comedere; com, and edere, estum, to eat. Fr. comestible; that may be eaten.

Albeit some herbes are most comestible, and do lasse harme vnto nature, & moderately vsid maketh metely good blud.
Sir Thomas Elyot. The Castel of Helth, book ii. fol. 28.

His moneys were the purest and least corrupted within the Italian bounds; and his markets the best ordered for prices of comestible ware; where, in all his townes, a man might have sent out a child for any fish, or flesh, at a rated price every morning.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 246.

COMET.

CO'MET, n. Co'MET-LIKE, Co'METARY. Gr. κομήτης; Lat. cometa, stella crinita; It. and Sp. cometa; Fr. comete; Dutch and Ger. kometæ, from the Lat. coma, the hair.

Vor a sterre with a launce, that comete iclupid is,
Aros tho aze dal, (those days) biuore the sonne iwis,
Fram Seinte Margarete tid, vort Misselmasse nei
That ech man mizte wondri, that the sterre isei.
R. Gloucester, p. 548.

Clerkes knewen the comete, and comen mith here presentes.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 234.

In the yeere 1098, the Abbey of St. Maries at Cistertium was founded. In the same yeere also Antiochiæ was taken by the Christians, and a comet appeared.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. K. of Man, vol. i. fol. 11.

This slaughter and calamity foregoes
Thy eminent destruction, woful king:
This is the bloody comet of thy woes,
That doth foretel thy present ruining.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book iii.

These blazing starres the Greekes call cometas our Romanes crinitas: dreadful to be seene, with bloudie haires, and all over rough and shagged in the top, like the bush of haire upon the head. Holland. Plinie, book ii. ch. xxv. fol. 15.

——————On th' other side
Incenc't with indignation Satan stood
Unterrifi'd, and like a comet burn'd,
That fires the length of Ophiucus huge
In th' artick sky, and from his horrid hair
Shakes pestilence and war.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 708.

MAR. I am a maid,
My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes
But have been gaz'd on, comet-like.
Shakspeare. Pericles, act v. sc. 1.

Dreadful in arms, on Lauden's glorious plain
Place Ormond's duke: impendent in the air
Let his keen sabre, comet-like, appear,
Where'er it points, denouncing death.
Prior. The Duke of Ormond's Picture.

Refractions of light are in the planetary and cometary regions, as on our globe. Cheyne. Philosophical Principles.

From Dantzick, I understand by a letter of Mr. Hevelius, that his cometography is very near finished; and that he intends very shortly to send me by sea some exemplars thereof.
Letter from H. Oldenburg to Mr. Boyle.

Her comet-eyes she darts on every grace;
And takes a fatal liking to his face.
Dryden. Juvenal. Satire, 10. l. 514.

O how portentous is prosperity!
How, comet-like, it threatens while it shines.
Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

There stood a tow'r, whose vast stupendous size
Rear'd its huge mast, and seem'd to gore the skies,
From which a bloody pendant stretch'd afar
Its comet-tail, denouncing ample war.
Falconer. Description of a Ninety-gun Ship.

The Astronomical theory of COMETS is given in the Scientific portion of our Work, but there are also a few particulars worth preserving, respecting the terrors with which popular belief has sometimes invested these ill-omened bodies. Pliny, (ii. 22,) who in many points has translated the words of Aristotle, (Meteorol. i. 7. and De Mundo,) and who accords in many things with Ptolemy also, shall be our authority for the opinion of the Ancients. "These blazing starres," he says, in the words of Holland, "the Greekes call Cometas our Romanes Crinitas; dreadful to be seene, with bloudie haires, and all over rough and shagged in the top, like the bush of haire upon the head." He then distinguishes the eight separate kinds by their respective Greek names. "Pogonias, which from the nether part have a maine hanging downe in fashion of a long beard." Such we are told was the great Comet of 1618. "Acontiæ brandish and shake like a speare or dart, signifying great swiftnesse." If any thing precise is to be deduced from these last words, it may be, that the events which the Acontiæ are supposed to prognosticate, quickly succeed their appearance. Pliny adds, that the Emperor Titus, in his fifth Consulate, wrote a Poem upon one of these Acontiæ, and Milichius (ad loc.) informs us, that such was the figure of the Comet of 1533. "If they be shorter and sharper pointed in the top, they use to call Xiphiæ; and of all other palest they be, and glitter like a sword, but without any raies or beames." This was the terrific appearance which, according to Josephus, (Bell. Jud. vii.) hung over Jerusalem for nearly a year, not long before its destruction; and a similar portent is recorded to have occurred in the year 1532. "Discus (resembling a dish or coit, whereof it beareth the name; but in colour, like to amber) putteth forth (rays) here and there out of the brimmes and edges thereof." "Pitheus is seene in forme of tunnes, environed within a smokie light, as if it were a concavitie." "Ceretias resembles an horne, and such an one appeared when the whole manhood of Greece fought the battaile of Salamis." Such too was the last Comet of 1618. "Lampadias is like to burning torches." Hippeus is like to horse maines, most swift in motion, and turning round." Another name of Hippeus seems to have been Rosa. Besides these, "there is also a white Comet with silver haires, so bright and shining, that hardly a man can endure to looke upon it, and in man's shape it showeth the verie image of a God. Moreover there be blazing starres that become all shaggie, compassed round with hairie fringe, and a kind of maine. One heretofore appearing in the forme of a maine, changed into a speare," and this occurred, continues the Naturalist, "U. C. 498." i.e. A. C. 356.

The matter of Pliny has been freely borrowed by the anonymous author of a Treatise on Blazing Starres in generall, as well supernaturall as naturall to what countries or people soever they appeare in the spacious world, 1618. This writer calls the Pogonii "trailed stars," and either from lack of Greek, or by an error of the press, writes Piphii instead of Xiphiæ. Phitites and Hippei are termed "Tunne starres" and "maine stars." The pillar of fire which appeared to the Israelites, is affirmed to have been a Comet; and Pliny's paragraph on the white Comet is accommodated, in some measure, to Apocalyptic language. "To be short, some blazing starres are seene in the ayre, glistering with strakes and streames like bright silver, that it passeth the ability of man's eyes to look and behold them, wherein (as in a cleare glass) God is represented in the likeness and shape of man." Although the genuineness of the original passage in Pliny, from which this is borrowed, has been disputed, Fromondus (Meteorol iii. 4) has referred it to the star which appeared at our Saviour's birth. Pie magis scriptum quam verè, as Hardouin adds with sly sobriety.

The limits of apparition, assigned by Pliny, are a week and eighty days; both manifestly false. Some Comets, he says, are fixed and stir not; in which he is equally mistaken. They portend boisterous winds and heat of weather. "A fearful starre for the most part this Comet is, and not easily expiated;" in which assertion he is supported by the Greek adage μηδεὶς Κομήτην ὄστις ἀ κακὸν φέρει. Comets foretold the civil war with Sertorius; and that between Cæsar and Pompey; the murder of Claudius; and the tyranny of Nero. The quarter into which a Comet shoots, affords a material presage; as do also those stars the influence of which it receives, "the similitudes it resembles," and the parts in which it first rises. "If it be like to flutes and hautboies, it portendeth somewhat to Musicians." Woe to the amorous if it be seen below the Girdle in any of the Constellations! "It is respective to fine arts and learned men, if it put forth a triangular or foure-square figure with even angles, to any situation of the perpetual fixed starres: and it is thought to presage, yea, and to sprinckle and put forth poyson, if it be seene in the head of the Dragon, either North or South."

One Comet only seems to have escaped ill fame. It was that which appeared at the Games celebrated by Augustus to Venus Genetrix, not long after the murder of Julius Cæsar. It rose for seven days consecutively, about five o'clock in the evening, with unusual brightness. The Emperor gave out that it conveyed the soul of the late

COMET. Dictator, on its passage to Olympus; and in commemoration of the prodigy he placed a star on the head of an image of Julius, which he dedicated in the Forum. (Suet. Jul. 88.) To himself in private it gave a true inward joy, for "he interpreted and conceived thus of the thing, That the Comet was made for him, and that he himself was in it borne." (Plin. ut supra.)

This opinion, which Augustus took so much pains to inculcate, was adopted far more extensively after the lapse of many centuries by Bodin, who fathered it on Democritus. In the Universæ Naturæ Theatrum, 1575, the French Lawyer inculcates the following opinion, among others equally strange and sceptical. Cometas esse illustrium virorum mentes, quæ posteaquam innumerabilibus seculis viguerunt in terris, tandem obituræ, ut omnia quæ oriuntur occasum minantur, extremos peragunt triumphos, aut in cœlum stellatum quasi splendida sydera revocantur: ac propterea sequuntur Fames, Morbi populares, Civilia bella, quasi Civitates ac Populi ducibus illis optimis et gubernatoribus qui divinos furores placabant, desererentur. (Lib. iii.) It is somewhat odd that after such a declaration as this, Bodin should have been deemed a Conjuror, as we are informed by De Thou was really the case. (Lib. cxvii.)

It would be a thankless and an endless task to cite the names of a tithe of the small Professors who have written on Cometomantics.—There is a rare specimen of early printing by Hans Aurl in 1474, entitled Thurecensis Phisici Tractatus de Cometis; but the Tract is meagre compared with many of its successors.—Ferrerius one of that distinguished Piedmontese family, which so often supplied the College of Cardinals in the XVIth century, had the boldness to outrun the belief of his times; and in 1540 he dedicated to James V. of Scotland a dissertation De verâ Cometarum significatione contra Astrologorum omnium vanitatem. His work is the vehicle of much epithalamic Latin verse on the marriage of his Royal Patron with a Princess of Lorraine, the Duchess Dowager of Longueville. It was about the same year that a Cracovian Astrologer, Petrus a Probossczovvice, produced his Judicium. We can only extract from it three lines, which he calls a distich, and which he informs his readers embrace in that narrow compass all the effects of a Comet.

Octo mala fulgens Cometa per aera signat
Ventus, Sterilitas, Aqua, Pestis, Dominatus
Rixa fit et Tremor, moritur Dux, mutatio Regni.

The sum of these musical lines has been nearly rendered in simple prose by Leonard Digges, who in 1555, 6, 64, and 67, published Astrological Almanacks under the title Prognostication everlasting of ryght good Effect; which contain rules for determining the weather, for letting blood and taking physic, laid down with a precision which none of his successors in the same line have ever surpassed. He dismisses Comets in a few choice words of vituperation. They "signifie corruption of the ayre. They are signes of Earthquake, of Warres, chaunging of Kyngdomes, great dearth of Corn, yea, a common death of Man and Beast."

Du Bartas, who wrote about the same time, is much to the same purpose, and his lines, as Englished by Silvester, deserve citation.

Here in the night appears a flaming spire,
There a fierce Dragon folded all in fire;
Here a bright Comet, there a fiery stream,
Here flying lances, there a burning beam;
Here seems a horned Goat, environ'd round
With fiery flakes about the air to bound;
There with long bloody hair a blazing star
Threatens the world with Famine, Plague, and War;
To Princes Death, to Kingdoms many crosses,
To all Estates inevitable losses:
To Herdsmen Rot, to Plowmen hapless seasons,
To Sailors Storms, to Cities Civil Treasons.

The close of the XVIth century was fruitful in writers on Comets. Camerarius, who left nothing untouched, published in 1561, a disputation De eorum qui Cometæ appellantur nominibus, &c. David Chytræus of Rostoch, in 1572, and Bernardinus Longus of Naples, in 1578, each printed his respective Thesis in the Schools De Stellâ inusitatâ et de Cometis. All three of them furnish numerous examples of disasters concomitant with the appearance of a Comet. Nicolas Vuinckler, a Physician of Hall, in 1577, denounced woe in a strain which many succeeding writers down to the time of our own late Francis Moore (of hieroglyphic memory) have adopted after him, "Caveat sibi Polonia major, Russia alba, Campania, Helvetia, Rhætia, Franconia, Lotharingia, Hibernia; bella illis denunciantur et obsidiones. Capietur ex illis Dux aut Princeps aliquis: forsitan etiam præ nimio dolore morietur in carcere." The Comet of the day would indeed have been not a little out of luck if, in this wide range of countries, no public misfortune had occurred to verify the learned Doctor's predictions.

To the above writers may be added a few others of the same date; Cornelius Gemma, Poet, Physician, and Philosopher of Louvain, in his Cosmocriticum and De prodigiosâ specie naturâque Cometæ, 1577; Helisæus Ræslin of Alsace, in his Theoria nova Cœlestium μετεώρων; and Bartholemæus Barriento, Professor of Humanity at Salamanca. All these are equally profound. Keckerman, a Professor of Dantzic, in his Systema Physicum, vi. 5, may be consulted with advantage; and Kepler, in his three Books De Cometis, exhibits quite as much of the Prophet as of the Philosopher. He says, as his brother adept Sir George Wharton, (in his Excellent discourse of the Names, Genus, Species, Efficient and Final causes of all Comets,) has rendered him, "that Comets were made to the end the æthereal regions might not be more void of monsters than the ocean is of whales, and other great thieving fishes; and that a gross fatness being gathered together, as excrements into an aposthume, the cælestial air might thereby be purged, lest the Sun should be obscured, as partly he was in the year 1547, from the 24th to the 28th of April, or for a whole year together, as in that wherein Julius Cæsar was slain, when being made weak by a murrey or bloody colour, he cast but a dim and disdainful light." He then sums up the troubles which have succeeded several past Comets, and gives his own judgment upon those of 1618, 19.

Amid his labour on the Greek Mathematicians, of whose works he meditated an entire collection, Conrad Dasypodius, a Professor of Strasburgh, found time to write Brevis dissertatio de Cometis et Cometarum effectibus, 1578. In this are many rules, by the use of which a right judgment may be formed. The place, the sign of the zodiac, the inclination of the tail, all demand consideration. If the colour be livid or ashen, the Comet is under the influence of Saturn; if white, of Jupiter; red, of Mars; yellow, of Venus; spotted (varius,) of Mercury. Yet all Comets properly belong to Mars and Mercury. Those which are brightest, and those which immediately precede or succeed an Eclipse, have most effect; but if they occur in the very time of an Eclipse, this effect is absolutely doubled. Many of these dicta appear to be borrowed from Ptolemy.

An English Clergyman, who wrote from Kettering in 1578 a Tract called Cometographie, (probably under an assumed name, Laurence Barjona,) on a Comet which appeared the year before, found himself somewhat puzzled how to apply the phenomenon (as he was bound to do in duty as a loyal subject,) to the reigning Queen, Elizabeth. To have foretold calamities might have been misprision of treason; and the only precedent for saying any thing good of a Comet, was to be drawn from the case of that which we have mentioned after the death of Julius Cæsar; but Elizabeth, at the time of which we speak, was by no means either ripe or willing for her apotheosis. The sagacious Divine, therefore, had recourse to generalities, and extricated himself from his difficulty with no small skill, Tantum abest ut ex hoc Cometâ tuæ Christianissimæ personæ quid metuerem, ut ἐυημερίαν quandam potius ex eo videor tibi polliceri posse.

A few years afterwards, in 1587, some useful rules were given for the management of refractory Comets, by Antonius Gattus, Philosophus et Medicus Hortuachiensis. The fourth Part of his Tractatus de Cometis contains a section Quomodo Cometa ut morbus magni animalis curandus sit: i. e. ex quibus petendus sit modus ipsum removendi, et quo pacto possimus reddi inoffensi de ejus nocumento atque portentis.

The year 1618 was dignified by no less than four Comets, which appear to have thrown John Bainbridge, "Doctor of Physic and lover of Mathematics," who described them, into no small perplexity. He assures his reader concerning one of them, that "what this Comet doth in particular signifie is not possible to declare without an ἐνθουσίασμος, or Divine inspiration;" nevertheless he thinks it must bring news from the East Indies, and he points out its remarkable coincidence with the Synod of Dort, which was sitting at that time. The same blazing stars furnished the skeletons of many homilies, published under the title κομητοστοιχεῖον, by a German Divine, who writes himself at full length M. Christianus Christianus, Stetinensis, Pomeranus, Parochiæ Petrinæ Pastor Stendeliæ, in veteris Marchiæ Metropoli, sub Electoratu Brandenburgico.

Frederic Cogelius sang the progress of a Comet in 1664, 65 in Latin hexameters, which the University of Cologne took the trouble of printing typis Academicis. In 1664 also, we meet with observations of a Comet in the southern hemisphere, under the title of Legatus Uranius, by Valentine Stamel, a Jesuit Missionary at Bahia. In the same year a brilliant specimen of Astro-Theology was given in a pamphlet printed at Cambridge in New England. In this, S. D(unforth.) assured his readers, that the appearance of the Comet, was concomitant to the translation of their Governor, Mr. John Endicot, to a better world. Michael Praun, an Aulic Councillor at Frankfort, differed widely from this opinion not long after. In his Cometa Malus Genius, 1672, he boldly pronounced all Comets to be under the influence of the Devil. John Gadbury, the pupil of Lilly, who verified the well known Greek adage, by becoming a greater rogue than his master, published in 1665 a Tract De Cometis, to which he annexed "Some Observations on the Nativity of the Grand Seignior." In this work the several properties of Comets, according to the different signs in which they appear, are elaborately stated, (ch. vii. § 3,) and the following general cause is attributed to them all, "As if God and Nature intended by Comets to ring the knells of Princes; esteeming the Bells in Churches upon Earth not sacred enough for such illustrious and eminent performances."

Still there were not wanting some who continued to speak more favourably of these stars. A collection of Dissertationes et Judicia doctorum virorum de significatione Cometarum, was frequently printed in the course of the XVIth century. It contained the opinions of Erastus, Professor of Medicine at Heidelburgh, of Dudith, a Prelate of Silesia, of Marcellus Squarcialupus, of Julius Cæsar Scaliger, of Benedictus Perecius, of Grynæus, of Philip Muller, Professor of Medicine and Mathematics at Leipzic, of Riccioli, of Gassendi, of our English Dr. Primerose, extracted from his Tract De vulgi erroribus, and of Fienus, Professor of Medicine at Louvain. The last very successfully combated two principles which hitherto had been generally admitted; the one in order to account for the great influence which Comets were supposed to exercise over the destiny of Princes: Quia Principes habent corpora teneriora aliis ideo præ aliis ab infecto exhalationibus aere magis afficiuntur, et a morbis qui tum grassantur interimuntur; the other, which in a similar manner explained why commotions and wars are mostly consecutive to Comets: Quia corpora fiunt biliosiora ideo et ad iram prona, hinc subito moliuntur seditiones; Principes aliis Principibus vicinis bella inferunt.

The great work of Riccioli, Almagestum Novum, deserves a separate notice. This learned Jesuit projected a complete system of Philosophical, Mathematical, and Astronomical knowledge; in which he was to digest, after the manner of Ptolemy, every thing ancient and modern, relating to his subjects. This stupendous monument of diligence and research appeared in two folio volumes in 1652; and in the second Part lib. viii. sec. i. ch. v. under the head Astrologorum placita, the reader will find, or be referred to, most of the lore which dreamers have delivered concerning Comets. The birth (A. C. 356) and accession (A. C. 336) of Alexander, and those of Mithridates (130. 119,) the accession of Charles Martel (A. D. 725,) and of Charlemagne (800,) and the commencement of the Tátár Empire (1200,) were all, it seems, notified by blazing stars, the dates of which Riccioli has preserved. To these events may be added the deaths of the following illustrious men, in which the reader must be warned not to be too nice respecting a few months, nor to inquire whether the Comet appeared before or after the decease.

A. C.
336 { Philip of Macedon / Darius Codomanus.
44 Julius Cæsar.

A. D.
14 Augustus.
54 Claudius.
70 Vitellius.
80 Vespasian.
213 Severus.
340 Constantinus Junior.
363 Julian.
392 Valentinian.
454 Theodosius.
571 Alboin of Lombardy.

A. D.
603 Maurice, Emperor.
814 Charlemagne.
837 Pipin.
839 Ludovicus Pius, Imp.
882 Ludovicus Bavarus, Imp.
983 Otho II.
1009 Pope John XV.
1066 Edward the Confessor.
1106 Henry IV., Emperor.
1169 Malcolm IV. of Scotland.
1214 William of Scotland.
1264 Pope Urban IV.
1301 Andrew of Hungary.
1314 Philip le Bel.
1341 Andronicus, Emperor.
1377 Charles IV., Emperor.
1402 Tamerlane.
1430 Amurath.
1456 Ladislaus of Poland.
1457 Alfonso of Naples.
1477 Charles of Burgundy.
1503 Philip of Spain.
1506 Alexander of Poland.
1512 Pope Julius II. Bajazet
1521 Pope Leo X.
1533 Pope Clement VII.
1558 Charles V., Emperor. Queens of England, Poland, and Hungary.
1559 Pope Paul IV.; Henry II. of France; Mary, of England; Erickson, of Sweden; Frederick II. of Denmark; and fifteen Cardinals; to all which calamities Lubienictz appends et perfidia Hugonotarum erupit manifestius.
1577 Sebastian of Portugal.
1583 Osman. Stephen of Poland.
1590 Pope Urban VII.
1618 Matthias, Imp.

The well known Comet of 1680 was visible from November 3 to March 9 of the following year, and produced numberless descriptions and predictions. The Author of A full and true account of the late blazing Starre, with some probable prognostics upon what may be its effects, assures his readers that "God never fires his beacon (set upon so high a hill) but those below had need look to themselves." Agostino Macarri, Apostolic Prothonotary, Vicar of the Holy Inquisition, and Rector of Peruga, is far more precise in his Secreti Astrologici celesti et terrestri motivati dalle Comete, 1681. He is convinced that Comets show the origin, coming, and death of Antichrist, together with the month and day on which the world is to end. This grand consummation is without doubt, he says, to occur on the 25th of March, and on a Sunday; but the year cannot be foretold with equal certainty.

A few other productions about the year 1680 must not be omitted. One is, Strange and wonderful prophecies and predictions taken from the appearance of the late dreadful Comet, the last wonderful Ecclips, and the great and signal conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn in the fiery Trigon, that will happen on the 23d of October next; signifying the utter downfall of the hierarchy of Rome, and other most wonderful and unheard of mutations which shall happen in Europe within a few years. The next is An Alarm to Europe, by John Hill, Physician and Astronomer, who states that the first advice of the Comet was given from Falmouth in the London Gazette. After this (but not till 1684) came Cometomantia. The Author of this tract is convinced that the flaming sword with which Paradise was guarded from our first parents was no other than a Comet; and he is so assured that the Fathers of the Church held Comets to be prophetical, that he attacks with great vehemence all those "youthful opiniators who are as ready to pluck their reverend beards (i. e. of the Fathers) as those of the Comets." On a single sheet about the same date will be found The wonderful blazing Star, with the dreadful apparition of two armies in the air, the one out of the North the other out of the South, as in the figure above is represented. It is accompanied by a wood-cut, depicting the encounter of the two aerial hosts ad vivum, and their appearance is vouched for by the following grave testimony: "Sir, On the 17th of December 1680, between four and five o'clock in the evening at Ottery, ten miles north-eastward of Exon, I and many more viewing this amazing Comet, on a sudden in a clear sky there appeared two great armies; one coming out of the North, whose leader had a coronet upon his head; the other from the South, and, as it seemed, furiously joyned battel, and a litell retreating vigorously charged again, and thus continued almost an hour; till at last there comes in a reserve, and joyning with the Southern army, forces the Northern back in disorder, and so vanished. Several were so terrified with the sight that they swooned away This is as true as terrible, else I would not have troubled you with it." "This account came from a Reverend Divine, who with many more was an eye-witness of it." It is not improbable that these and similar papers were made political vehicles. The nation at the time of their appearance was under the demoniacal influence of the Popish Plot. The iniquitous execution of Lord Stafford had just occurred, and all parties were ripe for intestine tumult. The armies which were stated to have appeared might be heartily wished for by the writer, and the prediction of bloodshed and calamity might be intended to bring about its own fulfilment One tract of a conciliatory temper was published about this time, (strange to tell) in Ireland. It is entitled The judgment of the Comet which became first generally visible to us in Dublin, &c. by a Person of Quality, and it successfully ridicules the forebodings of ill, which it had become so much the fashion to encourage.

As preceding these tracts, in point of time, we ought to have mentioned the two most extensive and profound works which have been given to the world on the subjects of which they treat. The Cometographia of Hevelius contains observations by himself of the Comets of 1652, 61, 4, 5, and a detailed history of every Comet which has appeared down to the last named year, from three days before the death of Methusaleh, Ann. Mundi 1656. Hevelius afterwards carried on his observations to later Comets. This history is perhaps surpassed in fullness and in interest by that appended to the Theatrum Cometicum of the learned Pole, Lubienietski. Besides a correspondence with all the Savans of Europe upon the Comets of 1664, 5, this writer (though he falls one Comet short of Hevelius) has collected every event which he could in any way connect with every appearance of the kind from the Deluge to 1665.

The Pensées sur la Comete of Bayle must not be forgotten, as arising out of the portentous star of 1680. This work is full of curiosity and entertainment, and perhaps diverted the current of public thinking relative to Comets, from the channel of superstition and mystery in which it had been heretofore inclined to run. If the reader be fond of contrast, we recommend him to compare Bayle's Thoughts with a contemporary piece under the following title, Tractatus de Cometis, Cometâ anno 1680 et pluribus præcedentibus ab anno 843 et sequentibus. Præsaglum perpetuum utriusque Testamenti, et posterioribus Prophetiis cum Apocalypsi convenientibus concordatum. In remedium omnium Ecclesiæ Romanæ adversitatum. Collectore M. A. Malonoxio Vedasto Novavilluno Nosocomii D. V. Tornaci Pastore indigno. The contents fully answer the expectation which the title-page is calculated to excite; and the erudite and orthodox author distinctly shows that Comets are Missionaries of the Romish Church.

Comets of later years have failed to give rise to Astrological speculation; and those of 1807 and 1811, though distinguished by the brilliancy of their appearance, and the length of their tails, passed away without being suspected of any intention to sweep us off in their progress. Such marvellous appearances as the two which we are about to subjoin in conclusion, belong to days long since departed, and we record them in the hope of obtaining some little sympathy for the terrors which our forefathers occasionally expressed, while smarting under similar visitations. The first account is taken from the Chronicon of Sigebert ad A. D. 451. "Over the island of Great Britain was seen a star of a wonderful bigness, to the train of which hung a fiery sword, not unlike a Dragon; and out of the Dragon's mouth issued two vast raies, whereof one reached as far as France; the other extending itself towards Ireland, divided into seven lesser raies.

This vision, it must be confessed, is sufficiently terrific, but it can by no means compete with the second, which we shall extract from the Exempla Cometarum of Rossemburgh.

"In the year 1527, about four in the morning, not only in the Palatine of Rhein, but almost over all Europe, presented itself for an hour and a quarter blazing every day a most horrible Comet in this sort. It rose due east, and went on aloft to the meridian, being still the more conspicuous as it run nearer north, setting in west. The length was of a bloody colour, inclining to a saffron. From the top of its train appeared a bended arm, in the hand whereof was a huge sword in the instant posture of striking. At the point of the sword was a Star, at each end of it one other, but that at the point the biggest of the three. From the Star proceed dusky raies like a hairy tail; on the side of them other raies like javelins or lesser swords as imbrued in blood, between which appeared human faces of the colour of blackish clouds, with rough hair and beards. All these moved with such terrible sparkling and brightness that many spectators swooned with fear."

Those who witnessed such portents as these may fairly be excused for believing that predictions might be drawn from them. We will not answer for the creed, either of the present times or of posterity, if similar appearances should again be observed by stargazers.

COMETES, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: involucre four-leaved, three-flowered; calyx four-leaved; capsule three-berried.

One species, C. alterniflora, an annual, native of Surat.

CO'MFIT, v. Co'MFIT, n. Co'MFITURE. } Written confits (q. v.) by Beaumont and Fletcher. Fr. confitures; It. confettura; Sp. confiture. All (says Skinner) from the Lat. confectio; from conficere, confectum. Caseneuve observes, that the Apothecary was called confectionarius; and Medicine, confectio. The Fr. confection, is "A confecting or confet-making." Cotgrave.

The ladies defended the castle with rose-water and comfittes, and the lordes threwe in oranges and dates.
Hall. King Henry VIII. The fourteenth Yere.

And at night to banquet with dew (as they say) of all maner of fruits and confections, marmelad, succad, grenegynger, comfettes, sugerplate, &c. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 229.

The citezens of London presēted them with v. fat oxen, &c. xx. loaues of sugar, comfettes & other spyce and waxe, with many other thinges which I cannot reherse.
Hall. King Henry VIII. The nineteenth Yere.

The fruit which does so quickly waste,
Men scarce can see it, much less taste,
Thou comfitest in sweets to make it last.
Cowley. The Muse.

Then was brought in wafers, comfites, ypocras, in such plentie, that euery man had as much as he would desire.
Grafton. King Henry VIII. The twenty-fourth Yere.

Plato and Xenophon have made a note of the delicate viands, pastry works, comfitures and junckets, served up in Callias or Agathus houses. Holland. Plinie, fol. 598.

Only let me love none, no not the sport
From country grass to comfitures of court
Or city, quelque-choses, let not report
My mind transport.
Donne. Love's Usury.

LADY. Not mine in good sooth.
HOTSP. Not your's in good sooth.
You sweare like a comfit-maker's wife.
Shakspeare. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 62.

CO'MFORT, v. Co'MFORT, n. Co'MFORTABLE, Co'MFORTABLENESS, Co'MFORTABLY, Co'MFORTATIVE, Co'MFORTER, Co'MFORTLESS, Co'MFORTMENT, Co'MFORTRESS. } Mid. Lat. confortare; It. confortare; Fr. conforter, to comfort, solace, recreate; to encourage or cheer up; also to confirm, help, strengthen, reinforce. Cotgrave;—who has put that last which should have been first; inasmuch as fortis, strong, anciently forctis, (from the Gr. ἔρκτος, itself from ἔργω, sepio, Vossius,) is the true Etymology of the word.

Þe kyng Aurely ys felawes comforted wel to fyȝte,
And al ys hope in Godesone dude & al ys myȝte.
R. Gloucester, fol. 139.

In woþ [weeping] & sorwe & deol inow, & comfort non him nas,
Ac euere on the holi man criede Sein Tomas.
Id. fol. 476

Aureli comfortede Þe Cristenemen a boute,
And Hengist in his half Þe heþene mennes loute.
Id. fol. 139.

Noiþer bi norþ no bi south com him neuer help,
Wo was alle his comforth, of sorow mot he gelp (yelp.)
R. Brunne, fol. 41.

For cleregie is Cristes vikery. to comforte and to curen.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, fol. 233.

COMFORT

In a walnote. with oute ys a byter barke,
And after that biter barke. Be þe shale aweye
Ys a curnel of comfort. Piers Plouhman. Vision, fol. 209.

Hereaftirward, bretheren be ghe coumfortid in the Lord and in the myght of his vertu. Wiclif. Effesies, ch. vi.

These thingis I haue spoken to ghou dwellynge among ghou, but thilk Hooli Goost the comfortour, whom the Fadir schal sende in my name, he schal teche ghou alle thingis, and schal schewe to ghou alle thingis whateuere thingis I schal seie to ghou.
Id. John, ch. xiv.

Thys haue I spoken vnto you beynge yet present with you. But that cōforter which is the Holy Goost (whome my father wyl sende in my name) he shal teache you all thynges, and brynge all thynges to your remembraunce what so euer I have told you.
Bible. Anno 1551.

Thys conforte shalle thou euermore fynde in the playne texte and lytteral sense. Neyther is there anye storye so homelye, so rude: yea, or so vyle (as it semeth outwarde) wherin is not exceadynge great conforte.
Tyndall. Prologue shewynge the use of the Scripture.

For vnto the right beleuyng shal all thinges be comfortable, and vnto consolation, at that terrible day. Id. Workes, fol. 68.

But Edmond therof beynge warned, sped him towarde that parte of the felde, and behaued hym so comfortably amonges his men, that by his knyghtly courage his people recouered that they before had loste, and contynued the batayll tyll nyght.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. cciv.

Honey is waloweish and ouer casteth the stomake, if it be plenteously taken by itselfe alone: but if wyth vinegre it be made aegredoulce, than is it not onely delectable and plesaunt of relice, but also comfortatiue and holsome too.
Udall. Preface, fol. 6.

And as I haue my tale thus told,
Steps vnto me with countenance bold
A stedfast frend, a councellour,
And named is Hope my comfourtour.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer describeth his whole state, &c.

Quiet I aske, and a time of delay,
And respite eke my fury to assuage,
Till my mishap teach me, all comfortlesse,
How for to wayle my grief.
Surrey. Æneis, book iv.

The answere that he made to me, my dere,
When I did sue for my poore heart's redresse,
Hath so appalde my countnance, and my chere,
That in this case, I am all comfortless,
Sins I of blame no cause can well expresse.
Wyat. To his Loue that has giuen him answer of refusell.

The same merchants with all celeritie and expedition, obteined the queene's maiestie's most gracious and fauourable letters to the ladie dowager, and lordes of the councell of Scotland for the gentle comfortment and entertainment of the saide ambassadour, his traine and companie, with preseruation and restitution of his goods. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Ambassadour from Russia.

The king him hartily thanked, and was well reuiued and comforted with his wordes, and so he with all his company were set on lande, and well refreshed.
Grafton. Edward IV. The ninth Yere.

This he did to obviate the rumors which he forsaw would be dispersed after his death either of his recantation, or of some trouble of spirit that he was cast into; (for these are the usual practises of the puritane sect) whereas he ended his days most piously, and to the great comfort of all the beholders.
Spotiswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1614. book vii.

——— 'Tis besides as comfortable
To die upon th' embroidery of the grass
Unminded, as to set a world at gaze,
Whilst from a pinnacle I stumble down
And break my neck, to be talk'd of and wonder'd at.
Ford. The Sun's Darling, act i. sc. 1.

Now all the remedy that is to be had in such an exigence as this, is to have the next preacher sent for, who must instill a little comfortable divinity into him, to make him sleep, and so his soul departs the Lord knows whither.
Chillingworth. Sermon, 6.

We know a playing wit can praise the discretion of an asse, the comfortableness of being in debt, and the jolly commodities of being sick of the plague. Sidney. The Defense of Poesy.

Cyprian hearing thereof, wrote comfortably vnto him and willed him in any wise to proceed. Whitgift. Defence, fol. 355.

Eternall Spirit, God from both proceeding,
Father and Sonne; the comforter, in breeding
Pure thoughts in man; with fiery zeale them feeding
For acts of Grace.
Ben Jonson. Underwoods. To the Holy Trinitie.

But hard (God knows) with sorrow doth it go,
When woe becomes a comforter to woe.
Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles.

Be sure they will, said th' Angel; but from heav'n
He to his own a comforter will send,
The promise of the Father, who shall dwell
His spirit within them, and the law of faith
Working through love, upon their hearts shall write,
To guide them in all truth.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book xii. l. 486.

Ay dooing things, that to his fame redownd,
Defending ladies cause, and orphans right,
Whereso he heares, that any doth confownd
Them comfortlesse through tyranny or might;
So is his soveraine honour raisde to heuens hight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 2. st. 14.

Mos. To be your comfortresse, and to preserve you,
Volp. Alasse, I am past already! pray you thank him,
For his good care, and promptnesse; but for that,
'Tis a vaine labour, e'ene to fight, gainst heaven.
Ben Jonson. The Fox, act iii. sc. 7.

Which [talents] if he do but carefully manage, and improve to the uses they were given for, he will for ever preserve to himself the love, and favour, and kindness of his heavenly Father, and shall not fail both of living happily and comfortably here, and arriving also to a glorious state of immortality hereafter.
Sharp. Works. Sermon, 3. vol. vi.

Thou only comforter of minds opprest,
The port where wearied spirits are at rest;
Conductor of Elysium, take my life,
My breast I offer to thy sacred knife.
Buckinghamshire. The Temple of Death.

Such is the condition of our life here! Either, not to have our most passionate wishes granted us; which is present unhappiness; or if we have them granted, to find, by a comfortless experiment, that we have sought misery instead of happiness; and embrace a vain shadow, where we expected a substantial good.
Hoadley. Works. Sermon, 15. vol. iii.

Consolation, or comfort are words which, in their proper acceptation, signify some alleviation to that pain to which it is not in our power to afford the proper and adequate remedy; they imply rather an augmentation of the power of bearing, than a diminution of the burthen. To that grief which arises from a great loss, he only brings the true remedy who makes his friend's condition the same as before; but he may be properly termed a comforter, who by persuasion extenuates the pain of poverty, and shows in the style of Hesiod, that half is more than the whole.
Johnson. Rambler, No. 52.

COMB
COMI

CO'MICK, Co'MICAL, Co'MICALLY. } (q. v.) Having the qualities of Comedy, Mirthful, lively, facetious, witty, ridiculous, droll. A comical poet, in Holland, is a Comick poet, a writer of Comedies.

Aulus Gellius that noble historiar,
Orace also with his newe poetry,
Maister Terence the famous comicar.
Skelton. The Crown of Laurel.

Arcgilogus did for Iambics passe.
For commicke verse stil Plautus peereles was.
Gascoigne. The Steel Glass.

Clion in solem songs reneweth all day
With present yeres conjoyning age bypast,
Delightful talke loues comical Thaley,
In fresh grene youth who doth lyke lawrel last.
Vncertaine Auctors. Songes to the Nine Muses.

One may not thinke things comicall
in tragike blasts to blowe.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetry.

ICK. I cannot for the stage a drama lay,
— Tragick, or comick; but thou writ'st the play.
ITIA. Ben Jonson. Epigrames. To a weake Gamester in Poetry.

He was so mocked and flouted by the comicall poets, that he grew to be of no reckoning and reputation, but incurred an ill and odious name. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 807.

Hee seemed when he presumed of himselfe, to cracke and vaunt in a loftie tragicall note, and whensoeuer he feared, to debase himselfe lower than a comicall actor.
Id. Ammianus, fol. 321.

It is a comicall subject, in sober sadnesse to crave pardon of what is amisse, and desire thee to suspend thy judgement, wink at small faults, or to be silent at least, but if thou likest, speake well of it, and wish me good success.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 407.

I am resolved howsoever in this tragi-comedy of loue, to act severall parts, some satyrically, some comically, some in a mixt tone, as the subject I haue in hand giues occasion, and present scene shall require or offer itself. Id. Ib.

As that Syracusian in a tempest, when all ponderous things were to be exonerated out of the ship, quia maximum pondus erat, flung his wife into the sea. But this I confesse is comically spoken and so I pray you take it. Id. Ib. fol. 562.

He [Daniel Whithy] was suspended, and at length made a pretended recantation, which cost him nothing but the pleasure of outwitting his governors, by a part acted in a comicall way.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon., ii. fol. 1071.

When I first designed this play I found, or thought I found, somewhat so moving in the serious part of it, and so pleasant in the comick, as might deserve a more ordinary care in both.
Dryden. Spanish Friar, Dedication.

For it [the metre] can plainly be no other than a careless and looser Iambic, such as our language naturally runs into, even in conversation, and of which we are not without examples, in our old and best writers for the comic stage.
Hurd. Works. On the Idea of Universal Poetry.

That our three heroes should advance,
And read their comical romance,
How rich a feast, what royal fare,
We for our readers might prepare.
Churchill. The Ghost, book iii.

COMITIAL, Lat. comitialis ab antiquo comire, for coire; to come together, to assemble.

Paullus Manutius is of opinion, that there were certain days on which the senate might regularly be assembled, and others, on which it could not: and that these last were called comitial days, and marked under that name in the kalendars, as days wholly destined and set apart by law, for the assemblies of the people.
Middleton. On the Roman Senate, part ii. sec. 4.

The Roman Comitia, or General Popular Assemblies were of three kinds: Curiata, Centuriata, and Tributa; and in these, decisions were made by a majority of the Curiæ, Centuries, and Tribes respectively. The Roman people was divided by Romulus into three Tribes, each of which was subdivided into three Curiæ. In the first ages, therefore, of the Roman State, all public business was transacted in the Comitia Curiata, or Comitia, as they were simply called before the introduction of the other assemblies rendered distinction necessary. These assemblies were convoked by the King, and after the dissolution of Monarchy, by one of the principal Magistrates. When the Commons obtained the privilege of having Tribunes and Ædiles, they were at first elected in the Comitia Curiata; but after this privilege had been transferred to the Comitia Tributa, the Curiata fell into disuse, and were only assembled for the creation of the Curio Maximus, or Superintendant of the Curiæ, for appointing the Flamines, for ratifying adoptions, witnessing wills, for ceremonies relating to inheritance, and for the investiture of Magistrates with military command, which could only be done by this assembly. But so entire was the virtual expiration of the Comitia Curiata in the time of Cicero, that the laws relating to the military offices of Magistrates, were passed as matter of form by the thirty Lictors, who summoned the Curiæ, as their respective Representatives. In these Comitia it was not a sufficient qualification for a vote, that a person belonged to a particular Curia, unless he resided in that part of the city assigned to the Curia itself. COMITIA.

Under the government of Servius Tullius a general Census of the Roman population took place, in which the name, age, and property of every member of the State was publicly recorded. According to the valuation then made of their property, all Roman subjects were divided into six classes; and each class, except the last, into a certain number of Centuries, or hundreds, as the name implies; but the number included in a Century fluctuated afterwards. The first class consisted of ninety-eight Centuries; eighteen of Equites, and eighty of Pedites,—forty of which were juniors, between the ages of seventeen and forty-six, who were compelled, if necessary, to serve in military expeditions, and forty of seniors, who were required to take charge of the city. To these were attached, according to Livy, two Centuries of military engineers; but Dionysius of Halicarnassus refers them to the second class. To whichever they might belong, it is probable that they were considered rather in the light of attendants on the class than actual members of it. The first class possessed 100,000 lbs. of brass, between £300. and £400. sterling. They were called Classici by way of eminence. The second class consisted of such whose fortunes were below 100,000, and above 75,000 lbs. of brass; these were divided equally, like the first, into juniors and seniors, and formed twenty Centuries. Those who composed the third class were possessed of 50,000 lbs. of brass, and were also distributed into twenty Centuries. The fourth class possessed 25,000 lbs. of brass, and also formed twenty centuries. The fifth class possessed 11,000 lbs. of brass, and formed thirty Centuries. "In his," says Livy, "Accensi cornicines tibicinesque in tres Centurias distributi," whereupon Crevier is much perplexed to discover who were the "Accensi." It is probable that "accensi," is the participle from accenseo, and signifies that in the classification of the Census the Corneteers and Pipers were included in the fifth class. Dionysius makes mention of these two descriptions only, except that he reads Σάλπιστραι, Trumpeters, for Tibicines, which has, on that account, been supposed to be a corruption of Tubicines. These two denominations are referred by Dionysius to the fourth class, and are considered to be two separate Centuries. All persons whose property was less than that of the fifth class were comprehended in the sixth class, which, though more numerous than any of the others, formed also but one Century, and was divided into Proletarii and Capite Censi, the last mentioned of which were, as the term implies, in the lowest stage of indigence. It is plain from this distribution that all the power in the Comitia Centuriata resided in the Aristocracy.

The Centuries were assembled in Comitia for the purpose of electing Magistrates, enacting laws, trying State delinquents, and declaring war. In the first case alone the Interrex could preside; but in this and in all other cases the Comitia might be holden by the Dictator or a Consul, or in his absence by the Prætor. The Consuls determined between themselves which COMITIA. should hold the Comitia either by lot or agreement. Seventeen days notice of the day of assembly was given to the people, although in the case of creating Magistrates this might sometimes be dispensed with, as when Fabius Maximus convoked the Comitia for the last legal day. (Liv. xxiv. 7.) On the day appointed, the people marched to the Campus Martius in military array, it not being allowed to hold a military assembly within the city walls. In later times, however, when the necessity for a state of perpetual vigilance no longer existed, the form of military order was thought sufficiently maintained by a guard posted in the Janiculum, on which hill a standard was erected, the removal of which indicated the dissolution of the Comitia. Not that the Campus Martius is always mentioned as the place of assembly. On the contrary the Comitia are commonly stated to be held in the Comitium. Of this word little that is certain can be affirmed. That there was a building under that name near the Forum cannot be doubted, for Livy (xxvii. 36) informs us that it was roofed in u. c. 545, and Suetonius says that Julius Cæsar expended great sums upon its repair, (x.) It is probable that the name was afterwards transferred to the whole larger space which the increasing population of Rome made necessary for their meetings.

The presiding Magistrate having pitched a tent, observed the omens under the direction of an Augur; if these were unfavourable, the Comitia were postponed; if otherwise, the President took his seat in the curule chair on a raised place or hustings, called Tribunal, and opened the business of the day by a prayer dictated by the Augur, after which he addressed the people on the object of the meeting.

When the votes were to be taken, the people were ordered to separate to their Centuries. Originally the Equites were called out first; then the Centuries of the first class. If these agreed, the measure was adopted, and the business proceeded no further. But as this regulation threw a preponderance of power into the hands of the Aristocracy, the Commons afterwards obtained that the order of the Centuries should be determined by lot; the first so designated voting first, and the rest following in the order of their classes. The first century was called Centuria Prærogativa. When the order of the Centuries had been determined, they were called out regularly, and as they were called, they were sent into an enclosure, termed Septum or Ovile, to which they passed up a narrow passage of boards called Pons, and here the suffrages were taken. The votes were given orally, till in the 614th year of the city, A. Gabinius, Tribune of the Commons, procured a law to be passed, whereby in conferring honours, the Centuriæ should vote by ballot; and in sixteen years after, by different laws, this mode of voting had become universal. If the votes of a Century were equally divided, that Century was not reckoned, except in capital cases, in which it was accounted in favour of the accused.

Before a law was submitted to these Comitia, it was necessary that it should have the approval of the Senate; and it was then exposed publicly for three days, in order that the people might have an opportunity of reading and considering it, before they were called on to decide. When a Dictator moved a law, these formalities might be dispensed with, as in the instance of Mamercus Æmilianus, who moved that the Censors, who were before elected every five years, should be chosen every eighteeen months, which law was carried on the following day. The same publicity was necessary in the indictment of a State criminal. COMITIA.

Besides a failure in the auspices, the Comitia might be dissolved if any person present was seized with epilepsy, hence called Morbus Comitialis; if a Tribune of the Commons uttered the word Veto; if a storm arose during the assembly; or if the standard were taken down from the Janiculum.

When Tribes are mentioned in the Comitia Centuriata, (Liv. x. 13,) it is supposed that, after the Centuries were included in the Tribes, the Tribes first cast lots, and that the Tribe which first came out was called the Prærogativa Tribus; and then that the Centuries of that Tribe cast lots which should be the Prærogativa Centuria. Others think, that in this case the names of Tribes and Centuries are put promiscuously the one for the other. Nevertheless Cicero calls Centuria, pars Tribûs, and that, which is remarkable, in speaking of the Comitia Tributa. (Pro Planc. xx.)

It was not necessary that those who voted at these Comitia should belong to any particular quarter of the city; it being sufficient that they should belong to some particular Century.

The three Tribes of Romulus, Ramnenses, Tatienses, and Luceres, according as they were of Roman, Sabine, or foreign extraction, were increased to six by Tarquin I., who made two Tribes of each descent. But Servius Tullius adopted a different division, and arranged all the citizens in four Tribes, named according to the quarters of the city which they inhabited; Palatina, Suburrana, Collina, and Esquilina. A similar division was at the same time made of all the Roman territory, but into how many Tribes the country was divided is not sufficiently clear. It seems probable, however, that the number was sixteen. We learn from Livy that in the year of the city 259, the number of Tribes was made twenty-one, apparently by the addition of the Tribus Claudia; and this is his first notice of the number of Tribes after the institution of Servius, except in the statement (lib. xliii.) that in his own time they amounted to thirty-five. The whole number of Tribes, therefore, according to the institution of Servius, appears to have been twenty, which gives sixteen as the amount of the Country Tribes. Dionysius of Halicarnassus, however, expressly asserts that Servius created thirty-one Tribes.

This distinction, which at first was merely chorographical, became afterwards political; and it was by no means necessary that a member of a particular Tribe should inhabit a particular division of the territory. Fabius obtained the surname of Maximus for collecting into the City Tribes all the lower orders of people who had formerly been distributed through the Country Tribes by Appius Claudius; and the Censors in general had the power of removing any person from his Tribe, and transferring him to another considered less honourable.

The Tribes were first assembled in Comitia in the year of the city 263, for the trial of Coriolanus. But the dignity and power of the Comitia Tributa received considerable augmentation in the year 282, by the law which Publilius Volero, Tribune of the Commons, procured, after considerable tumult, to be passed; and by which it was enacted that the Magistrates of the Commons should be elected by this assembly. In this were also elected the Ædiles and Quæstors, and all provincial Magistrates, as Proconsuls, Proprætors, &c., and even the Pontifex Maximus. In the year 650, Cn. Domitius

Ahenobarbus, Tribune of the Commons, introduced a law, whereby the other Pontifices and inferior Priests were chosen at this assembly. In the election of Priests only seventeen Tribes voted; these were chosen by lot, and a majority of them determined the question. The Comitia Tributa were considered eminently the Assembly of the Commons; and all business affecting the interests of that class was discussed in them. They had also cognizance of criminal trials, provided they were not capital. But if a person accused of a capital crime was absent on the day of his trial, they could pass sentence of banishment on him; as we find they did in the case of Coriolanus and some others.

The same preliminary observances took place at the Comitia Tributa as at the Centuriata, only it was not necessary that the laws submitted should have the previous sanction of the Senate, nor that the augurial ceremonies should be performed. But a storm, as in the other Comitia, could suspend the business. If a Tribune or a Plebeian Ædile was to be elected, a Tribune presided; if a Curule Ædile, or other inferior Magistrate, the presiding officer was either a Dictator, Consul, or military Tribune. If a Priest, the Consul only: and the election generally took place in the Campus Martius. But when a law was to be passed, a Consul, Prætor, or Tribune of the Commons presided; and the meeting was most commonly held in the Forum; but sometimes in the Circus Flaminius. The laws passed in these assemblies were called Plebiscita. In the year of the city 306, when the power of the Plebiscita over the Aristocracy was doubtful, the Consuls L. Valerius and M. Horatius procured a law to be passed at the Comitia Centuriata, whereby the Plebiscita became obligatory on the whole Roman population.

The privileges of these Comitia were curtailed by Julius Cæsar, who allowed them only to divide equally the rights of election with himself; and although, during the Civil wars consequent on his death, the Commons regained their privileges, they were resumed by Augustus; and the whole power of the Comitia was afterwards taken away by Tiberius. Caligula attempted to restore the rights of election to the Commons, but the nature of the Imperial government could not permit this to be of long duration.

The Comitia Calata, a term we sometimes meet with, signifies no more than Comitia; calata being the participle from the old verb calo, (καλέω, καλῶ) I call or summon. It is more usually, however, applied to the Curiata; because the word Comitia, simply, or with this participle, was a sufficient distinction before the institution of the other Comitia.

COMMA, COMMA'TISM. } Gr. κόμμα, incisum, from κόπτειν, incidere, to cut into. From commaticus, which St. Jerome applies to Hosea, "Osee commaticus est," Horsley appears to have adopted commatism.

You search verie narowly when you misse not a comma, but you knowe what negator signifieth.

Whitgift. Defence, fol. 341.

I will produce a verse and half of his, in one of his eclogues to justify my opinion; and with commas after every word to shew that he has given almost as many lashes, as he has written syllables.

Dryden. On the Origin and Progress of Satire.

The parallelism in many parts of Hosea is imperfect, interrupted and obscure; an effect perhaps of the commatism of the style.

Bishop Horsley. Hosea, fol. 43.

COMMAGENA, hodie KAMAKH, a country on the northern extremity of Syria; between the Euphrates and the range of Taurus and Amanus. Its boundaries are variously given by Strabo, (xvi.,) Pliny, (v. 21,) and Ammianus Marcellinus. It appears to have continued a separate Kingdom till the time of Vespasian; but Domitian finally reduced it to a Province, under the name Euphratesia. The Commageni haruspices are noted by Juvenal, (vi. 550,) for their favour with the Roman Ladies. Samosata, hodie Semisal, the birthplace of Lucian, at the apex of a vast reach of the Euphrates, was its Capital. Pliny (xi. 108) notes the singular combustible properties of the maltha (naphtha) produced by a lake in the neighbourhood of this city, by which the inhabitants defended their walls when besieged by Lucullus. He mentions also a preparation called Commagenum, made in this country from the fat of geese mixed with cinnamum, casia, white pepper, and the herb Commagene, (Nardus Syriacus,) which having been buried for a certain time in snow is of marvellous efficacy in bruises, spasms, cramps, &c. (x. 28, xxix. 13.) According to the same authority the gall-nuts of Commagena were the best in the world, (xvi. 9, xxiv. 5.)

COMMA'ND, v.
COMMA'ND, n.
COMMA'NDABLE,
COMMANDA'TORY,
COMMA'NDEDNESS,
COMMA'NDER,
COMMA'NDING,
COMMA'NDMENT,
COMMA'NDRESS.

Fr. commander; It. commandare, jubere, imperare; from the Latin con, and mandare; q. d. in manus dare; so Gr. ἐγχειρίζειν, in manus dare, tradere, committere.

To give (any thing) into the hands of another, to deliver, to commit to the care of another; sc. for some expressed purpose, with directions, with orders for a particular expressed purpose; and thus

To have under direction or government, power or authority, dominion or subjection; to order, govern, direct, controul.

Said Rauf tille ilkon, or þei ta þataile went
Of þe bisshop Thurston haf I comandment,
Þe clerkes for to tech.

R. Brunne, fol. 115.

And he seyde to hem, where is youre feith? whiche dredynge wondriden: and seiden togider, who gessist thou is this? for he comaundith to the wyndis and to the see: and thei obeyen to him.

Wiclif. Luke, ch. viii.

And he sayde vnto thē: where is youre fayth? they feared and wondred saying one to another: what felow is this, for he cōmañdeth bothe the windes and water, & they obey him.

Bible. Anno 1551.

But finally he wēt into the Isle of Crete, where he continued and dyed, commaundynge at his death, that his bones shulde be cast in to the see, leaste if they were broughte to Lacedemonia his countrye, the people shulde thynke them selfe of theyr othe and promise dyscharged.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book ii. fol. 126.

They that wyll leue the comawndements of God undon, and wyll followe and doe voluntarie dedys, which were neither commaunded by God, nor yet by the churche, are greatlie to be blamyd and are to be punyshed.

Strype. Records. Dr. Crome's Declaration, &c. No. 10.

I mote hir louen till I dye.
And thus I breke as by that wey
Hir hestes, and her commandynges;
But truly in none other thynges.

Gower. Conf. Am., book i. fol. 15.

And lastly, what great exploits they performed vnder the conduct of Hubert of Burrough, as likewise against the Welshmen, vpon 200 French ships, and vnder the commaund of Captaine Henry Pay.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Preface.

COM-MAND.

And thei axiden him and seiden, commaundour whanne schulen these thingis be? Wiclif. Luke, ch. xxi.

Be ghe my foloweris as I am of Crist. And britheren I preise ghou that bi alle thingis ghe be myndeful of me, and as I bitook to ghou my comaundementis ghe holden.

Id. Corynthians, ch. xi.

Why doothe hee excommunicate, and commaunde to be taken as a Heathen and a Pagan, any Christian prince, that renounceth his authority. Jewell. Defence of the Apologie.

Seeing then that God alone is Lord of the soul and spirit, he alone can bind them by commandment; seeing God alone can take notice of the sins of the heart, and is onely able to inflict the punishment, namely, everlasting death and damnation, the proper punishment which the conscience feareth; he alone may command upon pain of eternal damnation.

Mede. Works, book i. disc. 34.

" Ah! yet," said he, " yet, stubborn king! repent,
Whilst thus unarmed I stand,
Ere the keen sword of God fill my commanded hand;
Suffer but yet thyself, and thine to live."

Cowley. The Plagues of Egypt.

Though his valour might perhaps have given a just pretension to one of the first charges in an army, it could not certainly be a sufficient ground for a title to the command of three nations.

Id. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

Mov'd with a kingly wrath, his strict command
He issues forth t' assemble all the land;
He threatens high, and disobedient they
Wak'd by such princely terrours, learnt t obey.

Id. The Davideis, book iv.

How commandatory the apostolical authority was, is best discernible by the Apostle's mandates unto the churches upon several occasions, as to the Thessalonians,— We command the brethren. Bishop Morton. Episcopacy Asserted, fol. 73.

If it were true, which is here said by the diatribist, that the leviticalness or ceremoniality of the offerings seems to lie here, viz. in the uncommandedness or freedom to offer or not to offer;— then sure the leviticalness, &c. would not extend to the commandedness of the other offerings, and consequently the commanded offerings under the law would not be levitical: which is palpably false.

Hammond. Works. On Cawdrey's Diatribe, vol. ii. fol. 195.

Who sees an army all in rank advance,
But deems a wise commander is in place
Which leadeth on that brave victorious dance.

Davies. On Dancing.

Which is not easily performed by man; it requireth not only a broad foot, but a pliable flexure of joints and commandible disposure of all parts of progression.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. i.

With their lawes, and executions, their promotions and preferments: their biddings; and commandings; threatnings and reuengings, &c. Fox. Martyrs, fol. 17.

Every spectator must learn of him, as it is his profession, he sets up school for it, his practices are so commandingly exemplary, that they do even force and ravish the most maidenly tender conscience.

Hammond. Sermons, vol. iv. fol. 506.

For the performing of these workes, he had given commandement that all prisoners wheresoever should be transported into Italie: and that no person attaint and conuict of anie wicked act, should be condemned otherwise, but to worke thereat.

Holland. Suetonius, fol. 194.

Thou great commandress, that dost move
Thy sceptre o'er the crown of love,
And through his empire, with the awe
Of thy chaste beams, dost give the law.

Carew. A New Year's Gift to the Queen.

The goddess we adore Dea Moneta, Queen money, to whom we daily sacrifice, which steers our hearts, hands, affections, all: the most powerful goddesse, by whom we are reared, depressed, elevated, esteemed, the sole commandresse of our actions.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy. To the Reader, fol. 37.

Where there is a sincere and honest endeavour to please God and keep his commandments, although persons fail in the manner of doing it, God will accept of such as righteous.

Stillingfleet. Sermon, 3. vol. iv.

COM-MAND. — COMME-MORATE.

O! sovereign of the willing soul,
Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
Enchanting shell! the sullen cares,
And frantic passions, hear thy soft control:
On Thracia's hills the lord of war
Has curb'd the fury of his car,
And dropp'd his thirsty lance at thy command.

Gray. The Progress of Poesy.

In his profession, Sir Sidney Smith might be considered as a distinguished person, if any person could well be distinguished in a service in which scarce a commander can be named without putting you in mind of some action of intrepidity, skill, and vigilance, that has given them a fair title to contend with any man in any age. Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

COMMANDERY, Præceptorium, a manor, or chief messunge, with lands and tenures appertaining thereunto, bestowed upon a military order; so that he who had the government of it was entitled a Commander. Thus Eagle, or Egle, in Lincolnshire, was granted in the reign of Stephen as a Commandery to the Knights Templars. It was afterwards possessed by the Knights Hospitallers; and though this Order was deprived of it at the Reformation by Henry VIII. it still retains the name of a Commandery.

COMMARK, commarchia, confine, limes. Gallis, frontiere, comarque. Du Cange. Marches, from the A. S. mearc, signum, limitaneum, terminus, a bound; from A. S. mearc-an, to mark.

Sir Knight, the boy which I chastise, is mine own servant, and keepeth for me a flock of sheep in this commark.

Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. i. fol. 24.

And the best of it is, that it is publickly bruted about this commarke, that those which surprised us, were gally-slaves.

Id. Ib., vol. ii. fol. 31.

COMMATERIAL, of the same matter. See MATTER.

The instances that give any likelihood of restoring teeth in age, are the late comming of teeth in some; and the renewing of the beaks in birds, which are commaterial with teeth.

Bacon. Natural History, Cent. viii. sec. 757.

COMMEASURABLE. The common word now is Commensurable, q. v.

She being now removed by death a commeasurable grief took a full possession of him as joy had done.

Walton. Life of Donne.

COMMELINA, in Botany, a genus of the class Triandria, order Monogynia, natural order Commelineæ. Generic character: corolla, petals six, nectaries three, cruciform, inserted in their proper filaments; capsules, sub-globose, three-celled.

Of this genus, named in honour of Commelins, brothers, celebrated Dutch Botanists, seventy-nine species have been discovered, all tropical plants.

COMME'MORATE, v. / COMME'MORABLE, / COMMEMORA'TION, / COMME'MORATIVE, / COMME'MORATIVELY, / COMME'MORATORY. — Con, and memor; from memini, preterperfect of the obsolete meneo, or meno;—and meno, the Gr. μενω, maneo. The contract, μναω, Lennep observes, a notione manendi ad memoriam eximiè translatum fuit; qua nempe res veluti custoditæ permanent.

To stay, or cause to stay, to keep or preserve, sc. in the mind;—to manifest, show or declare that we keep or preserve in the mind;—by some public act to solemnize or celebrate any thing preserved in the mind.

The lambe or feaste is called the Lorde's passeouer; and yet was neither the lambe nor the feaste his passyng ouer: but the sign and commemoration of his passyng by.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 469.

In the spirituall temple then, vnder the moste highest prieste Christe, there shall not nowe bee giuen distribution of rawe meate out of the flesche of calfes, of goates, or of shepe: but of the precious bodye and bloud of Jesus Christe, whiche he hath once for all offred, to thende that it maye al tymes, be spirituallye taken of his enoynted, renewing vnto themselues after a certaine manier, the death of their head & king by that thankefull commemoracion. Udall. Luke, ch. xxiv.

All these testimonies have been express for our purpose, That the thanksgivings and prayers of the church in the Christian sacrifice were offered unto the Divine majestie through Christ commemorated in the symbols of bread and wine, as by a medium whereby we find acceptance.
Mede. Works, book ii. fol. 467.

After whose death [Metrodorus] making in one of his letters a kind commemoration of the happiness which they two had enjoyed together, he adds at last, that he thought it no disparagement to those great felicities of their life that, in the midst of the most talked-of and talking country in the world, they had lived so long, not only without fame, but almost without being heard of.
Cowley. Essay Third. Of Obscurity.

That rest which God superadded, being only commemorative of their deliverance from the Egyptian servitude, was not moral, nor perpetual. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. ii.

The breaking and eating of the bread is a communication of the body of Christ, a sacrifice commemorative of Christ's offering up his body for us, and making us partakers, or communicating to us the benefits of that bread of life, strengthening, and giving us grace.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. book vi. sec. 4.

The sixth and last thing to be proved was, That Christ is offered in this sacrifice commemoratively only, and not otherwise.
Mede. Works, book ii. fol. 478.

We are called upon to commemorate a revolution, as surprising in its manner, as happy in its consequences, as full every way of wonder, and of all the marks of a Divine contrivance, as any age or country can shew. Atterbury. Sermon, 7. vol. i.

So that this sacrament was designed to be a standing commemoration of the death and passion of our Lord till he should come to judgment; and consequently the obligation that lies upon Christians to the observation of it is perpetual, and shall never cease to the end of the world. Tillotson. Sermon, 25.

All legal sacrifices being only tipes of his, and therefore to have an end, and expire together with him, our Lord was pleased to institute this, not for a propitiatory sacrifice, as the Papists absurdly imagine, but as a commemorative sacrifice, to put his church always in mind of that which he then offered, by that one oblation of himself for the sins of mankind.
Beveridge. Sermon, 54.

The succeeding paschal sacrifices, though commemoratory of the first, yet varied something from it.
Hooper. On Lent, fol. 271.

You will pardon me, I hope, for speaking in this advantageous manner of my own conduct; but as you advise me to alleviate my present uneasiness by a retrospect of my past actions, I will confess, that, in thus commemorating them, I find great consolation.
Melmoth. Cicero. Letter, 5. book ii.

The commonwealth which acts uniformly upon those principles; and which after abolishing every festival of religion, chooses the most flagrant act of murderous regicide treason for a feast of eternal commemoration, and which forces all her people to observe it—This I call regicide by establishment.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

COMME'NCE, v. } Fr. commencer; It. cominciare;
COMME'NCEMENT. } traced thus by Menage, con initiare, cominitiare, comintiare, cominciare.

To make the first motion; to take the first step, to begin.

But the demaunds of any man whatsoeuer propounded in this regard, are and ought to be altogether frustrate and voide, and all actions which may or shall be commenced by occasion of the sayd goods arrested, are to be extinct and of none effect.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Richard II.

We said in general, that if his ho. continued his good mynd towards the finishing & perfiting of that college, as his ho. hath to the beginning and commencement, your gr. had so dysposed al things there, as it shuld schortely be brought to the desired perfitnes, althow the same is & shal be to your gr. inestimable charge.
Strype. Records. The King's Ambassadors to Cardinal Wolsey.

Here the anthem doth commence;—
Love and constancy is dead;
Phenix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.
Shakspeare. The Passionate Pilgrim, xx.

Being honourably brought into the Forum, the day of his first plea and commencement, hee promised publiquely for the people a congiarie, and donative for the souldiours.
Holland. Suetonius, fol. 182.

On the 29th, the queen removed to St. James's, passing through the Park, and took her barge at Whitehall, and so to Richmond, in order to her progress; which was chiefly commenced to meet her beloved, the prince of Spain.
Strype. Memoirs. Queen Mary, Anno 1534.

In the last lecture the nature and origin of the Hebrew elegy was explained; the form and commencement of that species of poetry was traced into the solemn dirges which are chanted at funerals by the professed mourners.
Lowth. On the sacred Poetry of the Hebrews, lec. 23.

COMME'ND, v.
COMME'ND, n.
COMME'NDABLE,
COMME'NDABLENESS,
COMME'NDABLY,
COMMENDA'TION,
COMME'NDATOR,
COMME'NDATORY, adj.
COMME'NDATORY, n.
COMME'NDER,
COMME'NDMENT.

(See COMMAND.) Lat. commendare; to give any thing into the hands of another; to deliver or commit to the care; and thus,—to intrust and to declare trustworthy; worthy of approbation, of high esteem, of favourable attention.

For he that wit and reason can,
It sit hym wel, that he trauail
Upon suche thyng, which might auaile,
For idelship is nought commended.
Gower. Conf. Am., book iv. fol. 76.

He that glorieth have glorie in the Lord, for not he that commendith hymself is preued, but whom God commendith.
Wiclif. 2 Corynthians, ch. x.

The sonne in lawe his stepdame being dead,
Began her heirce with garlands to commend.
Turbervile. Of the cruell hatred of Step-mothers.

A man may, as it were on moūtayne or place of espiall, beholde on euery syde farre of, measurynge and estemyng euery thyng: and eyther pursewe it if it be commendable, or eschewe it yf it be noyfull. Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 84.

Wherfore suche printers in my mynde are not to be defrauded of their due commendation, who in pretermitting other light triflying pamflets of matter vnneedful, and impertinent, little seruing to purpose, less to necessitie, do employe their endeuour and workemanship chiefly to restore the fruitful workes and monumentes of auncient writers, and blessed martyrs.
Tyndall. Workes. Preface, fol. 1.

To him my muse made haste with every strain,
Whilst it was new and warm yet from the brain:
He lov'd my worthless rhymes, and, like a friend
Would find out something to commend.
Cowley. On the death of Mr. William Hervey.

1 LORD. He had need mean better than his outward show
Can any way speak in his just commend:
For by his rusty outside, he appears
To have practis'd more the whipstock, than the lance.
Shakspeare. Pericles, act ii. sc. 2.

COM-MEND. — COMMEN-DAM.

They [the Druids] taught the soul's immortality by propagation, because they thought that by means of this apprehension men were notably spurred forward and whetted on to the adventuring and enterprising of commendable actions, through the contempt of death. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 20.

After our harty commendations. Whereas, by occasion of some matter of that church lately opened before us, we have understood there is lack of an ordinary reader, very requisite and commendable in al cathedral churches, both for the instruction of others, and conference among themselves, and good example to the rest of the diocees.

Strype. Life of Whitgift. Minutes of the Lords Letters, &c.

Neither have there beene wanting such as haue written, and that very commendably the liues of particular men, eminent for vertue, or learning, or place.

Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 252.

——————————— I hear of
Your visits, and your loving commendation
To your heart's saint, Cleophila, a virgin
Of a rare excellence.

Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, act i. sc. 3.

And amongest all other articles this was concluded and appoynted, that no Englishman should enter into Scotland, without letters commendatory of theyr awne souereigne lorde, or saue conduyte of his warden of the marches.

Grafton. Henry VIII. The seventeenth Yere

I doe ensure your ladiships, he is a gentlemen of a very worthy desert, and of a most bountifull nature.—You must shew and insinuate yourselfe responsible, and equivalent now to my commendment. Ben Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, act iv. sc. 3.

It would be a work truly worthy of a British parliament, to begin this commendable undertaking, [the reduction of the National debt] and to make such a progress therein, as, with a strict regard to public faith, and private property, may pave the way to this great and desireable end.

Hoadly. Works. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 72.

Whatever did but bear upon the image of God, and the superscription of the holy Jesus would need no other commendatories to our affection, but would upon that account alone be infinitely dear and precious to us.

Sharp. Works. Sermon, 1. vol. i.

To sooth and flatter such persons, would be just as if Cicero had spoke commendatories of Anthony, or made panegyricks upon Catiline. South. Sermon, 7. vol. viii.

Even my pen would refuse to be employ'd in such trash, were it not to chastise our writer's confidence; who, unqualified to understand one single page of Cicero, presumes to set up for his commender and patron. Bentley. Of Free-thinking.

I would rather be commended to posterity by the elegant and amiable Muses, than by the satyric sister, politely called by an eminent author, "the least engaging of the Nine."

Smart. Letter, to a friend at the University of Cambridge.

He who, though undeservedly, hath lost his reputation, hath lost many opportunities of doing service to mankind: what comes from him though commendable and profitable in itself, is often suspected, slighted, and ill-received.

Jortin. Discourses on the Christian Religion, vol. i. fol. 60.

COMMENDAM, in Canon Law, the holding a Benefice, which, being void, is commended to the trust and charge of some Clerk, till it is again provided with a regular Incumbent; thus, when a Parson is preferred to a Bishoprick, there is avoidance by the promotion of any preferment he may have had; but if the King by dispensation gives him power to retain the Benefice, notwithstanding his promotion, he is said to hold it in Commendam. The King being the cause of avoidance, on promotion to dignities, and the presentations thereon belonging to him, it is no unusual thing where Bishopricks are small, for the King to permit the party promoted to hold their Benefices in Commendam, for the better support of the dignity of a Bishop; this permission must be given before consecration, as after it the Benefice becomes void. A Commendam founded on the statute 25 Henry VIII. ch. 31, is a dispensation from the supreme power to hold a Benefice contra jus positivum. There are several sorts of Commendam: such as a Commendam semestris, which is for the benefit of the Church, without regard to the commendatory; being only a provisional act of the Ordinary for supplying the vacation of six months, in which time the Patron is to present his Clerk,—this is only a sequestration of the Cure and profits, until such time as the Clerk is presented; a Commendam retinere, which is for the Bishop to retain Benefices on his preferment, these are granted on the King's mandate to the Archbishop, expressing his consent, which continues the incumbency, rendering institution unnecessary; a Commendam recipere is to take a Benefice de novo in the Bishop's gift, or in the gift of some Patron whose consent must be obtained. Commendams are seldom granted, except to Bishops; they may be either temporary or perpetual, according to the circumstances under which thay are granted.

COMME'NSAL, COMMENSA'LITY, COMMENSA'TION. Con, and mensa. "Fr. commensal; a Companion at table." Cotgrave.

O where haste thou be so long commensal, that haste so mikel eaten of the potages of foryetfulnesse and dronken so of ignorance that the olde souking, which thou haddest of me arne amaistred and lorne fro all maner of knowinge.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, book i.

Especially thereby to avoid community with the Gentiles upon promiscous commensality: or to divert them from the idolatry of Ægypt, whence they came, they were enjoyned to eat the Gods of Ægypt in the food of sheep and oxon.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xxv.

When Daniel would pollute himself with the diet of the Babylonians, he probably declined Pagan commensation or to eat of meats forbidden to the Jews.

Id. Miscellaneous Tracts, fol. 15.

COMME'NSURATE, v. COMME'NSURATE, adj. COMME'NSURATELY, COMMENSURA'TION, COMME'NSURABLE, COMME'NSURABLENESS, COMMENSURABI'LITY. Con, and mensura. He is said to measure, who examines what may be the magnitude of any thing. Vossius. To be, or cause to be, of the same or equal measure, or dimensions; of the same or equal capacity; proportioned or equivalent, or adequate to.

How fitly and suitably commensurated and proportioned each to other are these two.

Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part iii. fol. 81.

Yet can we not thus commensurate the sphere of Trismegistus, or sum up the unsuccessive and stable duration of God.

Sir Thomas Brown, book vii. ch. iii.

O let us be sure then, our confidence, our claims to heaven, improve not above their proportion, that we preserve this symmetry of the parts of grace, that our hope be but commensurate to our sincerity, our daringness to our duty.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. fol. 554.

For the law of sin and the law of the mind, that is, grace in us, and sin in us, are adequately and commensurately opposite, and contrary in every soul in which grace is wrought.

Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part iv. fol. 277.

Though God is not bettered by any thing we can give or do, all our services being to him as nothing; yet he is pleased to esteem them by their commensuration to us, if in respect of our abilities they are the best.

Wilkins. On the Gift of Prayer, ch. ii.

For as the nature of faith is, so is the nature of heresie, contraries having the same proportion and commensuration.

Taylor. The Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 2.

A strait and a curve line may perhaps be brought by immediate commensuration, nearer to equality than any given difference; but the equality can never be brought to a point.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book i. ch. iii.

And the reason of it is clearly this, because the power of God is set awork by his will, and both these are commensurable and proportionable; and so far as the will of God goes, so far his power goes. Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part iii. fol. 87.

Their poems were made at first with intention to have them sung, as well epic as dramatic, (which custom hath been long time laid aside, but began to be revived in part of late years in Italy) and could not be made commensurable to the voice or instruments in prose. Hobbs. On Davenant's Preface.

To make the commensurableness yet nearer as in the matter of promulgation, the people of all other churches, have but a promulgation at second hand by hearsay; and have no interest of presence at all; so answerably let these elders of other churches, have but the like share in that power, and the controversie is at an end. Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part iv. fol. 127.

We can, I think, have no positive idea of any space or duration which is not made up, and commensurate to repeated numbers of feet or yards, or days, and years, which are the common measures, whereof we have the ideas in our minds, and whereby we judge of the greatness of these sort of quantities.

Locke. Of Human Understanding, book i. ch. xvii.

It confounds the greatest subtilties of speculation, with the riddles of God's omnipresence; that can spread a single individual substance through all spaces; and yet without any commensuration of parts to any, or circumscription within any, though totally in every one. South Sermons, vol. i. fol. 20.

If such a supply should be productive, in a degree commensurate to its object, it must also be productive of much vexation, and much oppression. Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

If we say, the diameter of the square is incommensurable with its side, we do not intend by (is) that it is incommensurable now, having been formerly commensurable, or being to become so hereafter. Harris. Hermes, ch. vi. book i.

CO'MMENT, v. Co'MMENT, n. Co'MMENTARY, COMMENTA'TOR, COMME'NTER, COMMENTI'TIOUS. Comminisci: dictum a con and mente; cum finguntur in mente quæ non sunt. Varro, lib. v. To comment, then, is, To find out, sc. the meaning of any doctrine; to explain it; to find out, examine and explain the meaning of another; to write notes, remarks, or observations upon any thing,—for the purpose of explaining.

For first for as the commētours yᵗ ye speake of, either theyr cōmentes tell vs the same tale yᵗ the texte dothe, or else another. If thei tell me the same I beleue them onely because yᵉ text saith yᵉ same. And if thei tel me another, than beleue I thē not at all, nor nought I should, except I should beleue meane better than God. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 152.

Of these commentaries haue I taken both example to do thys thynge, and also counsell to vnderstande the texte, to none of them wholly addyct, but as I perceyued them alwayes agreynge to the scripture. Bale. Image, book i.

My first writing, whom I lyttle thought to fynd so studious cōmentours in yᵉ generaciō, yᵉ dyligēt reader shal alwayes fynd vndre this wurde Cēsura. Id. Apology, fol. 16.

[They] would soon forget God's very name or attributes, did they not daily repeat them over, (as school-boys their parts) and often comment on them by oaths and prophanations: and these are ἄθεοι, in the apostle's phrase, without God in the world.

Hammond. Works. Sermon, 7. vol. iv. fol. 606.

They have so disguised his philosophy by obscuring comments, that his [Aristotle] revived self would not own it.

Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatising, ch. xvii.

Every thing, saith Epictetus, hath two handles, the one to be held by, the other not, 'tis in our choice to take and leave whether we will (all which Simplicius, his commentator, hath illustrated by many examples) and 'tis in our own power, as they say, to make or marre ourselves.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 332.

——Silly, as any commenter goes by
Hard words or sense.

Donne. Satire, 2

In which, though there were many notable passages that might give much light to our history; yet so many commentitious fables were inserted, that they rendered even what truths he writ suspected.

Baker. Chronicle. Of the first known times of this Island.

[Our adversaries] willingly pass by that which is orthodoxal in them, and studiously cull out that which is commentitious, and best for their turns, not weighing the fathers in the balance of scripture, but scripture in the balance of the fathers.

Milton. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

That learned person was led into [it] by a former explication he had made of a parallel place in St. James; which I shall crave leave to produce at length, and to comment upon.

Atterbury. Sermon, 2 vol. i.

Poor Alma sits down between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplext,
The comment ruining the text.

Prior. Alma, can. 1.

And if the sense of any obscure passage in those holy books, be more cleared, or better ascertained to us than they were formerly, next to the blessing of God, we are obliged for it to the learning and industry of fallible commentators.

Sharp. Works. Sermon, 3. vol. vii.

Whose conduct is a comment to thy tongue,
So clear, the dullest cannot take it wrong.

Young. Satire, 3.

And that the coherence of the several parts may be the more distinctly seen, the commentary is rendered as concise as possible; some of the finer and less obvious connexions being more carefully observed and drawn out in the notes.

Hurd. Introduction. On Epistolary Writing.

Yet, on these equal terms, it can be no discredit to have aimed at some resemblance of one of the least of those merits, which shed their united honours on the name of the illustrious friend and commentator of Mr. Pope. Id. Ib.

The Catholics have laboured most in countries civilized; but, giving a commentitious system for the gospel of Christ, it is no wonder the Pagans should not be greatly disposed to change old fables for new. Warburton. The Divine Legation.

CO'MMERCE, v. Co'MMERCE, n. COMME'RCIAL, COMME'RCIALLY. Lat. commercium. Con, and merx, which Vossius derives from the Hebrew, and Martinius from μείρ-ειν, partiri, dividere, to part, separate or divide.

To divide or share, sc. mutually, each part of his own for part of another's; to exchange, (see the Example from A. Smith,) to bargain and sell; to trade or traffick; to have intercourse for purposes of trade or traffick; to have or hold intercourse—generally.

Blest marble giue me leaue t' approach and weepe,
These vowes to thee! for since great Talbot's gone
Down to thy silence, I commerce with none
But thy pale people.

Habington. Castara, part ii. el. 2.

Always beware you commerce not with bankrupts.

Ben Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, act i. sc. 2.

Come, but keep thy wonted state,
With even step, and musing gate;
And looks commercing with the skies;
Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes.

Milton. Il Penseroso, l. 39.

There must of necessity be some free intercourse with all men, otherwise the passages of publick commerce were quite cut of, and the common law of nations must needs fall.

Hale. Rem. part i. fol. 34.

COM-MERCE. — COMMI-LITANT.

If this commerce 'twixt heav'n and earth were not
Embarr'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us.
Donne. An Anatomy of the World.

Great orator! deare Talbot! still, to thee
May I an auditor attentive be:
And piously maintaine the same commerce
We had before.
Habington. Castara, part ii. el. 2.

He [Sir Andrew] is acquainted with commerce in all its parts, and will tell you that it is a stupid and barbarous way to extend dominion by arms; for true power is to be got by arts and industry. Spectator, No. 2.

The greatness of a state, and the happiness of its subjects, how dependent soever they may be supposed in some respects, are commonly allowed to be inseparable with regard to commerce: and as private men receive greater security, in the possession of their trade and riches from the power of the public, so the public becomes powerful in proportion to the opulence and extensive commerce of private men.
Hume. Of Commerce, part ii. ess. 1.

To view these animals in a commercial light, we must add, that the English were late before they engaged in the whale fishery: it appears by a set of queries, proposed by an honest merchant in the year 1575, in order to get information in the business, that we were at that time totally ignorant of it.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Common Whale.

Every man thus lives by exchanging, or becomes in some measure a merchant, and the society itself grows to be what is properly a commercial society.
A. Smith. Wealth of Nations, book i. ch. iv.

If you think that this participation was a loss, commercially considered, but that it has been compensated by the share which Scotland has taken in defraying the publick charge—I believe you have not very carefully looked at the publick accounts.
Burke. Two Letters to Gentlemen at Bristol.

COMMERSONIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Pentagynia, natural order Buttneriaceæ Generic character: calyx one-leaved, bearing the corolla; petals five; nectary five-parted; capsule five-celled, spiny.

One species, native of the Society Islands. Persoon.

COMMIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dioecia, order Monandria. Generic character: male catkin, obtuse scales enclosing a stamen; female catkin, proper calyx three-leaved, leaves acute, permanent; corolla none; germen superior; styles three; capsule three-lobed, three-celled, cell one-seeded

One species, a tree, native of Cochin-China. Lour. Fl. Coch.

COMMIGRATION, con, and migro, locum muto, to change place. Of uncertain Origin.

To change place, to move or pass from one place to another, in union or in company with others.

And it is a true observation which Ramus to this purpose hath, wee reade of diverse commigrations or remoualls of nations, and surely no lesse of arts and sciences might be obserued.
Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 38.

COMMILITANT, con, and miles, q. d. unus ex mille. Milites, because the legion was first formed of three thousand (trium millium,) and each tribe, Tatienses, Ramnenses, and Luceres, sent its thousand (millia singula) of soldiers, militum. Varro, lib. iv.

A fellow soldier.

Sir Roger Williams next (of both which Wales might vaunt)
His martial compeer then, and brave commilitant:
Whose conflicts, with the French and Spanish manly fought
Much honour to their names, and to the Britons brought.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 18.

COMMINATION, COMMI'NATORY. } Fr. and Sp. commination; Lat. minor, minatus. Of unsettled Etymology.

A denunciation of future ill; a threatening of punishment or vengeance. The Commination in the Book of Common Prayer, is entitled, "A Commination, or denouncing of God's anger and judgment against Sinners."

He wyll not faile to make fall vpon them the terrible commination and threate that the spirit speaketh of in the Apocalyps vnto the bysshope of Ephhesy. I wil come remoue thy candlestycke oute of hys place.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 897.

They which were not confident should giue the one half of their goods, and that for the space of three yeers togither: with terrible comminations to all them that did resist.
Fox. Martyrs, fol. 264.

Ouer and besides diuers other threatnings and comminatory wordes by you pronounced and vttered vnseemly, and far vnmeet to proceede out of the mouth of you that are in such roome & place as ye be in. Id. Ib. fol. 1205.

Jeroboham well saw that the throne and the altar must stand, or fall together, that a son of David could not have such power over the altar without an utter subversion of the government, of the succession; therefore is he thus galled with this comminatory prediction. Hall. Cont. Jeroboham, vol. i.

The French king might perceive after what good manner and fashion the king's grace had in a letter exhorted the emperor, allecting him first by doulce and pleasant introductions, adding afterwards matter sounding perfectly to sharpness and commination, to descend to the king's desire.
Strype. Memoirs. Henry VIII. Anno 1526.

The Service used by our Church "on the First day of Lent, and all other times as the Ordinary shall appoint," under the title of a COMMINATION, was introduced by the Reformers in lieu of the ceremony of sprinkling ashes on the heads of the Congregation on the First day of Lent, thence called Ash Wednesday. At first it was ordered for Ash Wednesday only, but on the review of the Common Prayer Book, the Rubric on this point, in consequence of an observation made by Bucer, was altered to its present form. From Archbishop Grindal's Visitation Articles, 1576, we learn that in those days this Service was read four times in the year: on Ash Wednesday; on one of the three Sundays next before Easter; on one of the three Sundays next before Whitsuntide; and on one of the two Sundays next before Christmas. The Ordinary now sometimes enjoins part of the office (from the 51st Psalm to the end,) to be read on days of solemn Fasting; otherwise it is only used on Ash Wednesday.

A public denunciation of curses upon Sinners was twice enjoined to Moses, (Deut. xi. 29, and xxvii.) and Joshua most religiously observed it, (Josh. viii. 33.) In pronouncing Amen at the end of the Comminatory clauses in the Service, we comply with the injunction from Deut. xxvii., and we express our assent to the truth of this proposition, namely, that God's curse is due to Sin. So that no Sinner wishes the curse may fall upon his own head, (as has sometimes been foolishly argued,) but simply notifies his agreement with a declaration of God, which is true, whether we agree to it or not; and the serious consideration of which this produced, may be likely to save us both from the commission and the consequences of the Sin which we admit is accursed.

COMMINGLE, A. S. mæng-an, mengan, to mix, to blend.

COM-INGLE.

——————And blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well co-mingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger,
To sound what stop she please.
Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 267.

COMMINU'TE, v. } Fr. comminuer; Lat. com-
COMMINU'TION, } minuere, comminutum; to les-
COMMI'NUIBLE, } sen. "Verbum fuit antiquum
COMMI'NUATE, v. } μίω, unde μίνω, μίννω; Lat. minuo, minuor, minutus." Schedius. As now applied, it seems to signify

To break or destroy the continuity; to separate into small parts; to crush or grind with the teeth or mandibles.

By which account, a diamond steeped in goat's blood, rather increaseth in hardness, than acquireth any softness by the infusion; for the best we have are cominuible without it.
Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. v.

So that there are three causes of fixation; the even spreading both of the spirits and tangible parts; the closenesse of the tangible parts; and the jejunenesse, or extream comminution of spirits.
Bacon. Natural History, Cent. viii. sec. 799.

The more solid food which needs greater manducation, cannot be sufficiently comminuated for chyle, or ground low enough for the stomach, until these teeth have done this work upon it.
Smith. Portraiture of Old Age, fol. 104.

We see likewise, that fusion makes metals fluid, and in fusion there is manifestly a comminution of the melted body.
Boyle. History of Fluidity, sec. 6.

So that this smiting of the steel with the flint doth only make a comminution, and a very rapid whirling and melting of some particles: but that idea of flame is wholly in us.
Bentley. Sermon, 2.

Those that form this genus [gilt head,] as well as the following, feed chiefly on shell fish, which they comminute with their teeth before they swallow them.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Gilt Head.

The superior quantity of shell-fish, which may more frequently call for the use of its comminuting powers, than those of our trouts, might occasion this difference.
Id. Ib. River Trout Salmon.

COMMIPHORA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dioecia, order Octandria. Generic character: male flower, calyx four-toothed; corolla, petals four, erect; stamens eight; the alternate ones large: female flower, unknown.

One species, native of Madagascar. Willd.

COMMI'SERATE, v. } Con and miser. Of un-
COMMISERA'TION, } certain Origin. Varro thinks
COMMISERA'TIVELY, } from minus.
COMMI'SERABLE, } To feel pain for, or on
COMMI'SERATOR. } account of the pain felt by others; to sympathize or compassionate.

Certainly we seem not to remember what a gentle and commiserating judge God is, or that ourselves are men, and have to deal with humane frailty, and man's miserable condition, which we ought to behold with pity, and not handle with bitterness.
Mede. Works, book i. disc. 37.

If any one do pity our offence,
Let him be sure that he be far from hence:
Here is no place for any one that shall
So much as once commiserate our fall.
Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. Dudley, to Lady Jane Gray.

In Kent, Ethelbert or Pren, by some means having usurp'd regal power, after two year's reign contending with Kenulph the Mercian, was by him taken prisoner and soon after out of pious commiseration let go. Milton. History of England, book iv.

COMMI-SERATE.

It is the sinfullest thing in the world to forsake or destitute a plantation once in forwardness, for besides the dishonour, it is guiltiness of blood in many commiserable persons.
Bacon. Of Plantations, ess. 33.

He hath divided his soul from the case of his soul, whose weakness he assists no otherwise than commiseratively, not that it is his, but that it is. Overbury. Characters.

Deaf unto the thunder of the laws, and rocks unto the cries of charitable commiserators. Brown. Christian Morals.

There is one kind of virtue which is inborn in the nobility, and indeed in most of the antient families of this nation; they are not apt to insult on the misfortunes of their countrymen. But you, sir, I may tell it you without flattery, have grafted on this natural commiseration, and raised it to a nobler virtue.
Dryden. Dedication to Amphitryon.

Where neither the parent reason, nor her stern progeny, the laws, will commiserate discordancy of temper, or distress of circumstances; but with relentless rigour, combine to fasten that fatal yoke, which those victims of their cruel policy must submit to wear, till as merciless a deliverer sets them free.
Warburton. Works. Sermon, 22. vol. x.

Who can peruse the relation of the last moments of Epaminondas at the battle of Mantinea, without finding himself touched with a pleasing commiseration?
Melmoth. Cicero to Lucius Lucceius.

COMMISSARY, } One to whom any thing is
COMMISSARISHIP. } committed. See to COMMIT.

After most hartie commendations, I haue sent to my lords at this present the emperor's commisaries answere made at the diett, to a letter lately sent from the French king to the said diett, of the circulls of Germanie assembled at Francfort.
Burnett. Records. Letter of Mason's. Of a Preacher, &c.

In this world's warfare they, whom rugged fate,
(God's commissary) doth so thoroughly hate,
As in th' court's squadron to marshal their state.
If they stand arm'd with silly honesty,
With wishing, prayers, and neat integrity,
Like Indians gainst Spanish hosts they be.
Donne. To Sir Henry Wotton.

At whose hands, after long attendance giuen he was discharged, and so returned home againe being also dismissed of his commissarishiip. Id. Ib. fol. 1117.

But the house of commons, made an address to the queen, in which they thanked her for the peace she had concluded, and for the foundation laid for settling our commerce; and prayed her to name commissaries to regulate and finish that matter.
Burnett. Own Times. Queen Anne. Anno 1713.

Being asked, Whether he was ever in the Murawar country? he said, yes; he was commissary to the army in that expedition.
Burke. Appendix to Speech on Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

COMMI'SSION, v. }
COMMI'SSION, n. }
COMMI'SSIONARY, }
COMMI'SSIONATE, v. } To commit, (q. v.) de-
COMMI'SSIONER, } liver, consign or intrust;
COMMI'SSION-BROKER, } to appoint or empower.
COMMI'SSION-COURT. }

COMMIS-SION.

Discrete he [the Serjeant] was, and of gret reverence:
He semed swiche, his wordes were so wise,
Justice he was ful often in assise,
By patent, and by pleine commissioun.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 317.

For the ful confirmation and strengthening of all the sayde premisses, the three foresayd honourable and religious personages being by the said right reuerēd lord the master general appointed as commissioners to deale in the aboue written ordination and composition, haue caused their seals vnto these presents to be put.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Richard II. Prussian Ambassador.

COMMISSION. — COMMISSURE.

As who would make a steersman to a barge
Of one blind born, who can no danger see
If that ship drown, forsooth I say for me,
Who gave the steersman such commission,
Should of the ship make restitution.
P. Fletcher. Eclogue, 4.

Neither is this onely oy way of bare verbal declaration (which might proceed from any other lips,) but in the way of an operative and effectual application, by virtue of that delegate, or commissionary authority, which is by Christ entrusted with them.
Hall. Cases of Conscience, case 9.

For it is well known that God revealed his will in those days by prophets particularly called, and commissionated to that purpose.
Hammond. Works. Postcript, vol. iii. fol. 8.

Not long after these arrived a messenger from the French king with letters to the nobility, desiring that the marriage should be consummated betwixt the young Queen and the Daulphin his son, and that certain commissioners should be sent to assist the solemnity.
Spotiswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1558. book ii.

Then, he says the 88th canon of the Church of England was urged in the commission-court, which seems to give leave in the close of the canon, that temporal courts or leets may be kept in church or church yards.
State Trials. Trial of Archbishop Laud, 1660—64.

We are to deny the supposition, that he [Moses] was a private person at that time, [of killing the Egyptian] but that he was even then commissioned by God governor of Israel; and consequently in the right of a governor, might revenge the wrong done to his subjects. South. Sermons, vol. v. fol. 322.

But still there is a great difference between pursuing the things of the spirit, with the reluctancy of the flesh, and pursuing the things of the flesh, with the reluctancy of the spirit; the former shows only the motions of the flesh, which being subdued are but infirmities; but the latter do not cease to be wilful sins, tho' there be inward struggling in the commission of them.
Stillingfleet. Sermon, 11. vol. iv.

As if he should have said, I have now all power over all things in the world conferred upon me; by virtue whereof I command, empower, and commissionate you to ealarge, settle, and govern the church that I have founded; to administer the sacraments that I have instituted; and to persuade mankind to embrace my doctrine, to submit to my discipline, to obey my laws, and to come up to the terms which I have procured for them, and propounded to them in order to their salvation.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon, 1.

There a commission'd angel stands,
With desolation in his hands!
He sends the all-devouring flame,
And cities hardly boast a name:
Or wings the pestilential blast,
And lo! ten thousands breathe their last.
Cotton. Life. Vision, 8.

From him, [Jesus Christ] and those commissioned by him, we learn what the wisest men, and even angels had desired to look into, and could at most discern but imperfectly through the types and shadows of the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations.
Hurd. Works. Sermon, 30.

Yet this uncandid Junius would insinuate, that the dignity of the commander in chief is depraved into the base office of a commission-broker; that is, Lord Granby bargains for the sale of commissions. Junius. Letter, 2.

COMMISSURE, n. Fr. commissure; Lat. commissura, junctura, et compages eorum, quæ committuntur. Gesner. Fr. commissure; "a commissure or seam in a bone, (as in the skull;) also, any neer closing, joyning, or couching of things together." Cotgrave.

Yet in the setting on of some flowers, and seeds in their sockets, and the lineall commissure of the pulp of severall seeds may be observed some shadow of the harmony.
Sir Thomas Brown. Cyrus Garden, ch. iii.

Which [armadillo] is covered on its back and sides with a strong scaly crust or shell, or a hard or bony substance, jointed like armour, or the scales of the tail of a lobster, by four transverse commissures in the middle of the body, connected by tough membranes. Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

And then for the greater security, the whole pipe, especially at the commissures, was diligently cased over with our close black cement, upon which plaster of Paris was strewed to keep it from sticking to their hands or cloths that should manage the pipe.
Boyle. New Experiments. Touching the Spring of Air, exp. 15.

COMMIT, v. — COMMI'TMENT, COMMI'TTEE, COMMI'TTEESHIP, COMMI'TTER, COMMI'TTIBLE, COMMY'SED, COMMI'TTEE-CHAIR, COMMI'TTEE-CLERK, COMMI'TTEE-MEN, COMMI'TTER-ROOM.

Fr. commetre; Lat. con, and mittere, i. e. facere ut eat; to cause to go, to send. Mitto, Vossius thinks, is from μεθιῶ, seu μεθίημι, mitto, missum facio, dimitto. Committere, (Festus) is properly insimul mittere, aut conjungere: though now used both for facere and incipere.

To cause to go, to put, place, or remove into the hands, or under the care or custody of another; to deliver, consign, or intrust to another. Also to put or place in opposition; and simply, to do, as to commit a crime.

Now, sire, then shuln ye committe the keping of your persone to your trewe frendes, that ben appreved and yknowe, and of hem shuln ye axen helpe, youre persone for to kepe.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

And thereto the emperour uamed his companyons, the tyme, place, and order of all the conspiracy, and also to whom the sword was committed.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 118.

But peraduenture thou that knowest Christ wilt say, (as many doe) that Christes death and redemtiō serueth thee but for original sinne, or at most for those sinnes that thou committedst before baptisme. Frith. Works, fol. 16.

The committers of which sinne he burnt at a stake among the Turkes, as Moses also commaundeth in hys lawe.
Tyndall. Works, fol. 267.

Then the sayd knight counsailed with other barons and knyghtis, and so reported theyr opinyons, and whiche was, how they had well deserued deth for dyuers horryble dedis, the which they had committed. Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. xii.

Let gastly shadows his lewd eyes affright;
And the dire thought of his committed evil
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.
Shakspeare. Rape of Lucrece.

All things committed to thy trust conceal
Nor what's forbid by any means reveal.
Denham. Of Justice.

Howbeit, the singuler great loue and affection that he bare unto the said Eastrilde could not yet out of his minde & be forgotten, wherefore he made a caue vnder ground in the city of Troynouaunt and enclosed her therein, committing her vnto the custody of his most neere and familier friends.
Grafton. Chronicle. First Agu, part iv.

The lords were discontented at the commitment of the Earl of Arundel, about his son's marriage with the Duchess of Lennox his sister. Whitelock. Memoirs. Anno 1626.

Mr. Pym being speaker of the committee of the commons that were appointed to prosecute, gave in the articles of impeachment.
Baker. Charles I. Anno 1640.

If it be a mutual scourge, it would well become the wisdom of the committee-men to enquire where the right is, and who doth the wrong; and to project a way how the wrong doer may be made right, and to give due satisfaction to such as suffer under the undeserved scourge. Spelman. Of Tythes, fol. 161.

Gregorie the seuenth, Pope, excommunicated all committers of simonie, and remooued marryed priestes from executing diuine seruice, whereof rose great troubles in England.
Stow. William the Conqueror. Anno 1075.

Wherein indeed Bodine hath attempted a particular enumeration, but (besides the mistakes committible in the solary compute of years) the difference of chronologie disturbs the satisfaction and quiet of his computes. Sir Thomas Brown, book iv. ch. xii.

He himself prayed for them that crucified him; some of which were, without doubt, those very Pharisees, whom he had before charged with committing the sin against the Holy Ghost, in the twelfth chapter of Matthew.
Sharp. Works. Sermon, 16. vol. iii.

He [Sir A. Cooper] persisting obstinately silent was bid to withdraw, and those, who had depended upon his discovery, being defeated, and consequently very much displeas'd, mov'd warmly for his commitment; of which he, waiting in the lobby, having notice, unmov'd expected his doom.
Locke. Memoirs. Life of Earl of Shaftsbury.

If therefore Jowler finds, and kills his hare,
Better than Meres supplies committee-chair;
Though one's a statesman, th' other but a hound,
Jowler in justice will be wiser found.
Rochester. A Satire against Mankind.

In this sense, therefore, it may be, and is probably true, that charity shall cover many sins, even of the first magnitude; i. e. it shall prevent the temporal inflictions due to them, and often, even after pardon obtained, pursuing the committers of them.
Atterbury. Sermon, 9. vol. i.

Concerning which, I shall premise this in general, That there is no sin committable by man, as to the kind of it, but by circumstances is capable of being made a sin of presumption.
South. Sermon, 11. vol. vii.

If upon this enquiry it manifestly appears, that either, no such crime was committed, or that the suspicion entertained of the prisoner was wholly groundless, in such cases only it was lawful totally to discharge him. Otherwise he must either be committed to prison, or give bail: that is, put in security for his appearance, to answer the charge against him.
Blackstone. Commentary, vol. iv. fol. 296.

In this dubious interval between the commitment and trial, a prisoner ought to be used with the utmost humanity; and neither be loaded with needless fetters, or subjected to other hardships than such as are absolutely requisite for the purpose of confinement only. Id. Ib. vol. iv. fol. 299.

The Lord Chancellor, upon petition or information, grants a commission to enquire into the party's state of mind; and if he be found non compos, he usually commits the care of his person, with a suitable allowance for his maintenance, to some friend who is then called his committee. Id. Ib. vol. i. fol. 305.

My lords, this is a point upon which I think myself competent to speak with some degree of confidence: I have attended the committee from the first opening of it to the present moment, with the assiduity of a committee-clerk.
Horsley. Speeches, fol. 93.

My lords, the day the witnesses were examined who were called to contradict the account in this article, I had been sitting in the committee-room, at the table, listening to and minuting every syllable of the evidence, from eleven o'clock till three.
Id. Ib. fol. 134.

COMMITMENT. COMMIX.

COMMITMENT, in Law, the sending a person to prison by Warrant or Order, who hath been guilty of an offence not bailable, or for which bail is refused. Commitments may be made by the King and Privy Council, Secretary of State; by the Judges of the Land, Justices of the Peace, and other Magistrates to whom the laws give authority. It is enacted by the stat. 2 and 3 Philip and Mary, ch. x. that Justices of the Peace shall examine persons brought before them for felony or man-slaughter, or suspicion thereof, before they commit them to prison; and shall bind over their accuser to give evidence against them. A Justice of the Peace may remand a prisoner for a reasonable time, in order to get at evidence which may be wanting. Every Commitment must be in writing, under hand and seal, showing the authority of the party making it, and the time and place; and it must be directed to the keeper of the prison. It must specify also, with reasonable certainty and plainness, the crime committed; otherwise the prisoner will be entitled under the Habeas Corpus Act, stat. 31 Charles II. ch. ii. to be liberated on bail; or in case of escape a Gaoler is not punishable. All Commitments must be to some prison within the Realm of England. A person once Committed cannot be lawfully discharged, except by the King, till he be acquitted on trial; or have an ignoramus found by the Grand Jury; or there be none to prosecute him, on proclamation for that purpose by the Justices of Gaol delivery.

COMMI'X, v. / COMMI'XION, / COMMI'XTION, / COMMI'XTURE. A. S. misc-an, misc-ere, to mix, or mingle: omitting the termination an, we have misc; and this by a common transposition became mics, i. e. mix. Tooke, ii. 298. Vossius derives misc-ere from the Hebrew; Tooke from the above A. S. misc-an.

His lot is next to rise, and next in world his head shall reare,
Of Troyan and Italian blood commixt, thy worthy childe
Thy Siluius, borne after thy deceasse in forest-wylde.
Phaer. Æneidos, book vi.

This stock that of Ausonian blood commixt shall shortly rise
In vertue men shall passe, and passe the goddes that dwell in skies.
Id. Ib. book xii. fol. 300.

Howbeit, the emperour abydeth styll in his Crystē lawe and all is by reason of cōmyction of this maryage.
Lord Berners. Froissart, vol. ii. ch. xl.

Or, self-conceited, play the humourous Platonist,
Which boldly dares affirm, that spirits themselves supply
With bodies, to commix with frail mortalitie.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 5.

Yet with his admirable streame, doth not his waues commix,
But glides aloft on it like oyle.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book ii.

Were thy commixion, Greeke and Troian so
That thou could'st say, this hand is Grecian all,
And this is Troian; by Joue multipotent,
Thou should'st not beare from me a Greekish member
Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our ranke feud.
Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 98.

In him that shape, in her there was that sweetness,
Might make him lik'd, or hir to be belov'd
As this commixtion, so their married mind
Their good corrected, or their ill reliev'd,
As truly loving as discreetly kind,
Mutually joy'd, as mutually griev'd.
Drayton. Moses, his Birth and Miracles, book i.

For though some species there be of middle and participating natures, that is, of bird and beast, as bats and some few others, yet are their parts so conformed and set together, that we cannot define the beginning of or end of either; there being a commixtion of both in the whole, rather than an adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xi.

I am modestly confident my humble language shall be accepted, because I shall present all readers with a commixture of truth, and Sir Henry Wotton's merits.
Walton. Life of Sir Henry Wotton.

Indeed as the flocks of Jacob were distanced "three days journeys" from those of Laban," so (to prevent voluntary or casuall commixtures) our styles are set more than a month's journey asunder. Fuller. Worthies. Ches-shire.

Nor do they much help the matter, who say, that those frogs that appear sometimes in great multitudes after a shower, are not indeed engendered in the clouds, but coagulated from a certain sort of dust commixed and fermented with rain-water.

COMMIX. — COMMO-DIOUS.

Ray, On the Creation, part ii.

If it be not a good yellow, but pale, (which usually happens for want of an exact commixtion of the ingredients) it may be returned to the residue, mingled better with it again, and sublimed once more. Boyle. Natural Philosophy, part ii. ess. 5.

This spirit I therefore ascribe to the salt of the husks altered by their comixture with the copper.
Id. The Sceptical Chymist.

From ocean's verge, if not too far remov'd,
Its shelly sands convey a warm compost,
From land and wave commixt, with richness fraught.
Dodsley. Agriculture, can. 2.

But in the Jewish republic, where the church and state were incorporated, this commixture made no other confusion than what arises from the mistakes of men, ignorant of the nature of that sacred economy. Warburton. The Divine Legation.

COMMODE. See COMMODIOUS.

The commode is described to have been a kind of head dress, worn by the ladies at the beginning of the XVIIIth century, which by means of wire bore up the hair and forepart of the cap, consisting of folds of fine lace, to a great height.
Spectator, No. 98. Notes, oct.

A famous monk, Thomas Connecte by name, attacked it with great zeal and resolution. This holy man travelled from place to place to preach down this monstrous commode; and succeeded so well in it, that as the Magicians sacrificed their books to the flames upon the preaching of an apostle, many of the women threw down their head dresses in the middle of his sermon, and made a bonfire of them within sight of the pulpit. Id. No. 98.

COMMO'DIOUS, COMMO'DIOUSLY, COMMO'DIOUSNESS, COMMO'DITY. } Fr. commode; Lat. commodus; (Gr. σύμμετρος,) whence (Vossius) the adverbs commodum, as if cum modo, with measure, with moderation; and whatever is so, is commodious, and useful. Modus, he derives, from the Hebrew, and considers the meaning to be,—to mete, or measure, metiri, mensurare.

Proportioned to, fitting, suiting; sc. a particular use or purpose; convenient, serviceable, useful, beneficial.

But yet men delitynge in vertue moughte with cardes and tables deuyse games, whercin mought be moch solace and also study commodiouse, as deuising a bataile, or contentiō betwene vertue and vice, or other like plesant and honest inuention.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 92.

Thus hath thy loue been vnto me
As pleasant and commodious,
As was the fire made on the sea
By Naulus hate so odious,
Therwith to traine the Grekish host
From Troyes return, where they were lost.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer accusing his Loue for hir vnfaithfulneese, &c.

And Master Merchant, he whose travail ought
Commodiously to doe his country good,
And by his toyle, the same for to enriche,
Can finde the meane, to make monopolyes
Of euery ware, that is accompted strange.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

Item. That ye shall provide on this side of the feast of ——— next coming, one book of the whole Bible of the largest volume in English, and the same set up in some convenient place within the said Church that ye have cure of, whereas your parishioners may most commodiously resort to the same and read it.
Burnett. Records. Injunctions to the Clergy by Cromwell.

But now see how that not onely these vnlooked for mischiefs, haue heauily growne on ye, but also those commodities which ye thought to haue holpen your selues and others by, be not onely hindered but also hurt thereby.
Sir John Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition, I. 2.

And euen as our heauenly father gaue his Christ vnto us not for any profit that he should haue thereby, but onely for our profite, likewise y^e^ shouldest do all thy good workes not hauing respect what commodities thou shalt haue of it, but euer attendyng through charitie, the wealth and profite of thy neighbour. COMMODIOUS. — COMMOLITION
Frith. Workes, fol. 28.

For water, it [Britain] is walled and garded with the ocean most commodious for trafficke to all parts of the world.
Camden. Remains, fol. 1.

At the largest foot of a fair hollow tree,
Close to plough'd ground, seated commodiously,
His ancient and hereditary house,
There dwelt a good substantial mouse.
Cowley. The Country Mouse.

Whither also, a little after the prince of Wales, together with his princess came to dwell, making it his chief residence, both by reason of the commodiousness of the place and its strength.
Sir Thomas North. The Life of Edward the Black Prince.

It is content alone that makes
Our pilgrimage a pleasure here;
And who buys sorrow cheapest, takes
An ill commodity too dear. Cotton. Melancholy

A marshy ground commodiously was near,
Thither she ran, and held her breath for fear,
Lest if a word she spoke of any thing,
That word might be the secret of the king.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

If a traveller being in some ill-inhabited eastern country, should come to a large and fair building, such as one of the most stately of those they call caravanzeras, though he would esteem and be delighted with the magnificence of the structure, and the commodiousness of the apartments, yet, supposing it to have been erected but for the honour or the pleasure of the founder, he would commend so stately a fabric, without thanking him for it.
Boyle. On final causes of Natural Things.

It [Old Aberdeen] has the appearance of a town in decay, having been situated, in times when commerce was yet unstudied, with very little attention to the commodiousness of the harbour.
Johnson. Journey to the Western Isles.

Now, to a people, thus circumstanced, unfurnished, in a good degree, with arts and manufactures, and but slenderly provided with the means of exchange for the commodities they produce; management, thrift, and what we call good husbandry, must have been a capital virtue. Hurd. Works. Sermon, 1. vol. vi.

COMMODORE, perhaps from the Sp. comendador, a commander.

Whatever depended on the commodore, was soon so far advanced, that he conceived the ships might be capable of putting to sea the instant he should receive his final orders, of which he was in daily expectation.
Anson. Voyage round the World, book i. ch. i.

In the British Navy, a COMMODORE is an Officer invested with the command of a detachment of ships for any particular service. He bears the rank of a Brigadier-General in the Army; and his vessel is distinguished by a broad red Pendant tapering towards the outer end, and sometimes forked. The title is also given by courtesy to the Senior Captain of three or more ships, when sailing in company. The Commodore of a convoy is the leading ship in a fleet of merchantmen, who bears a light in her top to keep the rest together.

COMMODULATION, con, and modulatio, from modus, measure. (See COMMODIOUS.)

So that if they hold that symmetrie and commodulation, (as Vitruvius calls it) which they ought, from the proportion of the head, the hand, the cubit, the foote, the finger, nay the tooth, or the least bone may the dimensions of the whole body be infallibly collected. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 190.

COMMOLITION, con, and mola, (of uncertain Origin,) a grinding stone.

And whether these fragments of iron and hard substances swallowed by the ostridge, have not also that use in their stomachs, which they have in other birds; that is, in some way to supply

COMMOLITION. COMMON.

the use of teeth, by commolition, grinding and compressing of their proper aliment, upon the action of the strongly conformed muscles of the stomach, as the honour'd Dr. Harvey discourseth, may also be considered.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xxii.

CO'MMON, v.
Co'MMON, s.
Co'MMON, adj.
Co'MMONABLE,
Co'MMONAGE,
Co'MMONALITY,
Co'MMONER,
Co'MMONING,
Co'MMONLY,
Co'MMONNESS,
Co'MMON-BOOKED,
Co'MMON-COUNCIL,
Co'MMON-COUNCIL-MAN,
Co'MMON-CRYER,
Co'MMON-HOUSE,
Co'MMON-LAW,
Co'MMON-PLACE, s.
Co'MMON-PLACE, adj.
Co'MMON-PRAYER,
Co'MMON-PRAYER-BOOK,
Co'MMON-SENSE,
Co'MMONWEAL,
Co'MMONWEALTH,
Co'MMONWEALTH'S-MAN,
Co'MMONWEALTH-PARTY.

Fr. commun; Lat. communis, a word (Vossius) which properly applies to those things, which are not private, but which pertain, ad multorum munia seu munus. Varro, lib. iv. and Scaliger, De Causis, ch. xxxi. differ about the Etymology of munus, and Vossius from both.

Belonging or pertaining to one as well as another; to many; to the public in general.

Frequently met with, and therefore easily obtained: and thus of little or no value, no rank or distinction.

To common, now written commune, is to be or cause to be common; to make common, sc. our thoughts, &c.; and thus to converse, to discourse, to confer, to combine together.

Commons, the provision which each member in a Society takes at the common meal.

All þe comons of þe lond with letter þam bond
And ilkon sette his seale þerto with his owne hond.
R. Brunne, p. 45.

And suthe he consailed þe kyng. hus comune to lovye
For þe coroune ys þe kynge's tresour. Conscience wat wel.
And also quath Reson. ich rede zow riche
And comuners to a corden. Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 85.

For troste wel that communly these couuseillours ben flaterers.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. p. 87.

He brought them all in good accorde,
So that the common with the lorde,
And lorde with the common also,
He sette in loue both two,
And put awaie melancholie.
Gower. Conf. Am. Prologue, fol. 7.

But thei that passen (surpass) the commune,
With suche hym lyketh to commune.
Id. Ib. fol. 12.

And commonliche in euery nede
The werst speche is rathest herde,
And leued, till it be answerde.
Id. Ib. book iii. fol. 56.

We haue heard before how, the duke of York, as heire to Lionell duke of Clarence, pretended priuily, a tytle to the croune, and howe hys friendes commoned secretly, with diuerse persons of that matter, and excited theim to set forwarde, and auaunce that parte to the vttermoste.

Hall. Henry VI. The thirtieth Yere.

For thoughe wee commoned of sorowe and heauinesse, yet was the thynge that wee chiefly thoughte vppon, not the trybulacion itselfe, but the cumforte that may growe thereon.

Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 1169.

And when al this was concluded, then the kyng s counsayle comoned amonge themselfe for a maryage for theyr kynge, for it was tyme. Froissart. Cronycle, ch. li.

Wherefore leste in repeting a thing so frequent and commune, my boke shulde be as fastidious or fulsome to the reders, as suche marchaunt preachers be nowe to their customers, I wylle reuerentely take my leaue of diuines.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book i. fol. 78.

And I say agayne, that as the priestes doe nowe vse to consecrate it, it helpeth not the poore comens of a rishe.

Frith. Workes, fol. 153.

Then gan I thus resolue: more pleasant is the lyef
Of faythefull frends, that spend their goods in commone without stryef
For as the tender frend appeasith euery gryef;
So yf he falls that lieues alone, who shall be his relyef.
Surrey. Ecclesiastes, ch. iv.

I wolde therefore declare also this your vertewe vnto the students, exhorting them to loue ād reuerēce Godly princes, and in their praiers commende them with their comons vnto God.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel. Epistles, Ded. 5.

In the countrey, at a sessions, or other assembly, if no gentyll men be there at, the sayinge is, that there was none but the cōmunaltye, which proueth, in myne opinion, that plebs in Latine, is in Englishe comunaltie; and plebeii be communers.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book i.

But whatsoeuer semblant the prouost, and they of Parys made to the kyng of Nauer, for all that, the lorde Philyppe of Nauer wolde neuer trust thē, nor wold nat come to Parys, for he alwayes sayd, that in a comynaltie ther was neuer no certentie, but finally, shame, rebuke, and dyshonour.

Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. clxxxi.

Also the vi. Arsacidauell the inuincible king of Parthes, not onely was depriued, but also banished out of his realme, because he dined at a knighte's brydale, and woulde not eate at the bridale of a communer. Golden Boke. H. 8. ch. xvii.

All that wynter the kynge lay styll at the siege, and thought and ymagined euer to kepe y^e commentie of Flaunders in frendshyppe, for he thought by their meanes the soner to cōe to his entent. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. cxi.

But y^e ende of theyr debate and question, & of the effect of theyr victorye, was to enterpryse all cruell thynges, the one againste the other, by violence or by forme of justice, and wyth punishmente, not hauinge regarde to the comon-weale nor to that, which justice required. Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 91.

Euen so the preachers of the truth which rebuke sinne are not the troublers of realmes and commonwealths, but they that do wickedly, and namely high prelates and mighty princes, which walk without the feare of God and liue abhominably corrupting the common people with their example.

Tyndall. Workes, fol. 341.

Wherevpon ambassadours were sent vppon both partes, and dyuers meanes of intreatie were commoned of, but in the ende, it came all to none effect.

Grafton. Edward III. The forty-fourth Yere.

Against the nobles he vphild
Innoble, and his peeres
And commons went alike to wracke,
Nor God nor man he feares.
Warner. Albion's England, book v. ch. xxviii.

For he was so much estemed, both of the nobility & commonality, for his liberality, clemency, integrity, and courage that above all others, he was extolled & praised to the very heauen. Grafton. Henry VI. The thirty-ninth Yere.

Much good land might be gained from forests and chases more remote from the king's access, and from other commonable places, so as always there be a due care taken, that the poor commoners have no injury by such improvement.

Bacon. Advice to Sir George Villiers.

Know destinie is destinie.
This epitaph I reede,
Though common-booked poetrie
Yeat not vnworthie heede.
Warner. Albion's England, book ii. ch. x.

In this year also an act of common-council by consent of the king, was made concerning victuals, a fat cock to be sold for three half pence. Stow, Baker. Edward I. Anno 1306.

COMMON.

Lad. I'le sweep all corners, Goody, to spring this.
If't be above ground, I will have her cry'd,
By the common-cryer, through all the ward,
But I will find her.
Ben Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, act v. sc. 6.

For in the time of Cecrops, and the first kings down to Theseus, the inhabitants of Attica had their several burghs and therein their common-halls, and their governors.
Hobbs. Thucydides, book ii.

Not long after that, the king [Henry VIII.] perceiuing belike the mindes of the clergy not much fauoring his cause, sent for the speaker againe and twelue of the common-house, hauing with him eight lords. Fox. Martyrs, fol. 961.

In this hospitall which they builded, was to be relieved, a gentleman three dayes, bread, wine, and waxe: a commoner eight dayes and nights, meate, drinke and lodging.
Stow. Henry IV. Anno 1407.

When they [the Gauls] saw the commoners' houses fast shut and locked to, and contrariwise the stately palaces of noblemen and cheefe senators standing wide open, they were at a stand, and doubted more in a manner to enter upon the open places, than the shut. Holland Livius, fol. 206.

But sir, since Chrysostom saith, that priests are the stomack of the people, it is needfull in preaching, and also in commoning, to be the most busie about the priesthood.
Fox. Martyrs. Examination of W. Thorpe, fol. 495.

It may be he went yesterday to a wedding, merry and brisk, and there he felt his sentence, that he must return home and die, (for men very commonly enter into the snare singing, and consider not whither their fate leads them.)
Taylor. Holy Dying. Of the practice of Patience.

Com. He is a lawyer, and must speak for his fee,
Against his father, and mother, all his kindred;
His brothers, or his sisters: no exception
Lies at the common-law.
Ben Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, act ii. sc. 5.

Canonists, civilians, and common-lawyers, do all admit this distinction, and agree, that jus ad rem est jus imperfectum, right to the thing is a lame title; they must have right in it that will have perfect title. Spelman. On Tythes, fol. 147.

A second collection which appertains to a ready provision, or preparatory store, is that which Cicero intimates, where he gives it in precept, that we have common-places in ready preparation argued and handled pro and contra.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, book vi. ch. iii.

Some say the senses receive the species of things, and deliver them to the common-sense; and the common-sense delivers them over to the fancy, and the fancy to the memory, and the memory to the judgment, like handling of things from one to another, with many words, making nothing understood.
Hobbs. Of Man, part i. ch. ii.

The latter is that which we call the law of common-weale, the very soule of a politique body, the parts whereof are by law animated, held together, and set on worke in such actions as the common good requireth.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book i.

The commonwealth, yet panting, underneath
The stripes, and wounds of a late civill warre,
Gasping for life, and scarce restor'd to hope;
To seeke t' oppresse her, with new crueltie,
And utterly extinguish her long name,
With so prodigious, and unheard-of fierceness.
Ben Jonson. Catiline, act iii.

By inveighing against the enemies of my country, to aim at the commendation of a good commonwealth's-man, and at the same time get the repute of a bad historian, I held a thing ridiculous.
Camden. Elizabeth. Preface.

Ut Respub. salva sit, is a necessary consideration in the permission of prophesyings; for according to the true, solid, and prudent ends of the republick, so is the doctrine to be permitted or restrained, and the men that preach it according as they are good subjects and right commonwealth's-men.
Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 19.

The commonness, and the general or long reception of a doctrine, is not a sufficient argument of the truth of it.
South. Sermons, vol. vii. fol. 132.

Should I take for my common-places your knowledge, both of the old and the new philosophy; should I add to these your skill in mathematicks and history, and yet further your being conversant with all the ancient authors of the Greek and Latin tongues, as well as with the modern, I should tell nothing new to mankind.
Dryden. Dedication to Limberham.

If I would put any thing in my common-place-book, I find out a head to which I may refer it. Each head ought to be some important and essential word to the matter in hand, and in that word regard is to be had to the first letter and the vowel that follows it; for upon these two letters depend all the use of the index. Locke. A new Method of a Common-place-book.

At the bottom of the title of which is thus written by Dr. Burges. This is one of the very first books of Common-prayer in the beginning of Edward VI. which book, at the request of Archb. Cranmer was reviewed and censured by Martin Bucer, and then reformed accordingly in the 5th of Edward VI. which latter is the book still in force by the statute of 1 Elizabeth, and this (meaning the Common-prayer-book printed 1549) is repealed.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon., vol. ii. fol. 351.

But for those sectaries and commonwealth's-men of 41, before I leave them, I must crave leave to observe of them, that generally they were a sour sort of thinking men, grim and surly hypocrites, such as could cover their vices with an appearance of great devotion and austerity of manners; neither profaneness nor luxury were encouraged by them, nor practised publickly, which gave them a great opinion of sanctity amongst the multitude; and by that opinion principally they did their business.
Dryden. Postcript to the History of the League.

It was a matter of wonder in me that Colonel Alwred, in whom the commonwealth-party had reposed so great trust, would suffer himself to be employed in such a message to one of the most faithful servants of the parliament.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. fol. 365.

Common appendant is a right belonging to the owners or occupiers of arable land, to put commonable beasts upon the lord's waste, and upon the lands of other persons within the same manor. Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. ii. p. 33.

The deer were suffered to run loose upon their lands, and many oppressions were used with relation to the claim of commonage, which the people had in most of the forests.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History.

The commonalty, like the nobility, are divided into several degrees; and as the lords though different in rank, yet all of them are peers in respect to their nobility, so the commoners, though some are greatly superior to others, yet all are in law peers, in respect to their want of nobility.
Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. i. p. 403.

Speculations of this sort says he, do not bestow genius on those who have it not, they do not perhaps, afford any great assistance to those who have; and most commonly the men of genius are even incapable of being assisted by speculation.
Hurd. On the Provinces of the Drama.

That men should prey on men, when they cannot live without mutual assistance, would be wonderful if the commonness of it did not make it so familiar. Gilpin. Sermon, 9. vol. i.

By the easy and obvious method of spending less than I gain, I have every year added something to my stock, and expect to have a seat in the common-council at the next election.
Johnson. Idler, No. 95.

The villa thus completely grac'd,
All own that Thrifty has a taste;
And madam's female friends, and cousins,
With common-council-men by dozens,
Flock every Sunday to the seat,
To stare about them, and to eat.
Lloyd. The Cit's Country Box, 1757.

Are Mr. Crosby and Mr. Sawbridge likely to execute the extraordinary, as well as the ordinary, duties of Lord Mayor? will they grant you common-halls when it shall be necessary.
Junius. Letter 58.

How difficult it is for the artist who possesses this facility, to guard against careless and common-place invention, is well known, and in a kindred art Metastasio is an eminent instance, who always complained of the great difficulty he found in attaining correctness in consequence of having been an improvisatore.
Sir Joshua Reynolds. Life.

COMMON.

COMMON. — COMMORIENT.

I say that a little more reflection and a great deal less reading, a little more attention to common-sense, and less blind prejudice for his Greek commentators, would have made Mr. Harris a much better grammarian, if not perhaps a philosopher.

Tooke. Diversions of Purley.

COMMON, in Law, Land the use whereof is common to a particular Town or Lordship; or a right or privilege which one or more persons claim to take or use some portions of that which another man's lands, waters, woods, &c. naturally produce, without having an absolute property in such lands, waters, or wood. The word Common in its most usual acceptation, means Common of pasture, which is a right of feeding one's beasts on another's land; but there is also Common of turbary, or the liberty of cutting turf on another's land. Common of piscary, the right of taking fish in another's pond or river. Common of estovers, the right of taking trees or loppings, shrubs or underwoods in another's woods; and also a right which the tenants in some Manors have, of taking sand, gravel, or stones in the Lord's soil. The property of the soil in the Common is wholly in the Lord, the use of it jointly in him and the Commoners. There are four kinds of Common of pasture, namely, Common in gross, which is the right of having Common upon another's land without being possessed of any lands or tenements; this right must originally have sprung from a grant. Common appendant is a right belonging to a man's arable land, of putting beasts Commonable, such as horses, oxen, and sheep, into another's ground. Common appurtenant is belonging to an estate for all manner of beasts, whether Commonable or not; and Common par cause de vicinage, by reason of neighbourhood, is the liberty which the tenants of one Lord in one Town have to Common with the tenants of another Lord in another Town, and is usually called the Right of Intercommoning.

COMMONITORY, Lat. commoneo, monitum, monere, to call to mind, to call the attention to, to warn. (Moneo prius meneo, or meno. See COMMEMORATE.)

The care of the church of Canturburie, whervnto God hath presentlie appointed vs (albeit vnworthie) you being king, dooth speciallie constreine me (in that as yet we are deteined in exile) to write vnto your maiestie letters commonitorie, exhortatorie, and of correction.

Fox. Martyrs. Archbishop Becket's Letter to the King.

COMMO'RANT, } Lat. commoror, commorans, tar-
CO'MMORANCY. } rying, staying, delaying. Lat. mora, perhaps from Gr. μείρ-ειν, to divide, quia morantes tempus, intervallis trahunt ac dividunt. Vossius

All freeholders within the precinct are obliged to attend them, and all persons commorant therein, which commorancy consists in usually lying there; a regulation which owes its original to the laws of king Canute.

Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. iv. fol. 273.

COMMORIENT, Lat. commorior, commoriens; Fr. commourir, to dye together, or one for company of another. "The Anglo-Saxons used morth, morthe, mors, i. e. quod dissipat (subaud. vitam,) the third person of the verb myrran, to mar, dissipare, abstrahere." See Tooke, ii. 243.

To which may be added equal and common constellations, the same compatient and commorient fates and times; and then there is reason and natural cause they might both die of like diseases and infirmity.

Sir George Buck. History of King Richard III. fol. 86.

COMMORSE, Lat. commordeo, commorsum, (con, and mordere, to bite.) Applied metaphorically, by Daniel, as remorse (q. v.) from remordeo. COMMORSE. — COMMOTES.

Yet must we think, that some which saw the course,
(The better few, whom passion made not blind)
Stood careful lookers on, with sad commorse,
Amaz'd to see what headlong rage design'd.

Daniel. History of Civil War, book ii.

COMMO'VE, } Lat. commovere, (con, and movere, COMMO'TION, } to move,) to move together.
COMMO'TIONER. } The noun commotion continues in common use, and is applied, metaphorically,

To any disturbance, riot, or tumult; to agitation of mind.

But Jupiter the glorious
Which was commeued of this thynge,
Uengeance upon this cruel kynge
So toke, that he from mannes forme
Into a wolfe he let transforme.

Gower. Conf. Am., book vii. fol. 162.

But because that commonlye whan God's iugementes begynne to waxe knowen all thinges are commoued & troubled therfore it is sayd here consequētly that the temple was full of smoke, by reason of the magestie of God and of his gloriouse power.

Bale. Image, part ii. O. 3.

Then was there great commocyon and murmure as well in other places about, as specially in the city, the people diuersely diuising vpon this dealinge. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 43.

Who can perswade where treason is aboue reason, and might ruleth right, and it is had for lawfull whatsoeuer is lustfull, and commotioners is better than commissioners and common wo is named common wealth.

Sir John Cheke. Hurt of Sedition, C. 3.

John Knox finding the paper, and taking it to be a memorial for recommending some sick persons in his prayers, after he had read the same laid it by, nothing as it seemed commoved therewith. Spotiswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1569. book v.

For pacifying the present commotions, and removing some differences fallen out amongst the nobilitie, his majesty had thought it expedient to interpose himself a mediator.

Id. Ib. fol. 321.

Thomas Brook, lord Cobham, who being a commotioner in the reign of queen Mary, lost his head.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon., vol. i. fol. 48.

——— Straight the sands,
Commov'd around, in gathering eddies play.

Thomson. Summer.

The perceptions of these inward commotions are uniformly the same in all, and draw along with them the same, or similar sentiments and reflections.

Hurd. Discourse on Poetical imitation.

COMMOTES, says Minshew, (ad voc.) seemeth to be compounded of the preposition con, and mot, verbum, dictio, a word or saying, and signifieth in Wales a part of a Shire, as a Hundred, 28 Henry VIII. 3. It is written Commorthes, 4 Henry IV. 27, and is used for a gathering made upon the people (as it seemeth) of this or that Hundred, by Welshmen.

Nothing is to be gained from Minshew's strange derivation; a Commote is half a Cantred, or Hundred, containing fifty Villages, Stat. Wall. 12 Edward I. Doderidge, Hist. Wall. fol. 2. It also signifies a great Signiory or Lordship, including one or more Manors. (Coke, on Littleton, 5.)

In the latter part Minshew has confounded Commote with Commorth, Brit. Cymmorth, subsidium, a contribution levied at marriages, and on the first performance of Mass by Priests. This was prohibited 26 Henry VIII. 6.

COM-MUNE.

COMMUNE, v.
COMMU'NIALTY,
COMMU'NICABLE,
COMMU'NICABLENESS,
COMMU'NICABILITY, COMMU'NICANT,
COMMU'NICATE, v.
COMMU'NICATION,
COMMU'NICATIVE,
COMMU'NICATIVELY,
COMMU'NICATIVENESS,
COMMU'NICATOR,
COMMU'NICATORY,
COMMU'NITY,
COMMU'NION,
COMMU'NION-OFFICE,
COMMU'NION-PLATE,
COMMU'NION-TABLE.

Fr. communier, to communicate.—Formerly written to common, i. e. to make common; sc. our thoughts, &c., to make a mutual disclosure of thoughts; and thus,—to converse, to discourse, to confer. Also to hold converse with ourselves; to meditate.

To communicate, is to make common to others, to confer, to bestow, to impart, to share, or participate;—to publish or reveal; to disclose or discover. Also to have a common opening, or passage, intercourse or connection.

A Comynér in Wiclif, is in Modern Version, a partaker; in Wiclif, (Philippians,) comynyng; in Modern Version, fellowship: in Hebrews, it is in Modern Version, communicating; in Wiclif, comyn, in Modern Version, to be partakers.

The communion of sayntes for soth I to the sayn.
Piers Ploukman. Crede, E. 4.

And he had lever talken with a page,
Than to commune with any gentil wight,
Ther he might leren gentillesse aright.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Prologue, v. 11005.

Yemen on foot, and communes many on
With shorte staves, thicke as they may gon.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2511.

Whether any sister of this house hath been taken and found with any such accustomably so communing, and could not show any reasonable cause why they so did.
Burnett. Records. Instructions for Visitation of Monasteries.

And nyle ghe forghete wel doinge and comynynge for bi suche sacrifices God is deserued. Wiclif. Ebrewis, ch. xiii.

I do thankyngis to my God in alle mynde of ghou euermore in alle my preieris for ghou alle with ioie, and make a biseching on ghoure comynyng in the gospel of Christ fro the firste dai til now. Id. Filipensis, ch. i.

Therefore I an euene eldre man, and a witnesse of Christis passiouns, which also am a comyner of that glorie that schal be schewid in tyme to comynge, biseche ye the eldre men that ben among you. Id. 1 Petir, ch. v.

Therefore for children comynyden to fleische and blood, and he also took part of the same, that bi deeth he schulde distrie hym that hadde lordschip of deeth, that is to seie the deuel.
Id. Ebrewis, ch. ii.

O firy sentence, inflamed with all grace
Enkyndeling hertes, with brandes charitable
The endlesse rewarde of pleasure and solace
To the Father, and the Son, thou art communicable
In vnitate, whiche is inseperable.
Skelton. A Prayer to the Holy Ghost.

For we are not taught of God onely for ourselues, but that euery man after the measure of his faith, shuld be brotherly communicat with his neighbors, and distribute vnto them that thing he hath learned and knowen in God's schole.
Caluine. Foure Godly Sermons, serm. 1. A. 4.

Euen so the marchants and leige people of our soueraigne lord the king and of his kingdomes peaceably frequenting your parts, either in regarde of traffique or of any other iust occasion, may there in like manner friendly bee vsed, and with your marchants and subiects suffered to communicate and to haue intercourse of traffique, inioying the commodities of the ancient league.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Henry IV. Prussian Ambassador, vol. i. fol. 159.

So passed we forth into the forsayd place,
With such communication as came to our mynde,
And then she sayd, whyles we haue time and space
To walke where we lyst, let vs somewhat finde
To passe the time with.
Skelton. The Crown of Laurel.

The pope's ho. althow it was night, hauing plesure in communication of this realm, introduced of himself communication of your gr. college, and began to tell the cardinalls De Monte and Sanctorum quatuor, what a meritorious act your gr. had begonne in that realm, & enquired of us, how the building proceded.
Strype. Memorials. The King's Ambassadors to Cardinal Wolsey.

Wherefore we belieue thys article by fayth, that holy church is a communion or felowship of holy men, and know it not by seeyng or feelyng, as wee doe the felowship of drapers or mercers, for then were it none article of the faith.
Barnes. Workes, fol. 246.

They mock the rehearsal of God's commandments, and of the epistles and gospels in our communion, and say, they are misplaced; they blaspheme our communion, calling it a popish mass, and say, that it hath a popish face, with other fierce dispisings, and cursed speakings.
Strype. Memorials. John Bale from Basil to Mr. Ashby.

Thou sorye to be shewed to fue
communitte dost praise:
Not so instructed Booke of me,
go fly thy fancyed waies.
Drant. Horace, to his Booke.

After the dinner, incontyment the minstrells of the Chammer begon to play, and then daunced. And thys don, they past the tyme at games, and in commonyng.
Leland. The Fyancells of Margaret, eldest Daughter of King Henry VIII. to James, King of Scotland.

Of this attachement was much commonyng amongst the common people, wherefore manye were glad, for surely he [Cardinal Wolsey] was not in the fauor of the commonaltie.
Grafton. Henry VIII. The twenty-second Yere.

That by them a place should be halowed and consecrate there, wherein the consuls might duly commune and conferre with the people, concerning all matters, according to the flight of birdes.
Holland. Livius, fol. 102.

It was the hour of the night, when thus the Son
Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert nigh
Of trees thick interwoven.
Milton. Paradise Regained, book ii. l. 261.

He that would enter into the house of holiness must be like Humilitas, an humble man; and he that conscientiously passe into the communialty of the impostuous Duessa, must be a very Ignaro.
More. Appendix to Defence, ch. xi.

It is therefore as natural for every wise man to enquire, Whither there is not a Supreme Being, who is supremely good, and communicable to us; in the enjoyment of whom, our chief happiness must consist. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book i. ch. i.

And reason; since his word all things produc'd,
Though chiefly not for glory as prime end,
But to show forth his goodness and impart
His good communicable to every soul
Freely.
Milton. Paradise Regained, book iii. l. 125.

Insomuch that, as I said before, the antient Hebrew had the same fortune that the Greek and Latin tongues had, to fall from being naturally spoken any where, to lose their general communicableness and vulgarity, and to be only school and book languages.
Howell. Letter, 60. book ii.

If henceforth ye shal finde any that shall presume to communicate with any of them, or else to defend or fauour any such fauorours, receiuers, communicants and defendours, within seauen daies after the same shall appeare and be manifest vnto you, to banish and expell them.
Fox. Martyrs, fol. 407. King Richard II. to the Vice-chancellor.

And I sayd, if it were duely ministred according to Christe's institution, that then I did beleeue that the faithfull communicants in receiuing that blessed sacrament, did receiue into their inward man, or soule, the very body and bloud of our Sauiour Jesus Christ. Id. Ib. fol. 1935.

COM-MUNE

But in the mean time, such of the nobility as had possessed the Evangell of Christ, and had communicate with the bretheren at the Lord's table were ever longer the more suspected by the queen.
Knox. History of Reformation, fol. 425.

He made him one of the best philosophers, and the best husbandmen; and, to adorn and communicate both those faculties, the best poet. Cowley. Essay, 4. Of Agriculture.

Cardinall Wolsey in his ambassage into Fraunce, commanded all his seruants to vse no French, but meere English to the French, in all communication whatsoeuer.
Camden. Remains. Languages, fol. 28.

For the Father and Spirit do dwell in his human nature, as he is now become one of the persons; the man, God's fellow, in their communicative society together.
Goodwin. Works, vol. i. part iii. fol. 35.

It is true indeed, God's essential glory cannot be added unto us, but the manifestation of his glory shall arise to us, we shall have it communicatively, as when you see the sun reflect upon the waters, though you see not the sun itself, yet you see as perfect a manifestation of it, as if you should see the sun itself.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. part iii. fol. 115.

With this account of Peter's they were satisfied, and blessed God, for that communicativeness of his goodness, that he had offered the same mercy to the Gentiles, as to the Jews, that if they will return, and amend, and receive Christ, they shall be saved, and that he had given them the grace to do so.
Hammond. Paraphrase. Acts, ch. xi. v. 18.

On flours repos'd, and with fresh flourets crown'd
They eate, they drink, and in communion sweet
Quaff immortalitie and joy.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book v.

Necessity, which oftimes made the primitive church to sell her sacred utensils, even to the communion-chalice.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, sec. 25.

The altar had his offering of a large set of double-gilt communion-plate, and his praises were returned to God on a handsome new organ, given by him to the quire.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon., vol. ii. fol. 1182.

Gilbert Berkley died of a lethargy, being eighty years of age. 1581: and is buried on the north side of the communion-table of his own cathedral. Fuller. Worthies. Norfolk.

This (true love) beares no brands, nor darts,
To murther different hearts,
But in a calme, and God-like unitie,
Preserves communitie.
Ben Jonson. The Forrest, 11. Epode.

But such knowledge is too wonderful for us; neither is it communicable to any creature, it being his great prerogative, who can say, wheresoever any thing is, there I am that I am.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon, 13.

As the inquisitive, in my opinion, are such meerly from a vacancy in their own imaginations, there is nothing, methinks, so dangerous as to communicate secrets to them; for the same temper of inquiry makes them as impertinently communicative.
Spectator, No. 228.

For, though some kind of communicativeness be essential to his goodness, yet his extension of it without himself, and his vouchsafing it to this or that particular person, are purely arbitrary.
Boyle. Seraphic Love

My justice to the communicator who made a great and deserved benefit of the laudanum, made me take that care to conceal some circumstances, that men may easily be much more confident than sure, that they have the right way of making the medicine.
Id. Account of the Helmontian Laudanum.

Siricius, who is our companion and fellow-labourer, with whom the whole world by mutual commerce of canonical or communicatory letters agree together with us in one common society.
Barrow. Discourse concerning the unity of the Church, vol. i. fol. 303.

That that which we call mass, or missa in Latin, is the communion-office; and it was therefore call'd missa or mass by the ancients, because when that came to be said, all those that did not intend to partake of the sacrament, were dismiss'd the congregation: the deacon told them they were to be gone.
Sharp. Works. Sermon, 10. vol. vii.

COM-MUNE. — COM-MUTE.

After divine service, and a sermon fitted to the occasion, the archdeacon, or his deputy, presents first those who are to be admitted deacons, to him, as he sits near to the communion-table, in the presence of the whole congregation then present.
Beveridge. Sermon, 3.

And thus the community perpetually retains a supream power of saving themselves from the attempts and designs of any body, even of their legislator, whenever they shall be so foolish, or so wicked, as to lay and carry on designs against the liberties and properties of the subject.
Locke. Works. Of Civil Government, ch. xiii.

Impatient reptile, Reason cry'd;
Arraign thy passion and thy pride.
Retire and commune with thy heart,
Ask, whence thou cam'st, and what thou art.
Cotton. Death. Vision the last.

What need you nothings thus to save?
Why place the dial in the grave?
A fig for wit and reputation,
Which sneaks from all communication.
Lloyd. A familiar Epistle to J. B.

Mr. Boswell's frankness and gaiety made every body communicative; and we heard many tales of these airy shows, with more or less evidence and distinctness.
Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

But were I entirely void of all personal connections with this community, I should nevertheless, merely from my great affection towards yourself, and in return to that which I am sensible you equally bear for me, most earnestly recommend them to your protection. Melmoth. Cicero. Letter, 16.

A COMMUNE, in the internal division of France since the Revolution, is the subdivision of a Canton, containing either part of a great city, some one considerable town, or a union of villages, under one Mayor and a common Municipality.

COMMU'TE, v.
COMMUTA'TION,
COMMU'TATIVE,
COMMU'TATIVELY,
COMMU'TUAL.

Lat. commuto; con, and muto; verbum a motu, id est motare. Vossius.

To give one thing and receive another for it; to interchange, to exchange, to purchase, redeem, or ransom.

Thinking, that the same is not onely good and expedient for example to be followed, and observed of other, but also gretly meritorious towards God wel justifying & mayntening the commutation & alteration of these religious places, wherof only did arise scandalum religionis.
Strype. Memoirs. The King's Ambassadors to Cardinal Wolsey.

Justice, all though it be but one entyir vertue, yet is it described in two kinds or spyces, the one is named justyce distrybutyue, whiche is in dystrybution of honour, money, benefite, or other thynge semblable: the other is called commutative or by exchaunge.
Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book iii. fol. 159.

Vitellescus vows to fast upon the last of February, but changing his mind, believes he may commute his fasting for alms: he resolves to break his fast and to give a ducket to the poor. But when he had new dined, he discourses the question again, and thinks it unlawful to commute, and that he is bound to pay his vow in kind; but the fast is broken, and yet if he refuses upon this new inquest to pay his commutation he is a deceiver of his own soul. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. iv.

There is so free a concession of indulgences appendant to all these, and a thousand fine devices to take away the fear of purgatory, to commute or expiate penances, that in no sect of men do they with more ease and cheapnesse reconcile a wicked life with the hopes of heaven then in a Roman communion.
Id. Liberty of Prophesying, sec 19.

COM-MUTE. — COMO.

That there be no commutation of pennaunce for sinne, but by the order and appointement of the bishop with thassent of the deane and chapter, or the most part of them, or with the assent of six preachers of that diocese.

Strype. Life of Whitgift. Appendix, book ii. No. 3.

Justice of actions, is by writers divided into commutative and distributive; and the former they say consisteth in proportion, arithmetical; the latter in proportion, geometrical. Commutative therefore, they place in the equality of value of things contracted for; and distributive, in the distribution of equal benefit to men of equal merit. Hobbs. Of Man, part i. ch. xv.

[Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, even so do to them.] This is the measure of commutative justice, or of that justice which supposes exchange of things profitable for things profitable: that as I supply your need, you may supply mine; as I do a benefit to you, I may receive one by you.

J. Taylor. Holy Living, ch. iii. sec. 1.

Be not stoically mistaken in the equality of sins, nor commutatively iniquous in the valuation of transgressions: but weigh them in the scales of heaven, and by the weights of righteous reason. Brown. Christian Morals.

And thirtie dozen moones with borrowed sheene,
About the world haue times twelue thirties beene,
Since loue our hearts, and Hymen did our hands
Vnite comutuall, in most sacred bands.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 267.

O cheat the gibbet of a sign,
And with his head commute for mine.

Fenton. To the Knight of the Sable Shield.

One of the most learned of them, even Aberbinal, saith expressly, that if the high-priest sinned through ignorance against any of God's commandments it was but just that he should be punished with death, and his body burnt; but the law required, that he shall bring a young bullock, instead of himself, and shall lay his hands upon him, to signify that this is his substitute, his commutation, or in his place. Beveridge. Sermon, 69.

According to the common division of justice into commutative and distributive, that which is called commutative is employed only about the strict value of things, according to an arithmetical proportion (as the schools speak) which admits of no degrees.

South. Sermons, vol. v. fol. 4.

Thus the sounds, water, and fire, being once annexed to those two elements, it was certainly more natural to call beings participating of the first, watery, and the last fiery, than to commute the terms and call them by the reverse.

Harris. Hermes, book iii. ch. iii.

Rich traders, from their success, are presumed to have sharp and vigorous understandings, and to possess the virtues of diligence, order, constancy, and regularity, and to have cultivated an habitual regard to commutative justice.

Burke. Appeal from the new to the old Whigs.

COMO, a Lake and Town in northern Italy, included within the limits of the Austrian Empire, and forming part of the Government of Milan. The Lake (which was the ancient Lacus Larius) is situated between the County of Chiavenna and the Milanese territory. Its greatest length is about thirty-six miles, and its breadth varies from one to four, while its elevation above the level of the sea is about 700 feet. It commences at the influx of the Maixa, near Cordona, and divides into two branches towards the south; the one extending to Como and the other to Lecco, where the river Adda, which had entered it above, again issues from the eastern branch. The surrounding scenery of this Lake is, in many places, highly picturesque and beautiful; being covered with vineyards, interspersed with elegant villas, and skirted by lofty mountains, many of which abound in beds of marble. The banks are adorned with several towns and villages, and the Lake is well stocked with fish. The upper part of it is sometimes called the Lake of Chiavenna.

The Town of Como is situated in a delightful valley near the south-western extremity of the Lake, and is almost encompassed by lofty mountains. It is the ancient Comum, an old town, and a Bishop's See. It is surrounded with walls, and backed by a conical eminence, crowned with the ruins of an ancient castle. Many of the houses are well built, and some of the public edifices are magnificent. The Cathedral is entirely composed of white marble hewn from the neighbouring quarries. Its style of architecture is mixed, but its whole aspect is imposing. Besides the Cathedral, there are twelve other churches, some of which are handsome structures. In the suburb of Vico, there are several Italian Palaces. The population of Como is nearly 15,000; and the chief manufactures are those of velvet, taffetas, gloves, stockings, and other kinds of silk stuffs. A trade is also carried on with Lombardy and Swisserland, and particularly the Grisons. Como was the birth-place of the younger Pliny, and the inhabitants have erected a statue to his memory in front of the Cathedral. The inscriptions accompanying it are dated in 1499; and one of them concludes with the two following lines:

Faustus honor, dulcisque juvat me Fama SECUNDUM
At mage concives hæc posuisse meos.

The Villa Pliniana, with its intermittent fountain, (Ep. iv. 30,) is still an object of curiosity to strangers. It stands on the eastern bank of the Lake, by the promontory of Torno; and its ebb and flow still takes place, for the most part, thrice in each day. This Villa, however, does not, though bearing his name, correspond with either of the favourite retreats which Pliny has described.

Como is in north latitude 45° 48′ and east longitude 9° 6′.

COMOCLADIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Triandria, order Monogynia, natural order Terebintaceæ. Generic character: calyx three-parted; corolla three-parted; drupe oblong; nut two-lobed.

Four species, natives of the West Indies.

COMORN, or KOMORN, the name of a County and Town of Hungary; both of which seem to derive their name from a celebrated fortress, near the site of the latter. This County lies near the banks of the Danube, and includes the Island of Schutt, with a considerable tract on the either side of that river; the whole including a population of about 112,000 individuals, who are spread over a space of 1138 square miles. Great part of the country is fertile; and yields wheat, wine, fruit, and other products common to that part of the Kingdom. The Town is seated at the conflux of the Waag with the Danube, and stands on a corner of the Island of Schutt. It is strongly fortified, defended by a fortress, and chiefly inhabited by Hungarians and Germans, who are members of the Greek Church, and amount to about 9000. The citadel is reckoned the strongest in Europe, and is said never to have surrendered to an enemy. A deep ditch separates the part of the island on which both this fortress and the town stand from the rest of the island, and a communication is formed between them by a bridge of boats. The inhabitants carry on a good trade in corn, wine, flax, fish, and honey. Comorn has suffered greatly from war, fire, and earthquakes. It was almost destroyed by the latter in 1783, subsequent to which Joseph II. released the inhabitants from the payment of taxes, for the period of twenty-five years. It is about thirty-eight miles south-east of Presburg,

COMO — COMOR

MEN. and nearly seventy south by east from Vienna; in latitude 47° 46′ north and longitude 16° 8′ east.

COMPA'CT, v. COMPA'CT, adj. CO'MPACT, n. COMPA'CTEDLY, COMPA'CTEDNESS, COMPA'CTNESS, COMPA'CTURE. } Lat. compingere, compactum. Pango, formerly pago; Gr. πάγω, Dor. pro πήγω, whence πηγνύω seu πηγνύμι, which denotes as well to fix, as to compose, to co-augment, to cause to grow together. Vossius; who also observes that the Latins use the expression pangere foedus.

To put together, to join, unite, knit, connect, fix or fasten together, to consolidate, to condense.

A compact, met. is a confirmed union, league, treaty, or agreement.

Of clouen firre compacted were his ribbs,
Surrey. Æneis, book ii.

Their houses wherein they sleepe, they ground vpon a round foundation of wickers artificially wrought and compacted together.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i. fol. 95.

Throughoute all the worlde shulde be founden in no commune weale more noble counsaylours, our lawes not only comprehendynge moste excellent reasons, but also beyng gathered and compacte (as I mought say) of the pure meale or floure, sifted out of the best lawes in all other countreys.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book i. fol. 53.

In as muche as from hym, the spirite of lyfe floweth into all the whole bodye, beyng compacte and set together of sondrie membres ioyned ordrely one to another, and peareyng throughe euery ioynt of the limmes.
Udall. Ephesians, ch. iv

And so alwaye, that such their acts statutes and ordinances bee not contrarie to any compacts, treaties or leagues, by vs or any our progenitours heretofore had or made.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Queen Marie's Patent.

It is a fort impregnable by warre,
Compacted all of mettall shining cleare.
Harrington. Orlando, book ii. st. 42.

For Christ is the head, whereby the whole bodie being compacted and coupled by euery joynt of gouernment, dothe according to the operation in the measure of euery member increase to a perfect bodie. Whitgift. Defence, fol. 469

Wherevpon writing to Eusebius bishop of Nicomedia in a speciall letter he willeth him with all dilligence o procure fiftie volumes of parchment well bound and compacted.
Fox. Martyrs, fol. 94.

Many of them in their own high towring conceits deeme themselves almost Omniscients, and wiser than an hundred parliaments compacted into one.
Prynne Soveraigne Power of Parliaments, part ii. Preface.

Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
Not gross to sink, but light and will aspire.
Shakspeare. Venus and Adonis.

And now in deserts waste and wilde arriued,
Far from the campe, far from resort and sight
Vafrine began, gainst Godfrey's liue contriued,
The false compacts and traines vnfold aright.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book xix. st. 86.

Tis an abstract of all volumes,
A pillaster of all columnes
Fancy e're rear'd to wit, to be
The smallest God's epitome,
And so compactedly express
All lovers pleasing wretchedness.
Lovelace. Lue fol. 80.

And first, let us weigh gravity against density or sticking together of parts; which sticking or compactedness, being natural to density, requires some excess of gravity in proportion to the density, or some outward violence, to break it.
Digby. On Bodies, ch. iv.

The closeness and compactness of the parts resting together, doth much confer to the strength of the union.
Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatising, ch. v.

And over it a faire portcullis hong,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comly compasse, and compacture strong,
Neither vnseemely short, nor yet exceeding long.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 9.

If the inhabitants are guarded against this eruption, yet they have the uncomfortable knowledge that there is a mass of destruction compacted and pent up for them in the bowels of the earth.
Hoadly. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 20.

That men should keep their compacts, is certainly a great and undeniable rule in morality: but yet, if a Christian, who has the view of happiness and misery in another life, be ask'd why a man must keep his word, he will give this as a reason, because God, who has the power of eternal life and death, requires it of us.
Locke. Of Human Understanding, book i. ch. iii.

In examining whether cold might be diffused through all mediums indefinitely, notwithstanding their compactness, or the closeness of their texture, we must have a care not to make our trial with mediums of too great thickness.
Boyle. Experimental History of Cold, tit. xiv.

A different spinning every different web
Asks from your glowing fingers; some require
The more compact, and some the looser wreath.
Dyer. The Fleece, book iii.

This very thing says Theophylact, gives a stronger proof of the integrity of the evangelists, that they have not agreed in all points: for otherwise, they might have been suspected to have written by compact.
Middleton. On the Variations among the Evangelists.

Nothing so much breaks in upon, and destroys this compactness, as that mode of composition which cuts in the middle the figures on the foreground, though it was frequently the practice of the greatest painters, even of the best age.
Sir Joshua Reynolds. The Art of Painting, note 27.

COMPA'GES, COMPA'GINATE, COMPAGINA'TION. } Lat. compago, aginis. See COMPACT, above. To compaginate, Cockeram says, is to set together that which is broken.

That soul and life that is now fled and gone, from a lifeless carcase, is only a loss to that particular body or compages of matter, which by means thereof is now disanimated; but it is no loss to the whole, it being but transposed in the universe, and lodged somewhere else.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, book i. ch. i. sec. 30.

Thus have I set before you Christian charity in the form of Jacob's ladder, on which our love must ascend to him who rests upon the top of it, and in this similitude mercenary love seemeth to answer well to the lower rounds neerest the earth, on which our infirme nature is allowed to set her first steps, and so to rise by degrees to the uppermost marches which touch heaven, to the which none reacheth but filiall love, and our fraternall charities seeme to be the side-pieces which combine and compaginate the whole frame; so that these three concurrences do compleat the meanes of our soules re-ascent to her Creator.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 14. sec. 5.

For this is that which the apostle calls, the body of sin, a compagination of many parts and members; just as among the lawyers, a flock, a people, a legion are called bodies.
Taylor. Polemical Discourses, fol. 659

The latter part of which passage may confirm what we formerly delivered in another section, concerning the unequal compagination of icy islands.
Boyle. Experimental History of Cold, tit. xv.

CO'MPANY, v. CO'MPANY, n. CO'MPANYING, n. CO'MPANABLE, CO'MPANABLENESS, COMPA'NIABLE, COMPA'NIABLENESS, COMPA'NION, COMPA'NIONABLE, COMPA'NIONABLENESS, COMPA'NIONSHIP. } Old Fr. compain; Fr. compagnon; It. compagno; Swe. kompan; Dutch, kompaen; Ger. compan. Wachter says, it may, (as Hen. Stephens thinks) signify combenno, from benna, a Gallic carriage, i. e. one who rides in the same benna; or, if derived from A. S. camp, (see CAMP,) a fellow-sol-

COMPACT. — COMPANY.

COMPANY. dier; or if (as Menage thinks) the name be taken a communi pane, a messmate.

Fr. compagnon; an associate, fellow mate, colleague, partner or co-partner. Compagonner; to accompany, associate, consort, be familiar, joyn in fellowship, walk together. Cotgrave.

An stede he gan prikie wel vor þe maistrie,
And with him adde of kniztes a vair compainie.
R. Gloucester, fol. 553.

He bitok him Sir Henri is sone, to be is companioun,
Wiþ him to wende aboute, to sywe him vp & doun.
Id. fol. 552.

Dam Helienore quene was sche, scho bare him company.
R. Brunne, fol. 73.

He is þe muriest of mouthe. at metes þer he sutes
And compenable in companye. as Crist hymself techeþ.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, fol. 282.

At night was come into the hostelrie
Wel nine and twentie in a compagnie
Of sondry folk, by aventure yfalle
In felawship, and pilgrimes were they alle,
And toward Canterbury wolden ride.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 24.

A wif he had of excellent beautee,
And compaignable, and revelous was she.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 12934.

I will not rehearse here her great chastity & holines of liuing. For I speake but of the loue of a good wife: which neuer lightly goeth alone, but euer coupled, & companied with all other vertues.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman.

Lo Judas oon of the twelve cam, and with him a greet company with swerdis and battis sente fro the princis of the prestis and fro the eldre men of the puple.
Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxvi.

For albeit the mā would not take the payne to read the Greeke, yet if he had but once looked vpon the translation of his old friend and companion Erasmus, it would haue taught him to haue sayd, solutus doloribus mortis, that is, dissoluing the paynes of death. Frith. Workes, fol. 42.

As there is an exact companionship of power betwene my father and me; so there is a full consent of will.
Udall. John, ch. x.

Euery societie or companying together is delightful & wished for by nature of al mē, for as much as nature hath ordeined vs to be sociable, friendly, & louing together.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorike, fol. 56.

Euen so these menne, insteede of Goddes holy majesties, companieninge with their owne light, and clowdy fantasses, haue brought foorthe these strange, ougle, deformed shapes in religion, lothesome to remember, and monstrous to behold.
Jewell. A Replie to M. Hardinge, fol. 626.

And he thereon stood gazing, he might see
The blessed angels to and fro descend
From highest heauen, in gladsome companee
And with great joy into that citie wend,
As commonly as friend does with his friend.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 10.

His eyes full of merry simplicity, his words of hearty companableness: and such an one, whose head one would not think so stayed as to think mischievously.
Sidney. Arcadia, book ii.

Towards his queene he was nothing uxorious, nor scarce indulgent, but companiable, and respectiue, and without jealousie.
Bacon. Henry VII.

What a busie life was this of Christ's? He spent the night in the mount of Olives, the day in the Temple; whereas the night is for a retired repose, the day for companie; his retirednesse was for prayer; his companiableuesse was for preaching.
Hall. Cont. The woman taken in adultrie.

Hee [Richard III.] was close and secret, a deepe dissembler, lowly of countenance, arrogant of heart, outwardly compinable where he inwardly hated, not letting to kisse whom he thought to kill. Stow. Edward V. Anno 1483.

First sweare by thy best love here, in earnest,
(If thou, which lov'st all, canst love any best)
Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street
Though some more spruce companion thou dost meet.
Donne. Satire, 1.

And no state that ever yet I read of, but held such unworthy of life, and so not fit for any conversation of men, as having forfeited in that, all which makes one man companionable to another. Feltham. Resolve, 18.

Yet he [Sir Joseph Wagstaff] had a great companionableness in his nature, which exceedingly prevailed with those who, in the intermission of fighting, loved to spend their time in jollity and mirth. Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, book xiv.

VOLUM. If it be honor in your warres, to seeme
The same you are not, which for your best ends
You adopt your policy: how is it lesse or worse
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in warre.
Shakspeare. Coriolanus, fol. 17.

There love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man:
Companions of the war, and lov'd so well,
That when one dy'd, as ancient stories tell,
His fellow to redeem him went to hell.
Dryden Palamon and Arcite.

Then when at eve, the star of love
Glows with soft radiance from above,
And each companionable guest
Withdraws, replenish'd, not opprest,
Let each well-pleas'd, at parting say—
"My life be such, a wedding-day!"
Mallet. Cupid and Hymen.

COMPA'RE, v.
COMPA'RE, n.
CO'MPARABLE,
CO'MPARABLY,
CO'MPARATIVE,
COMPA'RATIVELY,
COMPA'RATURE,
COMPA'RER,
COMPA'RING, n.
COMPA'RISON, v.
COMPA'RISON, n.

Compar, con, and par, whence, says Vossius, perhaps comparo. Par, Scaliger deduces from the Gr. παρὰ, juxta, apud, prope. Vossius refers to the Hebrew. To search into or examine, to ascertain or determine, sc. the likeness or unlikeness, similarity or dissimilarity, equality or difference. Chaucer and Wiclif use the verb, to comparison. Spenser uses the verb, to compare, from the Lat. comparo, to procure.

My conning is thinne, my witte is exiled, like to a foole naturall, am I comparisoned.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, book i.

I heard a herdsman once compare,
That quiet nights he had mo slept
And had more mery daies to spare
Than he which ought the beastes he kept.
Vncertaine Auctors. They of the mean estate are happiest.

And as for hys honourable behauor, and princely maiestie: fewe princes of ful & ripe age, be to hym comparable, or equivollent. Hall. Henry VI. The tenth Yere.

And he seide, to what thing schulen we likne the kyngdom of God: or to what parable schulen we comparisowne it?
Wiclif. Mark, ch. iv.

And he sayd· where vnto shall we lyken the kyngdom of God: with what comparison shall we compare it.
Bible. Anno 1551.

For what be goodes in comparison of health, libertie, and strength, which be all setled and fastened in the body.
Sir John Cheke. Hurt of Sedition, f. 1.

COM-PARE.

What can be compared to the order of the heauens, and to the motion of the starres in their severall revolutions, which moue most exactly as it were by rule and square, by line and levell, from one generation to another.

Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 89.

No scarce good morsell all his life did taste,
But both from back and belly still did spare,
To fill his bagges, and riches to compare.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 4. st. 28.

And ouer him, art striuing to compaire
With nature, did an arbour greene dispred
Framed of wonton ivie, flowering faire,
Through which the fragrant eglantine did spred
His prickling armes.

Id. Ib. book ii. can. 5.

Is not this certain, was not she a chaste one,
And such a one, that no compare dwelt with her.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Valentinian, act iii. sc. 3.

——— Thus far these beyond
Compare of mortal prowess, yet observ'd
Their dread commander.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 588.

And accordingly we see, that we cannot compare black to white, or an horse to an oxe; unlesse we take together the properties, by which black differs from white, or an oxe from an horse. and consequently they must remain unmingled and without confusion, precisely what in themselves they are, and be indifferent in the sight of the comparer.

Digby. On the Soul, ch. i.

For as far as I may conjecture by our master's text, there could no form for such a royal use be comparably imagined like that of the foresaid nation, which I shall adventure to explain.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 45.

The half hat, the whole hat, the half smile, the whole smile, the nod, the embrace, the positive parting with a little bow, the comparative at the middle of the room, the superlative at the door.

Cowley. Essay 1. Of Liberty.

The images of objects are very smal and inconsiderable in our brains comparatively to the vastness of the things which they represent.

Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatising, part ii. ch. iii.

With whether of the two, I pray you, is it most like that her majesty shall lead her life most quietly, most joyfully, and most to her heart's contentation, most agreeing to the nature of her country, stature, and comparature of his body, such as herself being judge cannot be dispraised.

Strype. Life of Sir Thomas Smith. Orations for and against the Queene's marriage.

There is not in this world, either perfect misery, or perfect happinesse. Comparison, more than reality, makes men happy and can make them wretched. Feltham. Resolve 72.

Then saw I Læda; (linkt in nuptiall chaine
With Tyndarus) to whom, she did sustaine
Sonnes much renown'd for wisdome; Castor one
That past, for vse of horse, comparison.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book ii. fol. 169.

What Theseus did, or Theban Hercules,
Holds no compare with this victorious peace,
Which on the Turks shall greater honour gain,
Than all their giants and their monsters slain.

Waller. The defeat of the Turks, 1683.

The comparative anatomy of brute animals has indeed been cultivated with some attention; and has been the source of the most usefull discoveries in the anatomy of the human body. But the comparative animal œconomy of mankind and other animals, and comparative views of their states and manner of life, have been little regarded.

Gregory. Comparative View, &c. sec. 1.

But let me have affirm'd our knowledge to be comparatively very little; how, I beseech your lordship, does that any way prove, that this proposition, "knowledge consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of our ideas," any way tends to scepticism.

Locke. Second Reply to the Bishop of Worcester.

The comparing them [ideas] one with another, in respect of extent, degrees, time, place, or any other circumstances, is another operation of the mind about its ideas, and is that upon which depends all the large tribe of ideas, comprehended under relation.

Locke. Human Understanding, book ii. ch. xi. sec. 4.

COM-PARE. — COM-PASS.

The first, [Origen] minding his adversary [Celsus] of the difference between the future life promised in the Gospel, and that taught in Paganism, bids him compare the Christian doctrine with what all the sects of philosophy, and all the mysteries, among Greeks and barbarians, taught concerning it.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book ii. sec. 4.

Cicero, in his first book of Divination, where he laboured to assert the reality of such a power in the Pagan world, was able to produce nothing equal, or comparable to them.

Hurd. Works. Sermon 4. vol. v.

The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews shows at large that the Christian institution ought to take place of the Mosaic, upon account of the comparative weakness and unprofitableness of the first covenant.

Jortin. Discourse concerning the Christian Religion.

COMPA'RT, v.
COMPA'RT, n.
COMPARTI'TION,
COMPA'RTMENT,
COMPA'RTNER,
COMPA'RTNERSHIP.

Fr. comparter; Lat. compartire; con, and partiri, to part or divide into parts.

But as it happened, they not agreeing, Gardner and his compartners sought by all subtile meanes how to entangle and intrappe them into farther daunger, whiche not long after was brought to passe. Barnes. Life, A A a. 4.

I am now come to the casting and contexture (in some edition, comparting) of the whole work, comprehended under the term of compartition. By which the authors of this art do understand a graceful, and useful distribution of the whole ground-plot, both for rooms of office, and of reception or entertainment.

Wotton. Elements of Architecture.

Wherein since they are so bold as to venture upon three stages, we might examine their artifice in the contignations, the rule and order in the compartitions.

Sir Thomas Brown. Cyrus Garden, ch. iii. fol. 55.

In the midst was placed a large compartment, composed of grotesque work, wherein were harpies with wings and lion's claws, and their hinder parts converted into leaves and branches.

Carew. A Masque at Whitehall, Anno 1633.

——— But, oh Prion!
When I bring into count with my disasters,
My wife's compartnership, my Kate's, my life's,
Then, then my frailty feels an earthquake.

Ford. Perkin Warbeck, act iv. sc. 3.

The rules of painting are exactly preserved: we have not only a contrast of passions in different persons, but variety of place in each distinct compartment.

Hart. Notes upon the Sixth Thebaid of Statius, note 20.

In every part of the human figure, when not spoiled by too great corpulency, will be found this distinctness, the parts never appearing uncertain or confused, or as a musician would say, slurred; and all those smaller parts which are comprehended in the larger compartment are still to be there, however tenderly marked. Sir Joshua Reynolds. The Art of Painting, note 56.

The crystal surface is comparted all,
In niches verg'd with rubies.

Glover. Athenaid, book iv.

CO'MPASS, v.
CO'MPASS, n.
CO'MPASSING, CO'MPASS-SAW.

Fr. compasser; It. compassare; Sp. compassar; Dutch, compassen. Ambire, passibus circuire, circumcingere; Dutch and Ger. passen, to pass. In Mid. Lat. compassare.

To compass, in Chaucer and others, seems equivalent to,—to contrive. Tyrwhit.

To pass, move or go round, to surround or encircle, to gird around, to circumscribe, to circumvent;—to stretch, reach or extend around, or enclose within; and thus to have in the power, to attain or obtain.

COM-PASS.

Now maugre Juno, Aneas
For all her sleight and her compas
Atcheiued all his auenture.
Chaucer. The first booke of Fame.

And in his wit a night compassed he
How Jason might best destroyed be,
Withouten slander of his compasment,
And at the last he toke auisement,
That to senden him into some farre countre,
There as this Jason may destroyed be.
Id. Of Hypsiphile and Medea.

It stant not in my suffisance
So great thinges to compass:
But I mote lette it ouerpasse
And treaten vpon other thinges.
Gower. Conf. Am., book i. fol. 8.

And also there ben signes twelue,
Whiche haue her circles by hem selue,
Compassed in the Zodiake.
Id. Ib. book vi. fol. 145.

Ther saw I first the derke imagining,
Of felonie, and alle compassing.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1998.

Bi feith thei passiden the Reed See as bi drye londe, which thing Egiptians asaiynge weren deuoured. Bi feith the wallis of Jerico felden doun by cumpassing of seuene daies.
Wiclif. Ebrewis, ch. xi.

So that fro Ierusalem bi cumpas to the Illyryk See I have fillid the gospel of Crist. Id. Romaynes, ch. xv.

——— Supplantarie:
Through whose compassement and gile
Ful many hath loste his while
In loue, as well as other wise.
Gower. Conf. Am., book ii. fol. 40.

Queen Juno then thus tooke her tale againe:
This travaile be it mine: but by what meane
Marke, in fewe wordes I shal thee learne eftsones,
This worke in hand may now be compassed.
Surrey. Æneis, book iv.

And when he shulde haue bene compased with his armed host he sate drinking and eating excessiuely among his vayne flatterers and soft herlets. Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. v.

But euen by and by in his presence, they picked a quarrell to the Lorde Richard Graye, the kynge's other brother by his mother, sayinge that hee with the Lorde Marques his brother and the Lorde Riuers his vncle, had coumpassed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to sette variaunce among the states, and to subdewe and distroye the noble blood of the realme.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 42.

For out of Spaine they haue discouered all the Indies and seas occidental, and out of Portingall all the Indies and seas orientall: so that by this part of the orient & occident, they haue compassed the world. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Robert Thorne.

Now to know in what longitude any land is, your lordship must take a ruler or a compasse, and set the one foot of the compasse vpon the land or coast whose longitude you would know, and extend the other foot of the compasse to the next part of one of the transuersall lines in the orientall or occidentall part.
Id. Ib.

In whose prospect in dolfull wise,
My tacle failde, my cumpasse brake,
Through hote desires sueh stormes did rise,
That stern and top went all to wrake.
Vncertaine Auctors. A Complaint of the loise of Liberty by Loue.

Thus talked he, whan from the tombe at secret caue by lowe
A serpent great did slyde, with circles seuen of mighty sise
Along the graue he drew with foldinge seuen in compaswyse.
Phaer. Æneides, book v. fol. 111.

The greater sirts (that sailers often cast
In perill great of death and losse extreame)
They compast round about, and safely past,
Then Cape Judeca and floud Magras streame.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book xv. st. 18.

——— Ere the yeere his course had compassed,
Three hundred pledges for my good desarts,
And thrice three hundred thanks for my good parts
I with me brought, and did to her present.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 7.

Tytius I saw: to whom the glorious earth
Opened her wombe, and gaue vnhappie birth;
Vpwards, and flat vpon the pauement lay
His ample lims; that spread in their display
Nine acres compasse.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xi. fol. 176.

To be short, the ends men aim at in the commission of sin are those two bastard goods, utile and jucundum, worldly profit and carnall pleasure. Within the compas of which two fall all those kinds of false happiness whereabout the philosophers were so divided. Mede. Works. Discourse 30.

It [charity] will not be frightened from making attempts even on those of the first rank in wickedness, the worst and most hardened of men; because it knows, that their revolt from sin to virtue (if it can be compassed) will be of mighty consequence to religion, and will probably draw whole troops of common sinners along with it. Atterbury. Sermon 2. vol. i.

I have added in a few notes, the most remarkable passages I had an eye to in the Holy Scriptures, and in the writings of the primitive fathers; they being the only compass and charts which I have made use of in my navigation.
Hart. The Amaranth, or Religious Poems. Preface.

COM-PASS.

COMPA'SSION, v. COMPA'SSION, n. COMPA'SSIONABLE, COMPA'SSIONATE, v. COMPA'SSIONATE, adj. COMPA'SSIONATELY. Mid. Lat. compatiri; Fr. compassioner; It. compassionare; Sp. compadicer. Con, and pati-or, passus, from the Gr. παθεῖν, to feel. Equivalent to compassion is sympathy, συμπάθεια.

To sympathize; to feel as others feel, to share or participate the (painful) feelings of others; to pity, or commiserate.

And if so be our destinee be shape
By eterne word to dien in prison,
Of our lignage have some compassion
That is so low ybrought by tyrannie.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale.

For also to boundun men ghe hadden compassioun, and ghe resseyuyden with ioie the robbyng of ghoure goodis, knowynge that ghe han a better and a dwellinge substaunce.
Wiclif. Ebrewis, ch. x.

And I wonder that M. More can laugh at it, and not rather weepe for compassion, to see the soules for which Christ shed his bloud to perish. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 300.

Instead of compassioning and relieving the loss and miseries of our distressed bretheren, every man is ready to run upon the spoils, and, as if it were from some plundered enemy, is eagerly busie in carrying away what riches soever come to hand.
Hall. Cases of Conscience, vol. iii. fol. 797.

For this Senecio I have no compassion, because he was taken, as we say, in ipso facto, still labouring in the work of avarice; but the poor rich man in Saint Luke (whose case was not like this) I could pity methinks if the Scripture would permit me.
Cowley. The shortness of Life and the uncertainty of Riches, Ess. 9.

Fiue moones were in heauins conoaue nightly scene,
As if that heauen vpon our state below,
Foreseeing our harmes compassionate had been,
And had foresent them with their shine to show
To purblind England her approching woe.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 687.

So the fines imposed there were the more questioned, and repined against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing St. Paul's Church; and thought therefore to be the more severely imposed, and the less compassionately reduced and exacted. State Trials. Trial of Archbishop Laud.

But (as say our authours out of the Scripture) seeing they who are pitteous, finde mercie, that honest and compassionate-hearted man, found all his corne and grounds (though interlaced with theirs) altogether vntoucht and vnharm'd.
Speed. Henry III. book ix. ch. ix. sec. 50.

COMPASSION. — COMPATIBLE.

This ought carefully to be watched, and early remedied, so as to settle and cherish the contrary, and more natural temper of benignity and compassion in the room of it.
Locke. Of Education, sec. 117.

Out of humanity he [a good judge] should desire, that no man may incurr the blemish of guilt or pain of suffering; he should tender the partie's case as compassionable, and desire that he may be delivered from the evil threatening him.
Barrow. Sermon, 20. vol. i.

Then with a kind compassionating look,
And sighs, bespeaking pity ere he spoke,
Few words he said; but easy those and fit,
More slow than Hybla-drops, and far more sweet.
Dryden. Absalom and Achitophel.

The more they have the better humour'd they should be taught to be; and the more compassionate, and gentle to those of their brethren, who are placed lower, and have scantier portions.
Locke. Of Education, sec. 117.

How kindly and compassionately soever, we, as private Christians, are to treat those that differ from us, and pursue a wrong way out of conscience; yet this doth not hinder, but that both wholesome laws may be made, for the restraining the exorbitancies of mistaken zeal; and, when these laws are made, that they may be put in execution.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 10. vol. i.

Wisdom and worth are sacred names; rever'd,
Where not embrac'd; applauded! deified!
Why not compassioned too?
Young. The Complaint. Night 7.

In compassion therefore to such, Holy Scripture has provided a still easier instruction than this negative precept of my text, by the addition of the positive command, that he who loveth God love his brother also. Warburton. Sermon 3. vol. ix.

And can either of these objects be indifferent to us? Be it but the latter of the two, [keeping up and promoting the faith in professed Christians] it must deeply affect a good and compassionate mind.
Hurd. Sermon before the Society for the propagation of the Gospel.

COMPA'TIBLE, } Mid. Lat. compatiri, which
COMPATIBI'LITY. } Vossius, de Vitiis, says is sometimes used for convenire. It. compatevole, compatibile; Fr. and Sp. compatible;—concurrable, which can abide or agree together, or endure or bear with one another. Compatir, to suffer, endure, abide or bear with one another, to agree or accord together. Of the same Origin as Compassion, q. v.

It is also written competible in our old writers; perhaps from a supposed connection with competent.

But the churche both knoweth & confesseth, that wedlocke & priesthod be not repugnant but cōpatible of their nature, and that wedded men haue been made priestes and keep styll theyr wyues.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 485.

But those formes which are so distincted, that they be not contrarie but disalike: are compatible in one subiect, as quantitie and qualitie, which being distincted in respect to their genus generalissimum, yet may be in one person. Fox. Martyrs, fol. 328.

At which time the prince's electors sent to signify, that they had chosen him King of the Romans, but the king refuseth to accept it, as being an honour out of his way, and scarce compatible with his state at home.
Baker. Edward III. Anno 1347.

And this is the second ground of infidelity amongst Christians, the competibility of knowledge, and incompetibility of true faith, with carnall desires. Hammond. Works. Sermon 7. vol. iv.

I add, that these men's incredulity is hence more inexcusable, because the possibility of such a being, its existence, the competibility and concurrence of such properties in one thing, is (as we otherwhere have largely showed) by a very plain instance declared, even by that being within every man, which in a degree partakes of all those properties. Barrow. Works. Sermon 9. vol. ii.

COMPATIBLE. — COMPEER.

We have not only all the proofs of the genuineness of those writings, that can be given for any other writings, which are the most unquestionable in the world; but this over and above, which is compatible to none but these; namely, that the matter of these writings is of such a nature, that all mankind were concerned to detect the fraud and the forgery of them, if there had been any Sharp. Works. Sermon 3. vol. ii.

Let us not encourage that fastidious disposition which is discontented with every thing short of perfection, and unreasonably require, as we sometimes do, a union of excellencies, not quite compatible with each other.
Sir Joshua Reynolds. Discourse 14.

COMPATIENT. See COMPASSION.

The same compatient and commorient fates and times.
Sir George Buck. History of King Richard III.

COMPA'TRIOT, n. } Fr. compatriote; one's coun-
COMPA'TRIOT, adj. } tryman. Cotgrave. Mid. Lat. compatriare, pro eodem solo natum esse. Vossius, de Vitiis. Compatriota, babarously for sumpatriota. Vossius, Ib.

On the contrary, no words can express the horrible crueltie and injustice that is wont to be done in this kind, not only on our shores, but in other nations also, upon the ship-wrecked goods both of strangers, and our own compatriots.
Hall. Cases of Conscience, vol. iii. fol. 796.

There is also here St. Oen, the greatest sanctuary in the city, founded by one of our compatriots, as the name imports.
Howell. Letter 15. book i. sec. 1.

For Stephen Laugton with the BB. of London and Ely, (thirsting after revenge, though with the destruction of their country, and bloud-shed of innumerable their compatriots) going, &c.
Speed. King John, ch. viii. sec. 46.

She [Britain] rears to freedom an undaunted race;
Compatriot, zealous, hospitable, kind,
Her's the warm Cambrian; her's the lofty Scot.
Thomson. Liberty, part v.

If you would inspire this compatriot of ours with pity or regard, for one of these; would you not hide that distinction?
Burke. Vindication of Natural Society.

——————— Praise enough
To fill the ambition of a private man,
That Chatham's language was his mother's tongue,
And Wolf's great name compatriot with his own.
Cowper. Task, book ii.

How happened it that he did not employ hero-worship to this purpose (so natural a superstition that it became universal) rather than the whimsical and monstrous practice of brute worship, not symbolical, when direct hero-worship would have served his purpose so much better; religious zeal for the exclusive honour of a dead citizen being likely to rise much higher than reverence to a compatriot animal. Warburton. The Divine Legation.

COMPE'ER, v. } Fr. compere, n.; Lat. compar.
COMPE'ER, n. } See COMPARE.

An equal, a fellow, an associate or companion upon equal terms.

With him ther rode a gentil Pardonere
Of Rouncevall, his friend and his compere,
That strait was comen from the court of Rome.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 672.

GON. Not so not
In his own grace he doth exalt himselfe,
More than in your addition.
REG. In my rights,
By me inuested, he compeeres the best.
Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 307.

Wherfore I pray both him and his compeere,
To beare with that which I have written heere.
Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

And therefore sending for therle of Salisbury his felow and compere in all his doynges, counsailes, and fortunes, (after long communicaciō had, of the quene's misgouernaunce, and how she without their assent, did all thynges at her wyll and pleasure) determined to raise a greate army and by fine force, either to die or win their purpose.
Hall. Henry VI. The thirty-seventh Yere.

For let the king know, gentle heralds, truly,
How his descent from his great throne, to honour
A stranger subject with so high a title.
As his compeer in arms, hath conquer'd more
Then any sword could do.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, act v. sc. 1.

Now, while the drowsy world lies lost in sleep,
Let me associate with the serious night,
And contemplation her sedate compeer..
Thomson. Winter.

Thy arduous task is now begun,
And, starting from a nobler goal,
Heroes and kings of ages past,
Are thy compeers. Whitehead. Ode 6.

COMPENABLE is companionable; fit for company. See COMPANY.

He is þe muriest of mouthe. at metes þer he sute}
And compenable in companye. as Crist hym self teche}.
Piers Ploukman. Vision, fol. 282.

He [God] thought it vnconuenient to leaue him all alone, and so joyned to him a liuing creature, most like vnto him of minde and shape; with whose conuersation and compenable wordes, he might sweetly spend his time.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman.

COMPE'L, v. } Lat. compellere; con, and pellere;
COMPE'LLABLE, } Gr. πέλειν, movere, to move.
COMPE'LLER. } To move or cause to move together; to drive together; and then, generally, To force, to oblige, to constrain, to overpower.

And anoon Jhesus compelliđ the disciplis to go up into a boot and go bifore him over the see while he left the peple.
Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xiv.

But yet ye Gallis or Frenchmē helde the Romaynes so short, yt they were compelled to gyue vnto Brine their Duke, a M. li. weyght of golde, as therof is wytnesse Titus Liuius.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. xxxi.

Further, my lord chancellor myght lern by this manne's deed, what horrible and develish wayes be used towardes Christe's members by himselfe and others, that the like was never used amonge the Turkes, by villanie and compulsion to drive men, and compell men to such a religion as the word of God never knew of Strype. Memoirs. A Briefe Treatise, No. 24.

I name covetousnesse in the first place, as the root of all these mischiefs, which Achan like, compels them to commit sacrilege, and to make simoniacall compacts (and what not) to their own ends. Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 137.

The Booke of Common Prayer doth greatly commend, and like the receyuing of the whole church together, but if that can not be obteyned (as it cannot, and they will not haue men compelled vnto it) it secludeth not those that be well disposed; so they be a competent number. Whitgift. Defence, fol. 530.

Now in the state of Israel under kings, was there any earthly power by which those kings were compellable to any thing, or any subject allowed to resist them in any case whatsoever.
Hobbs. De Corpore Politico, part ii. fol. 79.

And if it were done, what pleasure shall the compelled party have of the compeller, or what trust can the compeller have of the compelled?
Strype. Life of Thomas Smith. On the Queen's Marriage.

If it be obscure, then she [the church] sees it obscurely: for she sees it as it is, or else she sees it not at all: and therefore must declare it to be so: that is, probably, obscurely, peradventure: but not evidently, compellingly, necessarily.
Taylor. Polemical Discourses. On the real Presence, sec. 2.

Taught by this great example to be just,
Succeeding kings shall well fulfil their trust;
Discord and war, and tyranny shall cease,
And jarring nations be compell'd to peace.
Lansdowne. Urganda's Prophecy.

Before the sun has gilt the skies,
Returning labour bids me rise
Obedient to the hunter's horn,
He quits his couch at early morn,
By want compell'd, I dig the soil,
His is a voluntary toil. Cotton. Fable 5.

COMPELLATION. Compellare, con, and pellare. Pellare est voce citare, ut quis adsit et prope nos veniat. Martinius. Compellation seems to be used simply for name; language of address.

Like that of the thrush and swallow in Æsope, instead of mutual love, kind compellations, whore and thiefe is heard, they fling stools at one another's heads.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 69.

The king took very little time to consider who should be his successor, but the very next time the Bishop of London (who was longer on his way home than the king had been) came to him, his majesty entertained him very chearfully with his compellation, My Lord's Grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome.
Clarendon. History of Rebellion, book i. fol. 89.

How familiarly doth Moses heare of his end! It is no more betwixt God and Moses, but, Goe up and dye. If he had invited him to a meale, it could not have been in a more sociable compellation. Hall. Cont. The Death of Moses, vol. i. fol. 900.

He useth this endearing compellation, my little children, the better to shew the great care and love he had for them: such as a father hath for his little children, that they might be the more ready to hearken to that fatherly advice he was now to give them.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 69.

In that compellation wherewith our Lord begins his prayer, Our Father which art in heaven; the word, heaven, when thus applied to God does not signify literally a particular place, in point of situation; but figuratively, a state of highest dignity and supreme dominion. Clarke. Sermon 15. vol. v.

CO'MPEND, n. } Compendium, quod cum compenditur una sit. Varro, lib. iv.
COMPE'NDIOUS, } Con, and pendere, to weigh;
COMPE'NDIOUSLY, } because those things which COMPE'NDIOUSNESS, } are weighed together, facilius
COMPE'NDIUM. } expediantur.

Sp. and It. compendio; It. compendiare; and Sp. compendiar, to weigh together; and thus to collect or gather into a compact or compressed form; to collect the sum, value, or amount of. And a compendium, is, That which is collected or gathered into a compact or compressed form; the amount, sum, or summary; an abridgement, an epitome.

Now woll I shortly here reherce
Of that I haue saied in verce
All the sentence by and by
In wordes fewe compendiously.
Chaucer. Romant of the Rose, fol. 127.

More ouer, towarde the acquiring of maiestie, thre thinges be required in the oration of a man hauyng autoritie, that it be compendious, sententious, and delectable.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 102.

Saint Paule therefore inspyred wyth the spirit of God, compendiously toucheth in very few wordes, both these two pointes at ones, where he wryteth vnto Titus: That man that is an hertike after ones or twise warning: voide & escewe him.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 1036.

Trie therefore all doctrine. Wherewith shall we trie it: with the doctrine of the apostles, and with the Scripture which is the touchstone; ye and because ye loue compendiousnes, ye shall haue a short rule to trie them withall.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 414.

Now my Lord, to write a history of Dr. Goad his journey and mine own, between Rotterdam and Dort that night, on which we came from your L. would move too much pity, especially if you should make relation of the same to my lady: the compend of it is this.
Hale. Letters, part ii. Dr. Balcanquals, fol. [34.]

So that our Saviour's expression in my text is to be construed as a compendious speech or figure, wherein together with the duty of forgiveness of injuries he teecheth us from whom the reconcilement or overture thereof is to begin; namely, from him who hath done the wrong. Mede. Works. Discourse 46.

COM-PEND. — COM-PENSATE

And if it be sufficient for a man at least to cry for pardon for having all his life time neither regarded laws nor conscience, certainly they have found out a better compendium of religion, and need not be troubled with variety of rules and cautions of carefulness and a lasting holiness.

J. Taylor. On Repentance. Preface.

And verily, wise Lycurgus framed and exercised his citizens immediately from their childhood by keeping them down at the first with silence to this short and sententious kind of speech, whereby they spake alwaies compendiously, and knit up much in a little. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 167.

It is a compend and recapitulation of the Mosaical law, and that was all that was imported by the word Deuteronomy.

Burnett. History of the Reformation, Anno 1527.

Who then can admire, if the inviting easiness and compendiousness of this assertion should so dazle the eyes of our atheist, that he overlooks those gross absurdities, that are so conspicuous in it?

Bentley. Sermon 9.

The faith then, whereby all those excellent persons, of whose acts and sufferings we have a compendium or abridgment in this chapter, came unto God, i. e. devoted themselves to his worship and seruice, and in so doing pleased him,—was a faith respecting God as the μισθαποδότης, the rewarder of all his faithful servants. Bishop Bull. Works, vol. i. fol. 370.

The text of the beloved John
Has all, that words can say in one;
For God is love—compendious whole
Of all the blessings of a soul.

Byrom. On the disinterested Love of God.

We should live soberly, righteously or justly; that is, according to the proper and original meaning of the word, giving to all their due. What that due is, the gospel hath ascertained, not, like the mere moralists, by a system of rules only, but by infusing a principle which reduces the law to a compend, and teaches the whole at once, in its utmost extent.

Bishop Horne. Discourse 31. On the Influence of Christianity.

How much more compendiously and commodiously has the new historian of Great Britain enforced the same charge against Christianity.

Warburton. Alliance between Church and State, book ii.

There are not indeed wanting in the world compendiums of science, but many were written at the time when philosophy was imperfect, as that of G. Valla; may contain only naked schemes, or synoptical tables, as that of Stierius; and others are too large and voluminous, as that of Alstedius.

Johnson. Preface to the Preceptor.

COMPE'NSATE, v. COMPENSA'TION, COMPE'NSATIVE, COMPE'NSATORY, COMPE'NSABLE, COMPE'NSE, v. Fr. compenser; Sp. compensar; Lat. compensare, compensatum, to weigh together with.

To weigh one thing, with or against another, in opposite scales; to balance,—to put in, to give, weight for weight; and also value for value, measure for measure;—to give or return an equivalent.

The joyes and feasts of the two marriages were compensed with the mournings, and funerals of Prince Arthvr (of whom we haue spoken) and of Queene Elizabeth, who dyed in childbed in the Tower, and the child liued not long after.

Bacon. Henry VII. fol. 208.

There is in the elements a notable compensation of their foure-fold qualities, dispencing themselves by even turnes and just measures. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 113.

This rule requires that the authority be supreme, that the cause be just, that the end be publick, that the good be general, that the people receive advantage. Which is to be understood of tribute which is not penal, nor compensatory.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. ii.

This they knew was the most effectual course to render them odious to all governours, who are apt to suspect all new things as dangerous, and think no truth can compensate the hazard of alterations. Stillingfleet. Sermon 1. vol. ii.

Not having any certain knowledge of a future state of reward, though the wisest of them did indeed hope for it, and think it highly probable;) they were forced, that they might be consistent with their own principles, to suppose the practise of virtue a sufficient reward to itself in all cases, and a full compensation for all the sufferings of the world.

Clark. On the Attributes, fol. 244.

——— Are they not all proofs,
That man, immur'd in cities, still retains
His inborn inextinguishable thirst
Of rural scenes, compensating his loss
By supplemental shifts, the best he may?

Cowper. The Task, book iv.

COMPE'RE, v. COMPE'RENCE. Lat. comparere. "Fr. compar-oir; to appear, to present, to show himself." Cotgrave. See APPEAR.

Thereupon Mr. John Graham was summoned to answer for the scandal raised upon one of their members. He compeiring, answered, That he would prove what he had alleged before the judge competent.

Spotiswood. Church of Scotland. Anno 1591. book vi.

Kings joyn'd with subjects to be judg'd, come in;
No deputies, in person all compeere,
No greatnesse guilds their guilt, no guards guard sinne;
No majestie save one breeds reverence here.

Stirling. Doomes-day. The seventh Houre.

——— But what shall steer
The erring senses? where shall they compear
In controversie?

More. On the Soul, part ii. can. 2. st. 28.

The president telleth us that the Campenses remonstrants, who had been lately peremptorily cited to compeire before the Synod were not come, but that they had sent three others in their place to plead their cause.

Hale. Letters, part ii. Dr. Balcanquals, fol. [5.]

To the second, that they were coming, but were hindered by the people, it was answered that a seditious tumultuary concourse of people, ought not to hinder any man from comparence before a judge, especially since it is known that this seditious conflux was procured by the citati. Id. Ib. fol. [8.]

COMPE'TE, COMPE'TIBLE, adj. COMPE'TITION, COMPE'TITOR, COMPE'TITRIX, or COMPE'TITRESS. Lat. competere, una et simul petere, to seek after, or strive, or endeavour to attain, that which another is seeking after or striving to attain; sc. in rivalry, in emulation: and, in Shakspeare, simply in society with, as an associate, as a confederate.

"Venir en compétence avec un autre; to strive, or contend for, to make equal claim to a thing with another; to challenge, covet, or sue for a thing, as well as another; also to paragon, or compare himself, or to be laid in equal balance with another; to make or hold himself every way as good as another." Cotgrave.

And see COMPATIBLE; which in old writers is not unfrequently written compelible.

To compete is, now, not uncommon in speech.

Much to the same purpose hath holy Maximus in those admirable sections περὶ ἀγάπης, where most of the restraints he speaks of are competible to the unregenerate, φόβος ἀνθρώπων, &c. 1. Fear of men. 2. Denunciation of judgments from heaven. 3. Temperance and moral vertues.

Hammond. Works. Sermon 9. vol. iv.

That this great extent of the senses horizon was a perfection easily competible to sinless humanity, will appear by the improvement of the following principles.

Glanville. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. i.

Here our great senate's orders I may quote,
The first in age is still the first in vote,
Nor honour, nor high birth, nor great command
In competition with great years may stand.

Denham. Of Old Age, part iii.

COM-PENSATE — COM-PLETE.

COM-PETE. — COM-PETENT.

It is to be noted, that at the election of Henry, Robert, Earl of Essex, a popular and ambitious person, was his competitor.
Wood. Fasti Oxon., vol. i. fol. 134.

Competition of riches, honour, command, or other power, inclineth to contention, enmity, and war: because the way of one competitor to the attaining of his desire, is to kill, subdue, supplant, or repell the other. Particularly, competition of praise, inclineth to a reverence of antiquity.
Hobbs. Works. Of Man, ch. xi.

BOYET. Nauar had notice of youre faire approach;
And he, and his competitors in oath,
Were all addrest to meete you, gentle lady,
Before I came.
Shakspeare. Love's Labour Lost, fol. 126.

The two famous flourishing universities, Oxford and Cambridge; with whom the Grecian Athens itself was no fit competitress.
Hieragonisticon, or Corah's Doom, (1672.) fol. 136.

Queen Anne, being now without competitrix for her title, thought herself secure.
Lord Herbert. History of Henry VIII.

But they ought to consider, that when these two parts of religion come in competition, devotion is to give way to charity, mercy being better than sacrifice.
Tillotson. Sermon 18.

My son, give me thy heart, says God; that is, come to me with a sincere and unfeigned design of serving me, surrender up all to me, all thy inclinations and affections without reserve; and give me possession of thy soul, without any rival or competitor.
Atterbury. Sermon 14. vol. iv.

Humility is among the greatest of Christian virtues. But amidst the variety of competitions, with which the world abounds, it is a difficult matter to guard against pride and self consequence.
Gilpin. Hints for Sermons, xiii.

How when competitors like these contend,
Can surly virtue hope to fix a friend;
Slaves that with serious impudence beguile,
And lie without a blush, without a smile.
Johnson. London.

CO'MPETENT, adj. / CO'MPETENTLY, / CO'MPETENCE, / CO'MPETENCY. } Fr. competer; Sp. competir; It. competere; Lat. competo, con and peto; obsolete Gr. πέτω, which Perizonius (ad Sanctii Miner. iv. 4. 46,) thinks, signifies actionem citatissimo impetu seu motu ruentem. Scheidius, pandere, expandere; to spread, stretch, or reach after. Competere est una petere; simul petere; and hence concurrere, convenire, to run, to come, together. And, consequently, competent is,

Convenient, meet, fit or suitable, or adapted; sufficient, adequate, or proportioned to.

The ignoraunt ministers being charitably amoued from their ecclesiasticall cures hauyng competent in other trades of lyfe to rest vpon, and reasonable necessarie prouision for the honest mayntenaunce of learnyng & good ministers beyng had, &c.
Udall. The Prologue to the Ephesians.

The thynges wherewith the body is nourished and fostred vp, ought to be desyred but competently; and yet the common sorte are sore turmoyled with care for them.
Id. Paraphrase on Matthew, ch. v.

Also they, hauynge of theyr owne reuennues certayne, wherby they haue competente substaunce to lyue withoute takynge rewardes: it is lykely, that they wyll not be so desirous of lucre (wherof may be engendred corruption) as they, whiche haue very lyttell or nothynge so certayne.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 14.

And therfore to a hole man it were better, to fede at one meale competentely on very grosse meate only, so that it be swete, and his nature do not abhorre it, than on diuers fyne meates, of sondry substance and qualities.
Id. Castel of Helth, book ii.

But the Socinians who concluded that this was not thus, because they knew not how it could be thus, are highly to be improved for their excess in the inquiries of reason, not where she is not a competent judge, but where she is not competently instructed.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. ii.

COM-PETED — COMPI-

When this Leyr or Leyth, after some writers, was fallen into competent age, being desirous to know the minde of his three daughters, he first demaunded of Gonorilla the eldest how well she loued him.
Grafton. Leyr, part i.

For it is not true that whatsoever is taught us by natural reason is bound upon us by a natural law; which proposition, although I have already prov'd competently, yet I shall not omit to add some things here to the illustration of it.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. iii.

——— Liberty
To all such as desire to make return
Into their countries; and, unto those that stay
A competence of land freely allotted
To each man's proper use, no lord acknowledged.
Massinger. The Bondman, act iv. sc. 2.

Now for the right understanding of this sufficiency we are to pray for, we must know, that a competency is twofold: either in regard of nature, which sufficeth to support a man in his natural life and health: or secondly, a competency in regard of a man's condition, which is sufficient to support and maintain that condition, order, degree, and calling, wherein God hath placed him.
Mede. Works. Discourse 28. book i. fol. 109.

But I must sweat in love and labour yet,
Till I a competency get;
They're slothful fools who leave a trade
Till they a moderate fortune by't have made.
Cowley. Resolved to be beloved.

They were not deliver'd by one or two, who were trusted with a secret, but openly avowed by a great number of competent witnesses, who were present.
Stillingfleet. Sermon 9. vol. iv.

When any person pretends a divine commission to publish a new doctrine; in order to procure its reception, 'tis requisite he should be furnished with some competent motives of credibility.
Atterbury. Sermon 8. vol. iii.

When we have proved, for instance, that there is an intelligent, eternal, self-existent being (one or more,) which is most easily proved from our own existence; we have then competently proved, that there is a God, tho' we have not yet proved, or considered every attribute that belongs to him.
Law. Enquiry, part ii. ch. i.

Preserve, Almighty Providence!
Just what you gave me, competence;
And let me in those shades compose
Something in verse as true as prose;
Remov'd from all th' ambitious scene,
Nor puff'd by pride, nor sunk by spleen.
Swift. Horace. Satire 6. book ii.

There is I think not one of the liberal arts which may not be competently learned in the English language.
Johnson. The Idler, No. 19.

There are, who deaf to mad ambitious call,
Would shrink to hear th' obstreperous trump of Fame;
Supremely blest, if to their portion fall
Health, competence, and peace.
Beattie. The Progress of Genius, book i.

In the first place, the loan demonstrates, in regard to instrumental resources, the competency of this kingdom to the assertion of the common cause, and to the maintenance and superintendance of that, which it is its duty, and its glory to hold and to watch over the balance of power throughout the Christian world.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, let. i.

COMPI'LE, v. / COMPI'LEMENT, / COMPI'LER, / COMPILA'TION, / COMPI'LATOR, / COMPI'LATING. } Lat. compilare; Fr. compiler; It. compilare. From the Gr. πιλοῦν, densare, constipare, cogere in unum; to stow thick or close, to collect or gather into one.

To collect or gather together from different parts; to construct, to heap or put together, to arrange; to compose, to settle.

COMPILE. I nam but a leude compilatour of the labour of old astrologiens, and haue it translated in mine English only for thy doctrine.
Chaucer. Of the Astrolabie, fol. 262.

Perfore yis Henry is cald a compiloure
He wrote ye Englis gestes whilom of honoure.
R. Brunne, fol. 6.

As I fynde in a boke compiled
Lo this matere an olde histoire,
The whiche comth nowe to my memorie.
Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 135.

Of this I haue compiled an whole booke, which if God haue appoynted me to finish it, and set it forthe, shal be a rule of more perfection vnto our religious, then any that haue been vsed this hundreth yeare. Frith. Workes, fol. 89.

In the circumstances of thys longe dyffynycon, haue I smelled out this chaplayne of yours, the compylar of this matter, by these fyne rhetorycknes of monkery.
Bale. Apology, fol. 35.

But louing Eustace, that with iealous eie
Beheld the worth of Sophia's noble childe,
And his faire shape did secretly envie,
Beside the vertues in his breast compilde,
(And for in loue he would no companie)
He stor'd his mouth with speeches smoothly filde.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book v. st. 8.

——A little while
Before that Merlin dyde, he did intend,
A brasen wall in compass to compile
About Cairmardin.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 3.

Shee sitting by him, as on ground he lay,
Her mournfull notes full pittiously did frame,
And thereof made a lamentable lay,
So sensibly compyl'd, that in the same
He seemed oft he heard his owne right name.
Id. Ib. book iv. can. 8.

——The prince had perfectly compilde
These paires of friends in peace and settled rest.
Id. Ib. book iv. can. 9.

I will shewe what the aucthour called Matthew of Westminster, which compiled his story at the commaundment of Richard the Seconde, wryteth hereof. Grafton. Saxons. Anno 901.

Such is the idea of a being absolutely perfect, no arbitrarious or fortuitous figment, or forced compilement of notions that jarre one with another, or may be justly suspected, if not demonstrated, to be incoherent and repugnant.
Henry More. Appendix to Antidote against Atheism, ch. v. fol. 159.

When I came home and was again resolved unto mine owne simplicity, I found it fitter for my pen (at least in this first publick adventure) to deal with these plain compilements, and tractable materials, than with the labyrinths and mysteries of courts and states. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 4.

And the compiler of the councell, gaue this note in the margine touching the same.
Jewell. A Replie to M. Hardinge, fol. 237.

Now who could know this better than Eusebius, who had searched into and perused all the writings and monuments of Christian antiquity then extant, for the compiling of his Ecclesiastical History, and his Commentaries of the Acts of Martyrs now perished. Mede. Discourses, book ii. fol. 411.

First, that by such a gentle drying much time will be lost, which might otherwise be employed in compiling.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 13.

The lady Elizabeth's translation of a meditation of the soul concerning love towards God and his Christ, must not here be forgotten; compiled in French by the late Margaret, Queen of Navar. Strype. Memorials. Anno 1548.

That they cannot be meant of Christ's natural body and blood, every one, who knows the principles of the compilers of the catechism and doctrine of our church, not only allows, but contends. Hoadly. The Nature and End of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

They have often no other task than to lay two books before them, out of which they compile a third, without any new materials of their own, and with very little application of judgment to those which former authors have supplied.—That all compilations are useless, I do not assert; particles of science are often very widely scattered. Johnson. The Idler, No. 85. COMPILE. — COMPINGE.

It [Gibbon's History] shews him without doubt to have possessed parts, industry, and learning; each in a degree that might have entitled him to a respectable place among the compilers of ancient history.
Hurd. Works, vol. v. Appendix, fol. 401.

COMPITALIA, a movable Feast (Auson. Idyll. 25) celebrated at Rome, in honour of the Lares; so called from compita (ubi multæ viæ in unum competunt) in which they were observed. (Macrob. Sat. i. 7.) An account of their origin may be found in Pliny, (xxxvi. 70,) from whose legend, which we shall not quote, may be learned the danger to which young ladies expose themselves by sitting too near the fire. Servius Tullius chose to imagine himself the offspring of a Lar, and on that account instituted the Compitalia. In the time of the second Tarquin they were restored; and the Goddess Mania, the mother of the Lares, was added as a joint patroness with those harmless and pleasing Deities. If we may believe Macrobius, (loc. cit.) she was not propitiated without the sacrifice of a child, which abomination was put an end to by the Consular Government. The story both of the original sacrifice, and of the substitute proposed for it, (capita pro capitibus, the heads of leeks for human heads,) as told in the Saturnalia, has so strong a resemblance to the adventure of Numa with Jupiter Elicius, that it is probable they are only different versions of the same legend

" Cæde caput" dixit: cui Rex, " parebimus," inquit;
" Cædenda est hortis cruta cepa meis."
Ov. Fast. ii. 330.

The Compitalia were accounted dies imperativæ, which the Consul or Prætor appointed at his pleasure, (Id. i. 16,) in the following words: DIE. NONI. POPOLO. ROMANO. QUIRITIBUS. COMPITALIA. ERUNT. QUANDO. CONCEPTA. FOVERINT. N. (Id. i. 4.) See also Aulus Gellius, x. 24. In the time of Dionysius Halicarnassensis they were celebrated in January, (to which month we have accordingly assigned them in our Roman CALENDAR,) and the rites were performed by Slaves, who, during these ministrations, laid aside all badges of servitude. The Poets make frequent mention of woollen garlands, laneæ vittæ, which were placed upon the altars in this solemnity. Augustus has been thought, from a passage in Suetonius, (Aug. 31,) to have celebrated the Compitalia twice a year; but it is by no means clear that the words of the Historian bear this construction; Compitales Lares ornare bis anno instituit vernis floribus et æstivis. The Lares might be decorated with chaplets of flowers in Spring and Summer, without a positive repetition of the Compitalia; and Compitales is an epithet constantly applied to these Gods without reference to this particular Feast.

——geminosque parit qui compita servant
Et vigilant nostrâ semper in urbe Lares.
Ov. Fast ii. 615.

COMPINGE, compingere; con, and pangere; to put together, to join, unite, knit, or connect together. See COMPACT.

The Patriarchs and their families, the Israelites a handfull in respect, Christ and his apostles, and not all of them neither, into what straights hath it beene compinged,—a little flock.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 640.

COM-PLACENT. COM-PLAIN.

COMPLA'CENT, COMPLA'CENTLY, COMPLA'CENCE, COMPLA'CENCY. } Lat. complacens, present participle, from complacere; con, and placere, (of uncertain origin,) to please.

Pleasing, gratifying, agreeable; having a desire or disposition to please, to gratify. See COMPLAISANT.

The great galees of Venice and Florence
Be well laden with thinges of complacence.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Policie of keeping the Sea.

O thou in heav'n and earth the only peace
Found out for mankind under wrauth, O thou
My sole complacence.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book iii. l. 276.

I by conversing cannot these erect
From prone, nor in thir wayes complacence find.
Id. Ib. book viii. l. 433.

Out of the sense of this happy union ariseth an unspeakable complacency and delight of the soul in that God and Saviour, who is thus unseperably ours, and by whose union we are blessed.
Hall. The Devout Soul, vol. iii. fol. 477.

The inward complacence we find in acting reasonably and virtuously, and the disquiet we feel from vicious choices and pursuits, is protracted beyond the acts themselves, from whence it arose; and renewed often upon our souls by distant reflexions.
Atterbury. Sermon 4. vol. iv.

Be niggards of advice on no pretence;
For the worst avarice is that of sense.
With mean complacence, ne'er betray your trust,
Nor be so civil as to prove unjust.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

The Pharisee, who was no scandalous sinner, but framed his outward conversation according to the precepts of the law, yet because he thought too high of himself, was not sensible of his defects, but took a vain complacency in the goodness of his own performances, and despised others; this man and his prayer were rejected. Sharp. Works. Sermon 3. vol. iv.

Nor such thy lot, O Bourton; nor from sight
Retirest thou, but, with complacent smile,
Thy social aspect courts the distant eye.
Jago. Edge-Hill. Evening, book iv.

For, 3. It should be considered that all the uneasy passions, in the very time that we are distressed by them, nay, though the occasions be instant and real, have a secret complacency mixed with them. Hurd. Works. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

COMPLA'IN, v. COMPLA'INABLE, COMPLA'INANT, COMPLA'INER, COMPLA'INING, COMPLA'INT, n. } Fr. complaindre; It. compiagnere; Lat. con, and plangere, which (Vossius) properly is verberare, to beat: plango from plago; and plago, from the ancient Gr. πλάγειν, to strike. Plangere, (Vossius) began to denote especially; præ dolore caput aut pectus percutere; i. e. through, or on account of grief, to strike the head or breast. And as subsequently applied,—loudly or clamorously to express, declare, or manifest grief. As now used, to complain, is

To utter grief, sorrow, or discontent; to deplore, to bewail, to lament; to express, declare, or proclaim dissatisfaction or uneasiness; to allege cause of disapprobation or censure.

Without any semblant feigned,
She hath her loue's death compleined.
Gower. Conf. Am., book ii. fol. 28.

Yet saw I woodnesse laughing in his rage.
Armed complaint.—
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2015.

And in a lettre wrote he all his sorwe,
In manere of a complaint or a lay,
Unto his faire freshe lady May.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9756.

He was dispeired, nothing dorst he say,
Sauf in his songes somwhat wold he wray
His wo, as in a general complaining;
He said, he loved, and was beloved nothing.
Id. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11257.

The Frenchmen hated him bycause they doubted hym: yet I herde his dethe greatly compleyned among right noble and valyant knyghtes of France, saying, that it was a great dommage of his dethe. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. cclxx.

They crie their gods for aide, and to the kynge their case complayne. Phaer. Æneidos, book vii. fol. 170.

And the complaynour has been founde in his complayning so verye shameless false, that he hathe been answered that he was to easely dealt with, and hadde wrong that he was no worse serued.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 906.

These are murmurers, complayners, walkynge after theyr owne lusts, whose mouthes speak proude thynges.
Bible, 1551. Judas.

But when proceeding times asswage
The former heate, he will complaine,
And wish those pleasant houres againe.
Beaumont. A description of Loue.

By all our country rights in Rome maintained,
And by chaste Lucrece' soul that late complained
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife.
Shakspeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Yet sometime doth the comedie excite
Her voyce and angry Chremes chafes out-right
With swelling throat: and oft the tragick wight
Complains in humble phrase.
Ben Jonson. Horace. The Art of Poetrie.

Sometimes he [the profane man] mocks at that, which for its relation to the Deity, and its service, should never but with reverence be look'd upon: so that, though both be blameable, yet superstition is less complainable. Feltham. Resolve 36.

Christ is left alone; alone in respect of these complaynants; not alone in respect of the multitude.
Hall. Cont. The Woman taken in Adultery, vol. ii. fol. 193.

She quickly rose, and ready now to go,
" Remember measure in your griefs complaining,
His last, his dying words command you so."
P. Fletcher. Eliza.

Jehovah to my words give ear,
My meditation weigh,
The voice of my complaining hear
My King, my God; for unto thee I pray.
Milton. Psalm 5. l. 3.

Sadly he [Mars] went and sate by Jove, shew'd his immortal bloud,
That from a mortall-man-made-wound powr'd such an impious floud;
And (weeping) powr'd out these complaints; O Father, storm'st thou not
To see us take these wrongs from men.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book v. fol. 81.

To say, That if we know the real essences or internal constitutions of those beings, some of whose properties we know, we should have much more certain knowledg concerning those things and their properties, I am sure is true, and I think no faulty complaining; and if it be, I must own myself to your lordship to be one of those complainers.
Mr. Locke. Letter to the Bishop of Worcester.

That in those days they had frequent intercouse with the Deity, and were made sensible of his peculiar presence in some places, appears farther, from his discourse with Cain, both before and after the murder of his brother; as also from Cain's complaint of being hid from his face; and his going out from the presence of the Lord. Law. Theory of Religion, part ii. fol. 54.

But if pity inspire thee, renew the sad lay,
Mourn, sweetest complainer, man calls thee to mourn:
O soothe him, whose pleasures like thine pass away
Full quickly they pass—but they never return.
Beattie. The Hermit.

Is this the land where Gray's unlabour'd art
Soothe, melts, alarms, and ravishes the heart
While the lone wanderer's sweet complainings flow
In simple majesty of manly woe.
Id. On a supposed Monument to Churchill.

If we struggle at all with it, [grief] it is only to ease the labouring heart by putting forth some fruitless sighs and ineffectual complainings. Hurd. Works. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

I wrote merely for myself, as a friend of the dead, and to ease my full soul by breathing out my own complaints.
Watts. On the Death of Thomas Gunston, Esq.

COMPLAISA'NT, COMPLAISA'NTLY, COMPLAISA'NCE. } Complaisance and complaisant, are but the French manner of writing complacent and complacence. See them above; and also the Example from Hobbs.

Complaisant nymph! who dost thou kindly share
In griefs whose cause thou dost not know;
Hadst thou but eyes, as well as tongue and ear,
How much compassion woldst thou show!
Cowley. Echo.

While then I simply walkt, nor heed could take
Of complacence, that sly deceitful snake.
Beaumont. In Desolation.

A fifth law of nature is complaisance; that is to say, That every man strive to accomodate himself to the rest.
Hobbs. Of Man, part i. ch. xv.

As for our Saviour he was a person so far from being morose or reserved in his carriage, or a lover of singularity, so far from setting up a way of conversation of his own making, distinct from the way he found in the world, that he was the most free, obliging, and civil, and, if I durst use the word, I would say, the most complaisant person, that ever perhaps appeared in the world.
Sharp. Works. Discourse 8.

One who thought to outshine the whole court, carried his head so over complaisantly, that this martial prince [Alexander the Great] gave him so great a box on the ear, as set all the heads of the court upright. Tatler, No. 77.

Then, for th' encouragement and propagation
Of such a great concernment to the nation,
All people were so full of complacence
And civil duty of the public sense
They had no name t' express a cuckold then,
But that which signifies all married men.
Butler. Satire upon Marriage.

Fair Venus wept the sad disaster
Of having lost her favourite dove.
In complaisance poor Cupid mourn'd;
His grief reliev'd his mother's pain.
Prior. The Dove.

It was Cipius, I think, that formerly said, "I am not asleep for every man;" neither am I, my dear Gallus, so meanly complaisant as to be the humble servant of every minion.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Fabius Gallus. Letter 19. book ix.

The Chinese complaisantly takes his bed
With his big wife, and is with caudle fed.
Warton. Fashion, a Satire.

They strive with their own hearts, and keep them down
In complaisance to all the fools in town.
O how they tremble at the name of prude!
And die with shame at thought of being good!
Young. Love of Fame. Satire 6.

COMPLANATE, Lat. complanare, atum, (planus,) to make even, or level.

The vertebræ of the neck and back bone made short and complanated, and firmly braced with muscles and tendons, for easy incurvations of the body, but withal for greater strength, to support the body's own weight, together with other additional weights it may have occasion to bear.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book v. ch. ii.

CO'MPLEMENT, n. CO'MPLEMENTAL, CO'MPLEMENTNESS, CO'MPLEMENTARY. } Lat. complementum. That which is added for the sake of finishing, or filling, (Gesner,) from com, and plere, to fill. Minshew and Lye, consider comple- and compli-ment, (anciently written without discrimination,) to be the same word. Minshew calls complements; "Ceremonies, accomplishments, making that perfect which was wanting." Lye; inania quædam verba, et quasi complementa orationis. Skinner suggests that compliment is from comply, q. d. comply-ments. See COMPLIMENTS. Complement is now restricted to

The whole, full, and entire number or quantity: the filling up so as to make the entire number or quantity.

This woorde [therfore] whiche signifyeth for the same cause, hath here in his last clause no necessarye place to the complement of the sentence following.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 954.

In consideration wherof being vehemently moued by the damnified parties, he humbly besought your highness by his messengers and letters, for complement and execution of justice.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Richard II. Prussian Ambassador.

During which time came letters from the lords of the councell, straightly commaunding our generall, not to exceede his complement and number appointed him, which was, one hundred and twenty persons. Id. Ib. M. Frobisher.

And all her sister nymphes with one consent,
Supplide her sobbing breaches with sad complement.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 4.

These three on men all gracious gifts bestowe,
Which decke the body and adorne the minde,
To make them louely or well fauoured showe
As comely carriage, entertainment kind,
Sweet semblant, friendly offices that binde,
And all the complements of courtesie.
Id. Ib. book vi. can. 10.

One, who the musicke of his owne vaine tongue,
Doth rauish like inchanting harmonie:
A man of complements whom right and wrong
Haue chose as vmpire of their mutinie.
Shakspeare. Love's Labour Lost, fol. 123.

Then doubtlesse they, [the people] and not kings are the chiefe soveraigne legislators; and their royall assents to lawes, are no wayes essentiall to the very being of lawes, but rather a complementall ceremony.
Prynne. On the Soveraigne Power of Parliaments, part i.

COMPLE'TE, v. COMPLE'TE, adj. COMPLE'TELY, COMPLE'TEMENT, COMPLE'TENESS, COMPLE'TION, COMPLE'TIVE, COMPLE'TORY, adj. COMPLE'TORY, n. } Lat. complere, completum, to fill up, to fulfil; con, and pleo, from the obsolete πλάω, whence πλήθω. To fill, fulfil or accomplish, to perfect, to perform fully, wholly, without omissions or deficiencies.

The fourthe day complete fro none to none,
Whan that the highe messe was ydone
In halle sat this January and May.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9767.

The whiche guyded y^e^ lande full wysely by the tyme or space of v. yeres complete. Fabyan, vol. i. ch. xvi.

H'is ould, and good that hath bene deade an hundreth yeres complete.
And he that lackes a yere or monthe
where shall he haue his seate.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Augustus.

Inwardly bewailing, that I did not performe and finally cõsummat, such pollitique diuises, and good and Godly ordinaunces, in my long life and pacifique prosperitie, whiche then I fully determined to haue begonne, set forwarde & completely to haue finished. Hall. Edward IV. The twenty-third Yere.

And likewise every holy day, at even songe, between even songe and completorie, shall rehers the tenne commaundments, every one by it selfe and so cause his parochians to rehers after him every one by it selfe.
Burnett. Records. Injunctions, No. 37.

COMPLETE.

Philosophy and arts commenced embryos, and are compleated by time's gradual accomplishments.
Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. xix.

——————————Here, here, remains
Dust far more precious than in India's veins:
Within these cold embraces, ravish'd, lies
That which compleats the age's tyrannies.
Denham. On the Death of Lord Hastings.

When the senate had by decree allowed him triumphall ornaments, hee supposing that a bare title of honour was inferior to the maiestie of a prince and emperour, willing also to enterprise some exploit, whereby he might win the due glorie of a complet triumph, made choice before all other provinces of Britaine.
Holland. Suetonius. Tib. Claudius, fol. 162.

The royall bodie yet he left unspoild, religion charm'd
The act of spoyle; and all in fire, he burn'd him compleate arm'd.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book vi. fol. 92.

Completely shiftless was thy native plight
And no self-succour would to thee allow;
Naked thou wert of every help beside
As well's of clothes, thy woful shame to hide.
Beaumont. Psyche, can. 19. st. 5.

It is as plainly declared to be a vengeance of fire that abides them, as a compleatment of their torments.
Glanville. Pre-existence of Souls, fol. 189.

Then it may be, they sadly reflect on their own folly, in that they have preferred the deluging scenes and pompous shews of worldly greatness, before the compleat and endless felicity of another life. Stillingfleet. Sermon 3. vol. ii.

Then since no state's completely blest,
Let's learn the bitter to allay
With gentle mirth, and wisely gay
Enjoy at least the present day.
Hughes. Horace. Ode 16 book ii.

And allow me your patience, if it be not already tir'd with this long epistle, to give you from the best authors, the origine, the antiquity, the growth, the change, and the compleatment of satire among the Romans. Dryden. Juvenal. Dedication, xv.

It was attested by miracles of all sorts, done in great variety and number, by the visible centering of the old prophecies in the person of Christ, and by the completion of those prophecies since, which he himself uttered.
Atterbury. Sermon 11. vol. ii.

I shall not so much generally consider the death and passion of our Lord, as the particular manner and kind thereof, by crucifixion; the which we may contemplate, as qualified with divers notable adjuncts; namely, as completory of ancient presignifications and predictions. Barrow. Sermon 25. vol. ii.

When the prisoner, who was King Richard, heard the song he knew that Blondel must be the singer; and when Blondel paused about the middle, the king began the remainder, and completed it.
Warton. The Crusade. Ode 12.

From the first of thes prophesies to the last, elapsed a space of time not less than 3600 years; each prophecy still unfolding something more than the preceding, till at length the prophetic history of the Messiah was complete. Gilpin. Sermon 1. vol. i.

For how can'I think of you without being pierced with grief in the reflection, that I have made those completely miserable whom I ought and wished to have rendered perfectly happy?
Melmoth. Cicero. To Terentia, book i. let. 7.

These discourses which I have written concerning perception, judgment, reasoning, and disposition, are the four integral parts of logic. This sort of parts goes to make up the completeness of any subject. Watts. Logic, part i. ch. vi. sec. 7.

But the minds of the Apostles, full of the greatest ideas, and swelling with the suggestions of the Holy Spirit, which in no scanty measure was imparted to them, perpetually overflow, as it were, the subject of their discourse, and expatiate into other larger views, than seem necessary to the completion of the argument, immediately presented to them.
Hurd. Sermon before the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

And the three last, [tenses] the completive present, and completive past, and the completive future.
Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. vii.

COMPLEX

CO'MPLEX, n.
CO'MPLEX, adj.
COMPLE'XEDNESS,
COMPLE'XITY,
COMPLE'XLY,
COMPLE'XNESS.

Complector; simul et totum plecto; con, and plectere; Gr. πλέκ-ειν, to knit, or intertwine. And see COMPLICE. Complexus, as opposed to simplex, was probably introduced by the writers on Logic in the mid-ages. See the Example from Locke.

Knit, or connected together, interwoven, involved.

Although there were more things in nature then words which did express them; yet even in these mute and silent discourses, to express complexed significations; they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent.
Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book v. ch. xx.

I do not restrain it purely and only to what corruption of nature you had at first, but withall as it is increased and so complexly corruption of nature as it now is grown up in us; for in-dwelling sin, in Paul's sence, is the whole stock of it, new and old.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. part i. fol. 382.

As these simple ideas are observed to exist in several combinations united together; so the mind has a power to consider several of them united together, as one idea; and that not only as they are united in external objects, but as it self has joined them. Ideas thus made up of several simple ones put together, I call complex; such as are beauty, gratitude, a man, an army, the universe; which though complicated of various simple ideas, or complex ideas, made up of simple ones, yet are, when the mind pleases, considered each by itself as one entire thing, and signified by one name.
Locke. Of Human Understanding, book ii. ch. xii.

Secondly, From the complexedness of these moral ideas there follows another inconvenience, (viz.) that the mind cannot easily retain those precise combinations so exactly and perfectly, as is necessary in the examination of the habitudes and correspondencies, agreements or disagreements, of several of them one with another. Id. Ib. book iv. ch. iii.

Instead of nature in the sixth sense of the word [for, an aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, especially a living one] we may employ the constitution, temperament, or the mechanism, or the complex of the essential properties or qualities.
Boyle. A Free Enquiry into the received Notion of Nature.

Nor to this evanescent speck of earth
Poorly confin'd, the radiant tracts on high
Are her exalted range; intent to gaze
Creation through; and from that full complex
Of never-ending wonders, to conceive
Of the sole Being right, who spake the word,
And nature mov'd complete.
Thomson. Summer.

And amongst many other things I think he would not have talked of the composition of ideas; but would have seen that it was merely a contrivance of language: and that the only composition was in the terms; and consequently that it was as improper to speak of a complex idea, as it would be to call a constellation a complex star: and that they are not ideas, but merely terms, which are general and abstract.
Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. i. p. 37.

When you see the people of this republick banishing and murdering their best and ablest citizens, dissipating the publick treasure with the most senseless extravagance, and spending their whole time, as spectators or actors, in playing, fiddling, dancing and singing, does it not, my lord, strike your imagination with the image of a sort of complex Nero?
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

Men are every now and then put, by complexity of human affairs, into strange situations; but justice is the same, let the judge be in what situation he will.
Id. On Conciliation with America.

PLEX-M-ION.

New establishments, civil and judicial, were therefore formed at a very great expense, and with much complexity of constitution.
Burke. Report of a Committee on the Affairs of India.

Taking tragedies complexly, I am fully persuaded, that the impressions left by them upon the mind, are, on the whole, favourable to virtue and good dispositions.
Blair. Lecture 45. vol. iii.

If the declensions of the ancient languages are so very complex, their conjugations are infinitely more so. And the complexness of the one, is founded upon the same principle with that of the other, the difficulty of forming, in the beginnings of language, abstract and general terms.
Smith. Formation of Languages.

COMPLE'XION, COMPLE'XIONAL, COMPLE'XIONALLY, COMPLE'XIONARY, COMPLE'XIONED. Fr. complexion; It. complessione; Sp. complexion, complession. Lat. complexio, from complector, complexus, quia complexio, complectitur totum statum corporis, et omnes facultates ejus. Minshew.

The whole connection of the parts; the whole composition or comprehension of parts; the frame or texture; the temperament or disposition. Also applied, merely, to the general appearance, hue, or colour. Watts uses complexion as equivalent to complexity.

A Frankelein was in this compagnie;
White was his berd as is the dayesie.
Of his complexion he was sanguin.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 335.

Three men vpon election
Of age, and of complexion
Liche to hym selfe by all waie,
He toke towardes hym to plaie,
And eate and dranke as well as hee.
Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 134.

And also obserue, that she [the nourise] be of mature or ripe age, not vnder xx. yeres, or above xxx. her body also beynge clene from all sykenes, or deformitye, and hauing her complection mooste of the ryghte and pure sanguine.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 16.

But I must be all way ready to cut of whatsoeuer I perceiue to strēgth the flesh against the spirit. And I must haue a diligent eye to the flesh and his complexion.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 228.

This was a man of feble complexion and sickly, and endured moche payne more than any other.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 326.

There is therefore a twofold beatitude or blessedness: The one is perfect and consummate, the other initial and incompleat. The former is the complection of all good perfective of our natures, and our entire and satisfying enjoyment of it.
Hopkins. True Happiness. Sermon 2.

It is true that none of the evangelists (most particular and precise in setting downe other circumstances) haue expressed any thing at all touching his complexion, or feature, or stature.
Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 195.

There might no other speech be had amongst the streams,
But only of this nymph, sweet Wandal, what she wore;
Of her complexion, grace, and how herself she bore.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 17.

For whatsoever is taught to them at first they believe infinitely, for they know nothing to the contrary, they have had no other masters whose theorems might abate the strength of their first persuasions, and it is a great advantage in those cases to get possession; and before their first principles can be dislodged, they are made habitual and complexional.
J. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 11.

Scarce ended they this song, but Avon's winding stream,
By Warwick, entertains the high-complexion'd Leam.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 13.

A flower is the best complexioned grass (as a pearl is the best-coloured clay;) and daily it weareth God's livery, for "He cloatheth the grass in the field."
Fuller. Worthies. Norwich.

The Greek churches generally, and most of the Latin casuists, as I have heard from learned men and travellers, do allow even this complexionary art and use of adorning, by some light tincture, the looks of a woman eminent for virtue, modesty, piety, and charity. Bishop Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, fol. 38. COM-PLEXION.

For from all tempers he could service draw;
The worth of each, with its alloy he knew,
And as the confident of nature saw
How she complexions did divide and brew.
Dryden. On the Death of Oliver Cromwell.

Instead of going out of our own complexional nature, unto that of others, 'twere a better and more laudable industry to improve our own, and instead of a miserable copy become a good original.
Spectator, No. 237.

His skin was of a dead white, without the least appearance of what is called complexion, though some parts of his body were in a small degree less white than others.
Cook. Voyage, vol. i. ch. x.

Where are the jesters now? the men of health,
Complectionally pleasant?
Blair. The Grave.

The melancholic fiend (that worst despair
Of physic) hence the rust-complexion'd man
Pursues, whose blood is dry, whose fibres gain
Too stretch'd a tone.
Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health, book i.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion, does not belong to the syllogistic form of it.
Watts. Logic, part iii. ch. ii. sec. 2.

The Signs by which every man may determine his own COMPLEXION, are given by James Manning, Minister of the Word, in his Tract printed at Cambridge 1604, I am for you all, Complexions Castle.

"If you are Sanguine then is your visage white and ruddie, most redde in the cheekes, eyes orderly placed yet somewhat large at times, vaines blew and full, pulse full and great."—"Digestion perfect, apt to bleeding and sleeping, willing to moove, yet abstaining from motion by reason of heate, subject to dreame of bloodie things and amorous toyes, affable, affectionate, yet to be remooved, well spoken, changeable in opinion, apt to have the yellow jaundes, heat under the lites, at the heart and raines, stitch in the side, subject to the chollicke, and then the hands and face will be full of frecks in many a one, of meane stature and comely for the most part, a lover of musicke and wines, effeminate, beard large and comely, delightfull in himselfe, a lover of companie and convertible with them, merrie for the most part, haire of colour red or yellowish, subject to the fever called Synocham."

In the Phlegmatick, "The substance is soft, foggie, quaving; the colour of the substance whitish, the proportion large, for the most part, or els exceeding grosse: vaines hardly seene, blood waterish, pulse slowe, the bodie slowe in motion, sleepie, dull; hair plaine, seldome bald, not apt to learne, cowardish, spittle white and after motion very frothie."—"Subject to dreame of waterie things as of fish and ponds." "This Complexion is subject to pain in the head, loynes, knees, armes and feete by phlegmatick humours taking cold,"—"seldome angrie, not retaining anger, the breast commonly narrow, and these are subject to the sickness of the heart, and much subject to a quotidian fever."

The Cholerick Complexion is found in those who are "leane, of meane or little stature, haire black or darke, most commonly curled, eyes quick, colour of skin salow, and in some bodies reddish, voyce sharpe."

COM-PLEXION. —COM PLICATE.

—"sharpe or quick, of stout courage, soone angry, little sleepe, dreames of fire or fighting, pulse swift, and subject to the gout, especially in the legges, subject to a Tertian fever, delight in warres, liberall in their youth and middle age, but in ould age covetous, desire to travell, amorous, subject to palsie, apoplexie, and trembling."

The Signs which show the Melancholic Complexion, are "leannes, hardnes of skinne, colour duskish or whitely, pulse little, haire plaine, seldome laughing."—"Much watchfulnes, yet not so much as in the Cholerick, dreames feareful, in opinion stiffe, digestion slow and ill, timerous, long in anger or dislike if it be begunne, fretting much, subject to one daies fever, by the unnatural heat in the spirits of the heart, then is the colour most pale; moveth slowly, shortnes or straightnes of breath, heavines of head,"—"some heate is then over all the bodie: haire brownish, and sometimes mixed with white haires. If this humour abound then are fearfull dreames, as feare of hurts or harme, death of friends, of pitts and darkenes, long feare without cause, cramps without repletion, heavines of mind, sleepines in the members."

For each of these Complexions the learned Doctor who wrote while the Plague was raging fearfully in London, prescribes a pome to smell upon and use, a water for houses and clothes, a perfume, pills, herbs, roots, fruits, seeds, gums, woods, and diet in general which is good or ill. The reader who is not satisfied with the statement of Dr. Manning, may find much high matter of similar import in the Treatise of Jacques Albert Aubert, Des Natures et des Complexions des hommes; or in a still profounder Dissertation of Levinus Lemnius, which has been Englished by Thomas Newton, under the title of the Touchstone of Complexions.

CO'MPLICATE, v. Co'MPLICATE, adj. Co'MPLICATELY, Co'MPLICATENESS, COMPLICA'TION, Co'MPLICE, n. Lat. complicare, atum; Gr. πλέκειν, to knit, to intertwine. Complex, icis, the noun, seems to have been introduced into the Latin apud posterioris ævi scriptores, and from it the French, Italian, Spanish, and also our own Language have adopted complice,—socius sceleris. (See ACCOMPLICE.)

To intertwine, to interweave, to involve.

Complice; one who is knitted, joined, or united with another; who co-operates with, aids or assists another.

After whose comynge, vpon a daye, he beynge in a churche, & herynge his deuine seruyce, was slayne of the sayd prouoste & his complycis. Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 231.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1396 one John Van Derlowe, Hans van Gelder, and other their complices of the Hans vilainously and vniustly tooke a shippe of William Terry of Hull called the Cogge, with thirtie woollen broad cloathes and a thousand narrow clothes to the value of 200 pounds.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Henry IV. Prussian Ambassador.

For the particular actions of war, though they are complicate in fact, yet are they separate and distinct in right; like to cross suits in civil pleas, which are sometimes both just.
Bacon. Of a War with Spain.

Whereas notwithstanding they are, oft times three, and when but two, [the division of the root] commonly so complicated and crossed, that men for this deceit are fain to effect their design in other parts. Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. vi.

For our hearts deceive us, our purposes are complicated, and we know not which end is principally intended, nor by what argument amongst many, we are finally determin'd.
Taylor. On Repentance, ch. iii. sc. 5.

COMPLICATION. COMPLIMENT

——————— Dreadful was the din
Of hissing through the hall, thick swarming now
With complicated monsters head and taile,
Scorpion and asp, and amphisbæna dire,
Cerastes horned, hydrus and ellops drear,
And dipsas.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 523.

There is a great variety of intelligibles in the world, so much objected to our senses, and every several object is full of subdivided multiplicity and complicateness.
Hale. Origin of Mankind.

The duke of York, that did not idle stand,
(But seeks to work on all advantages)
Had likewise in this course a secret hand,
And hearten'd on their chiefest 'complices.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book v.

But we must winne your grace to go with vs
To Bristow castle, which they say is held
By Bushie, Bagot, and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth.
Shakspeare. Richard II. fol. 33

Avarice and luxury very often become one complicated principle of action, in those whose hearts are wholly set upon ease, magnificence and pleasure. Spectator, No. 55.

See with what strength his harden'd loins are bound,
All over proof and shut against a wound.
How like a mountain cedar moves his tail!
Nor can his complicated sinews fail.
Young. Paraphrase on part of Job.

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful, is man!
How passing wonder he, who made him such!
Id. The Complaint. Night 1.

Or yet for the mnemonical aid, otherwise than complicately, so as the one may suborn aid to the other, and both may invigorate the activity of the mind to a very useful promptness.
Boyle. Works. Letter from J. Beale, vol. vi. fol. 339.

But this must of necessity be their case, except they will comply in their respective characters with every thing such a change shall introduce; and submit to a complication of evils, the least of which is vastly bigger and more intolerable, than the greatest of those which even their own strongest imaginations can paint out to them, from the present state of things.
Hoadly. Letters signed Britannicus, &c. let. 104.

But lest you should mistake his meaning, you must take notice, that by sinning, he doth not mean any one particular sin, but a complication of sins, like that whereby the angels fell.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 83.

The prince had procured him to be sent over, on purpose to satisfy himself (and thereby his complices for the peace) that the king's intentions were determined to enter into the war, which his highness thought the only means to prevent the peace.
Sir William Temple. Memoirs, vol. ii. fol. 446.

For by these very means have we seen one of the brightest stars in the firmament of the church (oh lamentable and heart breaking sight!) falling from the heaven of Christianity, into the sink and complication of Paganism, Quakerism, and Socinianism, mix'd up with chemistry and astrology, by a professed cobbler.
Bishop Horne. Caution to the Readers of Mr. Law.

And then as to the frauds and impostures in this way, they have most of them been directed by the clergy; whom our writer here wickedly libels as complices and parties in them.
Bentley. Of Free Thinking.

COMPLIME'NT, v. Co'MPLIMENT, n. COMPLIME'NTAL, COMPLIME'NTALLY, COMPLIME'NTER, COMPLIME'NTARY. See COMPLE-MENT and COMPLY. Mr. Steevens and Mr. Tyrwhit think that "To comply" in Shakspeare's Hamlet, (act ii. sc. 2, and act v. sc. 2,) is used in the sense of "To compliment;" and Mr. Malone produces from an old Poem called "A Fig for Fortune," the verb to recomplie, q. d. to return a Compliment; and thus they sanction the COMPLIMENT. Etymology of Skinner: as if compliment were the kind compliance with the will of another; an act of such compliance, a verbal declaration of it;—a compliance or acquiescence, or assent, beyond what may appear necessary; viz. with an intent to please or flatter any weakness, any prepossession or prejudice.

And he that call'd Arsinoe Ηρας ἴον Juno's violet, kept all the letters of the name right, and complemented the lady ingeniously.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. ii.

If any one speaks a bold truth, he cannot escape the inquisition, unless he complement the church and with a civility tell her that she knows better. Id. Of the Real Presence, sec. 2.

Yet not to be exact in the phrase of complement, or gestures of courtesie, the indifferent do pardon to those who have been otherwise busied. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 90.

Now complemental Mercury was come
To the quaint margin of his courtly sphere,
And bid us eloquent welcome to his home.
Beaumont. Psyche, can. 1. st. 102.

True it is notwithstanding (omitting the old distinction) that there is great difference between these mannerly and complimental lies, with those which are sometime perswaded by necessity upon breach of promise; and those which men use out of cowardice and fear.
Ralegh. History of the World, book v. ch. iii. sec. 2.

Complementalness, as opposed to plainness, must signifie giving titles of civility, that really do not belong to those, to whom they are thus given.
Hammond. The Dispatcher dispatched, ch. v. sec. 9

Amo. Is hee a master?
Cri. That, sir, he has to shew here; and confirmed under the hands of the most skilfull, and cunning complementaries alive: please you reade, sir.
Ben Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, act v. sc. 4.

(When ye come to church) ye must not stand looking about, and complementing with one another: nor suffer so much as your thoughts to be running after your worldly affairs, nor any thing but the work you are there engaged in, the greatest, the highest, and the hardest work ye have to do in the world.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 118.

As on one hand he [the upright man] is careful not to run himself into inconveniences by his good nature; so on the other hand, the kindness and good-will he possesseth to all about him, is more than a compliment, or the semblance of his countenance.
Sharp. Sermon 5. vol. i.

After some complimental talk,
Time met them, bow'd and join'd their walk,
Their chat on various subjects ran
But most what each had done for man.
Gay. Pluto, Cupid, and Time. Fable 13.

He has had the good fortune to make some discoveries, and the honour to have them publickly, and but too complimentally, taken notice of by the virtuosi.
Boyle. Preface to the Excellency of Theology.

Le Clerc himself fared no better than Moyle, and "Heretic" and "Free-thinker" were compliments often paid to him, and to which he was accustomed; which made him the more disposed to defend his fellow sufferers.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. ii. fol. 32.

Mr. Port being introduced to Captain Clarke, delivered to him the commander's letter, which was written in German, and was merely complimental, inviting him and his officers to Bolcheretsk, to which place the people who brought it were to conduct us.
Cook. Voyage, vol. vii. book vi. ch. i.

I made complimentary verses on the great lords and ladies of the court, with as much simplicity and as little meaning as my bows in the drawing room, and thought it a fine thing to be taken notice of, as a wit, in the fashionable circles.
Hurd. Dialogue. Dr. Henry More and Waller.

COMPLINE, Fr. complie; Mid. Lat. completa, completorum, complendæ. That Ecclesiastical office which completes (complet) and closes the Offices of the day. COMPLINE. COMPLY.

He poketh John, and sayd: sleepst thou?
Herdest thou ever slike a song er now?
Lo whilke a complin is ymell him alle.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4169.

Men may also refreine and put away venial sinne by receiving, &c.; by general confession of confiteor at masse, and at prime, and at compline. Id. The Persones Tale.

The custom of Godly men hath been to shut up the evening with a compline or prayer at nine of the night.
Hammond. Practical Catechism, book iii. sec. 2.

COMPLISH, v. see ACCOMPLISH. Complere, to fill, to fulfil.

To fulfil; to perform, to execute, fully.

Heare my prayer, O Lord; heare my requeste,
Complysche my boone: answer to my desyre.
Wyat. Psalm 143.

He answered "After the complishment
Of his behests," and so her told what hests he meant.
More. Song of the Soul, song 1. book iii. st. 46.

COMPLO'T, v. COMPLO'T, n. COMPLO'TMENT, COMPLO'TTER. Fr. comploter. "Plot, i. e. plighted. A plighted agreement; any agreement to the performance of which the parties have plighted their faith to each other; from the A. S. verb, plihtan, exponere, vel objicere periculo, spondere, oppignerare." Tooke, ii. 129.

To plot or plight together; sc. for any common purpose, for the execution of some design; in any conspiracy or confederacy; and thus,—to conspire, to confederate, to combine.

And complotted it was, that both hee in forraine parts abroade and himselfe also at Rome should at once make an insurrection for to alter the state. Holland. Suetonius. Julius Cæsar, fol. 4.

And what are courts, but camps of misery?
That do besiege men's states, and still are press'd
T' assail, prevent, complot, and fortify;
In hope t' attain, in fear to be suppress'd.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book viii.

We have since received intelligence of a dangerous matter discovered at Gratz, where a massacre of the Lutherans should have been committed, and the complot written in ten sheets of paper.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 649.

When open Fame gives out intelligence
Of these bad complots of his enemies.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book v.

The worst complots oft lie close smothered.
Id. Ib.

——————— He
By his complottors was pretenst'e
Duke Clarence sonne to be.
Warner. Albion's England, book vii. ch. xxv.

Still he wolde have maintained that priesthoode, and not the treacherous complotting and practises of priestes, in his understanding, was to bee held for treason.
State Trials. Trial of Robert Drewrie, Anno 1607.

What was the cause of their multiplied, variated complotments against her like the monsters in Africk, every day almost a new conspiracy! Dean King. Sermon. 5 Nov. 1608, fol. 33.

It pleased God, (if we may dare to judge of his secret providence,) to cut off that king in the flower of his youth, to blast his successor in his undertakings, to raise against him the Duke of Guise, the complotter and executioner of that inhuman action.
Dryden. Vindication of the Duke of Guise.

COMPLY', v. COMPLI'ABLE, COMPLI'ANCE, COMPLI'ANT, COMPLI'ANTLY, COMPLI'ER. Skinner says, either from the Fr. complaire; It. compiacere, q. d. complacere, vel a complicare, i. e. alieno ingenio se accommodare. To ply, however, is a common English word, and according to Tooke and Junius,

COMPLY. is no other than the A.S. pleggan, incumbere. Ac plegge on his boccum: Sed libris incumbat. Let him plie his books; let him bend, lead, or incline his mind to them; apply to them. And thus to comply will be, (as commonly used,)

COM-PONE.

To bend, lean or incline to, to yield or assent to; to give up, grant or concede; sc. to the wishes of another.

> Unmov'd by all their fury, kept your ground,
> Fix'd as the poles, whiles they kept twirling round:
> Submitted to all rage, and lost your all,
> Yet ne'er comply'd with, or bow'd knee to Baal.
> Browne. To his Reverend Friend, Dr. S.

And that therefore if such theorems as the Pythagoreans held be found suitable and compliable with Moses his text, it is a shrewd presumption that that is the right philosophick cabbala thereof.
Henry More. Philosophick Cabbala, fol. 74.

It extendeth to enemies; If you see thine enemy's ox going astray, thou shalt bring it to him. Exodus, xxiii. 4. Yet this might be done without love only in external compliance with the law. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, fol. 338.

If we look on her as a wife, she was chaste and loving, fruitful and discreet, humble and pleasant, wity and complyant, rich and fair; and wanted nothing to the making her a principal and precedent to the best wives of the world, but a long life and a full age. Taylor. Sermon 8. part iii. fol. 172.

> ——————— To thir supper fruits they fell,
> Nectarine fruits which the compliant boughes
> Yielded them.
> Milton. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 332.

Finally, that in the changes of religion he was a complier.
Life of Sir Thomas Smith, c. 18.

> He that complies against his will
> Is of his own opinion still!
> Which he may adhere to, yet disown,
> For reasons to himself best known.
> Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 3.

That so by this means and method he might wean them by degrees from their gross conceptions of things, and rectify more easily their wrong apprehensions by gratifying them in some measure, and in a gracious compliance with our weakness by bending and accommodating the way and method of our salvation to our weak capacity, and imperfect conception of things.
Tillotson. Sermon 46.

The Earl of Surrey (afterwards Duke of Norfolk) to shew how compliant he was to the humours of the princes whom he served, did as dexterously comply with his prodigality, as he had done formerly with his father's sparingness.
Burnett. History of Reformation, Anno 1509.

They had no notion of refusing to comply with established rites under pretence of conscience.
Jortin. Discourses concerning the Christian Religion.

The Jews, by their own interpretations, had made their religion compliable, and accommodated to their passions.
Id. Ib.

But should want of leisure (for it would be an injustice to our friendship to suppose it can be want of inclination,) should your occupations then prevent your compliance with this my request; I may, perhaps be obliged to take a method, which, though often condemned, is supported, nevertheless, by several considerable examples: I mean to be the historian of my own transactions.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Lucceius, book i. let. 20.

COMPO'NE, v. Compo'nent, n. Compo'nent, adj. Compo'nency. Lat. componere; con, and ponere, (of uncertain Origin,) to put, place, or set together. See Compose.

To put, place, or set together; sc. in order, form, or method; and thus, to arrange, settle, or adjust; also to put together;—in union or conjunction; and thus, to combine, or mix, or mingle.

The enemies then being of the church reformed, returned, and restored to the unity of the same, and peace over all componed and concluded, &c. COM-PONE.
Burnett. Records Act 26. Anno Regni 21. Henry VIII. COMPOR

We desired his ho. to devise what cardinal shold be most convenyent to be sent as legate in that mater, to procede jointly or severally with your gr. who might have a good pretence for componyng peace betwen princes.
Strype. Memoirs. The King's Ambassadors to Cardinal Wolsey.

Discourse being but the falling into it, [knowledge] judgment the principles of it, and single apprehensions the components of judgments. Digby. Of Man's Soul, ch. x. fol. 100.

Compounded or double words I have seldom noted, except when they obtain a signification different from that which the components have in their simple state.
Johnson. Preface to the English Dictionary.

Is it not extraordinary, that in these fine descriptive pieces, these innumerable odes and elegies which are in the mouths of all the world, and many of which have been the entertainment of ages, that in these pieces which describe love with such a passionate energy, and represent its object in such an infinite variety of lights, not one word is said of proportion, if it be, what some insist it is, the principal component of beauty.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful.

What I have to say being only this, 1. that the two or three dreadful explosions perfectly agree with what hath been observed of the componency of that lightning which produces such an effect; namely, that it abounded with nitrous and fixed salts.
Warburton. Of Julian's attempt to rebuild the Temple, book ii. ch. iii

Componed, or Gobony, in Heraldry, is an alternate arrangement of squares of a different colour, or of colour and metal.

COMPO'RT, v. Compo'rt, n. Compo'rtable, Compo'rtance, Compo'rtation, Compo'rtment. Fr. comporter; Lat. comportare; (con, and portare, to carry; Gr. φορεω, Vossius.) Comport is generally used of the conduct or behaviour, the carriage of a person; thus, Se comporter; to carry, bear, behave; maintain or sustain himself. Cotgrave.

To carry or bear with another; to move or act in unison; to suit, to agree, to be consistent with.

Is it not more pleasing to nature, that desires a certainty, and comports not with what is infinite? to have these closes, rather than not to know where to end, or how far to go.
Daniel. A Defence of Rhyme.

> Or what respects he the negociating
> Matters comporting emperie and state.
> Drayton. Moses, his Birth and Miracles, book i.

And from thence it came to pass, that he was also a very wise statesman, and a person withal of most unalterable integrity and justice, (which he made his politics to comport with.)
Strype. Life of Smith, Epis. Dedication, v.

The other logical, by casting the rules and cautions of this art into some comportable method, whereof I have made choice, not only as the shortest and most elemental, but indeed the soundest.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 5.

I shall account concerning the rules and manners of deportment in the receiving; our comport and conversation in and after it. Bishop Taylor. Worthy Communicant.

> So been they both attone, and doen vpreare
> Their beuers bright each other for to greet;
> Goodly comportance each to other beare,
> And entertaine themselues with court'sies meet.
> Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 1.

Here is a collection and comportation of Agur's wise sayings.
Bishop Richardson. On the Old Testament, (1655.) fol. 303.

MPORT — MPOSE

If we should derive our warranties from the examples of the Old Testament, it were all one as if from the licences of war we should take pattern of our comportment in the days of peace and laws, or from children learn what were the measures of a man.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. ii.

In foul weather, it would not be amiss for them to learn to dance, that is, to learn just so much (for all beyond is superfluous, if not worse) as may give them a graceful comportment of their bodies. Cowley. Essay. The School.

The examination therefore proposed was no other but an examination of their manner of eating the Lord's supper by Christ's institution, to see how their behaviour herein comported with the institution, and the end for which it was instituted.
Locke. Notes on the Epistles of St. Paul, sec. 8.

To remedy their disorders herein, he sets before them Christ's institution of this sacrament; that in it they might see the manner and end of its institution, and by that every one might examine his own comportment herein, whether it were conformable to that institution, and suited to that end. Id. Ib.

Your letter which was afterwards read in the senate, seemed by no means to comport with those sentiments our friend had thus represented you as entertaining.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Plancus, book xiii. let. 13.

And the life of Tully, and the D. L. will be a rule, which few have set us and perhaps few will follow, how men, who esteem the love of each other, should comport themselves when they differ in opinion. Warburton. Life. Letter to Middleton.

COMPO'SE, v. — See COMPONE. From composi-
COMPO'SED, adj. — tum, past participle of componere;
COMPO'SEDLY, — to put, place, or set together; sc.
COMPO'SEDNESS, — (1) in order, form, or method;
COMPO'SER, — and thus to arrange, settle, or ad-
COMPO'SING, n. — just; also (2) in union or unity,
COMPO'SITION, — in concord, peace, quietude, or
COMPO'SITOR, — tranquillity; and thus, to quiet,
COMPO'SURE. — calm, or tranquillize: also (3) in union or conjunction; and thus, to combine, mix, or mingle.

The sothe is this, the cutte felle on the knight,
Of which ful blith and glad was every wight;
And tell he must his tale as was reson,
But forword, and by composition,
As ye han herd. Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 850.

His hardy herte might him helpen naught,
He moste abiden, whan that he was caught,
By force, and eke by composition.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2653.

Thei token the possession
After the composicion
Amonge themselfe.
Gower. Conf. Am. Prologue, fol. 5.

The inscription doth not so much declare the authors as y^e^ chief musicians appointed to sing y^e^ psalme. Howbeit it might come to passe y^t^ some man of that stocke beyng a leuite did compose it.
Calvin. Foure Godly Sermons, vpon the 87 Psalm, n. 5.

Than al the princely youth, and temple preest from the altar barres
Contending bring their meates, entrayels of bulls, and seruice rost,
And bread in basketts lade, and wynes they skinke with cakes compost. Phaer. Æneidos, book viii.

And for the more strengthe of the sayde composycion, the kynge of the Scottys came after to Kynge Henrye's parliamēt holden at Northampton, and another season into Normandy
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 238.

Then the kynge was counsayled to take them to mercy, so that amonge them they shoulde gyue to the kyng lx. thousande frankes towarde his charges, and therby all theyr catayls, and other thynges that they had abrode in the feldes, shulde be saued, and nat brent nor destroyed; of the which cōposicion they were ryght gladde and thanked the kyng and his counsayle that they were so skaped. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 417.

His face and visage being naturally sterne and grim, hee made of purpose more crabbed and hideous: composing and dressing it at a looking-glasse, all manner of waies to seem more terrible and to strike greater feare. COMPOSE

Holland. Suetonius. Caligula, p. 146.

Whereby it is manyfest, that the appeasing and composing of controversies and heresies, was not then thought to be most fitte to be in one bishop's hande: but in as many as coulde conueniently assemble together, according to the daunger of the heresie which sprang, or depe roote which it had taken or was like to take. Whitgift. Defence, fol. 364.

In the first frost, upon a snow I have seen the like prismes, so piled one upon another, and joined end to end, and equally increased in their length, as to compose a sexangular and inverted pyramid, somewhat like the bowl of a funnel.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, fol. 16.

First tell me (sweet) whose words were those?
For though your voice the air did break,
Yet did my soul the sense compose,
And through your lips my heart did speake.
Carew. An Hymenial Dialogue.

——— All things invite
To peaceful counsels and the settl'd state
Of order, how in safety best we may
Compose our present evils, with regard
Of what we are and were, dismissing quite
All thoughts of warr.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 281.

——— On th' other side up rose
Beliel, in act more graceful and humane,
A fairer person lost not heav'n; he seem'd
For dignity compos'd and high exploit.
But all was false and hollow. Id. Ib. book ii. l. 111.

In this hurry, one running one way, another running another way, a man was seen walking before the door very composedly without a hat, whereupon one crying out, here is the fellow that kill'd the duke, upon which others run thither, every body asking, which is he? which is he? to which the man without the hat very composedly answered I am he.
Clarendon. Rebellion, vol. i. book i. p. 29.

Even such a one is he that learns theology in the school of Nature, if he seem to participate of any settledness or composedness of conscience. Hale. Rem. fol. 12.

He hath ritled Epicurus of his γαλήνη, tranquillity or calm of mind, to the acquiring of which all his philosophy was designed, a thing so hugely pleasurable, that he has been taken for a carnal voluptuous swine ever since, upon no other merit but for seeking out those great composers of the soul, so much beyond all other sensuality. Hammond. Works. Sermon 2. vol. iv.

The ways and motions whereof [prose] are so uncertain and undistinguished, like the way and motion of a ship in the sea, as not only to discompose the best composers, but also to disappoint sometimes the most attentive reader, and put him to hunt counter for the sense. Hobbs. On Sir W. D'Avenant's Preface.

——— Lives centrall,
Can frame themselves a right compositall,
While as they sitten soft in the sweet rays
Or vitall vest of the lives generall.
More. On the Soul, part ii. can. 4. st. 9.

As two contentious kings, that on each little jar
Defiances sound forth, proclaiming open war.
Until some other realm, that on their frontiers lies,
Be hazarded again by other enemies,
Do then betwixt themselves to composition fall
To counter-check that sword, else like to conquer all.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 3.

——— Whence wee
To entertain them fair with open front
And brest (what could we more?) propounded terms
Of composition, strait they chang'd thir minds
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they would dance.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 613.

In these months of my silence, I have been busie (if any work of my brain may be termed a business) about certain compositions of mine own, partly imposed and partly voluntary: whereof some would fain be struggling into the light; but I do check their forwardness, because I am afraid they will be borne before their time. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 336.

COM-POSE.

Though I am not fond enough to phancy any art or ornament in the composure to recommend it; yet I know the essay is seasonable, and contains thinges which relate to our biggest interests.
Glanville. Witchcraft. Epis. Ded.

As he that useth a prayer composed by another, prayeth; and that according to the spirit of him who composed it; so he that praiseth God with these spiritual and prophetical composures may be said to prophecy according to that spirit which speaketh in him. Mede. Works. Discourse 16. book i.

So perfectly celestial was that fire
Bestow'd in the composure of his mind,
To that high pitch as raised his desire
Above the usual compass of his kind.
Drayton. The Legend of Robert Duke of Normandy.

But now 'tis done, O let me know
Where these immortal colours grow,
That could this deathless piece compose?
In lilies? or the fading rose?
Waller. To Vandyke.

But the last means he contrived for the composing these differences, was, that if they could not make them up by themselves, then to refer the matter to the judgment of some chosen men.
Strype. Memorials. Anno 1555.

And it is no easie matter to keep our minds composed and fit to converse with God in prayer, and other solemn duties of religion.
Stillingfleet. Sermon 3. vol. iv.

I concluded that he, who could hear and speak of it often, in the course of the trial, so sedately and composedly, only as a matter of fact, or a note of chronology; or as he might have done of Harlequin's broken leg; could never have received any stop from the thing itself in any of his great designs, but only what common decency required for his own sake.
Hoadly. Letters signed Britannicus, &c. let. 51.

But any considering by-stander can easily distinguish such a quiet, or such a false joy, from a composedness or a good humour, which results from a due temperament of body, good health and a happy condition of life, all working upon a sound mind, in their natural course, without the applications of art or deceit.
Id. Ib. let. 97.

Ye shady woods where once I us'd to rove,
Alike indulgent to the muse and love.
Ye murmuring streams that in meanders roll,
The sweet composers of the pensive soul!
Farewell. Gay. The Fan.

By his [Wolsey's] preferment, all differences among Christian princes would be in such a fair way of composition, that they might be at leisure to undertake one of the greatest and most notable expeditions against the Turks.
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Anno 1530.

A very proud, or a very suspicious temper; false wit, or sensuality, and these are the chief and prevailing ingredients in the composition of that man, whom we call a scorner.
Atterbury. Sermon 3. vol. iii.

Each feature, emulous of pleasing most,
Does justly some peculiar sweetness boast;
And her composure's of so fine a frame,
Pride cannot hope to mend, nor envy blame.
Pomfret. Strephon's Love for Delia.

But with respect to the present age, nothing more conduces to make these composures natural, than when some knowledge in rural affairs is discovered.
Pope. A Discourse on Pastoral Poetry.

We generally, I fear, consult the Scriptures too negligently, and reflect on them too superficially, with no greater degree of attention and care, than we employ in perusing mere human composures. Atterbury. Sermon 2. vol. iii.

A long and bloody war, that had well nigh exhausted the strength and vitals of this country, was at length composed by the fortunate successes of Bosworth-field.
Hurd. On the Constitution of the English Government. Dial. 3.

The composer will do well to have an eye to these distinctions, as mere description, or the introductory narrative will admit of a different kind of recitative from the conversation part.
Jago. To the Composer.

COM-POSE. — COMPO TELLA

In this we shall follow the order, that we have above laid down, first dividing speech, as a whole, into its constituent parts; then resolving it as a composite, into its matter and form.
Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. i.

For the name of poem will belong to every composition whose primary end is to please, provided it be so constructed as to afford all the pleasure, which its kind or sort will permit.
Hurd. On the Idea of Universal Poetry.

The cloth was of the same materials as that which is worn in the other islands, and most of that which was seen by our people was dyed of a bright but deep yellow, and covered on the outside with a composition like varnish, which was rather red or of a dark lead colour. Cook. Voyage, vol. i. book i. ch. xx.

The jailer, struck with the composure of the apostle, in a moment of such alarm, and with the dignified manner in which he spoke, seems to have felt that instantaneous conviction, which hardened sinners sometimes feel. Gilpin. Sermon 10. vol. i.

COMPOSSIBLE, consisting of united possibilities; of parts, each of which can or may be.

But they which are unwilling to believe nonsence themselves, or persuade others to do so, it is but reason they should make the faith wherewith they believe, an intelligible, compossible, consistent thing, and not define it by repugnances.
Chillingworth. Rel. Prot. ch. vi. part i.

CO'MPOST, v. Co'MPOST, n. Co'MPOST, adj. COMPO'STURE. } See COMPOSE, above. To put, place or set together; to combine or mix.

Finding the most pleasurable sin such a sad γλυκύπικρον, compost of more bitter than sweet at the very instant, we should never be such blind votaries of Satan as to go on in such chargeable ways of sin. Hammond. Works. Sermon 10.

And it seems it hath been taken indifferently, whether you call them the one or the other, both for similitude of delineaments and composture. Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 11.

Plants for want of culture, degenerate to be baser in the same kind. Removing into worse earth, or forbearing to compost the earth, maketh them degenerate.
Bacon. Natural History, sec. 518.

Of composts shall the Muse descend to sing,
Nor soil her heavenly plumes? The sacred Muse
Naught sordid deems, but what is base; nought fair
Unless true virtue stamp it with her seal.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, book i. l. 218.

It was made in order to give a colour to an exorbitant increase of the civil list, and in the same act to bring a new accession to the loaded compost heap of corrupt influence.
Burke. On Economical Reform.

COMPOSTELLA, or ST. JAGO DE COMPOSTELLA, a corruption of Giacomo Postolo, (Vossius, ad Melam. iii. 1,) the Brigantium of the Romans, a large and well-built town of Spain, the Capital of Galicia, situated on an eminence on the small river Soria. It is the See of an Archbishop, founded by Callistus II. in 1124; Pascal II. afterwards ordained that seven Canonries in the Cathedral should always be filled by Cardinals. Here also is the seat of the famous order of the Knights of St. James, which is divided into eighty-seven Commanderies, and has a revenue of upwards of 200,000 golden ducats; according to Baronius the relics of the Apostle were first brought here, A. D. 816. Here is an University founded in 1532, with four Colleges. A traffic is carried on in wine, fruit, and fish; and there are also some manufactures of silk stockings, hats, paper, and leather. The population is about 12,000. Ninety-eight miles west of Astorga, and 270 north-west of Madrid. Longitude 8° 30′ west, latitude 42° 52′ north COMPOTA'TION, COMPOTA'TOR. Gr. συμπόσιον; Lat. compotatio; con, and potare; potatum, to drink; Gr. πόω, the obsolete theme of πώσω. A drinking together.

Which feasts convivial meetings we did name:
Not like the ancient Greeks, who, to their shame,
Call'd it a compotation, not a feast;
Declaring the worst part of it the best.
Denham. Old Age, part ii.

And is also tolerable, if by desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only meane in society and compotation, from the ancient custom in symposaick meetings, to wear chaplets of roses about their heads: and so we condemn not the Germane custom, which ouer the table describeth a rose in the seiling.
Sir Thomas Brown, fol. 322.

——————— If thou wilt prolong
Dire compotation, forthwith reason quits
Her empire to confusion, and misrule,
And vain debates. J. Philips. Cider, book ii.

In the latter [the Greek] they are called by a word which signifies compotations, whereas, in ours, [the Latin] they are more emphatically styled convivial meetings, intimating that it is in a communication of this nature that life is most truly enjoyed.
Melmoth. Cicero. To L. Pup. Pætus. Letter 9. book xiii.

I shall yet think it a diminution to my happiness, to miss of half our companions and compotators of syllabub, &c.
Pope. Letter to Mr. Knight.

CO'MPOUND, v. Co'MPOUND, n. Co'MPOUND, adj. Co'MPOUNDED, Co'MPOUNDER, Co'MPOUNDING. Lat. componere; to put, place or set together. See COMPONE. To put, place, or set together, sc. in order, form, or method; and thus, to arrange, settle or adjust; also to put together,—in union or conjunction; and thus, to combine, mix, or mingle. And, generally,

To come to an arrangement, settlement or adjustment.

What (qd. I) the great sowne
(Qd. he) that rombleth vp and downe
In Fame's house ful of tidings,
Both of faire speech and chidings
And of false, and soth compowned.
Chaucer. The Second Booke of Fame.

Phisicions haue in store
Their simples to compownd
and match in mixture so,
As ech disease from sicklie corse
they can enforce to go.
Turbervile. That all hurts and losses are to be recured, &c.

Ladyes and auncyent knyghtes remembringe the traueyle of their bodyes, and nat shapen nor made to endure suche payne, compouded and payed at the wyll of the duke.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. ccvi.

The compounde hath that goes thereto,
Constantinople bryne,
Herbes shred, and minced very thicke,
some kynde of compounde wyne.
Drant. Horace. Satyre 4.

For if the bishops were diuided among themselues, & at variance, and had no superiour who should compounde the controuersies?
Whitgift. Defence, fol. 364.

——————— Therein he found
Fountains of gold and silver to abound,
Of which the matter of his huge desire
And pompous pride eftsoones he did compound.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 7.

O if, I say, you look upon this verse
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name reherse,
But let your love even with my life decay.
Shakspeare. Sonnet 71.

The last is the compounded order. His name being a brief of his nature. For this pillar is nothing in effect, but a medly, or an amasse of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind, by stealth. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 25.

Mahometans are a compound of Gentiles, Jewes, and Christians, and so absurd in their ceremonies, as if they had taken that which is most sottish out of every one of them.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 670.

But the opinion of Buchanan is more probable, that the town now called Dundy is a compound word of Down and Tay.
Spotiswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1188. book ii.

In like manner, if, by knowing that colours are nothing else but various mixtures of light and of darkness in bodies, our discourse assures us, that, by several compoundings of these extreams, reds, blews, yellows, greens, and all other intermediate colours may be generated. Digby. Of Man's Soul, ch. iii.

Perceives the crowd's unstable zeal decay,
Lest their recanting chief the cause betray,
Who on a Father's grace his hopes may ground,
And for his pardon with their heads compound.
Dryden. Absalom and Achitophel.

Our holiest actions have been
Th' effects of wickedness and sin;
Religious houses made compounders,
For th' horrid actions of their founders.
Butler. The Weakness and Misery of Man.

There was likeness enough in the features of each manner, to favour Lucian's attempt in compounding his new dialogue.
Hurd. Preface to the manner of writing Dialogues.

It [Priscillianism] was a monstrous compound of the grossest and filthiest errors, collecting into itself all the stinking odour dispersed throughout other heresies.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

They seem rather such as ought to be expected from those grand compounders in politicks, who shorten the road to their degrees in the state; and have a certain inward fanatical assurance and illumination upon all subjects.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

COMPREHE'ND, v. COMPREHE'NSIBLE, COMPREHE'NSION, COMPREHE'NSIVE, COMPREHE'NSIVELY, COMPREHE'NSIVENESS, COMPREHE'NSOR. Fr. comprendre; It. comprendere; Sp. comprehender; Lat. comprehendere,—simul capere; com, pre, and hendere, (which (hendere) the Latin has only in composition; and Tooke supposes to be) from the A. S. hent-an, capere, to take hold of,

To take within, to hold within, to contain, to embrace, to enclose, to grasp.

Metaphorically, to take within the mind; to conceive; to grasp or embrace within the powers of the understanding; and thus, to understand.

Of sondry doutes thus they jangle and trete,
As lewed peple demen comunly
Of thinges that ben made more subtilly
Than they can in hir lewednesse comprehend,
They demen gladly to the badder ende.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10537.

Not that now I haue taken, or now am perfyt, but I sue if in ony maner I comprehende in which thing also I am comprehendid of Crist Iesus. Brethren, I deme me not that I haue comprehendid but oo thing. Wiclif. Filipensis, ch. iii.

For heauē he measureth wyth his spanne, and the whole worlde he comprehendeth under his thre fingers.
Bale. Image, H. 5.

Finally soo large is the compase of that, whiche is named historie, that it comprehendeth all thynge that is necessarye to be put in memory. Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 228.

O Maker of mankind, that formed day and night,
Whose power imperial, comprehendeth euery place:
Mine hart, my mind, my thought, my hole delite
Is after this lyfe, to se thy glorious face.
Skelton. Prayer to the Father of Heauen.

COMPRE-HEND.

For God is as myghtie in the stable as in the temple. And as he is not comprehensyble nor circumscribed no where; so is he present euery where. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 121.

To the intent that his inconstant, disloyal and dishonourable demeanure, being to theym perfitely knowen, they may ordre theym self unto hym, as wel according to tharticle of thair comprehension, conteigned in the said treatie of London and by thair letters patent accepted, as, &c.

Strype. Memorials. Instructions by the King to Mr. Pace.

The virtues required in the heroic poem (and indeed in all writings published) are comprehended all in this one word, Discretion.

Hobbs. The Virtues of an Heroic Poem, fol. 670.

I see what crosses my attempt will bring;
I know what thorns the growing rose defends;
I think the honey guarded with a sting;
All this, beforehand, counsel comprehends:
But will is deaf, and hears no heedful friends.

Shakspeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Truth is bigger than our minds, and we are not the same with it, but have a lower participation, only of the intellectual nature, and are rather apprehenders than comprehenders thereof.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, book i. ch. v.

But after that, Plato was offended with them, and maintained against them, that they did utterly corrupt and disgrace the worthiness and excellency of geometry, making it to descend from things not comprehensible, and without body, unto things sensible and materiall.

North. Plutarch. Marcellus, fol. 261.

D. Potter in this very place hath subjoyned, though not a catalogue of fundamentals, yet such a comprehension of them as may serve every one that will make a conscionable use of it instead of a catalogue.

Chillingworth. Religion of Protestant Church, part i. ch. iv.

If in the measures of life and death which are described in large characters, there be any lines so indefinite and comprehensive, that they who preach and declare the doctrines, do not fully take in all that God intends, upon the account of our weakness and ignorance, there may be some little rushes and twigs to support their sinking hopes. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. v. sec. 6.

As pictures represent but the outward lineaments, so this but the letter of the law; not the law itself comprehensively taken, but τὰ τοῦ νόμου, some things about the law, outward acts.

Goodwin. The Unregenerate Man's Guiltiness, book ii. ch. vii.

David here confesseth this his birth-sin, upon occasion of these his other sins; and not only in respect of the influence and causation specified, which that first sin had into these acts, but that it being a great sin, a sin still remaining in him, comprehensively takes it in to have it pardoned with the rest.

Id. Ib. book ix. ch. ii.

There are these three senses and interpretations of it; and I love to take (especially where there is a comprehensiveness, as here there is of all) all in.

Id. Works. Sermon 33. vol. i. part i. fol. 436.

When I have the word of a God, for my assurance, farewell reason, and welcome faith; as when I shall have dispacht this weary pilgrimage, and from a traveller shall come a comprehensor; farewell faith, and welcome vision.

Hall. Satan's Fiery Darts.

This is life eternal, says he, to know thee the only true God; and him whom thou hast sent, Jesus Christ, that is, to be rightly instructed in the knowledge of the only true God, and of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord? Under which two general heads are comprehended all the necessary principles both of the natural and of the Christian religion. Tillotson. Sermon 34.

And how much soever any truths may seem above our understanding and comprehension, yet if they come attested by his divine infallible authority, we have infinitely more ground to be persuaded of them than we are of any thing that we ourselves may seem to comprehend or understand.

Beveridge. Sermon 34.

'Tis chicanery in the word: a free-thinker, in this self-evident proposition, is any man that uses his understanding, that is, that thinks at all: a very comprehensive definition.

Bentley. Of Free-thinking

Because he knew not of any that had spoken exactly and satisfactorily of the law, in the several notions and acceptations of it, nor in all things rightly, at least not comprehensively enough, in his opinion; he thought it necessary to write somewhat largely and distinctly concerning it. COMPR HEND — COMPRESS

Bishop Bull. Life, vol. iii. fol. 143.

And here I shall not restrain righteousness to the particular virtue of justice (tho' in this sense also this saying is most true) but enlarge it according to the genius and straine of the book of the Proverbs, in which the words wisdom and righteousness are commonly used very comprehensively so as to signify all religion and virtue. Tillotson. Sermon 3.

Though it be an ordinary saying among us, do as you would be done by, yet I fear it is not so generally and truly understood as it ought to be, nor so easy to be explain'd, as it may seem at first sight by reason of its extent and comprehensiveness.

Beveridge. Sermon 129.

Lastly, though St. Paul were an excellent apostle, yet he was still but a man, and a man on earth not yet in heaven, a viator not a comprehensor, or a proficient, not yet fully perfect, or so immutably confirmed in virtue as to be out of all danger of the sin of pride, which even the angels of heaven fell into.

Bishop Bull. Works, vol. i. fol. 119.

Alas! by different steps and ways
Our modern critics aim at praise,
And rashly in the learned arts,
They judge by prejudice and parts,
For crampt by a contracted soul,
How should they comprehend the whole?

Smart. Fable 1.

But no figure I think more beautifully and more comprehensively discribes it, [life] than that of a journey, to which it is compared by the apostle in the text.

Gilpin. Sermon 8. vol. i.

Whether then composed or only applied, thus much must be admitted, that in learning, sense, energy, and comprehensiveness, it is fully equal to all the modern dissertations on the equality of mankind, and it has one advantage over them,—that it is in rhyme. Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

COMPRESBYTERIAL, adj. com, and presbyterial, (q. v.) from Gr. πρέσβυς, senex; an elder.

He that enabled with gifts from God, and the lawful and primitive choice of the church assembled in convenient number, faithfully from that time forward feeds his parochial flock, has his coequal and compresbyterial power to ordain ministers and deacons by publick prayer, and vote of Christ's congregation in like sort as he himself was ordain'd, and is a true apostolick bishop.

Milton. Of Reformation in England.

COMPRE'SS, v.
CO'MPRESS, n.
COMPRESSIBI'LITY,
COMPRE'SSIBLE,
COMPRE'SSION,
COMPRE'SSIVE,
COMPRE'SSURE.

Lat. comprimere, compressum; con, and premere, which, Vossius thinks, may be from βαρήμα, pondus: because premere, as Perottus says, is properly to lean against any thing cum pondere. See to PRESS.

To press two or more bodies together, seems always to imply that the bodies are in contact before the act of pressing commences. To compress is, as the Fr. comprimer; to press, to squeeze, to thrust, close or strain together. Cotgrave.

The bashfull maide, as she went vp, into the higher roome
The warre-god secretly compresst.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book ii. fol. 26.

For shall we say he [the Devil] caused sometimes thunders, lightnings, and tempests; and can infect the air, as well as move it or compress it; who knows not that these things are also natural?

Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. ii. sec. 7.

For, although this solution of continuity may seem to be a dilation, yet in truth it is a compression in the part where the evil is; which happens to it in the same manner as we shew'd (when we spoke of the motion of restitution) it doth to stiff bodies, that by violence are compress'd and drawn into a less capacious figure, than their nature affects; and return into their own state, as soon as the mastring violence leaves them at liberty.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxv.

M-SS-M-SE.

Considering the brushiness and angulosity of the parts of the air, a more than ordinary motion or compressive rest may very well prove painful to the soul, and disharmonious to her touch.

More. Immortality of the Soul, book iii. fol. 148.

According as the superficies of the same body is better or worse disposed to reflection of light, by polishing, or by compressure together, or the like; so, the same body remaining the same in substance, will shew it self of a different colour.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxix.

We may compare the soul to a force, which has at one and the same time a tendency many ways, but acts on that part only where it finds the greatest ease, or the least resistence. For example: Air strongly compressed in a glass receiver, will break the glass to get out. It presses upon every part, but at last makes its way where the glass is weakest.

Clarke. Leibnitz. Appendix, fol. 385.

Perhaps, it will not be necessary to conclude that the air is so much more rarefiable than compressible, as most readers will be prone to infer, by comparing the greatest compression and expansion of it that are mentioned in these experiments.

Boyle. Of the admirably differing Extension, &c.

And yet our experiment will be a considerable instance of the great compressibility, if I may so speak of the air.

Id. New Experiments touching the condensation of the Air by mere cold.

The same strength of expression, though more compressed, runs through his historical harangues, which so eminently distinguishes and adorns his public orations.

Melmoth. Pliny. Letter 16. book i.

They who can form parallels, discover consequences, and multiply conclusions, are best pleased with involution of argument and compression of thought; they desire only to receive the seeds of knowledge, which they may branch out by their own powers, to have the way of truth pointed out, which they can then follow without a guide. Johnson. The Idler, No. 70.

COMPRIEST, con, and priest; Gr. πρεσβύτερος, an elder; Lat. presbyter; Sp. presbitero; Fr. prebstre, prestre; It. prete.

What will he then praise them for? not for any thing doing, but for deferring to do, for deferring to chastise his lew'd and insolent compriests. Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

COMPRINT, in Law, a surreptitious printing by one Publisher of a Book belonging to another

COMPRI'SE, v. } Fr. comprins, compris, past par-
COMPRI'SAL, n. } ticiple of comprendre. See to COMPREHEND.

To take within, to hold within; to contain, to enclose, to embrace, to grasp.

There be many mo wordes spoken, whiche I purposelye omytte to translate, not with standynge the substaunce of the hole sentence is herein comprised.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 48.

Before that tyme, in the yeare of our Lorde a thousande thre hūdred lxxv. there was done a cruell iustice in the citye of Burdeaux, done and comprised by Sir Thomas Phelton, lieutenant to the king of Englande, in the marches of Burdeux.

Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 318.

Seven hundred horsemen sent from the kyng of Romans, hath now attayuid our camp; which I esteme so strong and potent, that hyt were able in my judgment, to discomfit the Turque and his armie, comprizing an hundred thousand of as gud fyghtyng men as ever hee was capiten of.

Strype. Memorials. Richard Pace, the King's Ambassador to the Emperor.

But for England an old epigrammatist made these [verses] with a prosopopœia of nature, the indulgent mother to England, which doth comprise as much as the best witte can now conceiue in that behalfe. Camden. Remains. Britain, fol. 6.

——This said; th' heroicke sire
Gaue him his mother; whose faire eyes, fresh streames of loue's salt fire,
Billow'd on her soft cheeks, to heare, the last of Hector's speech,
In which his vowes compriside the summe, of all she did beseech
In her wisht comfort.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book vi. fol. 94.

I observed to you, that all four might be comprised in this one general proposition, viz. that it is required of Christians, who have been wilful sinners, sincerely to endeavour for the future to practice the whole will of God, any ways made known to them; and that without this amendment, and sincere, universal obedience the gospel gives them no ground of hopes of pardon and acceptance, and eternal life. COMPRISE. — COMPROMISE.

Hoadly. Works. Sermon 4. vol. iii.

It [slander] is a complication, a comprisal, a collection and summe of all wickedness. Barrow. Sermon 18. vol. i.

Whatever was by them decreed, either in the declaration of Christian belief, or refutation of heresy, may all be comprised, as judicious Hooker well noteth, in four words, "truly, perfectly, indivisibly, distinctly," truly God, perfectly man, indivisibly one person, distinctly two natures.

Bishop Horne. Works. Discourse 7. vol. iv.

COMPRO'BATE, v. } Lat. comprobare, comprobatum; con, and probate, COMPROBA'TION. } which Tooke derives from the A. S. prof-ian, to prove.

To prove conjointly; to form a joint proof. The noun seems also applied in the same manner, as Approbation. See APPROBATE.

For as well that sentence, as al other before rehersed, doo comprobate with holy Scripture, that God is the fountain of sapience, lyke as he is the soueraine begynnyng of all generation.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, fol. 222.

Nor besides this haue I nothing spoken of the general counsails, condempning your part by good and substantial aucthorite, cōprobate and corroborate by y^e^ whole body of Christēdom.

Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 187.

As we trust ye that be the heads and rulers for the comprobation and declaration of particular good minds, ye will not faill to do accordingly, and so by your diligence to be shew'd hereafter, to redeem the errors and delaies past.

Burnett. Records. Copie of the King's Letter to the Bishop of Rome.

He [King Henry VIII.] proueth and defendeth his mariage with Queene Anne, to be iust and lawfull, both by the authority of God's word, and the comprobation of the best and most famous learned men and vniuersities, and also by the assent of the whole realme

Fox. Martyrs, fol. 981.

COMPRODUCTION, con, pro, and ducere, ctum; to lead, draw, or bring; producere, to bring forth.

He that observeth the rudimental spring of seeds, shall find strict rule, altho' not after this order, How little is required unto effectual generation, and in what diminutives the plastic principle lodgeth, is exemplified in seeds, wherein the greater mass affords so little comproduction.

Sir Thomas Brown. Cyrus Garden, fol. 49.

COMPROMI'SE, v. } Lat. compromittere, issum;
COMPROMI'SE, n. } Fr. compromettre; It. com-
COMPROMI'T, v. } promettere. Cotgrave ex-
COMPROMI'SSION. } plains the Fr. noun, compromis; "a mutual promise of adversaries to refer their differences unto arbitrement."

To compromise is, also, to arrange, adjust, or settle, without the intervention of arbiters; usually attended with mutual concessions.

Antenor would haue compromize
to cut awaye the same.

Drant. Horace. Epistle to Lollius.

Also I do send herewith in French, how King Edward the First was received and taken to be supream Lord in Scotland, by all those that pretended title to the crown of Scotland, as next heirs to the king, that was then dead without issue, and the compromise of them all made unto the said King Edward the First to stand to his judgment, which of all them that did claim should have the Crown of Scotland.

Burnett. Records. Bishop Tonstal's Letter, No. 9.

COMPROMISE. — COMPT.

In witnesse of the whiche thyng, to this present compromise, my said lorde of Gloucester, hath subscribed his name with his awne hande Humfrey Gloucester.
Hall. Henry VI. The fourth Yere.

The controversie may easily be compromized by this distinction.
Fuller. Worthies, vol. i. ch. vi.

Yet by mediation of his friends, the matter came to a compromise, and the land to be divided betwixt the father and sonne, but with such partiality that the better part westward was allotted to Ethelbald. Speed. Ethelwolfe. Anno 838.

For there being so many ways of making great sins little, and little sins none at all, found out by the folly of men and the craft of the Devil, a great portion of God's right, and the duty we owe to him, is by way of compromise and agreement left as a portion to carelesness and folly.
Taylor. On Repentance, ch. iii. sec. 4.

Also the same lord cardinal, at many times when any houses of religion have been void, he hath sent his officers thither, and with crafty persuasions hath induced them to compromit their election in him. State Trials. Proceedings against Cardinal Wolsey.

Compromyttynge them selfes in the name of all theyr countrey, to abyde and performe all suche sentence and award as shulde by hym be gyuen. Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 169.

And the thirde is a compromyssion to be made of such partys, as either themperour or the French kyng have in the Duchie of Mylaen, into the Poope's hands per viam depositi.
Strype. Memorials. Cardinal Wolsey, to Mr. Secretary Pace.

For Christians to prosecute one another before the tribunals of infidels, for those injuries, which they might fairly compromise by the arbitration and decision of persons of their own body, was a thing that reflected an high disgrace, and left a great scandal on the Christian religion. South. Sermon 8. vol. x.

The circumstances to which you are reduced, will not admit of a compromise with the English nation. Junius. Letter 35.

COMPROVINCIAL, of the same province; con, and provincialis. Provinces are so called, because the Roman people eas provicit, i. e. ante vicit. Festus.

He the six islands compruinciall
In ancient times vnto great Britannee,
Shall to the same reduce, and to him call
Their sundry kings to do their homage seuerall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 3.

COMPT, v. / COMPT, s. / CO'MPTER, / CO'MPTIBLE, / CO'MPTLESS, / CO'MPTING-HOUSE. — Fr. compter; It. contare; Lat. computare; from con, and putare; of unsettled Etymology. See ACCOMPT, and COUNT. To reckon, number, calculate.

For present time abideth nought
It is more swift than any thought,
So little while it doth endure
That there ais compt ne measure.
Chaucer. The Romaunt of the Rose, fol. 139

For if our stories certein be and iust
There were that saw such mischief should be done,
And warning gaue, which compted were in sort
As sad deuines in matter but of sport.
Vncertaine Auctors. Of the troubled Commonwealth, &c.

Let Creside be in compt
and number of the mo
Who for her lightnesse may presume with falsest on the row.
Turbervile. Disprayse of Women, &c.

Our Roman youths they learne the subtle wayes
How to diuide into a hundred parts,
A pound, or piece, by their long compting arts.
Ben Jonson. Horace. Of the Arte of Poetrie.

Row. And your money,
Which since you are so stubborn, if I forfeit,
Make me a slack o'lent, and break my shins
For untag'd points and compters.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Woman's Prize, act iv. sc. 3.

Whereat the archbishop making delayes, not well contented at the matter, he was so called vpon, that eyther he should be compteable to the king for the money, or else he should incurre present daunger. Grafton. Henry II. The ninth Yere.

Good beauties, let mee sustaine no scorne; I am very comptible, euen to the least sinister usage.
Shakspeare. Twelfth Night.

Let, with her staffe, my yet-youth govern well
In pastures fair the flock of Israel,
A compt-less flock, a flock so great (indeed)
As of a Shepheard sent from heav'n had need.
Du Bartas. The Magnificence, book ii.

Then from the compter he takes down the file
And with prescriptions lights the solemn pile.
Garth. The Dispensary, can. 3.

The lady I was going to mention as an example, has always the second 'prentice out of the compting-house for her own use on her visiting day, and he sets down very methodically all the visits which are made her. Tatler, No. 109.

I never game, and rarely bet,
Am loth to lend, or run in debt,
No compter-writs me agitate.
Green. The Spleen.

There is no equality among us; we are not fellow-citizens, if the mariner who lands on the quay, does not rest on as firm legal ground as the merchant who sits in his counting-house.
Burke. To the Sheriffs of Bristol.

COMPTONIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Monoecia, order Triandria, natural order Amentaceæ. Generic character: male flower, a catkin; calyx scaly; corolla two-petaled, filaments forked: female flower, a catkin; calyx scaly; corolla six-petaled; styles two; nut oval.

One species, C. asplenifolia, native of Carolina. Willd.

COMPTRO'L, v. / COMPTRO'LLER, / COMPTRO'LLERSHIP, / COMPTRO'LLER-GENERAL, — Cotgrave says, controlle, or countre-rolle. A controlement, or contrarolement; a copy of a role of accounts.

Controlleur, properly an Officer that takes notes, or keeps a role of another Officer's accounts, thereby to discover if he do amiss. And thus, to comptrol, or to control, is,

To observe or overlook, to superintend; and further, to check, to regulate, to restrain. See COUNTERROLMENT, and also CONTROL.

For at the two monethes ende he wolde change and put other two into that offyce, and one that he trusted best shulde be his comptroller, and to hym all othir shulde accompt. and the comptroller shulde accõpt to hym by rolles and bokes written, and thaccõpts to remayne styll with theire.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. xxvi.

When he had so sayde ye king was greatly dismayed and greued, that he shoulde be partaker in that greuous offence considerynge first that he had the gouernaunce of his chambre, and the charge and comptrolment of all suche as were next to hys bodye.
Hall. Henry VII. The ninth Yere.

But her proud hart doe thou a little shake
And that high looke, with which she doth controll
All this worldes pride bow to a baser make
And all her faults in thy blacke-booke enroll.
Spenser. Sonnet 10.

At court she alighted, and Mr. Wyngfield, comptroller of the king's house, and many lords and knights brought her through the hall into the chamber of presence: and there she tarried two hours, being treated at a goodly banquet.
Strype. Memorials. Anno 1550.

It is unaccountable, that amongst the many lamentable cries that infest this town, your comptroller-general should not take notice of the most shocking, viz. those of the needy and afflicted
Spectator, No. 332.

[P- L- -ON.

If as I said, any persons are to make good deficiencies to the public creditor, beside the public at large, they must be those who managed the agreement. Why therefore are the estates of all the comptrollers-general confiscated?

Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

COMPU'LSION, Compu'lsive, Compu'lsively, Compu'lsative, Compu'lsatory, Compu'lsory, Compu'lsorily. Lat. compellere, compulsum; con, and pellere; Gr. πέλ-ειν, to move; to move or cause to move together, to drive together. And thus compulsion is equivalent to Force, violence, constraint, obligation.

In Hamlet, the first folio reads compulsative.

Finally, what doth thy compulsion and violence? Verily nothing but make a starke hypocrite: for no man can compel the hart to beleue a thing except it see euidence and sufficiente profe.

Frith. Workes, fol. 57.

He now that is renewed in Christ, keepeth the law without any law written or compulsion of any ruler or officer, saue by the leadyng of the Spirite onely. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 114.

But when he saw y^t^ he myght not reconsyle them by fayre meanys, he then vsed cōpulsares, & denoūced them accursed, but if they restored the goodes of the churche by a serteyn day.

Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 237.

They that of theyr owne good wyll do these, haue no nede to be pricked foorth with compulsories of the lawe, for them theyr owne innocencie maketh free from it.

Udall. Galathians, ch. v.

That there ought to be no compulsion vsed in matters of religion and fayth, and that none should be punished for their conscience.

Whitgift. Defence, fol. 50.

The king commaunded the erle in any wise by distresse or otherwise according to his discretion, to exact the money of the people, and by compulsion to enforce such to payment as whyned most at it. Grafton. Henry VII. The fifth Yere.

After waiting and voiding, he thinks to void my second argument, and the contradictions that will follow both in the law and gospel, if the Mosaic law were abrogated by our Saviour, and a compulsive prohibition fix'd instead.

Milton. Doctrine, &c. of Divorce.

If therefore divorce may be so natural, and that law and nature are not to go contrary; then to forbid divorce compulsively, is not only against nature, but against law.

Id. Ib.

Truly I have nothing but a piece of unlegible parchment, which cannot satisfy my understanding of the legalness of my convention before you: but being I am not able to dispute that power that compulsively brought me, but here I am.

State Trials. Trial of Lieutenant Colonel John Lilburn.

——————Which is no other
(And it doth well appeare vnto our state)
But to recouer of vs by strong hand
And terms compulsative, those foresaid lands
So by his father lost.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 153.

By what compulsory can the ecclesiastick state inforce him? If you threaten to drive him from the communion, he hath prevented you; he never comes at it. If from prayers, you do him a kindness; for he loves them not. If from sermons, then he will enjoy his lust without controlment.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. iv.

That the other apostles were by a personal privilege as infallible as himself, is no reason to hinder the exercise of jurisdiction or any compulsory power over them; for though in faith they were infallible, yet in manners and matter of fact as likely to erre as St. Peter himself was.

Id. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 7.

To say that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such a right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon. Of an Holy War.

But some of us with our swords forced them to retire for the present; and the house resolved to rise without giving any answer, judging it below them to do any thing by compulsion.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. fol. 178.

COM-PULSION.

Religion is in its nature a trial or probation of men's hearts; and is therefore essentially inconsistent with all compulsive motives, with such motives as destroy the nature of a trial or probation.

Sharp. Sermon 6. vol. iv.

COM-PUNCT.

These phenomena ought the more to be acquiesced in, because they may safely be looked upon as genuine declarations, which nature makes of her own accord, and not as confessions extorted from her by artificial and compulsory experiments, when being tortured by instruments and engines, as upon so many racks, she is forced to seem to confess whatever the tormentors please.

Boyle. An Examination of Antiperistasis.

What at last is the difference between him that is taxed by compulsion without representation, and him that is represented by compulsion in order to be taxed?

Johnson. Taxation no Tyranny.

He [the debtor] is impoverished by compulsive traffick, and at last overwhelmed, in the common receptacles of misery, by debts, which without his own consent were accumulated on his head.

Id. The Idler, No. 22.

This contribution threatening to fall infinitely short of their hopes they soon made it compulsory both in the rate and in the levy, beginning in fraud and ending as all the frauds of power end, in plain violence. Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

COMPU'NCT, v. Compu'nction, Compu'nctious, Compu'nctive. Fr. compunction; It. compunctione; Sp. compuncion; Lat. compungere, ctum; con, and pungere, to prick. Laterum compunctiones, in Pliny, (xxi. 19,) is rendered by Holland, "The stitches of the side." In English, compunct, the verb, is out of use. Compunction, metaphorically is applied

To the stings, stitches, or pricks of conscience; to the pangs attending guilt, or the recollection of guilt; remorse, contrition. And see the Example from Mede.

Whanne thei herden these thingis thei weren compunct in herte, and thei seiden to Petir and to othire apostles, britheren, what shulen we don? Wiclif. Dedis of Apostlis, ch. ii.

God ghaf to him a spyryt of compunccioun, ighen that thei se not, and eeris that thei heere not into this dai.

Id. Romaynes, ch. xi.

And contryewise they whom it behoued moste of all to vnderstand, that these thynges wer promysed by the holy saiynges of the prophetes, and who also seemed to be y^e^ very pillours of al deuout holines, haue utterly refused the bounteous goodnes of God, beyng offred vnto them, and haue felt no maner compunccion, to repentaunce or amendment, neither at John's preachyng, nor yet at mine. Udall. Luke, ch. vii.

The Englishman's custome was, that he that should be consecrated to lawful warfare, should the euening before the day of his consecration, to some bishoppe, abbott, monke, or priest, contrite and compunct, make confession of his sinnes, and absolued, should continue all night in the church, and giue himselfe to prayers, deuotions & afflictions.

Stow. William the Conqueror. Anno 1086.

The king [Edgar] terrified with these thundering words of Dunstan and compuncted with inward repentance of his sinne perpetrated, fell downe with weeping at the feet of Dunstan.

Fox. Martyrs, fol. 141.

But he being greatly compuncted and troubled in his conscience for disembling with the truth end called afterwarde before the lord chief iudge answered so directly, that he was condemned for the same, and burned in Prouince.

Id. Ib. fol. 825.

But shame forbids me for to tell the rest,
It me abhors to shew what did ensue:
And yet because it moueth in my breast
Compunction still, and was God wot too true,
I'l farther tell whence my distruction grue.

Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 51.

COM-PUNCT. — COM-PUTE.

Compunction is a turning in the affections and passions of the mind; and that not one passion only, but of every passion wherewith we abhor and flye a thing as evil; as fear, grief and hate; for we must turn with our whole hearts.

Mede. Works. Discourse 25.

Stop vp th'accesse, and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keepe peace betweene,
Th' effect, and hit.

Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 134.

O give me all faith, and all charity, and a spirit highly compunctive, highly industrious, passionate, prudent, and indefatigable in holy services.

Taylor. On Repentance. A Prayer, ch. v. sec. 6.

Repentance, extorted from us by the prospect of death, can be only a sorrow for sin; perhaps rendered more passionate by our present fears. And this being only sorrow, and compunction, and perhaps a good resolution; it is plain that still these are only the steps in the repentance of a sinner: and not complete repentance, in all its parts.

Hoadly. Works. Sermon 15. vol. iii.

And to all this the compunction, which such a man feels, when he is obliged to discountenance in others, perhaps, by his station, to punish, those crimes in which he had so long and so freely indulged himself: and how uneasy the very discharge of his duty is thus rendered to him.

Hurd. Works. Sermon 27. vol. vi.

COMPUPIL, a fellow pupil; pupillus a pupus, hoc est, puer. Vossius.

Donne, and his sometime compupil in Cambridge, that married him, namely, Samuel Brook. Walton. Life of Donne.

COMPURGA'TION, COMPURGA'TOR. } Lat. compurgare, atum; con, and purgare, to cleanse; It. compurgatore; Sp. compurgador. "Fr. compurgateur, One who by oath justifies the (innocency) report or oath of another." Cotgrave. See the Example from Priestley; and, under CO-JUROR, the form of the oath.

He putteth him to no farther busines at al, but also yf it be not so fully cleared, but that there remaine some tokens of suspicion, of whiche he think it good to purge him by the othe of himself & som other cōpurgatours with him, he putteth him after the purgacion vnto no penaunce neither.

Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 986.

In the same day and place, did Margery Bowgas also purge herself with divers compurgators.

Strype. Memorials. Anno 1527.

As to some of the unlikely matters of fact he delivers in them, I might safely undertake to be his compurgator.

Boyle. The Sceptical Chymist.

The oath of purgation was substituted in the place of battle, the defendant bringing along with him into the court certain persons called compurgators, who after he had sworn to his own innocence, all swore that his oath was true.—Lastly, the oath of compurgation gave place to juries.

Priestley. Lectures on History, part v. lect. 48.

In this part, his defence will not be made by argument, but by wager of law. He takes his compurgators, his vouchers, his guarantees, along with him.

Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

COMPU'TE, v. COMPU'TE, n. COMPU'TER, CO'MPUTIST, COMPU'TABLE, COMPUTA'TION. } See COMPT. Computare; con, and putare, to number, to reckon, to calculate.

Yet God be thanked there was not a fairer season in many yeres, & at the last the astronomers for their excuse sayd, in their computacion they had mistaken and miscounted in their number an hundreth yeres.

Hall. Henry VIII. The fifteenth Yere.

So great hase and fogge did hang vpon the coast, as neither we mighte discerne the land well, nor take the sun's height, but by our best computation we were then in the fifty-one degrees of latitude. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Sir Humfry Gilbert.

Wherevpon some haue been so bold as to tell vs, that the yeares Moses there speakes of, are not to be computed as ours, but were somewhat aboue the monethly yeare contayning in them thirty-six dayes which is a number quadrate, being made vp of six times six. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 156.

So to the hall made I, with little care
To praise the dishes or to tast the fare;
But to compute the valew of the meate,
Which was for glory, not for hunger eate.

Corbet. To the Lord Mordant.

Thirdly; the compute may be unjust not only in the strict acception, of a few daies or hours, but in the latitude also of some years, and this may happen from the different compute of years in divers nations, and even such as did maintain the most probable way of account. Sir Thomas Brown, book iv. ch. xii.

For mine own part, I am not at all affraid to be called to so strict an account, and do not doubt but that I shall be gainer upon the whole compute.

More. Appendix to the Defence Philosophick Cabbala, ch. iii.

Now it is manifest, and most men likewise know, that the calenders of these computers, and the accounts of these dayes are very different, the Greeks dissenting from the Lattines, and the Latines from each other. Sir Thomas Brown, book vi. ch. v.

Thus while we conceive we have the account of a year in 365 days, exact enquirers and computists will tell us, that we escape six houres, that is a quarter of a day. Id. book vi. ch. viii

Our forefathers attaining unto 8 or 900 yeares, had not their climacters computable by digits, or as we do account them.

Id. book iv. ch. xii.

Now to the end that the computation of the times to come, might from the new kalands of Januarie agree the better, betweene November and December, he put two other moneths. So as, that yeare wherein all this was ordained, had fifteen moneths, reckoning the ordinarie interlaced moneth, which by course and custome fell iust upon the said yeare.

Holland. Suetonius. Julius Cæsar, fol. 17.

Julian after a temperate and sober sort appeasing his mood, by an exact and true computation proved, that the reckoning and summe taken of the foresaid poll tribute was not only sufficient, but yeelded also an overplus to the necessarie provision of victuals. Id. Ammianus, fol. 82.

I could demonstrate every pore,
Where memory lays up all her store;
And to an inch compute the station
'Twixt judgment and imagination.

Prior. Alma, can. 3.

According to the observations of Mersennus, a bullet shot out of a great gun, flies ninety-two fathoms in a second of time, which is equal to 589½ feet English; and according to the computation of Mr. Huygens, it would be twenty-five years in passing from the earth to the sun.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book i. ch. iv. note 4.

We have but such a determinate term allotted to us for the doing our great work in. And this term, at the largest computation, can extend no farther than the time of our lives.

Sharp. Works. Sermon 8. vol. vi.

In which case his [Childers] fleetness is to that of the swiftest barb, as four to three; the former, according to Dr. Maty's computation, covering at every bound a space of ground equal in length to twenty-three feet royal,—the latter only that of eighteen feet and a half royal.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Horse.

Of time, on all occasions, he [Swift] was an excellent computer and knew the minutes required to every common operation.

Johnson. Life of Swift.

COMPUTO, COMUS.

COMPUTO, in Law, a Writ to compel a Receiver to deliver in his Accompts.

COMRADE. Sp. camerada; Fr. camerade; "A camerade, or chamber-fellow; a company that belongs to, or is ever lodged in, one chamber, tent, or cabin." Cotgrave. From camera, a chamber; Gr. καμάρα, tectum arcuatum. Generally

A companion or associate, a fellow; sc. servant, soldier, &c.

> Then make provision for your slavering hounds,
> When you come drunk from an alehouse, after hunting,
> With your clowns and comrades, as if all were yours,
> You the lord paramount, and I the drudge.
> Massinger. The City Madam, act ii. sc. 2.

He doth affirm of his own experience, that trying this feat upon some of his comerades when he was young, one that had gormundized much beef upon taking the potion, strongly imagined himself to be surrounded with bulls, that would be ever and anon running upon him with their horns.
More. Of Enthusiasm, sec. 9. fol. 7.

> ——————— God permitted them
> To put out both thine eyes, and fetter'd send thee
> Into the common prison, there to grind
> Among the slaves and asses thy comrades,
> As good for nothing else.
> Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1162.

In the mean time the other two squadrons, were calm spectators of the rout of their comrades; for they were drawn up at a great distance behind, out of the reach of our shot, having halted on our first approach, and never advancing a step afterwards. Anson. Voyage round the World, book ii. ch. xii.

COMUS, though not, as Bishop Newton supposes, a Deity "of Milton's own making," is indebted to Milton's exquisite adoption of him for all his celebrity. Warton (in his Note on the 58th verse of the Masque,) refers to Æschylus as the first recorder of this God. Warton is perhaps mistaken in this notion, and Comus, we think, is not personified in the passage to which he alludes:

> Τὴν γὰρ στέγην τήνδ' οὔποτ' ἐκλείπει χορὸς
> Εὐμφθόγγος, οὐκ εὔφωνος· οὐ γὰρ εὖ λέγει.
> Καὶ μὴν πεπωκώς γ', ὡς θρασύνεσθαι πλέον,
> Βρότειον αἷμα, ΚΩΜΟΣ ἐν δόμοις μένει
> Δύσπεμπτος, ἔξω ξυγγόνων Ἐρινύων.
> Ὑμνοῦσι δ' ὕμνον ὠμασι προσήμενοι
> Πρώταρχον ἄτην. Agamemnon, 1157.

In these magnificent lines κῶμος, we think, is not to be rendered as an individual; and Warton's translation of them is singularly forced, to say the least of it: "Behold Comus the drinker of human blood and fired with new rage still remains within the house, being sent forward in an unlucky hour, by the Furies his kindred," &c. The band of Furies in their horrible orgies may be said to have filled their cups with blood, but the God of Bacchanalian revelry is clearly misplaced in this demoniacal comessatio. Κῶμος is repeatedly used by Euripides, and in every passage of that Tragedian, in which the word occurs, it may be accepted as a band of revellers.

The God himself, ὁ ἐλαύνων ὁ Κῶμος παρ' οὗ τὸ παμπαίζειν, makes his first appearance in the Icones of Philostratus (i. 21;) there he is painted (as far as the description can be understood, for it is somewhat obscure,) in deep shadow, as fitting to the night season. His mien is delicate, and betokens extreme youth; he is flushed with wine, and overcome with sleep. He stands while slumbering, and his face droops upon his breast. His left hand rests upon a hunting spear, which it has unconsciously ceased to grasp, and a torch is falling from his right. His face is scarcely seen from the depth of shadow, and the Sophist draws a moral from this concealment, that youthful revellers should be veiled. The torch illuminates the rest of his body. He is crowned with fresh and dewy roses, and the back ground of the picture is filled up by a joyous troop (κῶμος) of both sexes.

Κῶμος according to Athenæus, (xiv. 2,) is one kind of song accompanied by tibiæ (αὐλήσεις.) Besides these, we recollect no other classical use of the word. Peck would make Comus the Chemosh of the Moabites; but it is probable that Milton did not go so far for his frolic Deity. He was already known to the English stage in one of Jonson's Court Masques in 1619, where like another Silenus he is termed the "God of Cheer," and is preceded by a huge goblet. Roses twine his brow, his attendants carry javelins wreathed with ivy, and he himself enters revelling amid a grove of the same leaves to the wild music of flutes, tabors, and cymbals. Decker, yet earlier, 1609, had introduced him in the Gul's Horne Booke; but little could Milton's elegant voluptuary be indebted to "the noblest drunkard Bacchus," or "Comus Clarke of Gluttonie's Kitchen." It is probable that the great Poet drew from the rich stores of his own classical recollections of Circe, and ingrafted them in part upon the Comus sive Phagesiposia Cimmeria, Somnium, of Henry de Puy, who wrote under the fanciful metonymy Erycius Puteanus. The reader will find the parallels with this Dream well given in Mr. Todd's Introductory Notes upon the Masque, and he cannot fail to be struck by the powerful alchymy of Milton's genius, which could convert even dross into gold.

COMROGUE, a fellow-rogue. Rogue from A. S. wrig-an, to cover, to cloak.

One who cloaks or covers, sc. his fraudulent designs, under fair pretences.

> Hold. No don pimp, you may seek them
> In Bridewell, or the hole; here are none of your comrogues.
> Massinger. The City Madam, act iv. sc. 1.

But by what name so ever you call it, here will be a masque, and shall be a masque, when you and the rest of your comrogues shall sit disguis'd in the stocks.
Ben Jonson. The Masque of Augures.

CON, v. Co'nner, Co'nning. Goth. cunnan; A. S. cennan, cunnan; Dutch and Ger. kennen, konnen, kunnen; Sw. kůnna, sensibus experiri, sentire, to experience by the senses, to feel.

To feel or cause to feel, to see or perceive, or cause to see or perceive; to know or make known; to acknowledge; to learn or teach. To ken is still in common use in the North. See Can. I conn you thanks, Skinner says, is altogether in the Gr. Idiom, as χάριν οἶδα; χάριν γινώσκω. To con thank, Mr. Tyrwhit says, is to be pleased, to be obliged; Sçavoir gré; to con maugre; to be displeased; Sçavoir mal gré.

Conning, now written cunning, is, knowledge, science.

> Eilred sent tille Inglond Sir Edward his sonne
> With his letter sealed, & þanke wild he þam conne,
> And blijþely tille Inglond wild he com ageyn,
> If he myght on þam troste þat þei were certayn.
> R. Brunne, fol. 45.

> Now failleþ þis folke. boþe sowers and shupman
> Noþr þie knoweþ ne conneþ. o cours by a noþer.
> Piers Ploukman. Vision, fol. 291.

Though shulde thei techen the God, that con non hemselue.
Id. Crede, B 2.

CON.

Then said Melibee; I shall not conne answere unto so many faire resons as ye putten to me, and shewen.
Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. fol. 123.

Should I therefore conne him maugre
Nay certainly, it shall not be.
Id. Romant of the Rose, fol. 137.

And she, whiche couth of curtesie
All that a good wife should conne,
Was inly gladde, that she hath wonne
The folowship of so good one.
Gower. Conf. Am., book ii. fol. 34.

This welle of mercie, Criste's moder swete
I loved alway, as after my conning.
Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 113587

Astronomie is the science
Of wisdome and of high conninge,
Which maketh a man of knowleching.
Of starres in the fermament.
Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 145.

For it were not possible for a man to vttre neither more cōning, nor more conyngly.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 5.

Solon could not bear this open shame, and seeing the most part of the lustiest youths desirous still of war, though their tongues were tied for fear of the proclamation, he fained himself to be out of his wits, and caused it to be given out that Solon was become a fool: and secretly he had made certain lamentable verses, which he had conned without book to sing abroad the city. Sir Thomas North. Plutarch. Solon, fol. 69.

Notwithstandyng, for as moche as the sayd warkes be very longe, and do require therefore a great tyme to be all learned and kanned: some Latine auctour wolde be therfore myxt, and specially Virgile. Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 30.

Our creed leads us on to a belief and acknowledgment of the Holy Ghost; and 'tis well we have all conn'd his name there, for otherwise I should much fear that it would be said of many nominal Christians, what is reported of the Ephesian disciples, Acts, xix. 2. They have not so much as heard whether there be an Holy Ghost or no.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 16. vol. iv.

Out of the yeares alternate course this lesson I did con
In things on earth of most auaile assurance there was none.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 556.

But shall I tell thee a tale of truth.
Which I cond of Tityrus in my youth,
Keeping his sheepe on the hilles in Kent.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. February.

But ah! too well I wote my humble vayne,
And how my rimes bene rugged and vnkempt:
Yet as I conne, my conning I will strayne.
Id. Ib. November.

For, at every law-day or mote of the hale,
One is sworne to serve our soveraigne the king,
In the ancient office of a conner of ale.
F. Beaumont. The Ex-ale-tation of Ale.

The books, of which I'm chiefly fond,
Are such as you have whilom conn'd
Prior. Another Epistle to Fleetwood Shepherd, Esq.

In ancient times, as bards indite,
(If clerks have conn'd the records right)
A peacock reign'd, whose glorious sway
His subjects with delight obey.
Swift. The Pheasant and the Lark.

Judge for yourself; nor wait with timid phlegm
Till some illustrious pedant hum or hem.
The lords who starv'd old Ben were learn'dly fond
Of Chaucer, whom with bungling toil they conn'd.
Armstrong. Taste. An Epistle to a Young Critic.

Besides the consternation that all men must needs be in at such a time, especially if the ship, by any unforeseen accident, should prove unruly, as by the mistake of the man at helm, or he that conns, or by her broaching to against all endeavours, which often happens when a fierce gust comes.
Dampier. Voyages. On the Trade Winds, vol. ii.

CONANTHERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: corolla superior; petals six, reflexed; anthers closing into an acute cone; capsule oblong, three-valved; seeds few, nearly round.

Two species, natives of South America. Persoon, Syn.

CONCA'MERATE, CONCAMERA'TION. Lat. concamerare, atum; (con, and camerare,) camera; Gr. καμάρα, fornix, tectum arcuatum. See CHAMBER.

To hollow out, to arch, to make, form, or shape, into a concave or convex form.

Of the upper beak, an inch and a half consisteth of the one concamerated bone, bended downwards, and toothed as the other.
Grew. Museum.

Now this plyableness belongs more to rare then to dense things: and accordingly, we see fire more easily bend, by the concameration of an oven, then a stone can be reduced into due figure by bewing. Digby. Of Bodies.

WORM-SHELL. Of three irregular volutions, and numerous dissimular concamerations.
Pennant. British Zoology.

CONCA'TENATE, CONCATENA'TION. Lat. catena; Gr. κάθημα, monile dependens, from καθίημι, descendo, demitto. Gesner explains, Catena; a ligature of iron rings. Martinius, a connected series of rings or links. See CHAIN, and CATENATION.

Fr. concathener, concathenation; It. concatenare; to link or chain, to tye as with links or chains together.

This all things friendly will concatenate;
But let more hardy wits that truth determinate.
More. On the Soul, part ii. book iii. can. 4. st. 7.

Those long and subordinate concatenations of instrumental serviceableness of such things, say they, is but our fancy, no design of any first cause.
More. Appendix to Antidote against Atheism, ch. xi.

This it makes out more distinctly, by enumerating several faculties and functions of the rational soul; such as ——to conceive and demonstrate, that there are incommensurable lines, and surd numbers; to make rationations and both cogent and concatenated inferences about these things.
Boyle. The Christian Virtuoso.

There is that concatenation and dependance of one Christian virtue upon another, that they can never be parted, but all go together. Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 38.

He who has ordained that all parts of the universe should have a mutual dependence on each other, and operate regularly, by a due concatenation of causes and effects, has likewise ordained that the course of human affairs should have its progression and proportion.
Bishop Horne. God's Providence in the Fate of Empires.

CONCA'VE, adj. CONCA'VE, n. CONCA'VITY, CONCA'VOUS, CONCA'VOUSLY. Fr. concave; It. and Sp. cavo; Lat. concavus, (con, and cavus.) Cavus, Varro and Festus think, a chao dictum; and chaos from the ancient χά-ειν, to gape or open. See CAVE.

Hollow; the inner surface of a bowl is called concave, the outer convex.

)NCAVE
—
)NCEAL

The earth as if afraid of blood and wounds,
Trembles in terrour of these falling blows;
The hollow concaves give out groaning sounds
And sighing murmurs, to lament our woes.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book i.

——————— Som times
He scours the right hand coast, som times the left,
Now shaves with level wings the deep, then soares
Up to the fiery concave towr'ing high.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 635.

From off a hill, whose concave womb re-worded
A plaintful story from a sistering vale,
My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
And down I lay to list the sad-tun'd tale.
Shakspeare. A Lover's Complaint.

The element of water being of a liquid and flowing nature, ran downward to hollow places lying low, which were able to receive and hold them; or else the water of it selfe where it staied and rested made concavities and hollow places underneath.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 662.

Yet the dolphin that carrieth Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed.
Sir Thomas Brown, book v. ch. ii.

Look upon the outside of a dome, your eye half surrounds it; look up into the inside, and at one glance you have all the prospect of it; the entire concavity falls into your eye at once.
Spectator, No. 315

The concavous part of the liver was called κοιλὰς i. e. belonging to the family, because the signs observed there concerned themselves and their friends.
Potter. Antiquities of Greece, book ii. ch. xiv.

CONCAUSE, a cause acting in unison with another cause. See CAUSE.

The power of all these he ascribes unto the efficient, making it in affect the only true cause of all the rest; and all the rest; to be rather as instruments unto it, than concauses with it.
Fotherby. Atheom, fol. 223.

CONCE'AL, v.
CONCE'ALABLE,
CONCE'ALEDLY,
CONCE'ALER, CONCE'ALING,
CONCE'ALMENT.

Lat. con, and celo, (which Vossius and Martinius derive from the Chaldaic.)

Fr. celer, to hide, keep secret, cover, cloak, dissemble. Cotgrave.

Þorgh fals concelement William did his wille,
Our castels has he brent, our men slayn fulle ille.
R. Brunne, fol. 297.

Nor wyde ope eares the thinges of trust can well conceale at all,
And word once scapde, away 'tis gone
and none can it recall.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Lollius.

Wherefore all things passed in his name: and the ambassadour not seene in any thing but rather concealed, and yet did all, because of his tongue and good inditing in that language.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The First Voyage to Constantinople.

And the sayd John Fysher Bishop of Rochester did neuerthelesse make concelement therof, and vttered not the same to our sayd soueraigne lorde, nor any of his honorable counsail against their dueties and allegeaunce in that behalfe.
Hall. Henry VIII. The twenty-fifth Yere.

An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage;
So of concealed sorrow may be said.
Shakspeare. Venus and Adonis.

For returning a lie unto his Maker, and presuming in this manner to put off the Searcher of hearts, he [Cain] denied the omnisciency of God, whereunto there is nothing concealable.
Sir Thomas Brown, book i. ch. ii.

Fifthly, That they [demons] knew all secret things, whether hidden books or monies: which men doe too, if they could stand by concealedly from them that hide them.
More. Immortality of the Soul, book iii. ch. xvii.

CONCEAL
—
CONCEDE

And when as the consul had propounded rewards to them that would tell him of them, and punishments to the concealers; he took it ill that noné were discovered, as if the army did defend them. Usher. Annals. Year of the World 3961.

There he was endited of high treason for certain words spoken by the same duke in Blechyngly to the Lord Aburgany, and the same lorde was attached for consailment, and so was the Lorde Mountague the kinge's cosyn, and both ledde to the tower.
Grafton. Henry VIII. The thirteenth Yere.

All ingenious concealings, or amendings, of what is originally or casually amiss, or seems so, in our bodies and outsides.
Bishop Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, fol. 163.

The next ground, upon which such as are wont to promise themselves security, both from the discovery and punishment of their sins, is the opinion which they have of their own singular art and cunning to conceal them from the knowledge! or, at least, of their power to rescue them from the jurisdiction of any earthly judge. South. Sermons, vol. iv. fol. 155.

O! where where is my sweet brother? (For she [Ann Boleyn] feared the king's displeasure against her would reach unto all her relations.) Kyngston replyed I left him at York Place: thinking it convenient to conceal it from her, though he was committed the same day.
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Anno 1536.

Some to the rude protection of the thorn
Commit their feeble offspring: the cleft tree
Offers its kind concealment to a few,
Their food its insects, and its moss their nests.
Thomson. Spring.

But these were not the only considerations that attached me to your interests: I was drawn by others of a higher and more prevailing influence with me: by a similitude of taste and studies, by the pleasing habitudes of familiar intercourse, and by the same common researches into the most concealed and unfrequented paths of philosophy.
Melmoth. Cicero. Letters, book vi.

CONCE'DE,
CONCE'SSION, n.
CONCE'SSIONARY,
CONCE'SSIVE,
CONCE'SSIVELY.

Fr. conceder; Sp. conceder; It. concedere; Lat. concedere, concessum; (con, and cedere, to go, to go away.) See to CEDE.

To go away from; to quit or forsake; to yield, give up or resign; to grant, admit, or allow.

The first is, petitio principii, which fallacie is committed, where that is assumed as a principle, to prove another thing, which is not conceded as true itself.
Sir Thomas Brown, book i. ch. iv.

Thus much by way of concession of the some difficulty to the carnal man in taking up Christ's yoke, the minute of the new creation. Hammond. Works. Sermon 2. vol. iv.

For these laws are not prohibitive, but concessory.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. ii.

Some have written rhetorically, and concessively, not controverting but assuming the question, which taken as granted, advantaged the illation. Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xii.

This is therefore a concession, that he doth in his own conscience believe the Scriptures to be sufficiently plain, at least in all necessary points, even to ordinary understandings.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 4. vol. vii.

I was an Irishman in the Irish business, just as much as I was an American, when on the same principles, I wished you to concede to America, at a time when she prayed concession at our feet.
Burke. Speech at Bristol previous to the Election.

No, Phyllis, though kind, that concession wont take,
I ne'er can consent our joint friends to forsake,
Who in making of treaties forget their allies,
Will never be reckon'd or honest or wise.
Boyce. Horace and Lydia, book iii. ode 9.

CONCEDE — CONCEIT.

I mean to give peace. Peace implies reconciliation; and where there has been a material dispute, reconciliation does in a manner always imply concession on the one part or the other.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

Hypothetical, conditional, concessive, and expective conjunctions, seem in general to require the subjunctive mode after them.
Lowth. Grammar, p. 116.

CONCE'IT, v. CONCE'IT, n. CONCE'ITED, adj. CONCE'ITEDLY, CONCE'ITEDNESS, CONCE'ITIVE, CONCE'ITLESS. Fr. concept; It. concetto; Sp. concesto; Lat. conceptus, past participle of concipere; (con, and capere, to take,) simul capere, totum vel intra se capere. Gesner. To take or hold within; met. within the mind; to comprehend or embrace, within the mind; to understand, to imagine, to think, to fancy.

A conceited man, is a man filled with his own conceits or thoughts; big with them; puffed up with them, big with thoughts of himself. Conceit, is now unusually applied to mere fancies.

The worde was like to the conceite
Without semblant of deceite.
Gower. Conf. Am. Prologue, fol. 2.

Thus in the net of my conceit,
I masked still among the sort
Of such as fed vpon the bayte,
That Cupide laide for his disport.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Lover that once disdained Loue, &c.

If he were in conceite wyth the kynge's grace, then he flattered and perswaded, & corrupt some with giftes, and sent some ambassadours. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 368.

He wolde gladlye se conseytes and fantesies at his table, and when he had sene it, then he wolde sende it to the other tables.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. xxvi.

But it may be you wil thinke me herein either to much opinionated of the voyage, or conceited of the commanders, yᵗ labouring thus earnestly to aduance the opinion of them both, haue not so much as touched any part of the misorders, weakness & wants that haue been amongst vs, wherof they that returned did plentifully report.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Portugall Voyage, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 136.

Such mistaken subtelties arise out of our unwary conceiting that things are in their own natures after the same fashion as we consider them in our understanding. Digby. Of Bodies, ch. i.

That groom, that conceited himself an emperour, thought all as irrational as disloyal, that did not acknowledge him.
Glanville. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, fol. 99.

If any of you entertain such conceits as these, I confess you are a great deal more righteous than I thought you had been.
Chillingworth. Sermon 9.

I'le tell you but the death, and the disease
Of the Secilian poet Empedocles;
He, while he labour'd to be thought a god
Immortall, tooke a melancholique, odde
Conceipt, and into burning Aetna leap'd.
Jonson. Horace. Of the Art of Poetrie.

But here I will not let passe a pretie conceyt that happened in this gathering, in the which you shall not onely note the humilitie of a king, but more the phantasie of a woman.
Hall. Edward IV. The fourteenth Yere.

When most men marvailed that they went so cheape, Cicero most pleasantly and conceitedly, That ye may know (quoth hee) shee hath the better pennyworth in the purchase, Tertia deducta est. Holland. Suetonius. Julius Cæsar, fol. 21.

Conceitedly dress her, and be assign'd
By you fit place for every flower and jewel,
Make her for love fit fuel,
As gay as Flora, and as rich as Inde.
Donne. Epithalamium.

Which well avizing, streight she gan to cast
In her conceiptfull mynd, that this faire mayd,
Was that same infant, which so long since past
Shee in the open fields had loosely laid
To fortunes spoile, vnable it to ayd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 12.

CONCEI — CON-CEIVE

As one of the Antigones that was called Doson, to say, the giver: who was ever promising, and never giving. And one of the Ptolomees was called Lamyros: to say, conceitive.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 189.

He thus departeth as God would harmlesse,
And forth on a venture his way he is went,
But witherward he draw, he conceitlesse
Was, he nat knew to what place he was bent.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe. Eclogue 1.

Never be so conceited of your parts,
To think you may persuade us what you please,
Or venture to bring in a child alive,
That cannibals have murder'd and devour'd.
Roscommon. Horace. Art of Poetry.

[Tasso] is full of conceipts, points of epigram and witticisms; all which are not only below the dignity of heroic verse, but contrary to its nature: Virgil and Homer have not one of them.
Dryden. On Origin and Progress of Satire.

[We should] read that sacred volume, with a wise jealousy and a wary distrust of our own selves; not with a conceited opinion of our own gifts and parts, as if we alone were able to fathom all depths, and to grasp all mysteries.
Atterbury. Sermon 10. vol. iii.

As arrogance, and conceitedness of our own abilities are very shocking and offensive to men of sense and virtue, we may be sure they are highly displeasing to that Being, who delights in an humble mind, and by several of his dispensations seems purposely to shew us, that our own schemes or prudence, have no share in our advancement. Spectator, No. 293.

Well, I will never more complain,
Or call the fates vnkind;
Alas! how fond it is, how vain!
But self-conceitedness does reign
In every mortal mind. Prior. Song 24.

The lord of the mansion most rightly conceiting,
His guests lov'd good prayers much less than good eating.
P. Whitehead. On converting the Chapel to a Kitchen.

Plum'd with conceit he calls aloud,
And thus bespeaks the purblind crowd;
"Say not, that man alone's a poet, Poets are owls—my verse shall show it."
Cotton. A Fable.

CONCE'IVE, v. CONCE'IVER, CONCE'IVING, n. CONCE'IVABLE, CONCE'IVABLY. Lat. concipere; It. concepere; Sp. concebir; Fr. concevoir. See CONCEIT. To take or hold within; met. within the mind. To comprehend or embrace within the mind, to understand, to imagine, to think.

And aftir these dayes Elizabeth his wif conseyvede and hidd hir fyve monethis and seyde: For so the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take away my reprof among men.
Wiclif. Luke, ch. i.

And after those days, his wife Elizabeth conceaued, and hid herselfe fyue monthes saying: This wyse hath God dealte with me in the dayes when he loked on me, to take from me the rebuke yᵗ I suffred amonge men. Bible. Anno 1551.

For I myself, lo! thynge moste vnstable,
Formed in offence, conceaued in lyke case,
And noughte but synne from my natyuytie.
Wyat. Psalm 51.

And these foure barownes of Bretaygne representynge the duke, conceyued well all this businesse, and layde forthe all these doutes, and specially shewed it to the Duke of Aniowe, who hadde the souerayne gouernynge of the realme of Fraunce at that tyme.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. v. ch. 374.

Take this for certayn trueth, and in your minds conceyue it so,
Not one of all this number here shall vnrewarded go.
Phaer. Æneidos, book v.

My substance, which from nothing did begin,
Is worse then nothing by the weight of sin:
I see myselfe in such a wretched state,
As neither thoughts conceive, or words relate.
Beaumont. In Desolation.

——— That so he [Paris] might have showne
(More like a man) some sence of griefe, for both my shame and his:
But he is senslesse nor conceiues, what any manhood is.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book vi. fol. 91.

For though hereof prudent symbols and pious allegories be made by wiser conceivers; yet common heads will flie into superstitious applications, and hardly void miraculous or magical expectations. Sir Thomas Brown, book vii. ch. i.

——— The younger brother Cadwall,
Once Aruiragus, in as like a figure
Strikes life into my speech, and shewes much more
His owne conceiving. Shakspeare. Cymbeline, fol. 382.

For the idea of God swallows up into itself all power and perfection conceivable, and therefore necessarily implies that whatever hath any being derives it from him.
More. Antidote against Atheism, fol. 24.

And therefore being the rule, he cannot be irregular; nor being truth itself, conceivably admit the impossible society of error. Sir Thomas Brown, book i. ch. i.

A man reconciled to the profession of popery, upon the principles of atheism, or a total disbelief of a God or a future state, this I can also conceive, because, I fear, it is too often seen and felt. Hoadley. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 62.

A man, turned from popery to deism, and sometimes to atheism, by such a way of representing the gospel, as a dispensation of light perfected by darkness; as requiring an annihilation of our understanding, and all our ideas; joyned with the unhappiness of living where no other gospel is preached or heard of; This again is conceivable: and I wish, I could not say, to the grief of all good men, too natural and frequent. Id. Ib.

It was among the ruins of the Capitol that I first conceived the idea of a work which has amused and exercised near twenty years of my life; and which, however inadequate to my own wishes, I finally deliver to the curiosity and candour of the public.
Gibbon. Roman Empire, ch. lxi. vol. xii.

It is even very conceivable, that, if God be the dispenser of prophesy, and not man; all that seems great and illustrious in human affairs may to his all-judging eye appear small and contemptible; and, on the other hand, what we account as nothing, may for infinite reasons, unknown to us, but so far as he is pleased to discover them, be of that importance as to merit the attention of all his prophets from the foundation of the world.
Hurd. Works. Sermon 1. vol. v.

CONCE'NT, v. CONCE'NT, n. CONCE'NTFUL, CONCE'NTED, adj. It. and Sp. concento; Lat. concentus. Concinere, concentum, simul canere. Can-ere perhaps from χαίν-ειν, hiare, hiantem ore vocem edere. Lennep.

To sing together in union, in harmony, in concord.

Or such as that celestiall Psalmist was,
That when the wicked fiend his lord tormented,
With heavenly notes that did all other pass,
The outrage of his furious fit relented:
Such musick is wise words with time concented,
To moderate stiffe mindes, dispos'd to striue.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 2.

A dreadfull thunder-clap at last he heard,
The aged trees and plants well-nigh that rent;
Yet herd the nymphs and syrens afterward,
Birds, winds, and waters, sing with sweet concent.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book xviii. st. 19.

With that, a ioyous fellowship issew'd
Of minstrals, making goodly meriment,
With wanton bards, and rhymers impudent;
All which together sung full chearfully
A lay of loue's delight, with sweet concent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 12.

CONCENT — CONCENTRE.

And to our high-rais'd phantasy present
That undisturbed song of pure concent,
Ay, sung before the saphir-colour'd throne
To him that sits thereon,
With saintly shout, and solemn jubilee.
Milton. Odes. At a Solemn Music, l. 5.

When look'd the yeare; at best,
So like a feast?
Or were affaires in tune,
By all the spheares consent, so in the heart of June?
Ben Jonson. Under-woods. Epithalamion, fol. 239.

It is to be considered, that whatsoever vertue is in numbers, for conducing to concent of notes, is rather to be ascribed to the ante-number than to the entire number; As namely, that the sound returneth after six, or after twelve.
Bacon. Natural History, Cent. ii. sec. 106.

Geometry, in giving unto every one his proper form and figure; and music, in joining them in so concentful an harmony, each of them with one another. Fotherby. Atheom, p. 295.

CONCE'NTRE, v. CONCE'NTRATE, CONCENTRA'TION, CONCE'NTRICAL, CONCE'NTRICALLY, CONCE'NTRICK, n. CONCE'NTRICK, adj. Fr. concentre; Gr. κέντρον, a point, sc. in the middle of a sphere, globe or circle: that point from which the circumference is everywhere equidistant.

To concentre, is to move or cause to move towards the same centre; to meet or cause to meet, join or unite in the same centre.

For the bricks, having first been formed in a circular mould, and then cut before their burning into four quarters or more, the sides afterwards join so closely, and the points concentre so exactly, that the pillars appear one entire piece.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 28.

For what power of human understanding could have found out the incarnation of a God; that two natures [a finite, and an infinite] could have been concentred into one hypostasis (one person.) Taylor. Sermon 1. part ii.

We know our places here, wee mingle not
One in another's sphere, but all moue orderly,
In our owne orbes, yet we are all concentricks.
Ben Jonson. Staple of News, act ii. sc. 2.

Especially where th' action will allow
Apparency; or that it hath a course
Concentric, with the universal frame
Of men combin'd. Daniel. To Lord Henry Howard.

If, as in water stirr'd more circles be
Produc'd by one, love such additions take,
Those, like so many spheres, but one heaven make,
For they are all concentric unto thee.
Donne. Love's Growth.

Hence, in the next place, whatsoever perfections or properties (except such as be purely personal) are attributed to any of these divine persons, are the same in all, and may equally be attributed to every one, they being all and every one the same God, in whom all perfections concenter, or rather, who is all perfection itself. Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 12.

The event was, that, though the air had been pumped out, the concentrated beams of the sun made the aurum fulminans go off, and violently scatter about the cavity of the receiver a yellowish dust or powder.
Boyle. New Experiments touching the relation betwixt flame and air.

But notwithstanding my care to make my trials in clear weather, when the moon was about the full, and, if I misremember not, with a weather-glass, I could not perceive by any concentration of the lunar beams, no not upon a black object, that her light did produce any sensible degree, either of cold or heat.
Id. Experimental History of Cold, tit. 21.

The yoke itself though we saw no distinct particles of ice in it, was grown so hard, that it cut just like the yoke of an egg overboiled, and being cut quite through, shewed us certain concentrical circles of somewhat differing colours. Id. Ib. tit. 6.

The sea replenish'd traffics as before,
And back to earth returns the fruitful store.
To earth! for here concentring, air, and fire,
And flood, in mutual triple league conspire.
Brookes. Universal Beauty, book ii.

CONCENTRE.

Each virtue, in its perfection, is exemplified in its own knight; they are all, in a due degree, concentrated in prince Arthur.
Hurd. Works. Letters on Chivalry, let. 8.

CONCEPTION.

Gloom and silence produce composure of mind and concentration of ideas; and the privation of external pleasure naturally causes an effort to find entertainment within.
Johnson. The Rambler, No. 80.

Shell oblong, flat, thin, glossy, white, considerably attenuated at one end, obsoletely straited concentrically.
Pennant. British Zoology. Spoon-hinge shell.

Burst into song, ye spheres;
A greater light proclaim
And hymn, concentrick orbs! with sev'n fold chime,
The god with many a name. Jones. Hymn to Surya.

CONCE'PTION, n. CONCE'PTIBLE, CONCE'PTIOUS, CONCE'PTIVE. Lat. conceptio; Fr. conception; Sp. concepcion; It. concepimento; from conceptus, past participle of concipere. See to CONCEIT, and to CONCEIVE.

A taking or holding within. Met. within the mind; comprehension or apprehension, understanding, thought, sentiment, fancy.

The same yere, the vygyll of the cōcepcion of our lady, the kyng gaue the duchy of Normandy to Charles, dolphyn of Vienoys, his eldest son, and the next day he made his homage.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. clv.

Whil'st false conceptions do abuse the braine,
Oft monstrous broods have all the world appall'd;
Even when apostles did themselves explaine,
Some strangely strai'd yet scorn'd to be recall'd.
Stirling. Dooms-day. The seventh Houre.

——— In a moment up they turn'd
Wide the celestial soil, and saw beneath
Th' originals of nature in their crude
Conception. Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 512.

This imagery and representation of the qualities of the things without, is that we call our conception, imagination, ideas, notice or knowledge of them; and the faculty or power by which we are capable of such knowledge, is that I here call cognitive power or conceptive, the power of knowing or conceiving.
Hobbs. Human Nature, ch. i.

By sight, we have a conception or image composed of colour and figure, which is all the notice and knowledge the object imparteth to us of its nature by the eye. By hearing, we have a conception called sound, which is all the knowledge we have of the quality of the object from the ear. And so the rest of the senses are also conceptions of several qualities or natures of their objects. . . . Id. Ib. ch. ii.

All evidence is conception, and all conception is imagination, and proceedeth from sense. And spirits we suppose to be those substances which work not upon the sense; and therefore not conceptible. Id. Ib. ch. xi.

Where there is more of light, there is more of visibility, so where there is more of entity, reality, and perfection, there is there more of conceptibility and cognoscibility.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 639.

——— Common mother,
Enseare thy fertile and conceptious wombe,
Let it no more bring out ungratefull man.
Shakspeare. Timon of Athens, fol. 92.

He is of opinion that by the coldness hereof they may be reduced into a conceptive constitution.
Sir Thomas Brown, book vii. ch. vii.

For heat and moisture when in bodies join'd,
The temper that results from either kind
Conception makes; and fighting, till they mix,
Their mingled atoms in each other fix.
Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book i.

But a religion, whose object was the truth, was at this time so unknown a thing, that a Pagan magistrate could have no conception of it, but as a new sect of philosophy.
Warburton. Works. Sermon 1. vol. ix.

A festival is celebrated in the Romish Church on the 8th of December, in honour of the Immaculate CONCEPTION of the Virgin Mary, or as she is styled Virgo Dei-para sine labe concepta. Speculum sine maculâ. On the precise time of its introduction, it is impossible to pronounce with certainty. Sale, who is followed by Gibbon, (ch. l.) (both of them suspicious authorities on points of this kind,) traces this belief to an obscure passage in the Koran, "Remember when the wife of Imran said, Lord, verily I have vowed unto Thee that which is in my womb, to be dedicated to thy service, accept it therefore of me, for thou art he who heareth and knoweth. And when she was delivered of it, she said, Lord, verily I have brought forth a female, (and God well knew what she had brought forth,) and a male is not as a female: I have called her Mary; and I commend her to thy protection, and also her issue against Satan driven away with stones." (iii.) In his note on these words, Sale mentions a Mohammedan tradition, that every person who comes into the world is touched at his birth by the Devil, and therefore cries out. In the case of the Virgin and our Saviour, God interposed a veil, for which reason each of them in after life was sinless. CONCEPTION

St. Bernard in the XIIth century condemned the celebration of this festival, in opposition to the Canons of Lyons, (Bern. Ep. 174;) and it afterwards became a subject of vehement controversy between the Scotists and the Thomists. The Virgin is said to have exercised miraculous powers in behalf of Duns Scotus, who defended her claim; and Sautel has embodied the legend in the following lines of his Annus Sacer Poeticus:

Scotus illibatum Virginis Conceptum propugnaturus ad statuam illius procidit, quæ moto capite opem annuisse dicitur.

Nativæ exsortem labis dum, Scote, Parentem,
Ad pugnam fidens, ut tueatis, abis:
Patroni de more Cliens procumbis ad aras,
Stant ubi Phidiacâ signa polita manu.
Saxea demissum caput inclinavit Imago
Ut certam annueret flexile marmor opem.
Perge audax animi: neque enim locus esse timori
Jam datur: ipsa suam dant ubi saxa fidem.
At vobis, quibus est longe sententia discors,
Qui primum inficitis labe nigrante decus:
Ni veterem verax expellat opinio mentem,
Durius illo ipso marmore pectus erit.

In spite of the Poet's denunciation, the celebrity of the miracle, and the arguments of the Franciscans, the Dominicans continued to be as obdurate as ever in their denial. Sixtus IV., himself a Franciscan, allowed toleration on the point; and his Constitutions were referred to in the Vth Session of the Council of Trent, at which also it was resolved that the doctrine of the Conception of all men in original sin was not intended to include the Virgin. The controversy was revived in the University of Paris towards the close of the XVIth century. The Bishop of Paris supported Maldonat, a Jesuit, who denied the doctrine, and Gregory XIII. confirmed the sanction of the Bishop. (Bayle, Maldonat.) Afterwards, during the Papacies of Paul V. and Gregory XV., such was the dissension in Spain, that both Philip III. and his successor sent especial embassies to Rome, in the vain hope that the contest might be terminated by a Bull. The Pontiff held the scales with no little nicety. He intimated that the opinion of the Franciscans had a high degree of probability, and forbad the Dominicans from opposing it; but at the same time he prohibited the Franciscans, in turn, from treating the Dominican position as erroneous. The dispute continued to run so high in Spain, that in the Military Orders of St. James, of the Sword, of Calatrava, and of Alcantara, the Knights on their admission vowed to maintain the doctrine; and early in the beginning of the XVIIth century medals were struck with a legend on one side, Alabado sia el Santissimo Sacramento, and on the other a hieroglyphic of the Conception, with the words Concepta sine peccato originali, encircled by the cord of the Franciscan Order.

CEP-ON. — ON-RN.

In 1708, Clement XI. appointed a festival to be celebrated throughout the Romish Church in honour of the Immaculate Conception. Since that time the Immaculate Conception has been received as an opinion by most Romish Theologians, but not as an article of faith.

The belief is held by the Greek Church also, which celebrates the feast under the title of the Conception of St. Anne, (Σύλληψις.)

Those who wish to exhaust this subject may consult the more than forty folio volumes which Petrus de Alva et Astorga has published concerning it. This indefatigable Franciscan did not die till 1667. See also Baronii Ann. ad ann. 1136, num. 14; Durand, Ration. vii. 7; Waddingus, De legatione, &c. pro definiendâ controversiâ de Conc. Virg.; Calixti Hist. Imm. Conc.; Hornbeckii Comment. ad Bull. Urbani VIII., de diebus festis; Launoii Præscript. de Conc. Virg.

CONCE'RN, v.
CONCE'RN, n.
CONCE'RNANCE,
CONCE'RNEDLY,
CONCE'RNEDNESS,
CONCE'RNING, prep.
CONCE'RNING, n.
CONCE'RNING, adj.
CONCE'RNMENT.

Mid. Lat. concernere, ad aliquid attinere, spectare. Du Cange. Concernunt ista me barbarum est, pro ad me pertinent. Vossius, De Vitiis. Formed of con, and cernere. See DISCERN. Sp. concernir; It. concernere; Fr. concerner; to touch, import, appertain, or belong to. Cotgrave.

Concern is used emphatically; to have respect or regard, deeply, anxiously; to appertain or affect anxiously.

Esay sayth, shall we go from the quick vnto the dead? that is, shall we enquire of the dead and beleue them in such pointes as cõcern our wealth. Frith. Workes, fol. 46.

And if any rebell, or other malycious persone distourbed the lande, or brake the kynge's peas, they shulde cause hym to be taken, and sent vnto the kyng: with many other articles concernynge theyr allegeaunce, the whiche full falsly they brake and contraryed shortly after. Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1306.

Officious fool! that needs must medling be
In business, that concerns not thee!
For when to future years thou extend'st thy cares
Thou deal'st in other men's affairs.
Cowley. Essay 10. The Shortness of Life, &c.

Let early care thy main concerns secure,
Things of less moment may delays endure.
Denham. Of Prudence.

Frequent coming to God in prayer, acknowledged by Christ, and with the concernance of those things which we may ask and obtain by prayer, &c. Hammond. Works, vol. i. fol. 74.

But the king him stayed and sayde: Brother Charles, sith you haue spoken at leysure, what you would, you must and shall heere again what you would not: And first, as concernyng our entrie into Fraunce, no man liuing knoweth that occasion, neither so well, nor hath cause half so wel to remember it as you.
Grafton. Edward IV. The thirteenth Yere.

——— 'Twere good you let him know,
For who that's but a queene, faire, sober, wise,
Would from a paddocke, from a bat, a gibbe,
Suche deere concernings hide.
Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 272.

A man cannot chuse well even in things belonging to this life, without the Divine assistance. And therefore in things of great concernment we pray to God to conduct and direct our choice.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. i.

For since God will be justified with a free obedience, and there is an obedience of understanding as well as of will and affection, it is of great concernment, as to be willing to believe whatever God says, so also to enquire diligently whether the will of God be so as is pretended. Id. The Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 10.

Whence you may easily gather, that if we mean to copy out our Saviour's example and to be devout as he was, it will concern us to take all opportunities, that our occasions will allow us, of worshipping God in public, and not think it sufficient to say our prayers in private. Sharp. Works. Sermon 3. vol. v.

So the lost sun, while least by us enjoy'd,
Is the whole night for our concerns enploy'd;
He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gums,
Which from remotest regions hither comes.
Waller. Upon his Majesty's Happy Return.

O let us then and there pour out our souls to him with all humility, acknowledging our own vileness, and representing to him our various wants and necessities, and begging a supply of them from his infinite bounty, with as much earnestness and concernedness as an hungry beggar begs alms at our doors.
Sharp. Sermon 11. vol. vi.

Since conscience is nothing else but a man's judgment concerning actions, as good, or bad, or indifferent; it is certain, that a man must have some measures to proceed by, in order to the framing such a judgment about actions, that is to say, there must be something distinct from the man himself, that makes actions to be good, or bad, or indifferent.
Id. A Discourse of Conscience, vol. ii.

I made it one of my motives to go into Ireland, and one of my concerningest businesses there, to get this lease assigned over in trust to yourself and Roger Ball.
Boyle. Life, fol. 53.

But while they are so eager to destroy the fame of others, their ambition is manifest in their concernment; some poem of their own is to be produced, and the slaves are to be laid flat with their faces on the ground, that the monarch may appear in the greater majesty. Dryden. Preface to All for Love.

It much concerns a preacher first to learn
The genius of his audience, and their turn.
Dodsley. The Art of Preaching.

The fall of a cottage, by the accidents of time and weather, is almost unheeded; while the ruin of a tower which the neighbourhood hath gazed at for ages with admiration strikes all observers with concern. Hurd. Works. On the Province of the Drama.

As not taking the true scope of the Æneis, hath occasioned mistakes, to Virgil's disadvantage, concerning the plan and conduct of the poem; so hath it likewise, concerning the characters.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book ii. sec. 4.

As to the bad indeed, if it [consecration to the service of heaven] does not aggravate their crimes, at least it renders them more scandalous: and, in general, when the matter is of high concernment, the passions both of good and bad are always, from the common importance of our nature, proportionably inflamed.
Id. Sermon 1. vol. ix.

CON, CERN. — CON-CERT.

CO'NCERT, or Co'NSORT, v. Co'NCERT, or CONSO'RT, n. CONSO'RTABLE, CONSO'RTION, CONSO'RTSHIP.

It. concertare; Sp. concertar; Fr. concerter; to consort or agree together. Concert de Musique; a consort of musick. Cotgrave. This manner of writing the word (sc. Concert) has been adopted in English from the French, though their Etymologists can give no account of its Origin. Some think from concentus; some from concertare, because the different persons contend against each other; and some from consertum, because wrought and composed of various sounds. Consort is probably the correct writing, formed from the Latin consors; (con, and sors, of uncertain Origin. See Vossius.)

A consort, that which is united to share the same lot with another: as a consort in marriage; a ship's consort.

CONCERT. A consort, or concert, in music; in which a number of persons or instruments, or both, are united in the same performance.

To consort, or as more commonly written, to concert, is,—to join or unite for the same purpose; to form or unite in the same design or counsel, the same plan, plot, or contrivance; to join or unite in the same company; and simply, to associate with, to accompany.

In consort of ye comune.
Piers Ploukman. Vision, fol. 79.

All these consorted to goe to Goa together, and I determined to goe with them.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Cæsar Frederick, vol. i. part i. fol. 222.

And by these presents do give full power and authority unto you, and three of you, to enquire, &c. of all and every their coadjutors, counsellors, consorters, procurers, abetters, and maintainers. Burnett. Records. A Commission, &c. against Hereticks.

There are commonly about 17 or 18 fleete of them, of great large boates, which diuide themselves into diuers companies, five or sixe boates in a consort.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Sotle of Russia, vol. i. fol. 478.

And the last great voyage of M. Ralph Fitch, who with M. John Newbury and two other consorts departed from London with her maiestie's letters written effectually in their fauour to the kings of Cambaia and China in the yere 1583.
Id. Epistle Dedicatorie, vol. ii. fol. 4.

Right hard it was for wight which did it heare,
To read what manner musick that mote bee:
For all that pleasing is to liuing eare,
Was there consorted in one harmonee.
Birdes, voices, instruments, windes, waters, all agree.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 12. st. 70.

Away, thou changeling motley humourist,
Leave me, and in this standing wooden chest,
Consorted with these few books, let me lie
In prison, and here be coffin'd, when I die.
Donne. Satire 1.

——— He with his consorted Eve
The storie heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration, and deep muse to heare
Of things so high and strange.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book vii. l. 50.

——— But man, the abstract
Of all perfection, which the workmanship
Of heaven hath modell'd, in himself contains
Passions of sev'ral qualities; the music
Of man's fair composition best accords
When 'tis in consort, not in single strains.
Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, act iv. sc. 3.

And all the while, sweet birds thereto applide
Their dainty layes and dulcit melody,
Ay caroling of loue and jollitie,
That wonder was to heare their trim consort.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 1.

The lesser brooks as they did bubbling goe,
Did keep a consort to the public woe.
Drummond. On the Death of Mæliades.

——— For though the foyle were mine,
Conquest brings forth her wreaths by turnes, stay then this hast of thine,
But till I arme; and I am made a consort for thee straight,
Or goe I'le overtake thy haste.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book vi. fol. 91.

O may we soon again renew that song,
And keep in tune with heav'n, till God ere long
To his celestial concert us unite,
To live with him, and sing in endless morn of light.
Milton. Solemn Music, l. 27.

Therein I must confess, much more consortable to Charles Brandon under Henry the Eight, who was equal to him in both.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 175.

After whom came Uzzia, or Azaria, in the 27 year of Jeroboam, king of Israel: reckoning from the time that he began to reign in consortship with his father, as before, in the year of the world, 3166, was said; and he reigned 52 years in Jerusalem.
Usher. Annals. Anno Mundi 3194.

But I shall not contend on such deep points as these, let but [pari consortio] signify equal consortship, and I demand no more; for then, they that receive at the same time with him honour and power in equal consortship, will not easily be imagined so unequal, as are that one monarch, and all his subjects.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. fol. 349.

It was concerted to begin the siege in March, for they knew that if they began it so early, our fleet could not come in time to relieve it. Burnett. Own Times. Queen Anne. Anno 1706.

A gentleman who has prepared his way to it by writing and voting, and speaking vehemently, in exact concert with the tone of voice of popular discontents, resolves to shew the strength of the popularity he has attained, in this very spot of ground.
Hoadley. Letters signed Britannicus, &c. let. 5.

Furious in their adversity, tyrannical in their successes, a commander had more trouble to concert his defence before the people, than to plan the operations of the campaign.
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

I am sorry you accepted Lyso's invitation to his concert, least your going abroad so soon should occasion a relapse in the fourth critical week. Melmoth. Cicero. To Tiro. Letter 24. book vi.

Yet there are men, even the bishops and dignitaries not excepted, scandalously addicted to uncleanness, and the loose women they consorted with well known.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1555.

And while he struggles on the stormy main,
Invokes his father, and his wife, in vain;
But yet his consort is his greater care;
Alcyone he names amidst his prayer,
Names as a charm against the waves, and wind;
Most in his mouth, and ever in his mind.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. Ceyx and Alcyone, book x.

If he have such a regard, he will naturally desire, not only to consort with those who are like himself, but one should hope, would wish to make all like himself with whom he consorts.
Gilpin. Sermon 10. vol. iii.

Ye towers of Julius, London's lasting shame,
With many a foul and midnight murther fed,
Revere his consort's faith, his father's fame,
And spare the meek usurper's holy head.
Gray. The Bard.

While others are curious in the choise of good air, and chiefly solicitous for healthful habitations, study thou conversation, and be critical in thy consortion.
Brown. Christian Morals, vol. ii. fol. 9.

CONCERTATION, Lat. concertare, atum; (con, and certare,) to strive or struggle together, to contend with.

After the concertation when they could not agree, the king comming betweene them both, called awaie the bishops from the monks, supposing by separating one from the other to draw both parties to his sentence. Fox. Martyrs, fol. 215.

And I find that Christ in his concertations with the carnal Jew, professeth in preaching the Gospel, which seem'd new to them, to witness and preach none other things, than those, which Moses particularly, and the prophets did say.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 4.

It is also a rule fetcht from the law of arms and concertations in games or the like; that if a man strive for masteries he is not crowned (and so is not reckoned to overcome) unless he strive lawfully, 2 Tim. ii. 5. Id. Ib. vol. iii. part ii. fol. 303.

CONCH, n. } Lat. concha; Gr. κόγχη, which
CONCH-SHELL. } Lennep thinks is formed from ἐχέσθαι, adhærere, from its adhering to rocks; and Scheidius from κέω, the obsolete Greek primitive of the Lat. cavo; and observes that the cavities or hollows in which the eyes lie, were called κογχαι.

He furnishes her closet first and fills
The crowded shelves with rarities of shells,
Adds orient pearls which from the conchs he drew,
And all the sparkling stones of various hue.
Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book x.

——————— But when the earth
Hath made her annual progress round the sun,
What time the conch or bell resounds, they may
All to the cane ground, with thy gang repair.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, book iv.

One of them kept blowing a large conch-shell, to which a reed of two feet long was fixed; at first, with a continued tone of the same kind, but he, afterward, converted it into a kind of musical instrument, perpetually repeating two or three notes, with the same strength. Cook. Voyage, vol. vi. book iii. ch. i.

CONCHA, an Attic liquid measure containing $\frac{1}{72}$ of a pint.

CONCHIFERA, in Zoology, a class in the system established by Lamarck, including all the Mollusca with bivalve shells.

CONCHIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetandria, order Monogynia, natural order Proteaceæ. Generic character: calyx none; petals four, bearing the stamens; stigma top-shaped, mucronate; capsule one-celled, two-seeded, seeds winged.

This genus is allied to Xylomelum and Banksia, differing from the former in its mucronate stigma, and from the latter in its one-celled capsule, and from both in being destitute of a calyx.

Seven species, natives of Australasia; Linn. Soc. Trans. vol. iv. p. 215, and vol. ix. p. 117.

CONCHOLEPAS, in Zoology, a genus of the class Gasteropoda, order Pectinibranchia of Cuvier, family Purpurifera. Generic character: shell ovate, inflated, semispiral; apex obliquely inclined towards the left lip; aperture very large, longitudinal, oblique, slightly notched below; two teeth at the base of the lip; operculum oblong, thin, horny.

Of this singular genus there is but one species known, Patella lepas of Gmelin. (C. Peruvianus, Lam.) Its being referred to the genus Patella is only an additional proof to the thousands which exist, of the unnatural basis upon which the Linnæan arrangement of shells is founded. Bruguière observing the notch at the inferior boundary of the aperture, and the operculum of the animal, very properly associated it with the Buccinoid shells. It however constitutes a distinct genus, immediately following Monoceros. Lamarck, Anim. sans Vert. vii. 252.

CONCIL'IAR, CONCILI'ARLY. } Of, pertaining or belonging to a council. See COUNCIL, and the next word CONCILIATE.

But they have kept the bridle in their own hands, and made a reserve of their own power, that if need be, they may make new pretensions, or not be put to it to justifie the old by the engagement of a conciliary declaration.
Taylor. The Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 5.

In effect the emperor was president, though not as a judge in spiritual matters, yet as an orderer of the conciliar transactions.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy, vol. i. fol. 190.

Our most holy lord the Pope said in answer thereunto, that he would maintain and inviolably observe all and every of those things that were conciliarly determined, concluded and decreed by the present council in matters of faith. Id. Ib. fol. 25.

CONCI'LIATE, CONCILIA'TION, CONCI'LIATING, CONCI'LIATORY, CONCI'LIABLE. } Conciliare, Martinius says, seems properly convocare in concilium; and then uniri. And Vossius; from concilium is conciliare; which is Amicum reddere animisque conjungere. (See COUNCIL.)

To unite or conjoin, to win or gain, sc. to some common purpose or design. To win or gain, sc. the affections, the favour, the good-will.

"Fr. concilier, to attone, to reconcile, accord or make friends together, to join or knit in love one with another." Cotgrave. CONCILIATE.

Conciliables, in Fox and Bacon, is immediately from the "Fr. conciliabule, a conventicle; a small or private assembly." Cotgrave. CONCINNATE.

It is not long agoo sence some kinges gaue their daughters to forein kinges in maryage to conciliate amitie, and what succeeded therof? thei neuer sence agreed well.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. xi.

Nor doth he put away adulterously who complains of causes rooted in immutable nature, utter unfitness, utter disconformity, not conciliable, because not to be amended without a miracle.
Milton. Nullities in Marriage.

Plainly shew the whole world, that by these your conciliables, your hutter mutter in corners, you take away all hope of a lawful Catholike and general councell. Fox. Martyrs, fol. 989.

Thus have we read and seen to be fulfilled that which followeth, Ecce in deserto, ecce in penetralibus: while some have sought the truth in the conventicles and conciliables of heretics and sectaries; others in the external face and representation of the church, and both sorts have been seduced.
Bacon. Church Controversies. Works, vol. iii. fol. 135.

And first for the explanation, Thus saith the Lord. A solemn preface of God's holy prophets to conciliate authority, and to excite the reverent attention of their hearers to what they are about to say. Bishop Bull. Works, vol. ii. fol. 63.

Which moveth us, with the advice of our nobility and council, to offer to our said good brother the ministry and office of you, our ambassadors, to remain there, and proceed in the former commission, for conciliation of some good between our said good brother and the French king.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1553.

It were to be supposed, though Eusebius had not said it, that these evangelists and apostolical men, and founders of uncorrupted Christianity in various places, had the power of working miracles, to introduce themselves to strangers, and to conciliate their regard and respect. Jortin. Rem. on Ecclesiastical History, vol. ii.

The house has gone farther; it has declared conciliation admissible, previous to any submission on the part of America.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

Then I considered within myself the bad policy, in such a conjuncture, of Cato and Brutus, and easily approved in my own mind the more pliant and conciliating method of Cicero.
Hurd. Works. On Sincerity in the Commercial World. Dial. 1.

We are taught to believe, that a desire of domineering over our countrymen is love to our country; that those who hate civil war abet rebellion, and that the amiable, conciliatory virtues of lenity, moderation, and tenderness to the privileges of those, who depend on this kingdom, are a sort of treason to the state.
Burke. Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

Thus we have heard the heroes of old times
Applauded, who, though furiously incens'd,
Were yet obedient to the gentle sway
Of reason and conciliatory gifts.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, book ix. l. 648.

CONCI'NNATE, v. CONCI'NNATE, a. CONCINNITY. } Lat. concinnare, (a concinendo) est aptè componere. Festus. Varro observes, concinnè loqui dictum a concinno, ubi inter se conveniunt partes et inter se respondent aliud alii. And Joseph Scaliger, concinnè loqui dictum a concinere; and Julius Scaliger, a canendo. (See Martinius.) Vossius does not coincide; he thinks that concinnere is from concinnus, but whence concinnus; he adds, non æquè paret.

To place fitly together, suitably, becomingly, decently, neatly.

The manne was of profounde learninge and knowlege, not vulgare, but straunge, newe and deficile, and in especial he was a manne of a ripe iudgement in electinge and chosynge concinnate termes, and apte and eloquente woordes.
Hall. Henry VII. The sixth Yere.

CONCIN-NATE.

Cato setteth down a receit to trim and consinnate wine (for that is the very tearm which he useth—sc. concinnari,) in this manner.
Holland. Plinie, vol. i. fol. 425.

CONCITA-TION.

I am the more perswaded of the concinnity of this notion, when I consider the uncouth harshness either of the way of actuall concreated knowledge, or of infant growing faculties.
Glanville. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. i.

And thus much in answer of the two principal foundations whereon this opinion is built. As for the concinnity and coherence which it hath within itself, I easily allow it.
Raleigh. History of the World, book iii. ch. i. sec. 5.

That which afforded me most entertainment in those Miscellanies, was Dr. Henry King's Poems, wherein I find not only heat and strength, but also an exact concinnity and evenness of fancy.
Howell. Letter 16. book ii.

CONCI'SE, adj. CONCI'SELY, CONCI'SENESS, CONCI'SION. Fr. concis; It. and Sp. conciso; Lat. concidere, concisum; (con, and cædere,) to cut. Cut into smaller parts or portions; lessened or diminished, shortened, abbreviated, or abridged; short or brief.

Lest too concise injuriously we wrong
Things that such state and fearfulness impart,
Or led by zeal irregularly long
Infringe the curious liberties of art.
Drayton. Moses, his Birth and Miracles, book ii.

He expresses himself so concisely, employs words so sparingly, that whoever will possess his ideas, must dig for them, and oftentimes pretty far below the surface.
Richardson. Life of Milton.

A sage Laconic, truly wise,
Whose conversation was concise,
Train'd up in rigid schools;
Once when a single word would do,
Had lavishly made use of two,
In high contempt of rules.
Yalden. Fable 16.

Tasso tells us in his letters, that Sperone Speroni, a great Italian wit, who was his contemporary, observed of Virgil and Tully, that the Latin orator endeavoured to imitate the copiousness of Homer, the Greek poet, and that the Latin poet made it his business to reach the conciseness of Demosthenes the Greek orator. Dryden. Preface to the second Miscellany.

But to return from this digression, though it was almost necessary, all the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and yet clearly delivered in this present treatise which I have translated.
Id. A Parallel between Poetry and Painting.

And being so, I think, those of the concision who made it [the division] would do well to consider, whither that which our Saviour assures us will destroy a kingdom, be the likeliest way to settle and support a church.
South. Epistle Dedicatory, to vol. iii.

To tell you the truth, I was once inclined to be somewhat angry at the shortness of your letters, but I am now so well reconciled to your concise manner, that I condemn my own as downright loquacity, and shall make your epistles the models of mine.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Dec. Brutus. Letter 11. book xv.

For these reasons, we sometimes, perhaps find ourselves disposed to lament the conciseness and obscurity of that account which Moses hath left us of man's primeval estate in paradise.
Bishop Horne. Works. The Garden of Eden, vol. iv. disc. 2.

CONCITATION, Fr. concitation; It. concitatione; Sp. concitation; Lat. concitare, atum; (con, and cito, from cieo, idem quod moveo. Festus.) Perhaps from κίω, eo.

A moving or causing to move; a raising or causing to rise.

For the revelations of heaven are conveied by new impressions, and the immediate illumination of the soul, whereas the deceiving spirit, by concitation of humours, produceth his concieted phantasms, or by compounding the species already residing, doth make up words which mentally speak his intentions.
Sir Thomas Brown, book i. ch. x.

CONCITIZEN, Fr. concitoyen; a fellow citizen. See CITIZEN.

For what is it to me by whom I suffer evil of one and the same kinde and degree, whether it be by a neighbour, or a stranger, or a foreigner or a con-citizen.
Knox. History of Reformation. Preface, fol. 40.

This moues me, my distress
And sorrowes sometime to conceale,
Lest that the torments which I feele
Might likewise my con-citizens annoy.
Stirling. Aurora. Song 2.

CONCLAMATION, Lat. conclamare, atum; (con, and clamare, voce contendere.) Clamo;—simplicis oris est; conclamo, cum aliis. See MARTINIUS.

A calling or shouting out together.

But whether that mournful burthen and treble calling out after Absalom, had any referrence to the last conclamation, and triple valediction, used by other nations, we hold but a wavering conjecture. Sir Thomas Brown. Urne Burial, ch. i.

Mute is their sorrow; such a silent woe
A dying man's amazed houshold show,
Before his funerall conclamation,
Before the mother's lamentation
Call on the seruants weeping.
May. Lucan, book ii.

Among the Romans CONCLAMATIO was a cry over the corpse of a person who had just expired, intended, as it seems, to arrest the fugitive spirit, if this were possible, or to awaken it, if it still slumbered in the body. The expression passed into a proverb: Conclamatum est; it is all over, Ter. Eun. ii. 3. Conclamatio was also the military signal for March. Conclamare vasa, to pile baggage.

CONCLAVE, n. Lat. con, and clavis; a key. Fr. conclave; seldom used, says Cotgrave, except to express that secret or private roome, wherein the Cardinals (qui unam habent clavem communem, Minshew,) assemble about the election of a Pope. Also the Assembly itself.

And thus whan that he passed was,
The cardinals that wolden saue
The form of lawe in the conclaue,
Gon for to chese a new Pope.
Gower. Conf. Am., book ii. fol. 43.

This shall be onely to advertise your highness, that after great and long altercations and contrariety which hath depended between the cardinalls in the conclave, they at last fully resolved and determined (the faction of France abandoned) to elect and choose either my Lord Cardinal de Medici, or me.
Burnett. Records. Cardinal Wolsey to the King.

The nobles and citizens of Rome, alledging that the affairs of Italy being in the trayn, as they then were, it should be to the extreme danger thereof to choose a person absent, which could not ne might in time come to put remedy into the same, made sundry great exclamations at the conclave-window. Id. Ib.

At Caer-leon, in Monmouth, after his victories, a pompous celebration was at Whitsuntide, whither were invited divers kings and princes of the neighbouring coasts: he with them, and his queen Guinever, with the ladies, keeping those solemnities in their seueral conclaves.
Selden. Illustrations of Drayton's Poly-olbion, song 4.

And if they saw the adverse party too strong in the conclave, so that they could carry nothing, then Gardiner was to draw a protestation, which should be made in the name of the two crowns; and that being made, all the cardinals of their faction were to leave the conclave.
Burnett. History of the Reformation. Anno 1529.

And, in its secret conclave, as it feels
The body's woes and joys, this ruling power
Wields at its will the dull material world,
And is the body's health or malady.
Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health.

The CONCLAVE for the election of a Pope, is opened on the eleventh day after the decease of the last Pontiff. On that morning, the Cardinals assemble in St. Peter's, and after hearing the Mass of Spiritus Sancti, and a sermon on the duties to be observed in the Election, they proceed by pairs to the Vatican. "Here," says Heylyn, "are amongst other buildings, five halls, two chapels, and a gallery seventy foot long: the gallery is appointed for Conference, one chapel for the Mass and for the Election, the other with the halls are for the Cardinals' lodgings. Every hall hath two rows of chambers, which are, purposely for the time, made of green or violet cloth. To each Cardinal is allowed four servants to lie in his chamber. They that are once within are compelled, unless they be sick, still to continue there; and such as are once out, are no more permitted to go in, lest by that means the Cardinals should maintain intelligence with any foreign Princes. To this Conclave (for by this name the place of the Election is called) is but one door, to which belongeth four locks, and as many keys: one key is in the keeping of the Cardinals, one of the City-Bishops, one of the Roman Nobility, and one of the Master of the Ceremonies. There is in this door a wicket or hatch, which is opened only at dinners and suppers, whereof the Master of the Ceremonies keepeth the key. At this hole the Cardinals' servants receive their meat, every dish being first diligently searched, lest any letters should be conveyed in them. As for the lodgings, they have neither holes nor windows to give light, so that there they make day of wax candles. And lest the Pope should be made by force, both the city and Conclave are strongly guarded. When the Cardinals are going to Election, the privileges of the Cardinals are recited, which every one sweareth to observe, in case he be chosen Pope. Then the Master of the Ceremonies ringing a bell, calleth them to Mass: which ended, there is brought to every Cardinal a chair, and therein a scroll of all the Cardinals' names. Before the altar itself is set a table covered with a purple cloth, whereupon is set a chalice and a silver bell, and about it six stools, on which sit two Cardinal-Bishops, two Cardinal-Priests, and two Cardinal-Deacons. Every Cardinal writeth his voice in a piece of paper, goeth to the altar, prayeth God to guide him in the Election, putteth his voice into the chalice, and departeth to his seat. The first Bishop taketh out all the papers, and delivereth them to the first Deacon, who unfoldeth each of them, readeth (without mentioning the name of the elector) the name of the elected; and every Cardinal in his particular scroll noteth how many voices every one hath. The account being made, the first Priest having the like scroll, pronounceth who hath the most voices: which done, the Priest ringeth a silver bell, at which call the Master of the Ceremonies bringeth in a pan of coals, and burneth all the little papers, wherein the names of the elected were written. He that hath the most voices (so that his voices exceed the proportion of two parts of three) is acknowledged Pope, and adored by the rest of the Cardinals; but if they exceed not this number, they must begin all anew. If in the space of thirty days the Election be not fully ended, then must the Cardinals be kept from fire, light, and victuals, till they are fully agreed." Cosmographia, p. 112.

It may be added, that if the Election does not take place in the manner stated above, by Scrutinium, recourse is had to another called Accessus, in which each Cardinal goes (accedit) to him whom he chooses, and salutes him by a bow. In this also it is required that two-thirds should be agreed, and it must afterwards, for form's sake, be confirmed by Scrutiny; the third mode is Inspiratio, by virtue of which, if several of the Electors are agreed, coming out of their cells, they call out to each other the name of their favourite Candidate, and thus sometimes succeed in obtaining the suffrages of the remainder.

Although the Ecclesiastical Constitutions permit the Cardinals to choose the place of Election, convenience has set apart the Vatican. On the death of Pius VI. in October, 1799, the College of Cardinals, then only thirty-four in number, while Rome was in the occupation of the French, assembled under the protection of the Emperor of Germany at Venice, in the little Isle occupied by the Monastery of St. George: their deliberations continued till March, 1800.

A Candidate for the Popedom must have attained his fifty-fifth year; and the Emperor of Austria, the Kings of France and Spain are allowed a veto, provided their protest is offered before the declaration of votes in favour of any individual.

Gregorio Leti Vita di Sesto V. lib. v.; Conclavi de' Pontefici Romani, a History of the Papal Elections from that of Clement V. in 1305, to that of Alexander VII. in 1655.

CONCLU'DE, v., CONCLU'DENCY, CONCLU'DENT, CONCLU'DER, CONCLU'DINGLY, CONCLU'SIBLE, CONCLU'SION, CONCLU'SIONAL, CONCLU'SIVE, CONCLU'SIVELY, CONCLU'SIVENESS. Fr. conclure; Sp. concluir; It. concludere; Lat. concludere; (con, and claudere. See CLOSE.)

To bring close together; to bring to the same point or end; to end, to finish, to determine.

To bring close together in the same place; to comprise, or comprehend.

Metaphorically, to determine, to decide, to form a fixed, or settled judgment.

> And shortly to concluden all his wo,
> So mochel sorwe hadde never creature,
> That is or shall be, while the world may dure.
> Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1360.

Now here folowythe another answere, and yt ys the last and concludythe all.
Strype. Memorials. Dr. Crome's Declaration. Anno 1530.

This also is a conclusion, nothyng more certayne, or more proued by the testimony, and ensamples of the Scripture.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 34.

And for conclusyon it is a thynge impossyble and without raysone to thinke, that whan humayne nature is pricked and sturred by a vehement inclination to do any thinge, he canne be wythdrawen from it by force of lawes or by any other dyfficulty
Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 82.

Yet vnder a certayne protestation, namely, if both parties should agree vnto that form of satisfaccion, and if they should think good finally and conclusively to yeeld their consent vnto it.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Henry IV. Prussian Ambassador.

Wherein, notwithstandinge he vse large discourses, and make great shew, yet in the ende as it shal appeare, he concludeth nothinge. Jewell. Replie to M. Hardinge, fol. 496.

The fourth point is concerning the communicating of the authority of the chancellor too far; and making, upon the matter, too many chancellors, by relying too much upon the reports of the masters of the chancery, as concludent.
Bacon. Speech on taking his place in Chancery.

CON-CLUDE. — CON-COCT.

I may adde thereunto, Or the cautelousnes of suspenders and not forward concluders in these times.
Mountague. Appeale to Cæsar, fol. 146.

Examine whether the opinion you meet with repugnant to what you were formerly embued with, be concludingly demonstrated or not. Digby.

The utmost that that infers is only this, That those particular suits at law, that were then among the Corinthians were all unlawful, but it is not concludible from thence, that all other men's suits are so, because possibly not of the same nature as theirs were.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. fol. 54.

And which of these it is in my author, is not concludible from the nature or use of the word. Id. Ib. vol. ii. fol. 96.

Now these senses of faith, if they be applied to that conclusion of St. Paul, we are justified by faith, come all to one pass, for in effect it is all one, to say, We are justified by our obedience, or righteousness of faith, and to say, We are justified by the Gospel, which prescribes that obedience. Chillingworth. Sermon 8.

But this objection, when thoroughly examined, will not be found by any means so pressing or conclusive as at first sight it seems. Hobbs. Life, fol. 27.

What angels are, when we desire to know,
We form a thought by such as she below,
And thence conclude theyr'e bright beyond compare,
Compos'd of all that's good, and all that's fair.
Hughes. Greenwich Park.

Nor, indeed, do I know a text in the Bible, that I could more willingly pitch upon to leave with you as the last advice I would give you, and as the sum and conclusion of my preaching among you; than these words of St. Paul, I have now read to you. [Philippians, iv. 8.] Sharp. Works. Sermon 9. vol. i.

Such separations of initiatory dedications, as well as conclusional separations, are made with wine.
Hooper. On Lent, fol. 278.

If the world be finite in dimensions, it is movable by the power of God; and therefore my argument drawn from that moveableness, is conclusive.
Dr. Clarke. Fourth Reply to Leibnitz.

Let this I say, be clearly and conclusively made out and the business is done. South. Sermon 7. vol. iv.

Consideration, of things to be known, of their several weights, conclusiveness or evidence. Hale. Origin of Mankind.

In defence of the divinity and eternity of the Son, he [Alexander] uses arguments, which are not all of them conclusive, and brings texts of Scripture, of which some are, and others are not, to the purpose.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. ii. fol. 178.

The question has been most ably and conclusively cleared up in one of the Reports of the Select Committee, and an answer of the court of directors to an extraordinary publication against them by their servant, Mr. Hastings.
Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

CONCOA'GULATE, CONCOAGULA'TION. } "Fr. coaguler; to curd, or congeal into a curd; to joyn together, to make to joyn." Cotgrave.

Coagulatus, past participle of co-agulare, from co-agere, to drive together. See COAGULATE.

For some solutions require more, others less spirit of wine to concoagulate adequately with them.
Boyle. The History of Firmness.

I considered that vitriol being but a magistery, made by a concoagulation of the corpuscles of a dissolved metal with those of the menstruum, the magisteries of other metals might, without inconvenience be added.
Id. Doubts and Experiments touching the Curious Figures in Salts.

CONCO'CT, v. CONCO'CTER, CONCO'CTION, CONCO'CTIVE. } Lat. con, and coquere, coctum. See COCTION. Cotgrave says, "Fr. concoction; a boyling, or seething of meat in the Stomach."

To boil, or seethe together; and thus, to dissolve, or reduce into a state of nourishment, or growth. Metaphorically, to digest, to mature.

For cold maketh appetite, but naturall heate concocteth or boyleth. Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book ii.

The meates and drynkes receyued into the body, if the stomake and lyuer doo their naturall office, be altered by concoction and digestiō in suche wise that the best part therof goth in the nourishment of the body. Id. Ib. book iii.

The concoction of meats in the stomach is perfected as by an innate property and special virtue; so also by the outward heat of parts adjoining, for it is on every side compassed with hotter parts, which, as fire to a cauldron, helps to seethe and concoct; and the hot steams within it do not a little further digestion.
P. Pletcher. The Purple Island, can. 2. note 34.

For as Arrian saith of those, who read many books and digest none, so is it most true of those who do not concoct their πολυμαθίαν and turn it into spiritual nourishment of the soul, ἐμέσει καὶ δυσπεψίαις they vomit it up again, and are never the better for it.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 13. vol. iv.

Whenever any of them is resolved, it appears to be compounded of some of these five, to wit, the attractive, the retentive, the secretive, the concoctive, and the expulsive faculty.
Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xiv.

And can this private concocter of malecontent, at the very instant when he pretends to extol the parliament, afford thus to blur over, rather than to mention that public triumph of their justice and constancy so high, so glorious, so reviving to the fainted commonwealth. Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

Besides, as she takes the child out of mere necessity, her food will be accordingly, or else very coarse at best; whence proceeds an ill concocted and coarse food for the child; for as the blood, so is the milk. Spectator, No. 246.

Moreover it is useful, not only in the mouth, but in the stomach too, to promote concoction. Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

This was an errour in the first concoction, and therefore never to be mended in the second or the third.
Dryden. Preface to Œdipus.

For him the cane with little labour grows;
Spite of the dog star, shoots long yellow joints;
Concocts rich juice, though deluges descend.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, book i. l. 56.

Hence the concoctive powers, with various art,
Subdue the cruder aliments to chyle.
Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health.

CONCOLOUR;—having one, or being of one and the same colour. See COLOUR.

Thus in concolour animals, and such as are confined unto one colour, we measure not their beauty thereby; for if a crow or black bird grow white, we generally account it more pretty.
Sir Thomas Brown, book vi. ch. xi.

CONCO'MITATE, v. CONCO'MITANT, adj. CONCO'MITANT, n. CONCO'MITANCE, CONCO'MITANCY, CONCO'MITANTLY, CONCO'MITATION. } Con, and comitans, present participle of comitare, from com-ire; (cum, and ire,) to go with. Comitans, one who goes with, or accompanies another, or others; the reduplication con, is merely emphatical.

To go with, to accompany, attend upon, to be associated or connected with.

This simple bloody spectation of the lungs, is differenced from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey. On Consumption.

So that every thing for want of it [faith] is turned into sin, and thereby depopulating the whole man, making him nothing in the world but ruins and noysomness, a confluence of all manner of sins, without any concomitant degree of duty or obedience.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 11. vol. iv.

He made him the chief concomitant of his heir apparent, and only son, our dear soveraign now being on a journey of much adventure. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, fol. 212.

And so compared, this first work, and the concomitants of it at first, have some things therein which may and should cause us to look upon it as a most abounding mercy.
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. part i. fol. 374.

CONCOMITATE. — CONCORD.

And therefore the dream of the Church of Rome that he that receives the body receives also the bloud, because by concomitance, the bloud is received in the body, is neither true nor pertinent to this question. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. iii.

The pretence of concomitancie is so poore a shift, that it hurts them rather, for if by virtue thereof the body of Christ is no lesse in the wine, than the bloud is in the bread, it will necessarily follow, that they might as wel hold back the bread, and give the cup; as hold back the cup, and give the bread.

Hall. The Old Religion, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 19.

My second cause why I was condemned an heretike is, that I denied transubstantiation and concomitation, two iugling words of the papists, by the which they doe beleeue, and will compell all other to beleeue, that Christ's naturall bodie is made of bread, and the Godhead by and by to bee ioyned thereunto.

Foxe. Martyrs. Dr. Taylor defendeth Priests' Marriage, fol. 1383.

Some previous, as well as concomitant qualifications are requisite to the due exercise, and influence of it.

Law. Theory of Religion, fol. 26.

And being grown rich with trade, they fell to all manner of loosenesse and debauchery; the usual concomitant of wealth, and as commonly the fore-runner of ruin.

Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1688.

This apostle most expressly declaring that a man is justified ἐξ ἔργων, by works, the particle ἐξ, by, or out of, must manifestly denote somewhat more than an idle concomitance.

Nelson. Life of Bull.

In the same sense, therefore, that the wicked may be said to repent, they may be said to haue their prayers and services accepted; that is, the wicked antecedently so taken, and (as they speak, in sensu diviso) to wit, before the instant of their repentance, not concomitantly, and in sensu composito; the wicked, as such, and while he is such, can neither repent nor pray, nor have any audience or acceptance at a throne of grace.

South. Sermon 10. vol. ix.

In contemplation, therefore, of these benefits, I recommend this mode of catechising, and of expounding the catechism in occasional concomitant discourses, to all my brethren very particularly. Hurd. Works. Charge to the Clergy of Worcester.

That all motion is in time, and therefore, wherever it exists, implies time as its concomitant, is evident to all, and requires no proving. Harris. Hermes, ch. vi. book i.

The length of this account I flatter myself will be excused, as it contains a few curious particulars, which are not foreign to the subject, and which concomitantly illustrate the history of the arts.

Walpole. Life of Vertue.

CO'NCORD, v.
Co'NCORD, n.
CONCO'RDABLE,
CONCO'RDANT, adj.
CONCO'RDANT, n.
CONCO'RDANTLY,
CONCO'RDANCE,
CONCO'RDATE,
CONCO'RDANCY,
CONCO'RDLY.

Fr. concorder; Lat. concors; con, and cor, the heart; Gr. κέαρ, of uncertain Etymology.

To be of one and the same heart, or mind; to have the same will or inclination, the same wish or desire: to be in union, harmony, agreement: to be unanimous, to agree, to harmonize.

"A Concordance is a Dictionary or Index to the Bible, wherein all the words used through the inspired writers are arranged Alphabetically, and the various places, where they occur are referred to, to assist us in finding out passages, and comparing the several significations of the same word." Cruden.

For in cronike of time ago
I fynde a tale concordable.

Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 63.

But vnderstandinge that it was concorded and concludde, he forthwith retourned to the sayde place of Amphipolis by the commaundemente of the Lacedemonyans.

Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 132.

At musicke's sacred sounde my fansies eft begonne
In concordes discordes, notes and cliffes, in tunes of unisonne.

Gascoigne. Vpon the Fruit of Letters.

CON-CORD.

After whiche concord made, the cardinall and the archebishop of Yorke, did many thynges without the consent of the kynge or the duke. Hall. Henry VI. The nineteenth Yere.

Thus whenne Brute had deuyded this Isle of Brytayne, as before is shewed, in thre parts, & had holden y^e^ principate therof nobly by the terme of xxxiiii. yeres, after most cõcordaũce of wryters, he dyed. Fabyan, vol. i. ch. iv.

They crie out vpon us at this present euerie where that we are al heritiques, and haue forsaken the faith & haue with newe persuasions, & wicked learning vtterly dissolued the concorde of the church. Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, fol. 10.

If the true concorde of well-tuned sounds
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou should'st bear.

Shakspeare. Sonnet 8.

Concord's true picture shineth in this art,
Where divers men and women ranked be;
And every one doth dance a several part,
Yet all as one, in measure do agree
Obseruing perfect uniformity.

Davies. On Dancing.

Be pleased to consider, That the very word faith is in Scripture infinitely ambiguous, insomuch that in the Latine concordances of S. Hierom's Bible, published by Robert Stephens, you may see no less than twenty-two several senses and acceptations of the word faith, set down with the several places of Scripture refering to them. Taylor. Sermon 3. Supplement.

As neither their acts were notable in the age wherein they lived, nor the length of their reigns any way helpful to the concordance of times, foregoing or succeeding.

Ralegh. History of the World, book iii. ch. i. sec. 4.

And all the quire that wont with her to bear a part and sing
Concordant discords in sweet straine for welcome of the spring,
Sate silent on the frostie bow, and shuddering all for cold.
Did shroud the head beneath the wing.

Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 556.

Let them forethinke and deliberat togither prudentlie, and what they deliberat wiselie, let them accomplish concordlie, not iarring nor swaruing one from the other.

Foxe. Martyrs. Epistle of Gregorie, fol. 106.

Be it knowne to your discretion or kinglye prudence, that forsomuch as this election of Stephen Langton hath orderlie & concordlie thus proceeded without fraud or deceit, vpon a person meet for the same, therefore we will not for no man's pleasure, neither mai we without danger of fame and of conscience, defer or protract anie longer the consummation of the said election.

Id. Ib. Pope Innocent to the King, fol. 228.

Till Edgar grateful (as to those who pine
A dismal half-year night, the orient beam
Of Phœbus lamp) arose, and into one
Cemented all the long-contending powers,
Pacific monarch; then her lovely head
Concord rear'd high, and all around diffus'd
The spirit of love.

J. Philips. Cider, book ii.

Why I did thinke so, I gave my reasons by speciall reciting many concordants inter partes.

Mountague. Appeale to Cæsar, fol. 84.

Whereupon we may say, that they who treate this accommodation [divine love, and humane passion,] are of Micha's disciples who hope to lodge concordantly together an idol, and an ephod, making only as it were a cell apart for God, and expect as he did, to prosper in this concordancy.

Id. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 13. sec. 7.

But however the matter of this letter being such a concordance with those instructions, bearing date November 19, and the letter of Cromwell, January 7.

Strype. Memorials. Anno 1538.

I shall take it for an opportunity, not as others in their sage prudence use to do, to quote three or four texts of Scripture, and to tell you how you are to rule the city out of a concordance; no, I bring not instructions, but what much better befits both you and myself, your commendations

South. Epistolary Dedication, vol. i.

CON-CORD. — CONCOR-DANCE.

Silent as evening, lo the list'ning throng,
While from his lips the glowing periods fall,
Drink sweet persuasion streaming from his tongue
And the firm chain of concord binds them all.
Fawkes. Aurelius.

Invention of Concordances.

The first inventor of CONCORDANCES to the Scriptures, was Cardinal Hugo de Sancto Charo, (or, according to his French name, Hugues de Saint Cher,) who flourished about the middle of the XIIIth century, and to whom we are indebted for the invention of Chapters. (See vol. xviii. p. 515.) In the compilation of his Concordance, (which, as being the earliest work of the kind, must have demanded unwearied patience and indefatigable diligence,) he is said to have employed five hundred Monks in selecting and arranging in alphabetical order all the declinable words of the Old and New Testaments, according to the Latin Vulgate Version. Chevillier, however, (L'Origine de l'Imprimerie de Paris, p. 134,) doubts the fact of so many Monks being employed; but supposes that the work was at first much less voluminous than at present, and that it has increased in size by frequent revisions and improvements. This Concordance appeared under the name De Sancto Jacobo, or The Concordance of St. James; probably from the circumstance of Hugo having resided for a considerable time in the Convent of St. James at Paris, where he delivered Lectures on the Holy Scriptures. John of Darlington, and Richard of Stavensby, assisted by other Englishmen, made considerable additions to the original work, which was afterwards considerably improved by Conrad of Halberstadt, who flourished A. D. 1290. It was still further enlarged and improved in the XVth century, about the time of the Council of Basil, by John de Ragusia, who added all the indeclinable words; and at length it received its present form from John of Segovia, and John Schott. From the Latin Concordance of Cardinal Hugo are derived those Concordances, in various languages, which have so greatly aided the studies of Biblical Scholars.

Concordances are of two descriptions or classes; viz. Concordances to the Scriptures in the Original languages, and Concordances to Versions.

Hebrew Concordances.

1. The earliest Hebrew Concordance is that of Rabbi Isaac or Mordecai Nathan, a learned Jew, who lived in the XVth century, and who applied Hugo's chapters of the Latin Vulgate to the Hebrew Bible, but substituted Hebrew numerals for the marginal letters A, B, C, D, E, F, and G, introduced by the Cardinal.

Rabbi Nathan.

Ten years were devoted by Nathan to his laborious work, which, though completed in 1448, was not published until 1523, when it appeared at Venice, but with considerable defects, many words and phrases being entirely omitted. A second and more correct edition was printed at Basil in 1581, by Ambrose Froben, but without altering the form, or supplying the defects A splendid edition of Nathan's Concordance was published at Rome in 1621, in four volumes folio, Calasio.

by Marius de Calasio, a learned Franciscan Friar, who has greatly extended the original work by adding: 1. a Latin version of Rabbi Nathan's explanation of the several roots, with augmentations of his own; 2. the Rabbinical Chaldee, Syriac and Arabic words, derived from Hebrew roots, or agreeing with them in signification; 3. a Literal version of the Hebrew text; 4. the variations of the Vulgate and Septuagint; and 5. the proper names of men, rivers, mountains, &c. John Buxtorf, to whose labours Biblical literature is so deeply indebted, undertook to correct and reform the preceding editions of Nathan's work, and happily succeeded, by casting it into an entirely new form. His Concordantiæ Hebraicæ et Chaldaicæ appeared at Basil in 1632; and was abridged by Christian Rarius, under the title of Fons Zionis, sive Concordantiarum Hebraicarum et Chaldaicarum J. Buxtorfii Epitome, Berolini, 1677, 8vo. Calasio's work afterwards was reprinted at London in 1747—49, in four volumes folio, under the editorship of the Rev. William Romaine, M. A. assisted by Mr. Rowe Mores, and by Lutzena, a Portugueze Jew. It is a splendid and useful book, but greatly inferior in every respect to Dr. John Taylor's Hebrew Concordance, adapted to the Hebrew Bible after the manner of Buxtorf, London, 1754—57, in two folio volumes. This is one of the most laborious and most useful works ever published for the advancement of Hebrew learning, and the understanding of the Old Testament in its original language. It is, in fact, a Grammar, Lexicon, and Concordance, founded on the Concordance of Buxtorf, all whose errors Dr. Taylor has corrected. He has also inserted the word or words, by which any Hebrew word is rendered in the authorized English translation of the Bible; and, where the Hebrew is not literally rendered, a literal translation is added. In general, all change, or difference in the two texts is diligently remarked; and the author has added all the words, (about one hundred and twenty in number,) which Buxtorf had omitted, together with the Hebrew particles out of Christian Noldius's very complete Concordantiæ Particularum Ebræo-Chaldaicarum. (4to, Jenæ, 1735, last edition.) All learned men unite in the commendation of Dr. Taylor's invaluable Hebrew Concordance.

CONCORDANCE Buxtorf.

Concordances to the Greek Testament.

2. Of Concordances to the Greek Testament, two only are particularly worthy of notice: viz. 1. Erasmus Schmidius's (or Schmidt's) Novi Testamenti Græci Jesu Christi TAMEION, aliis Concordantiæ, Lipsiæ, 1717, folio. This is unquestionably the best Greek Concordance to the New Testament; it was beautifully reprinted at Glasgow, and published at London in 1819, in two octavo volumes; 2. Dr. John Williams's Concordance to the Greek Testament, with the English Version to each word; the principal Hebrew Roots corresponding to the Greek words of the Septuagint; with short critical notes and an index. London, 1767, 4to. a useful and neatly printed work.

To the Septuagint Greek Version.

3. Concordances to Ancient Versions.—The best and most complete Concordance to the Septuagint Version of the Old Testament, is Abraham Trommius's Concordantiæ Græcæ Versionis, vulgo LXX Interpretum, Amst. et Traj. ad Rhen. 1718, in two volumes folio; which has entirely superseded the earlier work of Conrad Kircher, published at Frankfort in 1607, in two quarto volumes. Trommius has followed the order of the Greek alphabet. The Greek word is first given, to which are subjoined its different acceptations in Latin; then follow the different Hebrew words, which are explained by the Greek word in the Septuagint Version. These Hebrew words are arranged under the Greek, in their alphabetical order, with the passages of Scripture where they occur. If the word in question is found in the Greek versions of Aquila, Symmachus, Theodosion, or of any other ancient Greek Interpreters of the Old Testament, the places in which it occurs are referred to, at the conclusion of the quotations from the Scriptures; and, immediately after these, all the passages in the Apocryphal books are specified, in which the word appears. The work is terminated by a useful Index, a Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon, a Greek Lexicon to Origen's Hexapla, (by Montfaucon,) and a succinct collation (by Lambert Bos) of the Frankfort and Roman editions of the Septuagint.

It has already been stated that Cardinal Hugo, the first inventor of Concordances, was the earliest compiler of a Concordance to the ancient Latin Vulgate Version of the Scriptures. This gave rise to several others, by Henricus Regius, (Coloniæ, 1535, 4to;) Johannes Gastius, (Basileæ, 1551, folio;) Robert Stephens, (Parisiis, 1555, folio, a rare and beautiful work;) Johannes Benedictus, (Parisiis, 1562, folio;) Caspar de Zamora, (Romæ, 1627, folio.) But that which is considered to be the most useful work for this Version is the Concordantiæ Bibliorum of Franciscus Lucas, which first appeared at Antwerp in 1606, in folio. The best and most beautiful edition is said to be that printed at Cologne in 1684, in octavo; and the most complete, that printed at Avignon in 1786, in two volumes, quarto.

4. Several Concordances to the Scriptures are extant in the English language. The earliest of these was compiled and printed by Thomas Gibson, or Gybson, for the New Testament. It is entitled The Concordance of the New Testament, most necessary to be had in the hands of all soche as desire the Communication of any place contayned in the New Testament; and was printed at London in 1535, in octavo. This is a work of not very frequent occurrence. More common is the Concordance of the entire Bible, compiled by John Marbecke, Organist of Windsor, which was printed in black letter by Richard Grafton, in 1550, in folio, with this title: A Concordance, that is to saye, a Worke, wherein by the ordre of the letters of the A, B, C, ye may redely finde any worde conteigned in the whole Bible, so often as it is there expressed or mencioned. This Concordance, which was dedicated to King Edward VI. by the compiler, "Jhon Marbek," was adapted to the edition commonly termed "Matthewe's Bible." In Fox's Acts and Monuments, vol. ii. p. 546, there is a very interesting narrative of the account which Marbecke gave to the Bishops of his labours, and which exhibits him as a remarkable instance of indefatigable diligence.

The publication of the authorized English Version of the Bible, in 1611, gave occasion to the compiling of numerous Concordances adapted to it, by Newman, Downame, Powell, and others during the XVIIth century, and by Fisher, Brown, and others during the XVIIIth century. Of these, two only are particularly worthy of attention: viz. 1. A Complete Concordance to the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, or a Dictionary and Alphabetical Index to the Bible, by Alexander Cruden, M.A. London, 1763, 1810, 1824, quarto. The first edition of this well-known and useful Concordance appeared at London in 1737. The edition of 1763 is the third and last of those superintended by the author, and is usually considered the best, from his known diligence and accuracy in correcting the press. The value of Cruden's Concordance has caused it to be repeatedly printed, but not always with due regard to accuracy. The London edition of 1810, however, is an honourable exception; every word, with its references, having been most carefully examined with the English Bible for that edition. The impression of 1824, is a reprint of that of 1810. 2. A New Concordance and Dictionary of the Holy Scriptures, with the various significations of the principal words, by which the true meaning of many passages is shown, by the Rev. John Butterworth, London, 1767, 1785, 1816, octavo. This is, for the most part, a judicious Abridgement of Cruden's large work. In order to ensure correctness, the compiler of it collated every word and reference in the proof sheets, with the several texts of the Bible. The second edition of 1785, is considerably improved. The third edition of 1816, is a reprint of the second, with some alterations in the definitions, made by the editor, (Dr. Adam Clarke,) who has reprinted, by themselves, the original passages so altered. (Horne's Introduction to the Critical Study of the Scriptures, vol. ii. part iii. ch. iii. sec. 2; Townley's Illustrations of Biblical Literature, vol. i. p. 483, 484; vol. ii. p. 183, 184; vol. iii. p. 118, 120.)

CONCORDANCE. CONCORDAT. Butterworth.

CONCORDAT, the name by which an Agreement concerning Beneficiary matters is distinguished in the Canon Law. None made without the authority of the Pope is binding on successors. The Treaty concluded between Leo X. and Francis I. in 1516 for the abolition of the Pragmatic Sanction, is commonly known in France as The Concordat. These two important edicts may be found given at length, the one, the Pragmatic Sanction, in Concilia Harduini, viii. 1949; the other, the Concordat, in the same work, ix. 1867, and in Leibnitz, Mantissa Codicis Diplomat. i. 158, ii. 358. Mosheim, who briefly mentions the Concordat (cent. xvi. sec. i. ch. i.) refers for an ample and accurate account of both it and the Pragmatic Sanction to Burnet, History of Reformation, iii. 3; and also to the following works: De Boulay, Hist. Acad. Paris, vi. 61, 109; Du Clos, Hist. de Louis XI.; Hist. du Droit Eccl. François, i. Diss. ix. 415; Menagiana, iii. 285.

The Ist article of this Concordat treats of Elections, and stipulates that Chapters shall not elect of themselves as heretofore; but that on the occurrence of a vacancy, the King of France, within six months, shall name a Doctor or Licentiate of Theology, not under twenty-seven years of age, for the Pope's approval. Bishoprics vacant in the Court of Rome are to be conferred by the Pope, without the King's nomination. Abbies and Priories are to follow the same rule. The IId article abolishes reversions. The IIId relates to Collations, and the rights of Graduates. The IVth gives the Pope the option of one Benefice from every Patron who has a right to present to ten; and demands a true account of their ordinary value. The Vth regulates causes and appeals. The VIth, VIIth, VIIIth, IXth, and Xth, differ little from the Pragmatic Sanction.

This Treaty, which so largely increased the authority of the Pontiff over the Gallican Church, was received with the utmost reluctance and indignation. The Parliament of Paris after deliberating for a month refused to register it, and when at last compelled to publish it, they annexed a solemn protest, and an appeal to the next General Council. The chief obloquy of the transaction fell upon the Chancellor du Prat, who was Cardinal Legate, and principally concerned in promoting it. Some modifications were afterwards made in it from time to time, especially in the clauses relating to the declaration of the value of Benefices and the Papal option. The King also extended his right of nomination to Archbishoprics, Bishoprics, and Abbies.

The French Revolution annihilated this Concordat; but on the 15th of July, 1801, a new Concordat, which had for some months been under discussion, was concluded between Pius VII. and Buonaparte; and was finally ratified at Rome, on the 9th of August. By this Convention, the Roman Catholic religion was reestablished in France, though under a more simple and moderate form than had existed during the Monarchy. Pius was, indeed, happy to make any terms with a people whom he had long given up as for ever alienated from the Popish dominion; and hence we may account for those concessions he so readily made. He wisely withheld the publication of this Concordat for some time, though its ratification had been previously announced by his Bull "Ecclesia Dei." Among the principal articles of this Concordat were, the confirmation of the existing Republic; a new division of the Dioceses; the resignation, on the part of the ancient Bishops, of their several Sees; the nomination of the new Bishops and Archbishops by Buonaparte, within three months after the publication of the Pope's Bull; the alienated property of the Church to remain undisturbed by the Pope; the Bishops and Priests to receive an adequate salary from Government. (Collins's Summary of Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, &c. vol. ii. p. 215, 216.)

On the restoration of the Bourbons to the French Throne, "after various negociations, the Pope finally concluded a Treaty with the French Monarch, in the year 1817, whereby the Concordat of 1801 was totally to cease, and the affairs of the Church were replaced on the footing of the status qui established by the Convention between Leo. X. and Francis II." (Collins, vol. ii. p. 223.)

There is also a German Concordat concluded in 1448, between Pope Nicolas V. and the Emperor Frederic III., and subsequently confirmed both by Clement VII. and Gregory XIII. By this the Pope reserves to himself the presentation to all Benefices in the Court of Rome, and within two days' journey of that City. All other Ecclesiastical Elections are to be confirmed by the Pope. Benefices conferred alternately by the Pope and private Patrons, belong to the first in the months January, March, May, July, September, and November, which thence are termed Menses Papales, and the payment of annates or first fruits is carefully regulated. Blondeau, Bibl. Canon.

Besides the authorities cited above, may be consulted, Moreri, ad voc.; Puisson, Pragm. Sanct.; Maimbourg, Hist. du Pont. de S. Gregoire le Grand; Ducier, De sacris Eccl. Ministeriis; Pithou, Hist. de l'origine de la Pragm. Sanct. et du Concordat; Du Pin, Bibl. des auteurs Eccl. du XVI siècle.

CONCO'RPORATE, v. } Lat. con, and corpus,
CONCORPORA'TION. } body. Corpus est quod carpi potest in partes. Martinius. Corpus, quod depascitur, opp. ad mentem, quod manet. Scheidius.

To unite into one body; to embody.

Of Eucharistia, (I find in the Scripture,) in which we be concorporated into Christ, and made lively members of his body, nourished and fed to the everlasting life, if we receive it as we ought to do, and else it is to us rather death than life.
Burnett. Records. The Resolutions of some Questions concerning the Sacrament, ques. 7.

Even as if he [the flatterer] went about in some great pasture to make toward one beast, whom he purposeth to tame and bring to hand, by little and little joyning close unto him, as it were to be concorporated in the same studies and exercises, in the same affections, employments and course of life.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 72.

For as the excessive humiditie of the one looseneth the rind, so the want of vitall moisture in the other, will not suffer it to unite and concorporate. Id. Plinie, fol. 518.

That one centre, which the soul is hight,
Which knows this world by the close unitie
Concorporation with the mundane spright.
More. On the Soul, book ii. can. 1. st. 26.

And the word, which St. James pronounces able to save our souls, he describes as a graff, which must not only be closely embraced by that, wherein it is to fructify, but must continue there, to bring the stock and graff to (if I may so speak) concorporate. Boyle. On the Style of the Holy Scriptures.

Saint John scruples not to affirm, that "if a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar;" as concorporating things inconsistent, and uniting things distanter than the two poles of heaven. Id. A Dissuasive from Cursing.

CONCOURSE, n. Fr. concours; It. and Sp. concurso; con, and currere, cursum, to run.

A running or flocking together.

For this myracle great concourse of people yerely in the vi. kalendis of Marche cõmith with great deuocion vnto the sayd monastery, there makyng theyr oblacions, fermly beleuyng y^{t} sayd churche was halowed with Crystis own hande.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. cxxxii.

Whan sodenly Aeneas seeth great concourse to throng
Both mighty Anteas and Serestus, and Cloanthus strong.
Phaer. Æneidos, book i. fol. 34.

The host all readie to depart away,
Intending first in funerall flames to burne
Her fatal pride, and all her pomp o'erturne
Did in thicke concourse cluster to confound
Her high top towers and eu'n them with the ground.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 868.

——————————Thus, ruling, he restrain'd
The host from flight: and then again the councell was maintain'd
With such a concourse, that the shore rung with the tumult made.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book ii. fol. 21.

Nay, the machine of God's making, is so imperfect, according to these gentlemen, that he is obliged to clean it now and then by an extraordinary concourse, and even to mend it, as a clock maker mends his work. Clarke. Leibnitz's First Paper.

Hence were formed colleges or sodalities of men of letters, who taught arts and sciences, and drew together a concourse of youths desirous of instruction, and thus by degrees those larger schools were erected, which in the next age were called Universities.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

CONCREATE, con, and create, creatum, (see CREATE.) Fr. concreer, to breed, compose, make or create together. Cotgrave.

For some men finding reason to be that guide, which God hath given us, and concreated with us, know that religion which is superinduc'd and comes after it, cannot prejudice that noblest part of this creation.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. ii.

I am the more perswaded of the concinnity of this notion, when I consider the uncouth harshness either of the way of actuall concreated knowledge, or of infant growing faculties.
Glanville. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. i.

For if it be not, then neither we nor Adam could by nature do things above nature; and if God did concreate grace with Adam, that grace was nevertheless grace, for being given him as soon as he was made. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. vi. sec. 4.

CONCREDIT, Lat. concredere; con, and credere, itum. Vossius prefers from χρήζω, id est, mutuum do. See CREDIT.

CON-REDIT. To deliver, commit, or consign to the trust; to intrust.

CON-RETE. The which reason may well be applied to excuse every Christian from it, [swearing] who is a priest to the most high God, and hath most celestial and important matters concredited to him; in comparison to which all other matters are very mean and inconsiderable. Barrow. Sermon 15. vol. i.

CONCRE'TE, v.
CO'NCRETE, adj.
CO'NCRETE, n.
CONCRE'TELY,
CONCRE'TION, n.
CO'NCRETIVE,
CO'NCRETIVELY,
CONCRE'SCENCE,
CO'NCREMENT.

Fr. concret; Sp. and It. concreto; Lat. concretus, past participle of concresc-ere; (con, and crescere.) Sic crescere, est creascere, id est, accipere augmentum in carne: παρὰ τὸ κρέας. Scaliger, De Causis, c. 123.

To grow together, to grow or unite together, to coalesce, to cohere, to coagulate, to congeal.

For the Logical use, see the Example from Locke.

Those same vapours beinge lette to euaporate or passe forth out of the head therfore be concrete or gathered into humour superfluous.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book iv.

And on that sleue these wordes were wrete
A false abstracte cometh from a false concrete.
Skelton. The Bouge of Courte.

For all coral is not hard, and in many concreted parts some parts remain unpetrified, that is, the quick and the liveller parts remain as wood, and were never yet converted.

Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. v.

The reliques are like the scales of Sardinos, pressed into a mass; which melting with heat, are again concreted by cold.

Id. book iii. ch. xxvi.

Who came close on, and with his dart strooke Duke Apisaon
Whose surname was Pharesiades, even to the concrete bloud
That makes the liver; on the earth, out gusht his vital bloud.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xi. fol. 153.

I desire, that in the text this difference may be observed, between the things that Christ hath done for the affecting and accomplishment of that peace.

1st, What was transacted and done simply and abstractedly in his own person alone, for the procurement of it, on the cross.

2d, What he works efficiently in us, (tho' concretely, in himself, upon us) by his spirit, and through providences, to full accomplishment thereof.

Goodwin. Works, vol. i. part iii. fol. 11.

When these greedy flames shall have devoured whatever was combustible, and converted into a smoak and vapour all grosser concretions, that great orb of fire that the Cartesian philosophy supposeth to constitute the centre of this globe, shall perfectly have recovered its pristine nature.

Glanville. Preexistence of Souls, fol. 178.

That little stony plant which Johnson nameth, Hippuris Caroloides, and Gesner Foliis mansu Arenosis, we have found in fresh water; which is the less concretive portion of that element.

Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. v.

Let me request you to weigh that of St. Paul, Ephesians, ii. 5, which are urged by some ancients: and to remember, how often he calls concupiscence sin; whereby it is urged, that although baptism take away the guilt as concretively redounding to the person, yet the simple abstracted guilt, as to the nature remains; for sacraments are administered to persons, not to natures.

Taylor. Polemical Discourses, fol. 907. Bishop of Rochester's Letter.

And seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor a substance inchoate, or in any way of perfection, how any other substance should thence take concrescence, it hath not been taught.

Raleigh. History of the World, book i. ch. i. sec. 10.

This distinction of names shews us also the difference of our ideas: For if we observe them, we shall find that our simple ideas have all abstract, as well as concrete names; the one whereof is (to speak the language of Grammarians) a substantive, the other an adjective; as whiteness, white, sweetness, sweet.

Locke. Of Human Understanding, book iii. ch. viii sec. 1.

CON-CRETE.

There is the cohesion of the matter into a more loose consistency, like clay, and thereby it is prepared to the concrement of a pebble or flint. Hale. Origin of Mankind.

CON-CUBINE.

The particles of tinging substances and salts dissolved in water do not of their own accord concrete and fall to the bottom, but diffuse themselves all over the liquor, and expand still more if you add more liquor to them.

The Life of Boyle. Letter of Sir Isaac Newton.

I have not yet found by what I have heard of those artists, that though they pretend to bring the several substances, into which the fire has divided the concrete, to an exquisite simplicity, they pretend also to be able by the fire to divide all concretes, minerals, and others, into the same number of distinct substances.

Boyle. The Sceptical Chymist, part v.

The latter of which is a thing, which men have been necessitated to, in order to the computation or reckoning of the properties of bodies, the comparing of them with one another, the adding, subtracting, multiplying, and dividing of them, which could not be done, so long as they are taken concretely together with their subjects.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 67.

That there does also intervene a various local motion of such small bodies, will scarce be denied; whether we choose to grant the origin of concretions assigned by Epicurus, or that related by Moses. Boyle. The Sceptical Chymist, part i.

How, for example, could there be such a science as optics, were we necessitated to contemplate colour concreted with figure, two attributes which the eye can never view, but associated?

Harris. Hermes, book iii. ch. iv.

——————— Happier far
Are you, ye sons of Claude! who, from the mine,
The earth, or juice of herb or flower concrete,
Mingle the mass whence your Arcadias spring.
Mason. The English Garden, book iii.

In a fabulous age every odd substance that was flung ashore received that name; [halcyon's nest] a species of tubular coral, a sponge, a zoophyte, and miscellaneous concrete having by the ancients been dignified with that title from their imaginary origin.

Pennant. The Kingfisher, vol. i. p. 329.

He relates, that it [the halcyon's nest] resembled those concretions that are formed by the sea water.

Id. Ib. p. 328.

CONCREW, v. Lat. concrescere; to grow together. See CONCRETE.

And his faire locks, that wont with oyntment sweet
To be embaulm'd, and sweat out dainty dew,
He let to growe, and griesly to concrew,
Vncomb'd, vncurl'd, and carelesly vnshed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 7.

CO'NCUBINE, n.
CONCU'BINACY,
CONCU'BINATE, n.
CONCU'BINAGE,
CONCU'BINARY,
CONCU'BINARY, adj.

Fr. concubine; It. and Sp. concubina; Lat. concubina. Concumbere, concubitum; (con, and cumbere,) to lie together. See the Quotation from Hobbs.

He wolde suffre for a quart of wine,
A good felaw to haue his concubine
A twelve month, and excuse him at the full.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 652.

He the mightie God forsoke
Ageyn the lawe whan hee toke
His wyues and the concubines
Of hem that were Sarasines.
Gower. Conf. Am., book vii. fol. 168.

And moreouer they saide, it should be a great shame for theym, that such a duchesse, come of so base a blode (and concubine to the duke in his other wyfe's dayes) shulde go and haue the preemynence before them.

Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. ccx.

[illegible] either for society of bed or [illegible] of bed only, then the [illegible] also the child shall be his [illegible] by covenant. For although [illegible] is supposed to yield up the right of [illegible] yet doth not concubinage enforce so [illegible] Corpore Politico, part ii. ch. iv.

[illegible] to believe, that the Holy Ghost will not [illegible] incestuous unchaste concubinaries, schismaticks [illegible] and excommunicate.
Taylor. Sermon 6. part i.

[illegible] take from them the church honourable marriage and the bed [illegible] shall them not replenishe it with concubinaries, with in[illegible] sodomiticall vices, and finally with al kinde [illegible] filthinesse.
Martyrs. Allegations against Sixe Articles, fol. 1064.

In this constitution, if the Lorde Cromwell and other good men of the parliament might haue had their will, there is no doubt, but the first crime of these concubinarie priests, as well as the second had had the same penalty, as the other six articles had and should haue bin punished with death. Id. Ib. fol. 1074.

Amongst the ancients, and for a long time in the civil law, such marriages [against the consent of parents] were esteem'd illegitimate, and no better than a mere concubinate.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. v.

The bad tendency of Mr. Pope's Eloisa to Abelard is remarked by Sir John Hawkins, in his History of Music, vol. ii. p. 23, as depreciating matrimony, and justifying concubinage. This is founded on a false fact; Abelard was married.
Horne. Essays, &c. Abelard, vol. i. fol. 248.

Then the marriage of the priests should be in the Pope's hands, who might admit the same; and the concubinate of many should be forgiven, for we see few chaste.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1539.

Also their country was very infamous for concubinacy, adultery, and incest: some kept four concubines together.
Id. Ib. Anno 1550.

CONCULCATE, v. Fr. conculquer; Sp. conculcar; It. conculcare; Lat. conculcare, atum; con, and calcare, calcibus premere, to press with the heels. (Calx, from λὰξ, and that from λήξω, the future of λήγ-ειν, desinere, to end.)

To tread, or trample upon.

Doe not thou conculcate thyselfe, and man ouercometh thee not.
State Trials. The Protestation of John Wiclif.

But he (that notwithstanding) groweth from evil to worse, oppressing and conculcating the church and sanctuary of God.
Fox. Martyrs. Becket's Letter to the Pope, fol. 197.

And to conclude, as in effect, in despite of God, conculcating and trampling under foot whatsoever is named God, [Mahomet] advanceth his own (blasphemous reprobate and forlorne miscreant as he is) divine power and authority forsooth in the Divel's name above all things whatsoever in heaven and earth.
Mountague. Appeale to Cæsar, fol. 153.

CONCU'PISCENCE, CONCU'PISCIBLE. Fr. concupiscence; It. concupiscenza; Sp. concupiscentia; Lat. concupiscere, (con, and cupere.) Cupere is of uncertain Origin. Cupere est magis quam velle. Vossius. And concupiscere is more still; to wish for, or desire ardently; to lust after.

For concupiscible in Measure for Measure, the modern Editors, as Mr. Steevens observes, unauthoritatively substitute concupiscent.

But as they were the children of God, which were inwardly circumcised, euen so they that are washed inwardly from the concupiscens of thys worlde, are the members of Christ, whom Paule affirmeth so to be purged through his bloud.
Frith. Workes, fol. 71.

That other dotes, and drinetb forth his dayes
In vaine delight, and foul concupiscence,
When works of weight, might occupie his hedde.
Gascoigne. The Steels Glass.

Which lust or evil concupiscence he at last defines to be an insatiable intemperance of the appetite, never filled with a desire, never ceasing in the persecution of evil; and again he calls it, our birth and nativity derived to us by our parents, i. e. an evil affection hereditary to us, and delivered to us as a legacy at our birth and nativity.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 19. vol. iv.

Perturbations and passions, which trouble the phantasie, though they dwell betweene the confines of sense and reason, yet they are drowned in corporeall organs of sense, they are commonly reduced into two inclinations, irascible and concupiscible.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 97.

The Stoicks and Epicureans hold, that they [plants] have no soule or life at all; for of animall creatures some have the appetitive and concupiscible soule, others the reasonable: but plants grow after a sort casually of their owne accord, and not by the means of any soule. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 694.

He would not but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust,
Release my brother.
Shakspeare. Measure for Measure, fol. 80.

There is in every man a certain propensity to vice, or a corrupt principle more or less disposing him to evil, which principle is sometimes called the flesh, sometimes concupiscence, and sometimes sensuality, and makes one part of that, which we call original sin. South. Sermon 1. vol. v.

Now there being a double object for the will of man to work upon, good and evil, there is likewise a double faculty considerable in it; the one we call a concupiscible, the other an irascible faculty; by the one we follow that which is good, by the other we run from that which is evil.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 137. vol. i.

Avarice and ambition are abroad watching for her in the day, while concupiscence, like a pestilence, walketh in darkness.
Horne. Works. Commentary on the Psalms, vol. iv. psalm 91.

CONCU'R, v. CONCU'RRENCE, CONCU'RRENCY, CONCU'RRENT, adj. CONCU'RRENT, n. CONCU'RRENTLY, CONCU'RSION. Fr. concourir; It. concorrere; Sp. concurrir; Lat. concurrere; (con, and currere,) to run together.

To run together or in unison; by agreement; with one will; to one goal or end; to conjoin or combine, to meet together, to unite, to agree or assent to.

And here is it diligently to be noted: that in all such rites, ceremonies, or sacramentes of God thus instituted: these two thinges (that is to witte, the thyng signified, and the signe, that signifieth) be concurraunt and inseparable.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 468.

But of these spiritual lawes y^t^ were made for y^e^ repressing of heresies, with which our tẽporal lawes are so conformable and concurrant; (these am I boũd to medle with.)
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 1015.

Saint Paul, Tim. iii. and Tit. i. sheweth what qualities a bishop or a pastor ought to haue: but he doth not say, that if none can be founde, or not a sufficient number, in whom all these qualities do concurre, that then the church shal rather be destitute of ministers, than have such. Whitgift. Defence, fol. 253

How was this goodly architecture wrought?
Or by what means were they together brought?
They err, that say they did concur by chance,
Love made them meet in a well-ordered dance.
Davies. On Dancing. The Orchestra.

So all the labours that I long have lost,
As one that was but wrestling with the winds,
May once in end concurre to blesse my state.
Stirling. Aurora. Sestin 1

CUR.

——————— No decree of mine
Concurring to necessitate his fall.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 44.

Those things which are made of God himselfe immediately by himselfe, without the concurrence of second causes, cannot be vnmade by any inferiour cause, but by him alone by whom they were first made. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 18.

That height of fortune either is control'd
By some more pow'rful overlooking eye,
(That doth the fulness of thy grace withhold)
Or countercheck'd with some concurrency,
That it doth cost far more adoe to hold
The height attain'd, than was to get so high.
Daniel. Chorus in Philotas.

All of them (the last excepted) were dejected by King James without any concurrency of the Duke.
Cabbala. To his Sacred Majestie.

Whereupon in the bill newly passed this session for a trienniall parliament, for time to come, there is special provision made how the parliament shall be summoned and convented by the lords, commons, and great officers of the realme, themselves, without the king's concurrent assent (though by his writ and in his name) in case of his neglect or wilfull refusall to summon one within that time.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty of Papists.

As for the Mirmillones, hee deprived them of their armour. One of them named Columbus, fortuned to foile his concurrent, howbeit hee had gotten before some small hurt.
Holland. Suetonius. Caligula, fol. 149.

How long this Tibni, the new competitor of Omri held out, I do not find, only it appears that his side was decay'd, and so he died, leaving no other successor than his concurrent.
Ralegh. History of the World, book ii. ch. xix. sec. 5.

As in thy pictures light consents with shade,
And each to other is subservient made,
Judgment and genius so concur in thee,
And both unite in perfect harmony.
Congreve. To Sir Godfrey Kneller.

We are to trust firmly in the Deity, but so as not to forget that he commonly works by second causes, and admits of our endeavours with his concurrence.
Dryden. Dedication of the Duke of Guise.

With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife:
Nor I, but as I lov'd, yet all combin'd,
Your beauty, and my impotence of mind,
And his concurrent flame, that blew my fire;
For still our kindred souls had one desire.
Id. Palamon and Arcite.

So noble and so disinterested doth Divine love make ours, that there is nothing besides the object of that love, that we love more than our concurrents in it, perchance out of a gratitude to their assisting us, to pay a debt (of love and praise) for which, alas! we find our single selves but too insolvent.
Boyle. Seraphic Love.

'In like manner, those three hypostacies, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, are not only, congenerous and coessential, as having all the essence of the Godhead alike in them, but also as concurrently making one entire Divinity.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, book i. ch. iv.

But however, say they, body in general, the common basis and matter of all worlds and beings, is self-existent and eternal; which being naturally divided into innumerable little particles or atoms, eternally endued with an ingenit and inseparable power of motion, by their omnifarious concursions and combinations and coalitions, produce successively (or at once, if matter be infinite) an infinite number of worlds; and amongst the rest there arose this visible complex system of heaven and earth.
Bentley. Sermon 6.

However the love of letters growing every day stronger in him, it was found advisable to give way to his inclination of taking orders: the rather, as the seriousness of his temper and purity of his morals concurred with his unappeasable thirst of knowledge, to give the presages of future eminence in that profession.
Hurd. Life of Warburton.

The delight we have in such things, hinders us from shunning scenes of misery; and the pain we feel, prompts us to relieve ourselves in relieving those who suffer; and all this antecedent to any reasoning, by an instinct that works us to its own purposes without our concurrence.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, sec. 15.

CONCUR. — CONDEMN.

The Egyptians as we are assured by the concurrent testimony of antiquity, were amongst the first who taught that the soul surviv'd the body and was immortal.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iii. sec. 4.

CONCU'SS, CONCU'SSION, n: CONCUSSA'TION. } Lat. concutere, ussum; (con, and quatere,) to shake together. To shake or agitate, to cause to quake or tremble.

Now when we see the most combining band
The strongest fast'ning of society,
Low, whereon all this frame of men doth stand
Remain concussed with uncertainty.
Daniel. To Sir Thomas Egerton.

Upon every great agitation or concussion of the brain (as happeneth from a stroke, especially if the stroke be upon the eye) whereby the optic nerve suffereth any great violence, there appeareth before the eyes a certain light, which light is nothing without, but an apparition only, all that is real being the concussion or motion of the parts of that nerve; from which experience we may conclude, that apparition of light is nothing but motion within. Hobbs. Human Nature, ch. ii. fol. 3.

Like ships in a storm, every one alone hath enough to do to out-ride it; but when they meet, besides the evils of the storm, they find the intolerable calamity of their mutual concussion.
Taylor. On Original Sin. Deus Justificatus.

Envy in the bosom is like a subterraneous fire shut up in the bowels of the earth, which after some astonishing concussation breaks furiously out with noise and horrour.
Hall. The Peacemaker, sec. 8.

How can that concussion of atoms be capable of begetting those internal and vital affections, that self-consciousness and those other powers and energies that we feel in our minds: seeing they only strike upon the outward surfaces; they cannot inwardly pervade one another: they cannot have any penetration of dimensions and conjunction of substance.
Bentley. Sermon 2.

The islands are almost every where surrounded by reefs, which appear to be rude and broken, as some violent concussion would naturally leave the solid substance of the earth.
Cook. Voyage, book i. ch. xvi. vol. i.

CONDALIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx pitcher-shaped, five-cleft, permanent; corolla none; disk glandular; style one; seed-vessel an oval drupe; nut one-seeded.

One species, C. microphylla, native of South America. Persoon, Syn.

CONDE'MN, v. CONDE'MNABLE, CONDEMNA'TION, CONDE'MNATORY, CONDE'MNEDLY, CONDE'MNER, CONDE'MNING. } Fr. condemner; It. condamnare; Sp. condenar; (con, and damnare.) Vossius says from damnum, and damnum from δαπάνη, sumptus, impendium.—Varro, lib. iv. Damnum, a demtione. Quinctilian, however, remarks;—damnum esse amissionem eorum, quæ habueris; and further;—mihi ex hoc, quod plerisque criminibus pecuniæ pœna imponebatur, appellatio etiam Damnatio videtur. See Vossius. The root, as Tooke is of opinion, is the A. S. deman, to deem; (dema, juder, demm, damnatio, doom.) In Matthew, v. 21. the Gr. κρίσις, Lat. judicium; A. S. and English, dome or doom, are used emphatically. Ὃς δ' ἂν φονεύσῃ, ἔνοχος ἔσται τῇ κρίσει. Thou shalt not kill, and whoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment. The damnum, the doom, the judgment; the loss or punishment (Quinct.: pœna) to which any one is judged, sentenced, doomed, or damned. The Fr. merci; English, mercy;—has a similar judicial origin. See AMERCE, and MERCY.

CON-DEMN.

To condemn,—is to deem, think, or judge, sc. any one to be guilty, to be criminal;—to give judgment or sentence, or doom, of guilt; to adjudge or declare the penalty or punishment; to censure, blame, reprehend, reprove.

And if ye wisten what it is I wole mersy and not sacrifice: ye schulden never have condempned ynnocentis.
Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xii.

Wherefore if ye had wist what this saying meaneth: I require mercye & not sacrifice: ye would neuer haue condemned innocentes. Bible. Anno 1551.

After many examinations, at last they condemned him [Tyndall] by virtue of the emperour's decree made in the assembly at Ausbrough, and shortly after brought him forth to the place of execution, and there tyed him to a stake, where with a feruent zeale and a loud voyce he cried, Lord, open the eyes of the King of England. Tyndall. Life, fol. B. 2.

Therefore as bi the gift of oon into alle men into condempnacioun, so bi the rightwysnesse of oon into alle men into iustifyng of lyf. Wiclif. Romayns, ch. v.

The condempnation or punishment, is either to reduce hym that erreth into the traine of vertue, or to preserue a multitude frō domage, by puttynge men in feare, that be prone to offende, dreding the sharpe correctiō, that they behold another to suffer.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book ii. fol. 124.

Then she the senses checks, which oft do err,
And e'en against their false reports decrees;
And oft she doth condemn what they prefer;
For with a pow'r above the sense she sees.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, sec. 1.

And unto them he said, come neer (for they stood in the very entry of the door) for I assure you ye shall hear the word of verity, which shall either seal in you this same day your salvation or condemnation. Knox. History of the Reformation, fol. 32.

My lord the king salutes you, and commands
That to his ayde you bring your ready bands,
Or else he swears by him that sits on high,
Before the armies ioyne, your sonne shall die.
At this the lord stood like a man that heares
The judge's voice, that condemnation bears.
Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

What then shall I thinke to be the cause why they proceeded against me with this their bull condemnatorie, so vaine, so ridiculous, so trifling, but only their meere blockishnesse, whereby they seeing my allegations to be true and not able to abide, nor yet to confute the same, thought to terrifie me with their vain ratling of their rotten parchment.
Fox. Martyrs. Answere of M. Luther to the Pope's Bull, fol. 1170.

The Bishop of Carlile neuerthelesse was by the king's clemency preserued alive after the condemnatory sentence.
Speed. Henry IV. Anno 1400.

He that hath wisdome to be truly religious, cannot be condemnedly a fool. Feltham. Resolve 49.

DAL. Since thou determinest weakness for no plea
In man or woman, though to thy own condemning,
Hear what assaults I had, what snares besides,
What sieges girt me round ere I consented.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 945.

If no liberty were allowed under pain of death for any to say, that they were sent from God, how was it possible for the Messias ever to appear, and not to be condemned? for the expectation of him was, that he should be a great person immediately sent from God, for the delivery of his people.
Stillingfleet. Sermon 6. vol. i.

And there is no reason why it should be allowable to eat broth, for instance, in a consumption, and be condemnable to feed upon it to maintain health.
Boyle. Occasional Reflections, reflec. 3.

CON-DEM

For a life led in opposition to the plain practical rules of Christianity, or without that fruit, which Christianity requires, are either of them a sufficient cause of our condemnation.
Atterbury. Sermon 11. vol. iii.

Which reply being made by him of his own accord, and without any command; shows plainly that the word [Amen] ought not there to have been rendered, as in the form of a severe condemnatory prayer, So be it; but, as a form of acquiesence only in God's righteous sentence, Even so O Lord, righteous and true are thy judgments. Clarke. Sermon 15. vol. x.

A foolish thing it is indeed to be one's own accuser and condemner, yet such a fool is every swearer; insomuch that I do not think myself bound to believe any thing that such a man swears: for he that will swear, be sure will lie.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 97.

When Christ asked the woman, "Hath no man condemned thee?" he certainly spoke, and was understood by the woman to speak, of a legal and judicial condemnation; otherwise, her answer, "No man, Lord," was not true. In every other sense of condemnation, as blame, censure, reproof, private judgment, and the like, many had condemned her; all those indeed who brought her to Jesus.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, book iii. part iii.

CONDE'NSE, v. CONDE'NSE, adj. CONDE'NSATE, v. CONDE'NSATE, adj. CONDENSA'TION, CONDE'NSABLE. Fr. condenser; Sp. condensar, It. condensare; Lat. condensare; (con, and densus, of unknown Origin.) Varro says, densum, a dentibus pectinis, quibus feritur. (sc. tela.)

To thicken, to compress or compact into a close mass; into a smaller space.

With flame condens'd thou dost thy jewels fix
And solid colours in it mix,
Flora herself envies to see
Flowers fairer than her own, and durable as she.
Cowley. Hymn to Light.

——————In what shape they choose
Dilated or condens't, bright or obscure,
Can execute their aerie purposes,
And works of love or enmity fulfill.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 429.

For the waters above the firmament, are the waters in the air above us, where the same is more solid and condense, which God separated from the neather waters by a firmament, that is, by an extended distance and vast space.
Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. i. sec. 8.

In brief, 'tis the small measure, and this, only of aiery, empty piety, that hath puft up the man. As they say a little critical learning makes one proud; if there were more, it would condensate and compact itself into less room.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 8. vol. iv.

Anaximenes supposeth that the rainbow is occasioned by the sun shining full against a grosse, thick, and black cloud, in such sort, as his beams be not able to pierce and strike thorow, by reason that they turn again upon it and become condensate.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 678.

The element of the fire, I make no doubt, but by condensation it sometimes loses to the aire, & the aire again by rarefaction to it. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 31.

Now, this agent meeting with resistance in the moveable, and not being in the utmost extremity of density, but condensable yet further, the parts of the mover, that are to overcome this resistance in the moveable, must (to work that effect) be condens'd, and brought together as close as is needful.
Digby. Of Bodies, ch. ix.

And dew, condensing, does her form forego,
And sinks a heavy lump of earth, below.
Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses.

When the cold approacheth, and by condensing, drives the vapours into clouds or drops, then is way made for the sun-beams, till the same vapours, being by further condensation, formed into rain, fall down in drops.

Derham. Physico-Theology, ch. iii. note 1.

When from his lips the fatal name burst out,
A sudden pause th' imperfect sense suspended,
Like the dread stillness of condensing storms.

Johnson. Irene, act ii. sc. 3.

For this reason I never think myself qualified to judge decisively of any man's faculties, whom I have only known in one degree of elevation; but take some opportunity of attending him from the cellar to the garret, and try upon him all the various degrees of rarefaction and condensation, tension and laxity.

Id. The Rambler, No. 117.

CONDERS, Fr. conduire, to guide; a name given to persons placed on heights near the sea-shore, to make signs to the men engaged in the Herring Fishery, out at sea, of the direction in which the shoals are passing. The blue colour caused by the mass of Herrings in the water, is more easily descried from above than on the level of the water. Conders are known also by the names of Huers, Balkers, Directors, and Guiders.

CONDESCE'ND, v. / CONDESCE'NCE, / CONDESCE'NDENCY, / CONDESCE'NDING, n. / CONDESCE'NDINGLY, / CONDESCE'NSION, / CONDESCE'NSIVE, / CONDESCE'NT, n. Fr. condescendre; It. condescendere; Barb. Lat. condescendere; (con, de, and scandere, to climb.) Deorsum a se scandere, vel a vigore propositi desistere, mitigari. See Du Cange.

To come down, or descend from any station or rank, eminence, or superiority;—to come down or descend to a level, to an equality with another; to submit or yield, to assent, or agree. In Scotch, it is equivalent to the vulgar English expression; to light upon, to pitch upon.

And whan that he on hire was condescended,
Him thought his chois it might not bin amended.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9479.

And by that same reson thinketh me
I shuld unto the knotte condescend,
And maken of hire walking sone an ende.

Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10721.

Vpō the euyn of All Seyntes, or the last day of October, it was condyscendid by the lordis spirituall & tēporall, & by y^e^ hole auctorytie of the sayd parliamēt, y^t^ Kyng Hēry shuld contynue & reygne as kynge durynge his naturall lyfe.

Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1361.

The lords being persuaded by the uxorious king, and the facile Earle of Murray, condescended to her desire.

Knox. History of the Reformation, fol. 431.

But if ye please that I your cause decide,
Perhaps I may all further quarrell end,
So ye will sweare my judgment to abide.
Thereto they both did franckly condiscend
And to his doome with listfull eares did both attend.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 1.

Hereupon he went aboord the other ship to make peace: but they would hear no reason, neither yet condescend to restore any thing else which they had of ours.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Charles Leigh, vol. iii. fol. 198.

Then (after needfulnesse of food) I first of all disclos'd
The royall cause of our repaire; mou'd you and your great friend,
To consort our renown'd designs; both straight did condescend.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xi. fol. 157.

'Tis true indeed what Aristotle observes in his μηχανικὰ, that the every-day wonders are the greatest, the perfectest miracles those that by commonness have lost all their veneration; and yet this queen [the seventh day] of most familiar condescendings, is content to be our very week's prospect.

Hammond. Works. Sermon 9. vol. iv.

And asking therefore of himself πῶς δὲ ἐτάξε, how then seems he to have commanded it, he answers συγκαταβαίνων, by condescending only, and submitting himself into humane infirmity, now this συγκαταβάσις, this condescending of God, wherein it consisted, Oecumenius opens.

Hale. Remains, part i. p. 171.

CONDESCEND.

The excellency of these precepts is very apparent, in the greatness of their condescention, the spirituality of their nature, the majesty of the rewards annexed to them, and as Christ hath recommended them to us by his own example.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book v. ch. v.

CONDESUYOS DE AREQUIPA.

Go heav'nly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sovran goodness I adore,
Gentle to me and affable hath been
Thy condescention, and shall be honour'd ever
With grateful memory.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 649.

——— Yet he
Though by this condescent new raies he set
In nature's crown, still thought himself in debt.

Beaumont. Psyche, can. 12. st. 161.

If wee be poore in spirit, God is rich in mercy; hee cannot send us away empty; yet he will not alwaies let us feele his condescent; crossing us in our will that he may advance our benefit.

Hall. Cont. The Faithful Canaanite, vol. ii. fol. 96.

Which passage I find cited by Crepie's answer to Dr. Pierce, adding thus, See the condescence of this great king.

Puller. Moderation of the Church of England.

Upon the comfortable feeling of a gracious condescent, follows an happy fruition of God in all his favours.

Hall. The Devout Soul, sec. 20.

If she [virtue] step out into zeal, satirical rebuke, and contestation, it is a condescent and debasement for the present.

More. Defence of the Moral Cabbala, fol. 178.

Not starting of high and intricate questions, and concluding them by subtle arguments, but familiarly and condescendingly setting out the creation according to the most easie and obvious conceits, they themselves had of those things they saw in the world.

Id. The Introduction to the Defence of Cabbala, fol. 50.

The respect and condescendency which you have already shown me is that, for which I can never make any suitable return.

Boyle. Letter from Dr. William Avery, November 9, 1682.

Was it not an astonishing condescension for the greatest prince in the world to make his first entrance upon earth in no nobler a guise and appearance, than as the son of a poor maid espoused to a carpenter, and to take up his first lodging in no better a place than a manger?

Sharp. Works. Sermon 4. vol. v.

There is not the least of the Divine favours, which, if we consider the condescensive tenderness, the clear intention, the undeserved frankness, the chearful debonairity expressed therein, hath not dimensions larger than our comprehension, colours too fair, and lineaments too comely for our weak sight thoroughly to discern.

Barrow. Sermon 8. vol. i.

They were offended, some of them at least, because he did not live in a way more austere, and in their opinion more becoming the dignity, which he assumed; because he condescended to converse with people of bad reputation, with publicans and sinners.

Jortin. Discourse 1. vol. i.

We should often consider (what few of us do consider) that we have wrongnesses in our own dispositions; and that if we are displeased with an opposition to our humours, we ought to shew a condescension to the humours of others.

Gilpin. Sermon 9. vol. i.

CONDESUYOS DE AREQUIPA, a District of Peru, extending about thirty leagues to the north of Lima, abounding in silver mines, which have been long unworked. It is chiefly inhabited by Indians, who rear cochineal, with which they supply the woollen manufactures of the adjoining departments.

This territory, being chiefly on the Andes, is broken and disrupted; the roads are bad, and the climate is cold; but it is famous for wheat, which is grown in abundance in the low grounds. There are some gold mines which are deep, in very hard strata, and produce so poor a metal as to render them very expensive, particularly as the rock must be opened with gunpowder.

CONDE-NUYOS DE ARE-QUIPA.

Chuquibamba is the chief Town of this District; it is a small place, of little note, four leagues from Camana.

CONDIGN

CONDI'GN, adj. CONDI'GNITY, CONDI'GNLY. } Fr. condigne; It. condegno; Sp. condigno; Lat. condignus; (con, and dignus; of uncertain Origin.)

Deserved, whether punishment or reward; worthy, meritorious; merited, earned.

But so true is it that her godly endeuoyre (which you speake & murmour against) shal not lacke condygne and woorthye prayse, that when my deathe shall by preachyng of the gospell, be renowned and spoken of throughout all the whole world, she shall likewise be remembred and spoke of, because she honoured it with suche a gyft and present before I dyed.

Udall. Mark, ch. xiv.

For he that for euery lyttel occasion is moued with compassion, and beholdynge a man punyshed condygnely for his offence, lamenteth or waylethe, is called pitiouse, which is a sycknesse of the mynde.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book ii. fol. 120.

Then what's the cause that Joue thus mock'd
may not condignlye soone
In irefull mode and dire reuenge
engourge his puffed cheekes
Gaynste all this sorte. Drant. Horace. Satire 1.

Calle to thy remembrance, if thou hast alway rendered vnto euery man condigne thankes or benefitte, of whom thou hast kyndnes receyued, or if thou hast alway remembred euery one of theym, that haue doone to the any commoditie or pleasure.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book iii.

And after it was vsed that kynges of Englande whanne they were crowned, sente, for an offeryage, their crownes vnto Seynt Edmõde's shryne, and redemed theym afterwardes with a condygne pryce. Fabyan, vol. i. ch. cc.

God must then of his righteousnes ordeine a place of purgatory, wher his soule shall haue a further punishment to make a condigne and full satisfaction for that sinne, and so to bee purged and purified before it shal be able and woorthy to be admitted to receaue the eternall ioye in heauen.

Rastell, in Frith. Workes, fol. 16.

Herselfe of all that rule she deemed most condigne.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vii. can. 6.

It is as strange that those of your side should aver that the good works of those that are remoote, should out of condignity merit heaven (which is far beyond all that this world can administer) and yet give it under their own hands that they are not worthy governaments terrene and finite.

Feltham. On the Low Countries. Letter 17. fol. 93.

And herein they so enwrap themselves with their termes of the first grace, the second grace, grace precedent, grace concomitant, grace following, with merit of congruence and merit of condignity: that they neither understand the true justification, neither can other men understand what they do mean by their justification.

Strype. Records. A Letter or Discourse by Thomas Sampson.

And since that neither wealth nor want
To goodness may thee win
A greeuous death, condignly shall
Cut off thy grounded sinne.

Warner. Albion's England, book ii. ch. xi.

The mouths of the common people were now full of murmurings upon the king's continual wasting sickness, and many forbore not to talk lewdly against some, of using unfair ways for dispatching the king out of the world, on whom condign vengeance was taken. Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

Though there be nothing of causality, nothing of condignity, nothing of merit in it; yet there is such a congruity and fitness in it, to qualify a man for pardon, for God hath appointed it as the only means whereby to obtain it.

Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 87.

In this case of the Abbot of Ryvaux, the other commissioners proceeded according to the law, and your credence to me to them related; and condignly have removed from the rule of his abbacy, and administration of the same.

Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Legh to Cromwell, Anno 1538.

It is his majesty's express will and pleasure, that you do take every step authorized by law to bring all such heinous offenders to the most exemplary and condign punishment.

Mr. Secretary Pitt to the Governors, &c. in North America; Aug. 24, 1760.

CONDIMENT, It. condimento; Lat. condire; compounded of con, and the ancient duo, for do. It properly, therefore, is res plures in unum dare; and so to mix them as to make them savoury. Vossius. See CONDITE.

For many things are swallowed by animals, rather for condiment, gust or medicament, than any substantial nutriment.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xxii.

Having ascertained the rates of purchase and sale, the length of the way, the expences of food and of condiments, &c.; let the king oblige traders to pay taxes on their saleable commodities.

Sir William Jones. Institutes of Hindu Law.

CONDISCIPLE, Fr. a school-fellow, or fellow-disciple. Cotgrave. Lat. condiscipulus; (con, and discipulus, from discere, to learn.)

To the right dearly beloved brethren and condisciples dwelling together. Martin. On the Marriage of Priests, (1554.)

CONDISE, i. e. Conduit, q. v.

But I ne can the nombre tell
Of stremes small that by deuise
Mirth had done come through condise.

Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose.

CO'NDITE, v. Co'NDITE, adj. Co'NDITING, n. } It. condire; Lat. condire, conditum. See above, CONDIMENT.

So to mix as to savour or sweeten, to preserve in a savoury or sweet taste.

The ryndes, [oranges] taken in a lyttel quantitie do comfort the stomache, where it digesteth, specially condite with sugar, and taken fastynge in a small quantitie.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book ii.

Crato prescribes the condite fruit of wild rose, to a nobleman his patient, to be taken before dinner or supper, to the quantity of a chestnut. Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy.

Much after the same manner as the sugar doth in the conditing of pears, quinces, and the like. Grew. Museum.

CONDITION

CONDI'TION, v. CONDI'TION, n. CONDI'TIONAL, adj. CONDI'TIONAL, n. CONDITIONA'LITY, CONDI'TIONALLY, CONDI'TIONARY, CONDI'TIONATE, v. CONDI'TIONATE, adj. CONDI'TIONED. } Fr. condition; It. conditione; Sp. condicion; Lat. conditio; from condere, conditum, (con, and do.) Conditio, proprie est actio condendi. Deinde est passio, qud quid conditur. Martinius. Conditio, ferè similar pro qualitate qud quid condi, id est fieri. Vossius.

The state in which things are put or placed together; the qualities or attributes, or properties, of persons or things, whether good or bad, general or particular, accidental or inherent, physical or moral; the whole or partial circumstances, under which any thing is done or required to be done; is agreed or covenanted, bargained or stipulated to be done.

I rede in a cronicle thus
Of Galba, and of Vitellus,
The whiche of Spayne both were
The greatest of all other there,
And bothe of o condicion
After the disposicion
Of glotony and dronkship

Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 130.

And yet we maye voure (saith he) to do a thynge but for one tyme, and upon a condycyon also. Here he tyeth and condycyoneth with God whiche approueth nothyng.

Bale. Apologie, fol. 59.

Let euery man haue his wyfe, and thinke her the fayrest and the best conditioned, and euery woman her husband so to.

Tyndall. Workes, fol. 285.

And it is oftentymes seen that dyuers, whiche before they came in autorite, were of good & virtuous condicions, being in their properitie were vtterly changed, and dispising their olde frendes, set all their study and pleasure on their new acquaintaunce.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 135.

And this noble knight, Sir Johan Chandos, lyued nat after his hurte past a day and a nyght, but so dyed; God haue mercy on his soule: for in a hundred yere after, there was nat a more curtesse, nor more fuller of noble vertues, and good condycions amonge the Englysshmen than he was.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 270.

Notwithstanding one thing I must put you in remembraunce, that you haue falsly translated the text, for the text hath not that cōditional although I was contented to take it at your handes to see what you could proue. Frith. Workes, fol. 71.

Likewise person for person, number for number, and interrogatiō for a coditionall, and such lyke is with the Hebrues a common vsage. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 32.

But this offre was conditionally, so that the whole agrement toke effecte, or else not.
Hall. Henry VIII. The seventeenth Yere.

There bee certaine men like conditioned to dogges, if there bee any man that is not theyr countryman, or that they loue not, or know not, say any thing agaynst them, then cry they, an heretycke, an hereticke. Barnes. Workes, fol. 207.

The traine oyles which you laded this yeere came well conditioned, and the caske was good and of a good sise.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Letter of the Mosc. Company.

He by his procurement of his friendes returned home againe to his awne: but the nobles of the realme condicioned with him that he should reforme his olde maners.
Grafton. Egeldred. Danes.

Small towns which stand stiff, till great shot
Enforce them, by war's law condition not.
Donne. Love's Exchange.

It may be that consideration of tyme, place, state, condition and other circumstances, hath altered some of them in some poynts, as wise (and not wilfull) men in such matters by such circumstances be oftentimes altered. Whitgift. Defence, fol. 780.

Fond man, that looks on earth for happiness,
And here long seeks what here is never found,
For all our good we hold from heaven by lease,
With many forfeits and conditions bound.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 7.

And, oh, what man's condition can be worse
Then his whom plenty starves and blessings curse:
The beggars but a common fate deplore,
The rich poor man's emphatically poor.
Cowley. Of Avarice. Essay 7.

Hee [Sir William Stanley] had said; that if hee were sure, that young man were King Edward's sonne, he would neuer beare armes against him. This case seemes somewhat an hard case, both in respect of the conditionall, and in respect of the other words. But for the conditionall it seemeth the judges of that time (who were learned men, and the three chief of them of the priuy council) thought it was a dangerous thing to admit ifs and ands, to qualifie words of treason; whereby euery man might expresse his malice, and blanch his danger.
Bacon. King Henry VII., fol. 134.

And as this clear proposal of the promises may inspirit our endeavours, so is the conditionality most efficacious to necessitate and engage them. Decay of Piety.

Do they ever expect this beloved remission by performing the condition of repentance? Do we ever go about to make ourselves capable of receiving this mercy conditionally offer'd us?
Hammond. Works. Sermon 16.

Yet some write, that King William granted Cumberland to Malcolme King of Scots to hold from him conditionally, that the Scots should not attempt any thing prejudicial to the crown of England, for which grant King Malcolme did him homage.
Baker. William I. Anno 1076.

So is it usual amongst us to qualifie and conditionate the twelve months of the year answerably unto the temper of the twelve dayes in Christmas. Sir Thomas Brown, book vi. ch. iv.

Deborah had been no prophetesse, if she durst have sent in her own name; her message is from him that sent herselfe, Hath not the Lord God of Israel commanded? Barac's answer is faithfull, though conditionate, and doth not so much intend a refusal to goe without her, as a necessary bond of her presence with him.
Hall. Cont. Jael and Sisera.

To which purpose you must again remember, that God's promises being the ground of hope, and those promises being but seldom absolute, most what conditionate, the hope (if it be Christian grace of hope) must be proportioned and attemperate to the promise. Hammond. Works, vol. i. fol. 17.

The other, with much face and little shame, saith both of Martyr and Bucer, that at their first coming into England, they were conditioned with to teach the religion, whatsoever it were, that should be established in the parliament approaching.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1548.

So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown:
All think him worthy of a greater place,
And recommend him to the royal grace;
That exercis'd within a higher sphere,
His virtues more conspicuous might appear.
Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

But the Ninevites did not reason thus, but urged after another manner; who can tell, say they, but God will return and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not [Joel] ch. iii. v. 9. they believed God's decree to be conditional.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 5. vol. vi.

Would God in mercy dispense with it as a conditionary, yet we could not be happy without it, as a natural qualification for heaven. Norris.

Whilst the church of Christ was subject to insults and persecution from the Pagan powers, and in a low and distressed condition, the Christians assembled together as often as they could, and took all possible care to instruct, and animate, and comfort, and relieve one another.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. ii. fol. 24.

Every covenant of God with man, on the system of God's revealed will, is a covenant of grace or favour; which therefore may be justly made (as in fact it is made) with this conditional punishment annexed and declared.
Warburton. Works. Sermon 7. vol. ix.

The loss, indeed, was immense; but to the looser no wrong was done: and of him who recalled the free gift conditionally bestowed, and justly forfeited, no complaint, in reason, can be made.
Hurd. Works. Sermon 30. vol. vii.

CONDO'LE, v. } Fr. condouloir; Sp. condoler;
CONDO'LEMENT, } It. condolore; Lat. condolere; con,
CONDO'LENCE, } i. e. una cum, et dolere, to grieve.
CONDO'LING, n. } Minshew.

To lament or bewail, to sorrow or bemoan, or grieve, in sympathy with the grief or pain of another. To profess sympathy.

——— Leaue the same
To our deare sister sad Melpomene,
That she her sweet patheticke voice may frame
In doleful dittie to condole the same.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 783.

HAR. I come not Samson, to condole thy chance
As these perhaps, yet wish it had not been,
Though for no friendly intent.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1076.

——— But to perseuer
In obstinate condolement, is a course
Of impious stubbornnesse. 'Tis vnmanly greefe,
It shewes a will most incorrect to heauen.
Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 154.

Like that doubty Centurion Afranius in Lucian; who, to imitate the noble Pericles in his Epitaphian Speech, stepping up after to bewail the slain Severanus, falls into a pitiful condolement to think of those costly suppers, and drinking banquets which he must now taste no more.
Milton. Animadversion upon Remonstrants Defence.

Thy blessed mother, and those other zealous associates of her owne sexe, were most passionate in their wailings; and why should I think, that all that devout multitude, which so lately cried Hosanna in the streets did not also beare their part in these publique cōdolings.
Hall. Cont. The Crucifixion, vol. ii. fol. 267.

Their songs are very melancholy and doleful, so is their musick: but whether it be natural to the Indians to be thus melancholy, or the effect of their slavery, I am not certain: but I have always been prone to believe, that they are then only condoling their misfortunes, the loss of their country and liberties.

Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1684.

Her congratulation and condoleances are equally words of course; and one would be thought wonderfully ill-bred, that should build upon such expressions as encouragements, to expect from them any instance of friendship. Tatler, No. 109.

To Thebes the neighb'ring princes all repair,
And with condolence the misfortune share.

Crowall. Ovid. Metamorphoses.

——— By his side fast laid,
I press'd his hand in mine, and on it dropp'd
The tear of sad condolence. Brooke. Comrade.

CONDONATION, Lat. condonare, atum, which signifies, says Gesner, the same as donare, with some augmentation, sometimes also remittere, non exigere, quod debetur; and thus, to forgive, to pardon.

Now I professed at first, to take justification only in this acceptation; and inferred thereupon against the gagger, no more than was enough to confute him and his, and we teach and believe, that when sinnes are pardoned by God, God doth not change the mind of the sinner, neyther yet destroyeth in him the blot and body of sinne; but that the same remaining in the soule of man, in like maner as it did before condonation, is only taken away by a not imputation of the guilt.

Mountague. Appeale to Cæsar, fol. 169.

CONDU'CE, v.
CONDU'CEMENT,
CONDU'CENT,
CONDU'CIBLE,
CONDU'CIBILITY,
CONDU'CIBLENESS,
CONDU'CIVE,
CONDU'CIVENESS.

Lat. conducere; con, and ducere, to lead. Of uncertain Origin.

To lead, draw, or bring together, to guide or direct, sc. to the same end or purpose; to tend, subserve or contribute. It is used by our old writers as we now use conduct.

It shal be right expedient for conducing of things to the better trayne and purpose, that they have an ambassadour here resident, by whose meanes the matiers may be directed to moche the more perfection, as by their wisdomes they can wel consider.

Strype. Memorials. Cardinal Wolsey to Mr. Secretary Pace.

For the resistance whereof, the king's highness was compelled, after the universal peace, by the great study, labour, and travel of his grace conduced, and the same by some of the contrahents newly violate and infringed; in shewing the form of the treatise thereupon made again, to take armour.

Burnett. Records. Act 26. Anno Regni. 21 Henry VIII.

The Kyng of Scottes our nephieu and neighbour, whom we in his youth and tender age preserued, and maintained from the great daunger of other, and by our authoritie and power cõduced him safely in the reall possession of his estate, he now compelleth and forceth vs for preseruation of our honor and right to vse our puissaũce & power against him.

Hall. Henry VIII. The thirty-fourth Yere.

They toke it for an ornature of learnyng and for a thyng very conducible to the vnderstandynge of the Scriptures, to define and and diuyde all thynges, as did the Peripatetyckes or natural philosophers of Aristotle's secte, and so to proue them by naturall demonstracyons. Bale. Votaries, part ii. fol. 105.

As if works could no way conduce into the attaining of salvation but by way of merit and desert, and not by way of grace and favour of God in Christ.

Mede. Works. Discourse 40. book 1.

And yet, for all this, shee shall go; if more conducible
That course be, than her holding here. I rather wish the weale
Of my lov'd armie then the death.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book i. fol. 3.

For every commonwealth is in general defin'd, a society sufficient of itself in all things conducible to well-being and commodious life. Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilike.

Which two contemplations are not inferiour to any for either pleasantness in themselves or conducibleness for the finding out of the right frame of nature. More. Song of the Soul. Preface.

Duties, as deriving their obligation from their conducibility to the promoting of our chief end: and moral, as depending upon motives. Bishop Wilkins. Of Nat. Religion, book i. ch. xiv.

A man that should meet with a palace beset with pleasant gardens, adorned with stately avenues, furnished with well-contrived aqueducts, cascades, and all other appendages, conducing to convenience or pleasure, would easily imagine, that proportionable architecture and magnificence were within.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book i. ch. v.

The conducement of all this is but cabalistical.

Gregory. Works, fol. 68.

I give you free and full power to move the heads, or to do any other act fitting or conducent to the good success of this business.

Archbishop Laud. History of his Chanc. at Oxford, fol. 131.

A general has full power to draw out as much, or as little of his army to fight as he shall judge most conducible for the success.

South. Sermon 7. vol. x.

X. That the practical duties which the Christian religion enjoyns, are all such, as are most agreeable to our natural notions of God, and most perfective of the nature, and conducive to the happiness and well-being of men.

Clarke. Attributes, p. 155.

Open and bare-faced knavery, rarely serves a man's turn in this world; but it is under the mask of virtue and honesty that it usually performs those feats it doth; which is no less than a demonstration of the conduciveness of those things, to promote our temporal interests. Sharp. Works. Sermon 2. vol. i.

But to return thither, whence we have digressed, and mention some more familiar examples of the conduciveness of the smallness of a body's disjointed parts to its fluidity, we may take notice.

Boyle. History of Fluidity, sec. 11.

All agree, that Moses' main end was the abolition of idolatry, and preservation of the unity. The institution of the sabbath is shewn by Spenser and others to be, of all the ceremonial, the very rite most conducive to this end.

Warburton. Works. To Dr. Middleton, vol. xii. fol. 433.

CONDU'CT, v.
CONDU'CT, n.
CONDU'CTING,
CONDU'CTION,
CONDU'CTOR,
CONDU'CTRESS,
CONDUCTI'TIOUS.

Lat. conducere, ductum; Fr. conduire; It. condurre; Sp. conduzir. See above, CONDUCE.

To lead, draw or bring together; to accompany as leader or guide; and thus, to guide, direct or manage.

Conductitious; brought together, sc. by hire; and, thus, hired.

But lyke the babes of noble birthe
to Rome I was conducted,
With lordly artes that might be seeme
the beste, I was instructed.

Drant. Horace. Satire 6.

Here certayne poste horses and three Tartars were appointed for vs, to conduct vs from hence with al spede vnto duke Bathy.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i. fol. 66.

You are to vnderstand, that it is our pleasure, that all merchants of what nation soeuer, shall haue safe conduct to pass and repass with their merchandize into England.

Id. Ib. King John, Safe Cond. vol. i. fol. 129.

Likewise by the sayd cisterne there is drinke conueyed thorow certaine pipes and conducts, such as vseth to be drunke in the emperor's court, vpon the whiche also there hang many vessels of golde, wherein, whosoeuer will may drinke of the sayd licour.

Id. Ib. Of the Citie of Cambaleth, vol. ii. part i. fol. 61.

He [Xenophon] leaueth to the readers therof an incomparable swetenes and example of lyuynge, specyally for the conductynge and wel orderyng of hostes or armies.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book i. fol. 37.

I am the light of the world, it is right mete that you be guided by me, and folowe my conducting, and not goe before the light.

Udall. On John, ch. xi.

But it is necessarye that euery one of vs as well captayne as conductor and souldyer be always in feare to fall into any danger throughe his faulte. Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 49.

Likewise the dukes assigne places vnto euery Millenarie, or conducter of a thousand souldiers, the Millenaries vnto each captain of an 100.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i. fol. 60.

Wherfore as before I haue vsed and done to gyue thanks to the most blessyd Virgyne our lady, Saynt Mary, as fartherer and conductrice of thys worke; so here agayne I salute and hayle to the vi. ioye of ye forenamed vii. ioyes.

Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 218.

At Jove's broad beech these godheads met, and first Jove's sonne objects,
Why, burning in contention thus, doe thy extreame affects Conduct thee from our peaceful hill? is it to oversway
The doubtful victory of fight, and give the Greeks the day?

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book vii. fol. 96.

O if I could recount the crosses and the cares,
That from my cradle to my beare conduct me with despairs;
Then hungrie Tantalus pleas'd with his lot would stand.

Stirling. Aurora. Elegie 1.

Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch, to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case.

Shakspeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Then grew the fame of Sertorius to be so great, that even in Rome itself he was thought to be the noblest captain, and of best conduction of any man in his time.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 493.

Hoab the son of Raguel the Midianite who assisted the Israelites, in their conduction thro' the wilderness of Pharan.

Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. viii. sec. 12.

The persons were neither titularies nor perpetual curates but entirely conductitious, and removeable at pleasure. Ayliffe.

Did my return bring comfort to her sorrow?
Then haste, conduct me to the lovely mourner.

Smith. Phædra and Hippolitus.

Many other instances, like these, there are, wherein I say, we shall never be able to give ourselves a satisfactory account of the Divine conduct, as it appears to us at present, without drawing our arguments and reflexions from a future state, and forming such a scheme of things, as shall at once take in both time and eternity.

Atterbury. At the funeral of Mr. Bennett. Sermon 10. vol. ii.

The Holy Spirit is described in the New Testament, as the immediate author and worker of all miracles, even of those done by our Lord himself; and as the conducter of Christ in all the actions of his life, during his state of humiliation here upon earth. Clarke. On the Trinity, sec. 28.

The idea of an alliance was conceived, in preference to any other mode of conducting the argument, because the theory of civil government had been formed on the like notion of a contract between prince and people.

Warburton. Life, by Hurd.

If the Jews, under his conduct should endeavour to recover their liberties, and fail in it, they knew that the nation would be severely punished by the Romans.

Jortin. Discourses on Christian Religion.

A favour'd goat, conductor of my herd,
Stray'd to a dale, whose outlet is the post
To Phocians left, and penetrates to Greece.

Glover. Leonidas, book x.

CO'NDUIT, Co'NDUIT-PIPES, Co'NDUIT-WATER. } Sometimes written conduct; that by or through which any thing is conducted; particularly to conducts for water, wine, &c. See CONDUCT.

Feltham writes conduit, (i. e. conduct) as a verb.

By valyaunt motion of the spirites, all things superfluous be expelled, and the conduitts of the body cleased; wherefore this parte of phisike is not to be contempned or neglected in the education of chyldren, and specially from the age of xiiii. yeres vppwarde, in whiche tyme strength, and courage increaseth.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book viii. fol. 59.

And this yere, were proclamacyons made in London, and thoroughe Englande, that all straungers shuld auoyde y^e^ lande by Mychelmasse next folowynge, excepte suche as came with marchaundyse, and to make sale of them vnder the kynge's saufe conduyt. Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1221.

They that infect a prince or king with wicked counsail, are not they more wicked enchaunters, considering thei do as much, as if one should poyson a conduite head, or a river from whence all men fetch their water. Wilson. Arte of Rhetorike, fol. 127.

Condits by lively springs from their owld course I drewe,
For to refreshe the frutefull trees, that in my gardynes grewe.

Surrey. Eccelesiastes, ch. ii.

Be strong in faith, for now the time is nigh,
That from the conduits of the lofty sky
The flood shall fall. Drayton. Noah's Flood.

Water in conduit-pipes can rise no higher
Than the well-head, from whence it first doth spring.

Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, sec. 30.

Suddainly were thrust into the hall, divers vessels of gold and silver full of this perfumed oyl, that ran out of them like conduit-water, and did wet all the hall.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 865.

And thus they wooed fond man; who taken with the subtil cozenages of vice, yeelded to lye with her: where he had his nature so impoyson'd, that his seed was all contaminated, and his corruption even to this day, is still conduited to his undone posterity. Feltham. Resolve 9.

Dying men lay trembling one upon another in the streets, and men half dead about every conduit through desire of water.

Hobbs. Thucydides, book. ii.

This is the fountain of all those bitter waters of which, through an hundred different conduits, we have drunk until we are ready to burst. Burke. Thoughts on the present Discontents.

CONE, Co'NICK, Co'NICAL, Co'NICALLY, Co'NOID. } Fr. cone; It. and Sp. cono; Lat. conus; Gr. κῶνος. A solid body, having a circular base, and gradually decreasing to a point, or end.

Now had night measur'd with her shadowie cone
Half way up hill this vast sublunar vault.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 776.

As therefore each side of an arch descendeth alike from the coane or top point; so both the parts of that their government was alike deduced from the king, each of them holding correspondency one with the other (like two loving sisters) both in aspect, and in lineaments.

Spelman. Of the Ancient Government of England.

Tail conoid, with spines on the margin.

Pennant. Zoology. The Astacus Lobster.

Foure grisly blacksmiths stoutly did their task
Upon an anvile form'd in conick wise:
They neither minded who, nor what I ask,
But with stern grimy look do still avise
Upon their works.

More. On the Soul, part i. book iii. st. 6.

But the illiterate people troubled themselves with no such curiosities, nor easily conceived any such difference betwixt that determinate conical shadow of the earth, which is night, and that infinite primitive darkness that had no bounds before there was any light Id. Defence of the Literal Cabbala, fol. 59.

Say, Alciphron, are the lakes, the rivers, or the ocean bounded by straight lines? Are the hills and mountains exact cones or pyramids?

Berkeley. Works. The Minute Philosopher. Dialogue 7.

Upon this plug we placed an almost conically shaped weight of lead.

Boyle. New Experiments about the Pressure of the Air's spring, &c.

Cheyne, who with the desire inherent in mathematicians to reduce every thing to mathematical images, considers all existence as a cone, allows that the basis is at an infinite distance from the body. Johnson. Review of Jenyns. Free Inquiry.

A man may seem still farther from this study of divinity when he is learning the elements of the conic sections; but he is learning that without which he never will be a proficient in natural philosophy; and without some good proficiency in natural philosophy, he will be an incompetent expositor of many parts of the Bible. Bishop Horsley. Charge, fol. 57.

And almost all of them had a white wrapper about their heads, not much unlike a turban; or in some other instances like a high conical cap. Cook. Voyage, vol. v. book ii. ch. i.

CONFA'BULATE, v. CONFABULA'TION, CONFA'BULATORY. } Lat. fabula, from the verb, fari. Varro.

Nothing more clear, says

CONFABULATE. Vossius, than that Fable is spoken as well of that which is true, as that which is false. And hence Confabulandi vox.

CONFARREATION. To talk or prattle together.

All adversity finds ease in complaining (as Isidore holds) and 'tis a solace to relate it,

Ἀγαθὴ ἡ παραλφασις ἐστιν ἐταῖρε.

Friends' confabulations are comfortable at all times, as fire in winter, shade in summer, quale sopor fessis in gramine, meat and drinke to him that is hungry or athirst.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 89.

Upon one Peter Jones, a doctor and a parson, there is a confabulatorie epitaph.

Weaver. Funeral Monuments, fol. 577

I shall not ask Jean Jaques Rousseau,
If birds confabulate or no;
'Tis clear, that they were always able
To hold discourse, at least in fable.

Cowper. Pairing Time Anticipated.

CONFAMILIAR, Lat. con, and familiaris, from familia; and this perhaps from Ὁμιλία, spiritu in f abeunte. See Vossius. Ὁμιλία from ὁμῦ, eodem, and ἴλη, turba.

And though the imployments, pleasures, and exercises of our former life were without question very different from those in the present estate; yet 'tis no doubt but that some of them were more confamiliar and analogous to some of our transactions, than others.

Glanville. Preexistence of Souls, fol. 104.

CONFARREATION, Lat. confarreatio; con, and far. Far unde sit, non satis est apertum. See the Quotation from Adam. The dissolution of this ceremony was called Diffarreatio.

Whether I have hit upon your fancy, or fitted your mistress, I know not, I pray let me hear what success they have. So wishing you your heart's desire, and, if you have her, a happy confarreation, I rest in verse and prose.

Howell. Letter 22. book i. sec. 5.

Confarreatio, was when a man and woman were joined in marriage by the Pontifex Maximus, or Flamen Dialis, in presence of at least ten witnesses, by a set form of words, and by tasting a cake made of salt, water, and flour, called FAR, or Panis Farreus vel Farreum libum; which was offered with a sheep in sacrifice to the gods.

Adam. Roman Antiquities, p. 425.

It is doubted whether the origin of CONFARREATIO is to be ascribed to Romulus or to Numa. In the reign of Tiberius the ceremony had fallen into desuetude; for the Emperor wishing to choose a Flamen Dialis, who, as ancient usage demanded, must be born of parents thus affianced, could not find three Patricians so qualified. (Tac. Ann. iv. 16.) Pliny nevertheless (xviii. 3,) states that no sacred observance had been more regarded, in sacris nihil religiosius erat than this nuptial rite.

A remnant of this ceremony is still preserved in parts of Germany, and among ourselves also in the distribution of Bride Cake; a harmless custom which does not escape the vigilant censure of Moresimus as savouring of Popery. Sumanalia, Panis erat ad formam rotæ factus: hoc utuntur Papani in nuptiis.—Papatus seu deprav. Rel. origo et increment. 165.

Confarreatio appears to have been used in the middle ages, as one among other binding ceremonies in grants and agreements. Du Cange (ad voc.) cites the following paragraph from a Charter of Clovis I. in the Vth Century, pro fundatione Abbatiæ Miciacensis. Miciacum concedimus et quicquid est fisci nostri intra Fluminum alveos et per sanctam Confarreationem et annulum inexceptionaliter tradimus.

CONFATED, Lat. con, and fatum, past participle of fari; from the Gr. φα-ειν, animi cogitata in lucem pro ferre. Lennep. CONFATE

Declared, published, determined or decreed, at the same time, or in connection, with some thing else. CONFI

In like manner his brother Stoic, Chrysippus, insists in Tully, De Fato, ch. xiii. that when a sick man is fated to recover, it is confated that he shall send for a physician.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. part iii. ch. xxvi.

CONFE'CT, v. CO'NFECT, n. CONFE'CTION, CONFE'CTIONED, CONFE'CTIONARY, CONFE'CTIONER, CONFE'CTORY, CONFE'CTORY. Conficere, confectum; (con, and facere, to make.) To make up together, to mix or mingle, to compose or put together. Minshew says, "A confection or mingling of divers things together; a making and conditing of conserves and sweet-meats." Fr. confection; It. confettione; Sp. confection.

In all this world ther n'is no creature,
That ete or drank hath of this confecture,
Not but the mountance of a corne of whete
That he ne shal his life anon forelete.

Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12796.

For who that loketh on the bokes
It seith, confection of cookes,
A man hym shulde well auise,
How he it toke; and in what wise.

Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 131.

But of the phisicke and medicine euangelicall, there is but onely one receipte, which ought of no mortall creature to bee either corrupted or altered. And finally to conclude it is confect of no mo but one simple. Udall. Preface to Luke.

Also the indico that doeth come from thence to die blew, is a certayne herb that groweth in the wild fieldes, and is gathered at one time of the yere, and burnt, and of the ashes thereof with other confections put thereunto, the said indico is made.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Robert Tomson, vol. iii. fol. 454.

Being grene, or well confectioned in syrope, it [ginger] comforteth moche the stomake and head, and quyckeneth remembrance, if it be taken in the morowe fastynge.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book ii.

13. And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks and to be bakers.

Bible. 1 Samuel, ch. viii.

For surely, men are wont to attribute so much unto certain dainty meats and sweet perfumes and ointments, calling them trim and fine, and giving this praise unto them, that they be well dress'd and confected. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 615.

And had the helpe of heauen not being in place
The roiall Virgin in a moment's space
In stead of that, which should haue life protected,
Had tasted death in poison strong confected.

Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 858.

And yet those dainties of my joyes,
Are still confected with some feares,
That well accustom'd with my cruel fate
Can neuer trust the gift th' enemie giues.

Stirling. Aurora. Song 6.

My onely sorrow is that ere I dide
My sacrafice was not in full perfection,
And that thy wicked sire and more beside,
Did not with thee, taste of that strong confection.

Harrington. Orlando, book xxxvii. st. 61.

——— And [though] most of the shops
Of the best confectioners in London ransack'd,
To furnish out a banquet; yet my lady
Call'd me penurious rascal, and cried out,
There was nothing worth the eating.

Massinger. The City Madam, act ii. sc. 1.

——— In which the wanton might
Of confectory art endeavour'd how
To charm all tastes to their sweet overthrow.

Beaumont. Psyche, can. 4. st. 147.

These arts (to divide them not accurately, but popularly) do serve either to relieve man's necessities, as physick and husbandry;

FECT — ON- DER.

or for his accommodation, as the trades of shoe-makers, dyers, tanners, &c.; or for his delight, as the trades of painters, confectioners, perfumers, &c.

Boyle. Natural Philosophy, part ii. ess. 1.

With such qualifications it was not very difficult for him to gain the heart of Miss Comfit, the only daughter of Mr. Comfit the confectioner. Johnson. The Idler, No. 16.

Thy nightly visits to my chamber made,
That thou might'st know me safe and warmly laid;
Thy morning bounties ere I left my home,
The biscuit, or confectionary plum.
Cowper. My Mother's Picture.

The mysteries of CONFECTIONS have employed the time and thoughts of numerous French writers. One of the oldest works on this subject issued from the press of Lyons in 1590, under the title La Practique pour faire toutes sortes des Confitures, Condimens, Distillations, Compostes, Cottignac, Hypocrats, Pigmens, Tyzenne, Eaux de bõne odeur, Parfuns, Diuers sauons, Amidon, Poudre, Bonne Moustarde; and besides these nondescript good things, moreover, a Vinegar which is a sovereign remedy for the Plague. One of the drinks possesses marvellous qualities: The Receipt is entitled Pour faire eau pour conforter et eschauffer l'estomac, et restouyr l'entendement, et pour faire avoir bõne memoire, et tenir le corps en chaleur naturelle, et pour purger toutes mauvaises humeurs qui sont au corps de l'homme et de la femme, et est chose approuuée.

The high estimation in which this Art was held, may be learned from the assurance of the Author of Nouvelles Instructions pour les Confitures, 1698, who informs his readers that there are beaucoup de Dames adonneés a la piété qu'en font de plusieurs sortes; or yet more forcibly from a passage in the Dedication with which Pierre David still earlier addresses La Confiturier de la Cour, 1659, to M. de Lune, Escuyer de Cuisine de feu Monseigneur le Duc de Rohan. So highly did the Duke estimate this Artist's abilities, that it seems he considered him un homme capable de donner l'ame a sa table friande et delicate. En effect, Monsieur, est il quelque ragoust, pour fin et pour extraordinaire qu'il soit, que vous ne rafiniez encore et a qui vous ne donniez quelque chose capable de flatter le goust et de l'emouvoir?

It is to France also, as we suspect, that we are originally indebted for a Treatise entitled The true way of preserving and candying and making several sorts of sweetmeats according to the best and truest manner, made publick for the benefit of all English Ladies and Gentlewomen, especially for my Schollars, 1681. The anonymous author of this Tract, whether it be translated or not, deserves much thanks for the instructions afforded how "to make Quiddeny of Rasberryes" and "Gembals of Apricocks."

CONFE'DER, CONFE'DERATE, v. CONFE'DERATE, adj. CONFE'DERATE, n. CONFE'DERATING, n. CONFEDERA'TION, CONFE'DERATOR, CONFE'DERACY, CONFE'DERATIE.

Fr. confederer; It. confederare; Sp. confederár; Lat. con, and fœdus. Of the various Etymologies, which he has collected, Vossius prefers a fide; itself of uncertain Origin.

To make a league, treaty or alliance together; to engage, to combine, unite, associate or agree together;—as fellows, comrades or colleagues.

The same nature wrought in their harts such a mutuall affection that theyr wylles and appetites daily more and more cõfederated them selues, that it seemed none other, whan theyr names were declared, but that they had only chaunged theyr places.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book ii. fol. 137.

And where thou didst see the yerne mixt with bakt erth, it signifieth these diuided kingdoms to be ioyned together among themselues and confedered by bloude in mariages, but yet shall not one agre long with another, their confederacies shall not stonde nor holde no more then may yerne be mixed and messed together with bakt erthe. Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. ii. CON-FEDER.

Item to sende exploratours and espies into Scotland; and to see and perceyve their practices, and what they intend there; and whether they will confeder themselfs with any other outward prynce.

Burnett. Records. Propositions to the King's Council, No. 31.

But when he considered, that by the wordes of Sceuola, so greatte a nombre of yonge men of semblable prowesse, were confederate to his distruction, so that or all they coude be apprehended, his lyfe shulde be alwaye in ieoperdye, he dyspayrynge of wynnynge the cytie of Rome, rayzed his seige, and departed.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book iii. fol. 184.

For this cause all the confederates beynge assembled by the Lacedemonyans for thys matter, they were contente that the peace should be concluded. Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 131.

For hereupon sone after began the conspiracy or rather good confederacyon, betweene y^e^ Duke of Buckingham and many other gentlemen against him.

Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 69.

Whyle this was in doyng, he sent certayn persones into Scicile, to see y^e^ state of the countre; the whiche made cõfederacies with dyuers great men of Scicilians.

Fabyan. Philippi. 3. Anno 1272. vol. ii.

So for purpose she thought it very good
With former foes in friendship to confeder.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 337.

It was thought and spoken also abroad, but the first author would not be known, That they had conspired together, not for the present time onely to doe wrong and injurie, but also were confedered betweene themselves privily, yea and had bound it with an oath, to call no assembly at all for the electing of newe magistrates. Holland. Livius, fol. 112.

Lord Edward being thus escaped, gathereth an armie, confederateth and submitteth to him the countries of Hereford, Worcester, Salop, and Chester. Stow. Henry III. Anno 1165.

Whereat Cnute all appalled, answered, And thou shalt die for thy desert, when as thou art a traitour to God and me, in killing thy king, and my confederate brother.

Camden. Remains. Wise Speeches, fol 252.

Beside his pris'ner Mortimer he gain'd,
From being a foe, to be his confederate;
A man the king much fear'd—and well he might,
Lest he should look whether his crown stood right.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book iv.

It is not a single star, but like a constellation, and particularly as the Pleiades, where one of the seven hath almost no light or visibility, though knit in the same confederation with those which half the world do at one time see.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. vi.

That for the defence of the league, the king shall pay one hundred thousand crownes, whereof the one halfe the confederatours shall and maye employ when neede shall require, and the rest of their charges to be borne of their awne money, which they shall contribute among them.

Grafton. Henry VIII. The twenty-sixth Yere.

Northumberland recover'd still outstands;
The principal of this great family
And faction: having Berwick in his hands
With other holds: strong by confed'racy
With Scotland: mighty by his own command.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book iv.

They arrived at the said Milet a lytel before Stronbichides and Thrasicleas, who were sente thider by the Athenyans wyth xii. shippes, and caused the towne incontynently to tourne to their confederatie. Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 201.

There went a talk, that the emperor would forget and forgive all unto Marquis Albright (who was the chief of the German Protestants that confederated with France, and made havoc in the emperor's countries) and rather reward him with good livinga besides, to win him from the French king's devotion.

Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1552.

Thus man innumerous engines forms, t'assail
The savage kind; but most the docile horse,
Swift and confederate with man, annoys
His brethren of the plains.
Somervile. The Chace.

It is a confederating with him to whom the sacrifice is offered.
Atterbury.

We find nothing like a combination among the apostles, as to matters of doctrine; and if there had been it would have rendered the faith they delivered more suspicious, in that they durst not trust particular persons with delivery of it, without an antecedent confederacy among themselves.
Stillingfleet. Sermon 2. vol. iv.

To him therefore she applieth, terrified by the tumultuous noise of confederated nations, roaring against her like the roaring of the sea, and "lifting up their heads," as so many monsters of the deep to devour her at once.
Horne. On the Psalms. Psalm 83.

He is the freeman, whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves beside. There's not a chain,
That hellish foes confed'rate for his harm
Can wind around him but he casts it off,
With as much ease as Samson his green withes.
Cowper. The Task, book v.

When afterwards the Greeks, by frequent confederations against the Persians, the common enemy of their liberties, began to consider themselves as one people and community, the mysteries were extended to all who spoke the Greek language.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book ii. sec. 4.

The Grecian Commonwealth, while they maintained their liberty, were the most heroic confederacy that ever existed, they were the politest, the bravest, and the wisest of men.
Harris. Hermes, book iii. ch. v.

CONFE'R, v. } Fr. conferer; Lat. conferre, to CO'NFERENCE, } bring together; (con, and ferre, CONFE'RRING, n. } Gr. φέρ-ειν.)

To bring together; sc. to bring into a state for examination, for comparison; and thus, to compare. To bring together;—for a communion of thought; and thus, to talk or discourse together. To bring together;—for a common benefit; and thus, to give or bestow; to contribute, to conduce.

He that hath store of them, & shall diligẽtly serche thẽ ouer conferryng the one with the other, tyme with tyme, & age with age shal perceyue most wonderful causes.
Bale. Image. Preface, A 4.

The captaine generall assembling the masters together once enery week (if winde and weather shall serue) to conferre all the obseruations, and notes of the said ships, to the intent it may appeare wherein the notes do agree, and wherein they dissent.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Instructions of Cabotie, vol. i. fol. 226.

Wherefore I conferred with the emperour himselfe and the pope, and with the other princes, who were there present conserning the necessities of all my subiects both Englishmen and Danes.
Id. Ib. Traff. to London. K. Stephen, vol. i. fol. 127.

If authority would serue vnder the king, the counsayle haue greatest authoritie, if knowledge of the common welth could helpe, they must by daylie conference of matters vnderstande it best. Sir John Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition, C iii.

And not long after the sayd William & John Frith had many metinges and great conferences, and by the sayd William he fyrst receaued into his hart the seed of the Gospell and sincere godliness. Frith. Workes. Life, fol. 1.

Wake, wake thy long, thy too long sleeping Muse
And thank them with a song, as is the use:
Such honour, thus conferr'd, thou mayst not well refuse.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 1.

Onely I draw out certain diversities of readings, and many corrections by conferring the old written copies with the printed books: which have stood me in great stead of the understanding of many hard places.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch. Preface, 6.

Conferre the debt and the paiment, Christ and Adam, sin and the cure of it, the disease and the medicine.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 708.

Their counsels therefore and conferences about this matter, which beforetime they held dispersed here and there, and proiected oftentimes by two and three in a companie, they now complotted altogither. Holland. Suetonius. Julius Cæsar, fol. 31.

You have not any where answered directly to any of this, and to the most of it, and diuer other things included betwixt the 151 page and 171. you haue not answered one woorde which the reader by conference may vnderstand.
Whitgift. Defence, fol. 715.

Thus physically quencht they thirst, and then their spirits reviv'd
With pleasant conference.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xi. fol. 154.

Thus when with meats and drinks they had suffic'd,
Not burthen'd nature, sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let th' occasion pass
Given him by this great conference to know
Of things above this world.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book v. l. 454.

9. Item whether she hath been present at anie time at the readings or conferrings betweene Thurstane Littlepage and other conuictes?
Fox. Martyrs. Articles administered to Agnes Wilks.

The common method of God's providence is to suffer all his creatures to act according to the powers, which he hath conferred upon their natures, and accordingly having endued mankind with liberty and choice, so as that they may do well or do ill, he permits them to exercise those powers, though oftentimes they employ them to ill purposes. Sharp. Works. Sermon 1. vol. vi.

A free conference is indeed the only fair trial of skill between reason and sophistry; it is a sort of Cornish wrestling; the competitors grapple upon even terms, and without compliment, they exchange the close hug as soon as possible, and the victory is visible to all the spectators.
Hoadly. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 89.

I esteem the encomiums you conferred upon me in the senate, together with your congratulatory letter, as a distinction of the highest and most illustrious kind.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Marcus Cato. Letter 10. book vi.

But this important enterprise demands
More secret conference.
Smollet. The Regicide, act ii. sc. 7.

The term CONFERENCE has been peculiarly appropriated to meetings for Theological debate. Among the most celebrated of these are that of Ratisbon, in 1601, between some Lutheran Doctors and three eminent Jesuits, assembled at the desire of Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria, and Philip Louis, Elector Palatine; that of Neuberg, in 1615, appointed by the Prince Palatine, himself a Papist, between Heilbronnet, a Lutheran, and Keller, a Jesuit; that of Thorn, in 1645, summoned by Ladislaus IV. King of Poland, generally known as the Charitable Conference, from its intentions rather than its effects; that at Rheinfeldt, about the same time, between Valerianus Magnus, a Capuchin, and Habercorn, a reformed Minister, called by the Landgrave of Hesse; and that of Cassel, in 1661, at the desire of the same Landgrave, between Musæus and Henichius, Lutherans, and Curtius and Heinsius, of the Reformed Church. The writers who have recorded the chief matters which passed in these Conferences, are mentioned by Sagittarius, Intr. in Hist. Eccl. ii. 1569, 81, 92, 98.

A Conference of a more private nature was held in 1683, between Claude, the most learned of the Reformed divines, and Bossuet, not less celebrated among the Romanists. Each of them has published an account of this dispute.

ON- ENCE FESS

In England a Conference was called at Hampton Court by James I., in 1604. It assembled before the Privy Council, the King himself presiding. The objections advanced by the Puritans to the form of Episcopal Government, were shown to be as insignificant as their hostility was virulent: but the Conference (and the result deserves to be mentioned from its rarity,) was in one respect eminently useful. It produced our present translation of the Bible. In 1660, immediately after the Restoration, another Conference was agreed upon at the Bishop of London's lodgings at the Savoy. In this the violence of Baxter prevented all hope of accommodation.

The term Conference in our own days is now chiefly confined to the annual meetings of Preachers in the Wesleyan Methodist connection, for the regulation of their stations, and other matters of internal government and discipline. Annual general Conferences are likewise held by the Swedenborgians; and perhaps by other Sectaries.

CONFERVA, in Botany, a genus of the class Cryptogamia, natural order Algæ. Generic character: seeds produced within the substance of the capillary or jointed frond, or in closed tubercules, united with it.

This genus consists of plants growing both in the sea and in fresh water, and is perhaps the lowest in the order of vegetable creation: the plants are composed of tufts of variously coloured thread-like substances, sometimes jointed; of the foreign species but little is known; one hundred and thirty-three growing on the sea coast, or in the rivers and fresh-water lakes, &c. of England, are described and figured in Sowerby's English Botany.

CONFE'SS, n.
CONFE'SSARY,
CONFE'SSEDLY,
CONFE'SSION,
CONFE'SSIONAL,
CONFE'SSIONIST,
CO'NFESSOR,
CO'NFEST, adj.
CONFE'STLY,
CO'NFITENT, n.

Fr. confesser; Sp. confessar; It. confessare; Lat. confitere, confessus; con, and fat-eri, from φατὸν, i. e. fatus, from φά-ειν, animi cogitata in lucem proferre. Lennep.

To declare or reveal, to disclose or discover, to show or manifest; to acknowledge, to admit, to shrieve.

They coueten confessiones to kachen some hyre
Piers Plouhman. Crede, D. 1.

Then com)t confessour. coped as a frere.
Id. Vision, fol. 39.

While that I have a leiser and a space,
Min harme I wol confessen er I pace.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10808.

For he had power of confession
As saide himselfe more than a curat,
For of his ordre he was licenciat.
Ful swetely herde he confession
And plesant was his absolution.
Id. The Prologue, v. 218.

But she hir wolde not confesse,
Whan thei hir asken, what she was.
Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 32.

Our foes themselues confest they bought full deere,
The hote pursute whiche they attempted there.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

Then aboute mydnight he layde hym downe to rest, and in the mornynge he rose betymes, and harde masse, and the prince his sonne with hym, and the most past of his company were confessed and houseled.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. cxxviii.

They haue fained confession for the same purpose to stablish their kyngdom with all. All secrets know they thereby. The bishop knoweth the confession of whom he lusteth throughout all his dioces. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 180. CONFESS.

It is true, quod the kynge; name them that be mete to go on that voyage. Sir, quod they, sende your confessour, frere Fernãdo of Farre, and the bysshoppe of Geghene, who was sometyme confessour to the kynge your father, and Peter Gardelopes, who is well languaged.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. cxxix.

Willing and commanding you among you to give perfect credence to my Lord of Lincolne our confessour in this behalfe and matter.
Burnett. Records. Letters by King Henry to the University of Oxford.

Her breath so sweetly smell'd,
The violets, as excell'd,
To looke down were compell'd;
And so confest what foile they did receaue.
Stirling. Aurora, song 7.

Much haue we sinned, to our shame;
But spare us, who our sins confess:
And for the glory of thy name
To our sick souls afford redress.
Drummond. Upon the Sundays in Lent. Hymn.

In probabilities, I prefer that which is the more reasonable, and never allowing to any one a leave of chooeing that which is confessedly the less reasonable in the whole conjunction of circumstances and relative cõsiderations.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience. Preface, 19.

And this confession flew from every voyce,
Never had land more reason to rejoyce,
Nor to her blisse, could ought new added bee,
Save that she might the same perpetuall see.
Jonson. A Panegyre on King James. Anno 1603.

What should I speake here of my dailie reuenues, of my first fruites, annates, palles, indulgences, buls, confessionals, indultes and rescripts, testaments, dispensations, priuiledges, elections, prebends, religious houses, and such like, which come to no small masse of money.
Fox. Martyrs. Cases Papal, fol. 728.

——— With him we likewise seat
The sumptuous shrined king, good Edward from the rest
Of that renowned name, by confessor express'd.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 24

For can any thing be said to have so much as a shew of wisdom or piety in respect of will-worship in it, if that will-worship thus pretended, pass confestly either for foolish or impious?
Hammond. Works, vol. i. fol. 233.

Which by the way lays a very ill character upon those, who by pretence of Christianity or piety, seek or claim to themselves any other liberty than what by the laws under which they are born, doth confestly belong unto them. Id. Ib. fol. 332.

By a missive, from a papist I am sure, and I suppose from a priest, I was not long since forced upon the controversies of these times, betweene the Protestant and Romish confessionists.
Mountague. Appeale to Cæsar. Epistle Dedicatory.

To confess our sins, is to own with shame and confusion of face, that we have transgressed the righteous laws of God, and deserved his wrath and displeasure, and so far to dislike, to disapprove, and to detest our own actions, that we severely purpose never to be guilty of the like again.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 6. vol. v.

I confess it raises my scorn and indignation at this mushroome scribbler; to see him by and by with an air of superiority prescribing to the whole body of your clergy, the true method of quoting Cicero. Bentley. Of Free-thinking.

The temperate and moderate enjoyment of all the good things of this present world, and of the pleasures of life, according to the measures of right reason and simple nature; is plainly and confessedly the certainest and most direct method, to preserve the health and strength of the body.
Clarke. On the Attributes, p. 254.

CONFESS. — CON-FESSION.

When we speak of confession of our sins as a means of obtaining pardon for them, we mean by it such an actual attention to our sins, and to our guilt, and such an hearty acknowledgment thereof to God Almighty, as includes in it both shame and sorrow for what we have done and likewise steadfast purpose of heart to do so no more. Sharp. Works. Sermon 6. vol. v.

> To this sagacious confessour [his wife] he went
> And told her what a gift the gods had sent;
> But told it under matrimonial seal,
> With strict injunctions never to reveal.
> Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

> Josephus says that Antiochus Epiphanes, as he was dying confessed that he suffered for the injuries which he had done to the Jews.
> Jortin. Discourses concerning the Christian Religion, Disc. 1.

> If the question concerning the truth and authority of revelation be a cause of any moment at all, it is confessedly of the greatest.
> Hurd. Works. Sermon 2.

> In Peru I have seen an Indian bring to the confessional a confession of all his sins written in the same way, by picture and characters; portraying every one of the ten commandments after a certain manner.
> Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iv.

> Such is my name, and such my tale.
> Confessor! to thy secret ear,
> I breathe the sorrows I bewail,
> And thank thee for the generous tear
> This glazing eye could never shed.
> Lord Byron. The Giaour.

Auricular CONFESSION, or the private Confession of sins in the ear of a Bishop or Priest, who is duly authorized to receive such Confession, is part of the Sacrament of Penance, in the Church of Rome. These Confessions are not to be revealed under pain of the highest punishment. The Council of Trent requires "secret Confession to the Priest alone, of all and every mortal sin, of which, upon the most diligent search and examination of our consciences, we can remember ourselves to be guilty since our Baptism, together with all the circumstances of these sins, which may change the nature of them; because, without the perfect knowledge of these, the Priest cannot make a judgment of the nature and quality of men's sins, nor impose fitting Penance upon them." This is the Confession of sins, which the same Council confidently affirms to have been instituted by our Lord, and, by the law of God, to be "necessary to salvation, and to have been always practised in the Catholic Church." It is, however, manifest that such Confession is both unnecessary and unscriptural: for, in the first place, no proof exists, that the power of remitting and retaining sins, on which Confession is founded, was imparted to any besides the Apostles, or at most to those to whom a discernment of spirits was communicated. Secondly, if Jesus Christ had intended this to be a duty, he would very probably have delivered an express command upon the subject. And, thirdly, this authority of pardoning sins, immediately in relation to God and without any reference to Church censures, was not claimed for many ages after the time of Christ.

Doctrine of the Council of Trent concerning Confession.

Although the Council of Trent denounces an anathema against all who hold the practice of Confession not to be according to the command of Christ, but a human invention, there is not the least ground for this practice in the Church. We read of no such thing in the Scriptures, though we find Confession of sin often enjoined, and as often practised, in the Sacred Writings; but such Confession is not commanded to be made to Priests, nor are they empowered to dispense absolution upon their own judgment. The passages cited by the Romanists from the Old Testament (viz. Numb, v. 6, 7; 1 Kings, viii. 33, 35; Neh. i. 6; Prov. xxviii.) where persons who had offended are commanded or encouraged to Confess their sins, are inapplicable to the purpose for which they are adduced; for they either speak of Confession of sin to God, or of public Confession before men, but they do not contain the least hint that such Confession is to be made either in private or to a Priest. With regard to the proofs alleged by the Romanists from the New Testament, particularly Matt. iii. 6, where it is said that those who were baptized by John, "Confessed their sins," and Acts, xix. 18, where it is recorded that some converts "came and Confessed, and showed their deeds;" it is evident that the former passage speaks only of a Confession before Baptism, and the latter of a Confession at their first conversion only; and both of them speak of an open and public acknowledgment of their former evil lives. But what affinity has this with the command of the Council of Trent, that every person, once in the year at least, shall Confess their sins in secret to their own parish Priest? The Apostle James, indeed, says "Confess your faults one to another," (Ep. v. 16;) but no mention is here made of Priests; and the word "faults" seems to confine the precept to a mutual Confession among Christians, of those offences by which they may have injured each other; but certainly the necessity of auricular Confession, and the power of priestly absolution cannot be inferred from this passage.

It is unsupported by Scripture.

Further, the practice of Sacramental Confession is not only repugnant to the Scriptures, but it is also contrary to the practice of the ancient Christian Church. Although many of the early Ecclesiastical writers earnestly recommend Confession to the Clergy, yet they never represent it as essential to the pardon of sin, nor as having any connection with a Sacrament. They only urge it as entitling a person to the prayers of the congregation, and as being useful for supporting the authority of wholesome discipline, and for maintaining the purity of the Christian Church. But Chrysostom expressly condemns all secret Confession to men, (Hom. xxxi. in Heb.) as being obviously liable to great abuses; and Basil, (on Psalm xxxvii. 8,) Hilary, (on Psalm li.) and Augustine, (Confess. lib. x. c. 3,) all advise Confession of sin to God only. We learn from Tertullian, (De Pudicitiâ,) and Eusebius, (Hist. Eccl. lib. v. c. ult.) and other ancient writers, that the penitents Confessed their sins, when the people were present; and, when they were absolved and reconciled, such absolution and reconciliation took place in the presence of the whole church. In short, no instance of established private Confession occurs, earlier than the fourth Lateran Council, held under the Pontificate of Innocent II. in the year 1215, which proves that auricular Confession is a novel invention, which has no antiquity to recommend it.

And as this practice of the Church of Rome has neither Scripture nor antiquity to support it, so it is repugnant to reason. For no man is obliged, by the law of nature, to reveal all his secret sins and offences, with all their particular circumstances and aggravations, to any one person whomsoever; and particularly, there is no rational principle which dictates to us, that we must Confess our sins privately to a Priest.

This is neither necessary to repentance, nor to forgiveness: not to the former, for we may be thoroughly sorrowful and penitent, without rehearsing all our delinquencies to a Priest; and not to the latter, for, upon our sincere Confession of our sins to Almighty God, and unfeigned repentance of them, we shall find mercy and pardon through the merits of Christ Jesus, without a complete enumeration of all our sins to any man once a year.

ice of hurch gland, egard afes-

But although there is not any authority whatever for requiring auricular Confession to Priests, yet Confession of sins to God is an indispensable duty; and Confession to Clergymen may sometimes be useful by leading to effectual repentance: and therefore the Anglican Church encourages her members to use confidential Confession to their Minister "or to some other discreet and learned Minister of God's word, and open their grief." (Second Exhortation in the Communion Service.) But this is very different from its being an essential part of a Sacrament instituted by Christ or his Apostles. A contrite sinner may feel relief in unburthening his mind to his spiritual pastor, and may receive advice and consolation, which may soften the pangs of a wounded conscience; his scruples may be removed; his good resolutions may be confirmed; and, instead of falling a victim to religious melancholy, he may be enabled to work out his salvation by a life of active virtue, and by an humble faith in the merits of the Saviour. The only absolution, which the Church of England authorizes her Clergy to pronounce, is ministerial, or declaratory of God's pardon upon the performance of the conditions, which he has been pleased to require in the Gospel: it always supposes faith and sincere repentance, of which God alone is judge. Nor was any absolution, except declaratory and precatory, known among the early Christians, as is evident from the ancient Liturgies and Rituals yet extant, and also from the authors who have written upon these subjects; particularly from the treatise of Morinus, De Pœnitentid, in which he has proved that the indicative form of absolution, as it is called, "Ego te absolvo," (I absolve thee,) was introduced into the Church as late as the XIIth century. Previously to that period, only some such prayer as this was used, "Absolutionem et remissionem tribuat tibi omnipotens Deus," (May Almighty God grant thee absolution and remission.) The right of ossess- es of omish ine of meant- ufes-

requiring Confession, and of absolving sins, as exercised in the Church of Rome, must necessarily be the source of an undue and dangerous influence to the Clergy; and must, at the same time, operate as a great encouragement to vice and immorality among the people. In imitation of the primitive Church, the Church of England imposes public penance for certain offences as a part of her discipline; but she by no means considers nor represents Divine forgiveness as a certain consequence of that outward and involuntary act. (Bishop Tomline, Elements of Christ. Theology, vol. ii. p. 427, 430; Bishop Burnet, On the Twenty-fifth Article; Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticæ, book xviii. ch. iv.; Dr. Wharton, Short Answer to 'A True Exposition of the Doctrine of the Catholic Church, touching the sacrament of Penance,' New York, 1817, octavo.

ice of ession k ch.

In the Oriental, or Greek Church, the mystery of Confession, as it is termed, is always necessary. That Church indeed prescribes it to all her members four times in the year, and her injunctions are obeyed in monasteries; but the Laity for the most part confess only once in the year. In Russia, they are obliged to do this by the laws of the land; and it is usually done in the great Fast before Easter. It is said that the members of the Greek Church do not consider Confession as a Divine precept, but allow it to be only a positive injunction of the Church.

And in the Lutheran Church.

Among the Lutherans, private Confession was formerly practised universally, though they never held, with the Roman Catholics, that forgiveness of sin in this world was necessary for forgiveness in a future world: and it was connected with the disgraceful custom of making, on that occasion, a small pecuniary present to the Clergyman Confessor; of whose salary, in many places, it constituted an important part. But this Confession-money, as well as the private Confession itself, has been abolished in most of the Lutheran countries and congregations, and another source of revenue established in its place. A sort of public general Confession is now in use, as a preparation for the celebration of the Lord's Supper. (Adam, Religious World Displayed, vol. i. p. 174, 367, second edition.)

In the Roman Catholic Church CONFESSIO is sometimes used for the crypt under the High Altar, in which the remains of Martyrs are deposited, (Cer. Episcop. i. 12,) by others called Martyrium, and κατάβασις, because steps went down to it. An ornament of the Altar and an Oratory have also received this name.

CONFESSOR, ὁμολογητὴς, originally was the title bestowed on one who after openly Confessing Christ, had endured martyrdom, (Ambr. ii. De Imp. Grat. Paulinus Ep. xxviii. ad fin.) afterwards one who during torture had maintained the integrity of his faith, though not at the expense of life. (Cypr. De simp. præl. Serm. de Lapsis V.) Afterwards the title was given indiscriminately to persons of pious life. Our last Anglo-Saxon Edward obtained this distinction by which he is most generally known, by a Bull of Canonization from Alexander III., about a century after his decease.

CONFI'DE, v.
CONFI'DENCE,
CONFI'DENCIARY,
CONFI'DENT, n.
CONFI'DENT, adj
CONFI'DENTIAL,
CONFI'DENTIALLY,
CONFI'DENTLY,
CONFI'DER,
CONFI'DANT, n.

Fr. confier; It. confidarsi; Sp. confiarse; Lat. confidere; con, and fidere, to trust; of uncertain Origin.

To have or place faith or trust; to trust or believe, to be secure or assured, to rely or depend upon; to be firmly, boldly secure

Who can haue confidēs in him which putteth diffidens in all mē.
Hall. Richard III. The third Yere.

The duke although, that he had small confidence, but rather great diffidence, in the othe and promise of Monire de Vaneclere: thought it necessary to knowe, in what case Caleis stede, & what mutacions wer there. Id. Edward IV. The ninth Yere.

And these last wordes he would often repeate, with demonstration of great feruencie of mind, being himself very confident, and setled in beliefe of inestimable good by this voyage.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Sir Henry Gilbert, vol. iii. fol. 159.

——— Yet not terrible,
That I should fear, not sociably mild,
As Raphael, that I should much confide,
But solemn, whom not to offend,
With reverence I must meet, and thou retire.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 235.

CONFIDE.

Yet because outward storms the strongest break,
And strength itself by confidence grows weak,
This new world may be safer, being told
The dangers and diseases of the old.
Donne. The Anatomy of the World. First Anniversary.

When such an opinion makes a sect, and this sect gets firm confidents and zealous defenders, in a little time it will dwell upon the conscience as if it were a native there, whereas it is but a pitifull inmate and ought to be turned out of doors.
Tayler. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. ii.

So free this work is (gentlemen) from offence,
That we are confident it needs no defence
From us, or from the poets.
F. Beaumont. Prologue to The custome of the Countrey.

——— Tell me then, if whatsoever, ire
Suggests, in hurt of me, to him, thy valour will prevent?
Achilles answered; all thou knowest, speake and be confident.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book i. fol. 3.

After hee had made choise of a companie very lightly appointed, such as for lively vigour and delivernesse of bodie surpassed all others, with them he went foorth, hoping confidently for greater matters.
Holland. Ammianus. Constantius and Julianus, fol. 147.

We shal be the less frighted when with the apostles we are going into the cloud, remembring the reproach God maketh to tottering confiders, Am I onely a God at near hand, and not the same at distance?
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 16. sec. 5.

May she [Rome] no more confide in friends,
Who nothing farther understood,
Than only, for their private ends,
To waste her wealth, and spill her blood.
Buckinghamshire. Choruses in Marcus Brutus, ch. i.

But surely modesty never hurt any cause, and the confidence of man seems to me to be much like the wrath of man, which St. James tells us, worketh not the righteousness of God; that is, it never does any good, it never serves any wise and real purpose of religion. Tillotson. Sermon 44.

I dare confidently pronounce, that you will, in one month, find more joy, more peace, more content, to arise in your spirits from the sense that you have resisted the temptations of evil, and done what was your duty to do, than in many years spent in vanity and a licentious course of living.
Sharp. Sermon 2. vol. i.

Hobby being a confidant of the Protector's, he may be supposed to have written as he was directed by him.
Burnett. History of Reformation. Anno 1547.

Thanks to the lovely fair ones, types of heaven,
Who raise and beautify the bounty given:
But chief to him in whom distress confides
Who o'er this noble plan so graciously presides.
Smart. Epilogue to the Conscious Lovers.

Secure of all thy love, and all thy prudence,
Returning confidence has arm'd my soul
For this dread meeting; resting on thy truth
I go— Mason. Elfrida.

Nor is it unlikely but they might get further intelligence from something dropt by his confidents, the sophists, a people vain and talkative, and at no time renowned for secrecy.
Warburton. Of Julian's attempt to rebuild the Temple, vol. viii. fol. 61.

Against all rules, after we had met nothing but rebuffs in return to all our proposals, we made two confidential communications to those in whom we had no confidence, and who reposed no confidence in us. Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

What hath been said, I suppose, will tend to give us a different and higher notion of this extraordinary work: and lessen our surprise at the author's presumption, in so confidently predicting immortality to his performance.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iii. sec. 3.

In this conjuncture, the nutrix, who is not drawn, as in modern tragedy, an unmeaning confidante, the mere depositary of the poet's secrets, but has real manners assigned to her, endeavours, with the highest beauty of character, to divert these horrid intentions. Hurd. Works. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

CONF

CONFI

CONFI'GURE, CONFI'GURATE, CONFIGURA'TION. } Fr. configuration; Sp. configuracion; Lat. con, and figura. Fictor ut dicit fingo, figurum imponit. Varro, lib. v.

To put or place into form or shape.

In comely architecture it may be
Knowne by the name of uniformitie;
Where pyramids to pyramids relate,
And the whole fabrick doth configurate.
Jordan. Poems before 1650.

Thus the different effects, which fire and water have on us, which we call heat and cold, result from the so differing configuration and agitation of their particles.
Glanville. The Vanity of Dogmatising, fol. 88.

[It was the] opinion of the great Empedocles; That mother earth first brought forth vast numbers of legs, and arms, and heads, and other members of the body, scattered and distinct, and all at their full growth; which coming together and cementing (as the pieces of snakes and lizards are said to do if one cuts them asunder) and so configuring themselves into human shape, made lusty, proper men of thirty years age in an instant.
Bentley. Sermon 4.

I shall not, contrary to the design of this essay, set myself to enquire philosophically into the peculiar constitution of bodies and the configuration of parts; whereby they have the power to produce in us the ideas of their sensible qualities.
Locke. Of Human Understanding, book ii. ch. xxi.

It is the variety of configurations [of the mouth] in these openings only, which gives birth and origin to the several vowels; and hence it is they derive their name by being thus eminently vocal and easy to be sounded of themselves alone.
Harris. Hermes, book iii. ch. ii.

CONFI'NE, v. CONFI'NE, s. CONFI'NEDNESS, CONFI'NELESS, CONFI'NEMENT, CONFI'NER, CONFI'NABLE. } Fr. confiner; It. confinare; Sp. confinár; Lat. con, and finis, perhaps as Julius Scaliger thinks, from the verb, fio; Finis est cujus gratiâ aliquid fit.

To confine is, to end, terminate or determine; to bound or border upon, to limit, to inclose or inscribe, to keep within certain bounds or limits, to restrain, to keep close, to shut up, to fasten in.

His kingdom confineth with the Red Sea, and reacheth far into Afrike towards Aegypt and Barbarie. Southward it confineth with the sea towarde the Cape de Bona Sperenza.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Thomas Windam, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 10.

I haue trauelled through all the ample dominions of the emperour of Russia and Moscouia, which extends from the North Sea and the confines of Norway and Lapland, even to the Mare Caspium. Id. Ib. M. Anth. Jenkinson, vol. i. fol. 412.

This region confronteth the Arabians Canchlei on the east side, and the Cedrei southwards, and they both confine together afterwards upon the Nabathaei.
Holland. Plinie, vol. i. fol. 99.

And then the soul a substance hath alone
Besides the body in which she's confin'd;
So hath she not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, sec. 4.

Nought save the soule which doth from God proceed,
Over death triumphs, and still is pleas'd, els pynes,
Death not man's essence, but his sinne did breed,
And it with it, the end of time confines.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The third Houre.

But Terme which signifieth bounds is the god of confines or borders, unto whom they do sacrifice both publickly and privately, upon the limits of inheritance, and now they sacrifice unto him live beasts. Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 59.

——————— Blacke Macbeth
Wil seeme as pure as snow; and the poor state
Esteem him as a lambe, being compar'd
With my confineless harmes.
Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 164.

And that kind laughter's treachery,
By which some virgin, closely laid
In dark confinement, is betray'd.
Sherburne. Horat.

And with such an impression of his first tincture (as falleth out naturally in all things else) that he always maintained a great interest in the Roman court; as indeed was necessary for a near and jealous confiner. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 244.

As for cities such as are of late foundation, and since the increase of navigation, in as much as they have had since more plenty of riches, have been walled about and built upon the shore; and have taken up Isthmi (that is to say, necks of land between sea and sea) both for merchandize, and for the better strength against confiners. Hobbs. Thucydides, book i. fol. 5.

There is infinite virtue in the Almighty not confinable to any limits. Bishop Hall. Rem. fol. 93.

For, where 'tis of itself inclin'd,
It breaks loose when it is confin'd,
And like the soul, its harbourer,
Debarr'd from freedom of the air,
Disdains against its will to stay,
But struggles out, and flies away.
Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 1.

Before we take into consideration the epistle to the Romans, in particular, it may not be amiss to premise, the miraculous birth, life, death, resurrection and ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ, were all events that came to pass within the confines of Judea. Locke. On Romans. Synopsis, vol. iii. fol. 251.

That man can do wrong, arises from a weakness and not a superiour strength in him; from the imperfection of his views, and the confinedness of his powers.
Hoadly. Works. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 53.

We find three incompliant prelates more this year under confinement in the Tower, Gardner, Bishop of Winchester, Heath of Worcester, and Day of Chichester.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1550.

Nor yet confin'd to tragic walks alone,
The comic Muse too claims thee for her own,
With each delightful requisite to please,
Taste, spirit, judgment, elegance and ease.
Lloyd. The Actor.

Near to the confines of th' infernal den,
Deep in a hollow cave's profound recess,
Her courts she holds; and to the sons of men
Sends out the ministers of dire distress.
Dodsley. Pain and Patience.

I thank the Almighty, I am now all collected in myself; and, though my person is in confinement, my mind can expatiate on ample and useful subjects with all the freedom imaginable.
Johnson. Life of Savage.

CONFI'RM, v. CONFI'RMABLE, CONFI'RMABLANCE, CONFIRMA'TION, CONFIRMA'TOR, CONFI'RMATORY, CONFI'RMEDNESS, CONFI'RMER, CONFI'RMINGLY. Fr. confirmer; Sp. confirmar; It. confirmare; Lat. confirmare. Firmus, hoc est, stabilis, constans, a ferendo dictus quod constanter omnia ferat. Perottus. See Martinius, and Vossius.

To strengthen, to give strength or support to, to fix steadily, to secure, to assure, to establish.

And thanne, wan he were ichose in his chapele rigt there
Homage he solde him do, ar he confermed were.
R. Gloucester, fol. 473

He made ac conferment to Westmynstre of eche þynge, þat þoru hym hem ȳȝyue was, oþer þoru eny oþer kynge.
R. Gloucester, fol. 349.

þe chartre of franchise conferm it ȝow he salle.
R. Brunne, fol. 301.

þise monkes were dismaied for Steuen of Langton þa pape þer of was paied, mad þe confirmacion.
Id. fol. 209

And after wan ye han examined youre conseil, as I have said beforne, and knowen wel that ye moun performe your emprise, conferme it than sadly til it be at an ende.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

And when the lawe was confirmed
In due forme, and all affermed,
This innocent, which was deceiued,
His papacie anon hath weiued,
Renounced and resigned eke.
Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 44.

And in his confirmation,
Upon the fortune of his grace
His name was cleped Boniface.
Id. Ib. book ii. fol. 44.

For in alle thingis ghe ben maad riche in him in ech word and in each kunnyng as the witnessyng of Crist is confirmed in ghou, so that no thing fail in ghou in ony grace that abiden the schewyng of our Lord Jesus Crist. Wiclif. 1 Corynthians, ch. i.

In all thynges ye are made ryche by hym, in all learnynge and in all knowledge euen as the testimonye of Jesus Christ was confirmed in you, so that ye are behynde in no gyfte, and wayte for the appearynge of our Lord Jesus Christ.
Bible. Anno 1551.

Ethelbertus then cõfermyd in the faythe, amonge other costlye deedys, began ye fondacion of Poulys churche, within the citye of Lõdon, and ordayned it for the byshoppe's see of London.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. cxx.

That is to say, he [the pope] coulde not bee lord ouer the worlde, and cause emperours and kynges to fetche their confirmation of him, and to kneele downe and kisse his feete.
Barnes. Workes, fol. 195.

——————— I am confirm'd, the lady
By this time proves his scorn as well as laughter.
Ford. The Fancies, act i. sc. 1.

——————— But on I must:
Fate leads me; I will follow—There you read
What may confirm you.
Id. The Witch of Edmonton, act i. sc. 2.

There are promises which look as if they were serious and unfeigned, they are confirm'd with vows and solemn oaths of sincerity, and all these seemingly directed to every one of us.
Chillingworth. Sermon 9.

In vain I rail at opportunity,
At time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful night;
In vain I cavil with mine infamy,
In vain I spurn at my confirmed dispite:
This hopeless smoke of words doth me no right.
Shakspeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Confirmable also among the Trojans, from the funeral pyre of Hector burnt before the gates of Troy.
Sir Thomas Brown. Urn Burial, ch. i. fol. 2.

For their confirmance, I will therefore now
Slepe in our black barke.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book iii. fol. 42.

And after God instituted as it were a new worlde againe, and first he gaue his worde, and promised that he would neuer mor destroy the worlde with water, and for the confirmation thereof, he gaue the rainebow for a sure token between him and man.
Grafton. The Seconde age. Noe fol. 11.

CONFIRMATION.

Whether confirmation be a sacrament or not, it is of no use to dispute; and if it be disputed, it can never be proved to be so as baptism and the Lord's supper, that is, as generally necessary to salvation: though it be no sacrament, it cannot follow that it is not of very great use and holiness.

Taylor. On Confirmation, sec. 1. fol. 3.

There wants herein the definitive confirmator, and test of things uncertain, the sense of man. Sir Thomas Brown.

The oath of a loner is no stronger than the word of a tapster, they are both the confirmer of false reckonings.

Shakspeare. As You Like it, fol. 199.

And that shee [the mooue] was called Anna, Quia mensibus impleat annum, Ovid. ibid. To which, the vow that they used in her rites, somewhat confirmingly alludes.

Ben Jonson. Part of the King's Entertainment passing to his Coronation, fol. 80.

It is not improbable, that they [the disciples] had in their eye the confirmatory usage in the synagogues, to which none were admitted, before they were of age to undertake for themselves.

Bishop Compton. Episcopalia, (1686.) fol. 35.

We have a religion that leaves us not uncertain guesses and conjectures about a future salvation, but has given us God's express word and promise for it, sealed by the blood of his own son, and confirmed by his resurrection from the dead, and taking possession of the kingdome of heaven in our behalf.

Sharp. Works. Sermon 9. vol. vi.

One in his father's councils and his own
Long exercis'd, and grey in business grown;
Whose confirm'd judgment and sagacious wit
Knew all the sands on which rash monarchs split.

Duke. The Review.

Touching the confirmation of the treaty that was first made between the emperor and King Henry VIII. and not ratified by the present king, the emperor thought that he had most cause to require the same.

Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1549.

To each of these reasons he subjoins ample and learned illustrations and confirmatory proofs. Bp. Barlow. Rem. fol. 453.

If the difficulty arise from the confirmedness of habit, every resistance weakens the habit, abates the difficulty.

Decay of Piety.

According to the politician's creed, religion being useful to the state, and yet only a well invented fiction, all experiments, that is, all inquiries into its truth, naturally tend, not to confirm, but to unsettle, this necessary support of civil government.

Warburton. Sermon 1. vol. ix.

As to mine, I told them, if my estate should be forfeited, I would give them their freedom, provided I could obtain the confirmation of that grant.

Melmoth. Cicero. To Terentia. Letter 6. book i.

CONFIRMATION, or Imposition of Hands, according to the 60th Canon of the Church of England, A. D. 1603, is "a solemn, ancient, and laudable custom in the Church of God, continued from the Apostles' times," which consists in "Bishops laying their hands upon children baptized and instructed in the Catechism of Christian religion, praying over them, and blessing them." The same principles, with the exception of the rite being termed a Sacrament, are also laid down in the "Necessary Doctrine," A. D. 1543, a work usually attributed to Cranmer. In the Greek Church Confirmation is termed μύρον, "the ointment," or χρίσμα, "the unction," or jointly μύρον τοῦ χρίσματος, "the ointment of unction:" it is also called σφραγὶς, "the seal" or ἐπισφράγισμα. The apostolical antiquity of the rite of "Imposition of hands" is generally deduced from the three following passages of Scripture: Acts, viii. 14, 17, where the Apostles Peter and John are described as laying their hands on the Samaritans, who had been baptized by Philip; Acts, xix. 6, where the Holy Ghost was conferred by Paul's laying on his hands; and Hebrews, vi. 1, where ἐπίθεσις χειρῶν, "Imposition of hands," is numbered amongst the fundamental principles of the Christian religion. Whatever opinion may be formed in these later ages of the Church respecting the spiritual benefits of Confirmation, there cannot be a doubt, but that the early Fathers of the Church attributed to the imposition of the Bishop's hands an efficacy no less than that of conferring the gifts of the Holy Spirit. Of the existence of the custom there is the clearest evidence in the following passages: Tertullian, De Baptismo, cap. vii. Exinde egressi de Lavacro perunguimur benedictâ unctione. Cap. viii. Dehinc manus imponitur per benedictionem advocandos Spiritum Sanctum. Tunc ille Sanctissimus Spiritus super emundata et benedicta corpora libens a Patre descendit; and again, De Resurrectione Carnis, cap. viii. Caro signatur ut anima muniatur, caro manûs impositione adumbratur ut anima Spiritu illuminetur. Cyprian, in Epist. ad Jubaianum. 73, alluding to the journey of the Apostles to Samaria to confirm those whom Philip had baptized, adds, Quod nunc quoque apud nos geritur, ut qui in ecclesiâ baptizantur præpositis ecclesiæ offerantur ut per nostram orationem ac manûs impositionem Spiritum Sanctum consequantur et signaculo Dominico consummentur. Epist. 74. Non per manûs impositionem quis nascitur quando accipit Spiritum Sanctum, sed in Baptismo, ut Spiritum natus accipiat. Epist. 72. Ad Stephanum. Parum est eis manum imponere ad recipiendum Spiritum Sanctum nisi accipiant et ecclesiæ baptismum. Tunc enim demum plene sanctificari et filii Dei esse possunt si sacramento utroque nascantur. Hieronymus, in dialog. adversus Luciferia:* An nescis inquit Luciferianus ecclesiarum hunc morem esse ut baptizatis postea manus imponatur et ita invocetur Spiritus Sanctus? Exigis ubi Scriptum est? In Actibus Apostolorum. Etiamsi Scripturæ authoritas non subesset totius orbis in hanc partem consensus instar præcepti obtineret. Nam et multa alia quæ per traditionem in ecclesiis observantur authoritatem sibi scriptæ legis usurpaverunt, &c. Quibus Orthodoxus respondit,—Non abnuo quidem hanc esse ecclesiarum consuetudinem, ut ad eos qui longè in minoribus urbibus per Presbyteros et Diaconos baptizati sunt, Episcopus ad invocationem Sancti Spiritus manum impositurus excurrat.

Unction began to be used at Confirmation from early times, but upon the exact period writers are not agreed: see Bingham's Antiquities, (book xii. c. iii.) From the following Decretal of Pope Innocent, A. D. 416, it appears to have been usual to anoint persons both at Baptism and Confirmation: the performance of the latter rite, as also the confection of the Chrism for both occasions being, as in ancient times, reserved to the Bishop. De consignandis infantibus manifestum est, non ab alio quam ab Episcopo fieri licere. Nam Presbyteri licet sint sacerdotes, Pontificatûs tamen apicem non habent. Hæc autem Pontificibus solis deberi ut vel consignent, vel Paracletum Spiritum tradant non solum Consuetudo Ecclesiastica demonstrat, verum et illa Lectio Actuum Apostolorum quæ asserit Petrum et Johannem esse directos qui jam baptizatis traderent Spiritum Sanctum; nam Presbyteris seu extra Episcopum seu præsente Episcopo baptizant, chrismate ungere baptizatos licet; sed quod ab Episcopo fuerit Consecratum, non tamen frontem ex eodem oleo signare, quod solis debetur Episcopis, cum tradunt Spiritum Paracletum. The Canon of the Council of Orange, thirty years subsequent to the Decretal just mentioned, shows the custom of presenting persons to the Bishop for Confirmation, and also indicates that Chrism was in that Church only once applied; being administered on special suggestion at Confirmation when omitted at Baptism. Nullus, ministrorum, qui Baptizandi recepit officium, sine Chrismate unquam debet progredi, quia inter nos placuit semel Chrismari. De eo autem qui in Baptismate qudcunq; necessitate faciente, non chrismatus fuerit, in Confirmatione sacerdos (i. e. Episcopus) commonebitur. From the circumstance of the Priest using a Chrism at Baptism, and Baptism and Confirmation being administered on the same day, the Chrism of Confirmation has been confounded with the Chrism of Baptism; and several persons have asserted that Confirmation never existed, but was a mere ceremony appended to Baptism. See Hammond, De Confirmatione. There was a difference between the Chrism of the Priests and that of the Bishops; the former was on the breasts and arms, the latter on the forehead.

* Hieron. Op. tom. ii. p. 47. H. ed. 1546.

Confirmation, or Chrism, is numbered in the Church of Rome amongst the seven Sacraments: it also forms, under the name of χρίσμα, or σφραγὶς, one of the seven Sacraments of the Greek Church. The subject of the administration of the Chrism was one of the points in dispute in the IXth century, between the Latin Church under Pope Nicolas I., and Photius, the Patriarch of Constantinople. (See Dupin, vol. vii. ch. x. edition 1696.) In the Greek Church the Chrism, which is supposed to correspond with Confirmation, is generally administered by a Presbyter, (the confection of the oil being the privilege of the Bishop,) immediately after Baptism. And upon this ground some of the Latins charged the Greeks with not observing Confirmation, it being necessary in their opinion to the validity of Confirmation that it should be administered by a Bishop. That it is in the power of Bishops in the Greek Church to administer the Chrism after Baptism, is evident from the elder Liturgies, and from a practice which existed of persons baptized by a Bishop in the Church of Sta. Sophia at Constantinople, being afterwards confirmed by him in a neighbouring Church. But it cannot be denied that though the Bishop may be the proper Minister of Confirmation, it is usually administered by Presbyters; that the origin of the authority thus possessed by the Presbyters of the Greek Church is not satisfactorily ascertained, and that adult Confirmation only takes place in cases of adult Baptism. (See Goar, p. 368.) In the place thus cited from Goar, and in King's Account of the Rites of the Greek Church in Russia, may be seen the form of administering the Chrism immediately after Baptism; the Imposition of Hands, if it may be so called consisting in the mere act of anointing the forehead, eyes, nostrils, &c.

According to the use of the English Mission of the Church of Rome, Confirmation is administered, by anointing the forehead with the Chrism, and signing it with the cross, the Bishop pronouncing the words, "N. N. I sign with the sign of the cross, and I confirm thee with the Chrism of Salvation, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." He then strikes the person confirmed on the cheek, saying "Pax tecum, Peace be with thee." There are two "Impositions of Hands" in this ceremony, the one previous to the anointing, when the hands of the Bishop are extended over the persons to be confirmed, while he says the prayer, "Omnipotens sempiterne Deus," &c. The other Imposition is performed in the act of anointing the forehead, the position of the hand being deemed an act of χειροθεσία. Both are said to be of the highest antiquity, in the Greek as well as the Latin Church. Confirmation is not administered until after Penance and Confession, a ticket being given by the Confessor, containing the name which the person received at Baptism, and the name which is to be given at Confirmation. Godfathers are still used at Confirmation in the Church of Rome; and, according to the English Ritual, Registers are kept of persons confirmed, in the following form:

Confirmati	A Reverendissimo	Episcopo N. N.
Name at Baptism.	Name at Confirmation.	Name of Godfather.
Georgius Willett.	Franciscus.	Peter Good.

At the period of the Reformation the superstitious mode of administering Confirmation in the Romish Church, formed one of the many complaints urged by the Reformers. They asserted (see Ordinatio Ecclesiast. Brandeburgh—apud Seckendorf Histor. Lutheranism. lib. ii. lxxv.) "that Confirmation was not a Sacrament but a Ceremony of ancient institution, and when free from abuse very useful; that Bishops were accustomed to examine adult persons in the articles of their faith, and as a testimony of their approval signed them on the forehead with the cross." In the Council of Trent the opinion of the Romish Church was fully expressed; and the account of the discussion given by Fra. Paolo, in his History, book ii. unwillingly confirms the statement of the Reformers, and proves the reasonableness of their charge. The Reformers had asserted, that formerly children being come to the age of reason rendered an account of their faith to the Church; to this the Romanists replied, that since such a practice did not then exist, it was fair to conclude it never had existed, because the Church would not have abolished so useful a ceremony; and they brought forward many passages from Councils and ancient writers, in which unction was mentioned without reference to any catechising or examination. They could not admit the assertion of the Reformers without reducing the Sacrament of Confirmation into a mere ecclesiastical rite, the propriety and the practice of which in particular places they could not deny: the Chrism they said was universal, the catechising not; and therefore the Chrism was entitled to the most respect. The candid Courayer, in his note on the passage sec. 80, evidently takes the side of the Reformers, and shows that the quotations from ancient authorities made by the Catholics, did not disprove the existence of catechising, but only proved what the Reformers never denied, that Confirmation was administered with Imposition of Hands, or Chrism. The remonstrances of the Reformers produced an effect even in the Church of Rome; and one of the fruits of the Council of Trent was the specific direction contained in the Catechismus ad Parochos, that children should not be confirmed before seven years of age, "accompanied with a declaration that it was still more fitting to delay it till the years of discretion."

Upon the antiquity as well as the utility of this ecclesiastical rite, all the Divines of the Reformed Churches appear to have agreed, though it has been restored by none in such primitive purity as by the Church of England. Amongst the advocates for the observance of such Confirmation as is now practised in the Church of England, we may number Melancthon, In Saxoni. Confess.; Beza, In Heb. vi.; Flaccus Illyricus, In eund.; Chemnitius, In exam. Concil. Trid.; Calvin, In Heb. vi.; and from various passages which may be found in Seckendorf, Histor. Lutheran. index, Confirmation; it is evident that the Reformers of the Lutheran Church generally knew how to appreciate the rite. Many of them indeed of necessity, from the want of Bishops, and the impracticability of an universal Episcopal Confirmation, were willing to commit the administration of it to other hands besides the Bishops; but they all felt the benefit which resulted from requiring young persons, when properly instructed, to make public profession of their faith.

CONFIRMATION. — CONFISCATE.

The history of Confirmation is then briefly this. In the earliest ages Bishops were wont to lay their hands upon persons who had been baptized, and who were then required to make profession of their faith. The ceremony by degrees degenerated into a superstition, and a sacramental virtue was ascribed to the Chrism. In the Greek Church, about the year 870, Photius, the Patriarch of Constantinople, established the custom, which must, however, have been previously introduced, of Presbyters giving the Chrism instead of the Bishop. In the darker ages, the Chrism of Confirmation was made a sort of appendage to Baptism, and administered to infants, until, at the Reformation, the true and ancient rite was restored at the remonstrance of the Reformers. The Church of Rome, still, however, continued it amongst the number of her Sacraments, though in some degree amended in its use; whilst the Church of England, rejecting all useless ceremony, contented herself with preserving the ancient and Apostolic rite of Imposition of Hands; and requiring that it should be given only to persons, who, being properly instructed, were willing in the face of the Church, publicly to renew the vows made for them at their Baptism.

After the Reformation, at least in Hooker's time, (lib. v. 66,) whether through ignorance or carelessness, this rite was much neglected. The 60th canon of the Church of England under James I., was (as we are told by Bishop Hall, in his Tract Χειροθεσία) afterwards framed to excite the Church to its observance; and a considerable effect was produced by it, until the contempt brought by means of the Puritans upon the Episcopal order withdrew the people from its reception. The important benefits resulting from this rite are, in the present day, fully appreciated; and it is fair to judge, that, however defectively it may be administered, owing to the excess of population, there never was a time since the Reformation in which it has been so effectually practised, nor in which the real nature of the rite has been more perfectly understood. For further information, see Hammond, De Confirmatione; Bishop Hall, Χειροθεσία; Bingham's Antiquities, book xiii.; and Bishop Taylor, On Confirmation.

CONFIRMATION by the Archbishop of the Province, in the English Ecclesiastical polity, immediately succeeds the election of a Bishop by the King's congé d'élire. On Confirmation the new Bishop obtains jurisdiction in his Diocese.

CONFI'SCATE, v. CONFI'SCATE, adj. CONFISCA'TION, CONFI'SCATOR, CONFI'SCATORY: Fr. confisquer; Sp. confiscar; It. confiscare; Lat. confiscare; Gr. φίσκος, δημόσιον ταμεῖον πολύχρημον. Hesychius. Lat. fiscus; Fr. fisque, a bag or purse. Confiscaria bona dicuntur, quæ in fiscum coguntur. Menage. To confiscate, (written by some old writers confisk,) is to forfeit, to seize as forfeited, unto the Prince's or common treasury. Cotgrave.

Thy goodes are confisked, and thy children banished.
Golden Boke, B b. iii.

Ye put yourselfe than in aduēture that all the hole hoost shulde ryse on you and slee you, or els that the kyng shulde repute you for traytours, and strike off your heedes, and cōfyske all your landes. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. xxxiv.

And all their landes, goodes and possessions were confiscate and seased to y^e^ kynge's vse.
Hall. Richard III. The third Yere.

I knowe by thy letter, how thou art banished from Rome, and all thy goods confiscate, and that for pure heauinesse thou arte sicke in the body. Golden Boke, A a v.

Where our sayd progenitour accepted the same, and then caused himselfe to be crowned kyng of Scotland, and for a tyme enterteigned it, and enioyed it, as very proprietary and owner of the realme, as on thone partie by confiscation acquired, & on the other part by free will surrendred vnto him.
Hall. Henry VIII. The thirty-fourth Yere.

And Edwarde Stafford eldest sonne to Henry late Duke of Buckingham, he restored to his name, dignitie and possessions, which King Richard did confiscate and attainted.
Grafton. Henry VII. The first Yere.

But the king commanding him to be kept from sustenance, hunger at last enforced him to render himself to the king's mercy: all his goods which were very great, confiscate.
Baker. Henry III. Anno 1235.

Having espied two wealthy gentlemē of Rome passing by, he commanded them to be apprehended incontinently, and condemned in the confiscation of their goods.
Holland. Suetonius. Caligula, fol. 143.

The English and Dutch are never permitted, though under the greatest distress of weather, or want of provisions, to put into any of those ports; but their ships, if they come in, are constantly confiscated: and upon this very account, that, if once entrance were permitted the traffic could not but follow.
Hoadly. An Enquiry into the Conduct of Great Britain, &c.

But, doubtless, an innocent posterity were sometimes punished, according to the denunciation of this law, for the crimes of their wicked fathers; as is done by modern states, in attaint of blood and confiscation: and this, with the highest equity in both cases.
Warburton. The Divine Legation.

The confiscators truly have made some allowance to their victims from the scraps and fragments of their own tables, from which they have been so harshly driven, and which have been so bountifully spread for a feast to the harpies of usury.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

After what has passed in 1782, one would not think that decorum, to say nothing of policy, would permit them to call up, by magick charms, the grounds, reasons, and principles of those terrible, confiscatory and exterminatory periods.
Id. Letter to Richard Burke, Esq.

CONFIT, n. CONFI'TURE. See COMPITS. Fr. confiture; It. confettura; Sp. confitura. All from the Lat. confectio; from confectum, past participle of conficere, to make up together.

Fr. confiture; a confecting, preserving, steeping, soaking, sawcing, seasoning; also, a confection, condiment, preserve. Cotgrave.

Would you not use me scurvily again, and give me possets with purging confits in't?
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Scornful Lady, act iv. sc. 1.

And in this house we contain also a confiture-house; where we make all sweet-meats dry and moist.
Bacon. New Atalantis.

CONFIX, Lat. configere, confixum; (con, and figere,) to fix or fasten to.

——— As this is true,
Let me in safety raise me from my knees,
Or else for euer be confixed here
A marble monument.
Shakspeare. Measure for Measure, fol. 81.

NFIX. — ON-LICT.

For even with the help of all the thornes in our sides or before our eyes, to wit our own pains or the pressures of others; how subject are we to embrace this earth, ev'n while it wounds by this confixure of ourselves to it?

Mountague. Devoute Essays, Treat. 4. part ii. sec. 1.

CONFLA'GRANT, } Lat. conflagrans, present par-
CONFLAGRA'TION. } ticiple of conflagrare; (con, and flagr-are; Gr. φλέγ-ειν, to burn.) See the Example from Hammond.

Fr. conflagration; It. conflagratione; Sp. conflagracion. A general burning, or consuming with fire. Cotgrave.

——— Then raise
From the conflagrant mass, purg'd and refin'd,
New heavens, new earth.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book xii. l. 548.

And what may that signifie to us? Why, fire you know is the embleme of a civil war, which is called a πύρωσις, a combustion, or being farther broken out into flames, a conflagration; and I conceive should be so rendred in that place of St. Peter, where we read—the fiery trial.

Hammond. Works. Sermon 5. vol. iv

As for unbelievers, and wicked livers and impenitents, they are immediately, upon their death, put into a miserable condition, and so shall continue for ever; though perhaps their misery will not have its consummation and extremity till the day of judgment, and the general conflagration of the world, as neither the other had their happiness compleated till that time.

Sharp. Works. Sermon 8. vol. vii.

For conflagrations, fierce and strong,
Are fatal still, but never long.

Blacklock. Horace. Ode 13. book i.

CONFLA'TE, adj. } Lat. conflare, atum; con, and CONFLA'TION. } flare, which, with Gr. φλᾶν, Vossius thinks a sono fictum. Conflation, is A blowing together, or at the same time.

Methought no ladie else so high renownd
That might haue causde me change my conflate minde,
So was I caught by snares of Cupid blind.

Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 24.

The sweetest and best harmony is, when every part or instrument is not heard by itself, but a conflation of them all.

Bacon. Natural History, sec. 225.

CONFLI'CT, v. } Lat. confligere, conflictum; con,
CO'NFLICT, n. } and fligere, to dash. Vossius
CONFLICTA'TION. } thinks fligo, is the Gr. θλίβω, Æol. θλίγω.

To dash together, to strive or struggle against or with, to combat, to encounter; to contend or contest.

Also where there is lack of order, nedes muste be perpetuall conflycte. Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book i. fol. 3.

And ouer & besyde these foure pryncipall bataylles, Vortimerus had w^t the Saxons dyuers other conflictis, as in Kent, at Thetfoorde in Northfolke, & in Essex, neare vnto Colchestre.

Fabyan, vol. i. ch. lxxxviii.

Tary (quoth he) in this place whiles I goe into my accustomed place, and praye there. For he durst not make them priuie of his conflicte, sith they were yet but weake.

Udall. Matthew, ch. xxvi.

First when to get Marfisa he had thought,
He had conflicted more then twice or thrise,
And now with tother quarrelled for nought,
About a bird or some such fond devise.

Harrington. Orlando, book xxvi. st. 74.

——— The starrie cope
Of heav'n perhaps, or all the elements
At least had gon to rack, disturb'd and torne
With violence of this conflict.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 995.

——— And sturdy conflictation
Of struggling winds, when they have fiercely strove,
Phœbus fair golden locks would rudely move,
Out of their place.

More. On the Soul, part ii. book iii. can. 2. st. 17.

And this consideration doth so effectually support him under all the difficulties that he hath to conflict with, that he not only sits down easily and quietly, but is very well pleased with the dispensations of the Divine providence towards him, how ingrateful soever they may be to flesh and blood.

Sharp. Works. Sermon 5. vol. i.

CON-FLICT. — CON-FLOW.

Even when I do not suppose good men to be under a state of persecution, yet still I suppose them to live in a state of mortification and self-denial; to be under a perpetual conflict with their bodily appetites and inclinations, and struggling to get the mastery over them. Atterbury. Preface, vol. ii.

On the other hand, Electra torne with sundry conflicting passions, is most apparently, and in the properest notion of the word, uniform. Hurd. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

——— Then let me dare
This conflict, in the dusty lists to shase;
And prosper thou my glowing wheels.

Philips. First Olympionique of Pindar.

CO'NFLOW, v. } Confluere, confluxus; (con, and CO'NFLUX, n. } flu-ere,) which Vossius considers CO'NFLUENT, } to be of the same origin with CO'NFLUENCE, } plu-ere, that is the Gr. βλύ-ειν,
CONFLUXIBI'LITY. } manare, scaturire. Tooke; the A. S. fleuwan. Conflux, must, however, be the Latin past participle. Holland alone has supplied Examples of the verb to conflow. He also uses confluent as a noun.

To flow together, to unite or join in one stream, current, or channel; to go, move, pass along in the same stream or concourse, to flock together.

Fr. confluence; It. confluenza; Sp. confluencia.

Now, beeing much delighted with the Alexandrines' praises in prict song, who newly in a second voiage had with their fleet conflowed to Naples, he sent for more of them out of Alexandria.

Holland. Suetonius. Nero Claudius Cæsar, fol. 187.

After this, there offered themselves of their owne accord a mightie number of nations and kings conflowing together in troups and companies.

Id. Ammianus. Constantius and Julianus, fol. 97.

The morrow next ensuing he departed from thence by the very edge of the river bankes, where the streame was big by occasion of other brookes conflowing thither on every side.

Id. Ib. Julianus, fol. 221.

And Yorke's place
With my lorde's grace
To whose magnificence
Is all the confluence.

Shelton. Why come ye not to Court.

(He) was with much honour and high entertainement, in sight of a great confluence of people, lordes and ladies estsoones remitted by water to his former lodging.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Ambass. from Russia, vol. i. fol. 287.

There appeared no conflux of men in obedience to the proclamation; the arms and ammunition were not yet come from York, and a general sadness cover'd the whole town.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, &c. book v. fol. 719.

Thence to the gates cast round thine eye and see
What conflux issuing forth, or entring in,
Pretors, proconsuls to thir provinces
Hasting or on return.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 62.

When Fidene had thus openly revolted, Tullius sent for Metius and his power from Alba, and setteth forward against his enemies: and passing over the river Anio, encamped neere the confluent, where both streames meet together.

Holland. Livius, fol. 21.

Where since these confluent floods, so fit for hawking, lie,
And store of fowl entice skill'd falconers there to fly.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 20.

In this confluence of so many prosperous successes, in the strength also of his yeares and perfect health, hee had a full purpose sodainly to retire himselfe and remoove out of the way as farre as hee could.

Holland. Suetonius. Tiberius, fol. 92.

CON-FLOW. — CON-FORM.

But nothing in the world gives Moreland such content
As her own darling Dove his confluence to behold
Of floods in sundry strains.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 12.

To these we have adjoyned a lecture in the Greek; that is, the grammar in the Greek, perpetually to be read there; and all the youth thereunto to have confluence for the principalls.
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Anno 1555.

But notwithstanding all this guard a little before the Duke [of Somerset] died, there happened on a sudden a rumbling noise, as though it had been guns shooting off and great horses coming; which produced a very great terror among the people, of whom there was a greater conflux than ever had been observed before on such an occasion, notwithstanding it was so early.
Id. Ib. Edward VI. Anno 1551.

The vilest cockle, gaping on the coast
That rounds the ample seas, as well may boast,
The craggy rock projects above the sky,
That he in safety at its foot may lie;
And the whole ocean's confluent waters swell,
Only to quench his thirst, or move and blanch his shell.
Prior. Solomon. Knowledge, book i.

I answer, the same way that the water doth: which I suppose to be by its upper superficies; the water descending by pores and passages that there it finds into chinks and veins, and by a confluence of many of them by degrees swelling into a stream, the air accompanies and follows it by a constant succession.
Ray. On the Creation, part i.

And even without any design of hers, not to say without her existence, a vacuity will be so much opposed as we really find it to be, by the gravity of most, if not of all bodies here below, and the confluxibility of liquors and other fluids.
Boyle. A Free Enquiry into the received notion of Nature.

Beyond this it was perfectly fresh, and formed of a fine running stream, along the side of which I walked till I came to the conflux of two small rivulets, that branched off to the right and left of a remarkably steep and romantick mountain.
Cook. Voyage, book v. ch. i. vol. vii.

Subsiding lungs their labouring vessels press,
Affected mutual with severe distress,
While towards the left their confluent torrents gush,
And on the heart's sinister cavern rush.
Brookes. Universal Beauty, book iv. l. 153.

While bluish Yamuna between them streams,
And Ganga pure with sunny radiance gleams,
Till Vani whom a russet ochre stains
Their destin'd confluence gains.
Then flows in mazy knot the triple pow'r
O'er laughing Magadh and the vales of Gour.
Jones. Hymn to Lacshmi.

CONFO'RM, v. CONFO'RM, adj. CONFO'RMABLE, CONFO'RMABLY, CONFORMA'TION, CONFO'RMER, CONFO'RMIST, CONFO'RMITY. Fr. conformer; Sp. conformár; It. conformare; Lat. conformare; (con, and formare,) q. eandem formam rei alicui imponere. Minshew. Forma, Vossius supposes to be the ancient formus, i. e calidus, quia ex calore nativo provenit. Tooke proposes the A. S. fræm-an, facere, to frame; by a common transposition.

Fr. conformer; to conform, fit with, fashion as, make apt for, like to, proportionable unto; also (simply) to make, frame, fashion or proportion. Cotgrave.

To be or cause to be of the same form as another, to be uniform;—to comply with, yield, or assent to, sc. a set form of words.

Sholde conformije to on kỳnde. on holỳ church to bỳ leỳve.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, fol. 58.

But nathless she neither wept ne siked,
Conforming hire to that the markis liked.
Chaucer The Clerkes Tale, v. 8422.

And whan he sigh time and space,
Through the disceite of his magike,
He put hym out of man's like,
And of a dragon toke the forme,
As he, whiche wolde hym all conforme
To that she saw in sweuen er this.
Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 139.

But it is of an other forme
Wherof, if that I shall conforme
The figure vnto that it is,
These olde clerkes tellen this:
That it is like a gote skipende.
Id. Ib. fol. 143.

And nyle ghe be confourmyd to this world, but be ghe refourmed in newnesse of ghoure will that ghe preve which is the will of God good and wel plesyng and perfit.
Wiclif. Romaynes, ch. xii.

For in yᵉ Scriptures is no cõfuse ordre, but a cõforme & cõsonãt ordre, one chaptre alwaies approuyng & declarynge an other.
Bale. Apologie, fol. 55.

Yet the good emperour, not beyng contented with this, commanded that these maisters should be lodged in his palais, and eate in his presence, and accompany his persone, to see if their life were conformable to their science, and whether their pleasant and well couched wordes agreed in effect with their workes.
Golden Boke, D. 8.

And that Godde helpeth vs forward not without our own cõformable wil, appereth plaine by clere textes of Scripture I wene mo then an hundred.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 695.

The sentence geven conformably thereunto, shal be confirmed.
Strype. Memorials. The King's Ambassadors to Cardinal Wolsey.

Wherefore the prelacy of the londe assymyled them in counceyll, and by a full & hoole auctoryte, seinge they might not enduce the kynge to noone conformytie or agremẽt, to resume his lawfull wyfe, and to refuse that other, they denoũsed hym and his realme accursed. Fabyan, ch. 243.

We should never therefore use, behold or look upon any one of our fellow creatures, but we should be raised by them unto God, invited to devotion, and spurred to conform our wills and affections to the pattern of that eternal will, which they any way express.
Mede. Works. Discourse 35. book i.

No, no, she wailes my state, and would appease my cares,
Yet interdited to the Fates, conformes her will to theirs.
Stirling. Aurora. Elegie 2.

Our purer essence then will overcome
Their noxious vapour, or enur'd not feel,
Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive
Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 217.

Whereof the rentalls are not produced conforme to the ordinance. Knox. History of the Reformation, fol. 323.

May her gay mouth, which she no time may close,
So wide be, that the moon may turn therein
May eyes and teeth be made conform to those;
Eyes set by chance and white, teeth black and thin.
Drummond. Thyrsis in Dispraise of Beauty.

Beloved, did we verily believe, that God could and would make us perfectly happy, if we serve him, though all the world conspire to make us miserable, and that he could and would make us miserable if we serve him not, though all the world should conspire to make us happy, how were it possible that to such a faith our lives should not be conformable.
Chillingworth. Sermon 1.

And we find that with these circumstances, their salts are always so [figured :] and always conformable to themselves. The figures whereof are very numerous; but all agree in being rectilinear, and composed of proportional sides and angles.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book i. ch. iii.

I haue such confidence in your Christen brest; as in my iudgment ye will conformably and gladly, both heare that may be reformed in you, and also (as it is worthy) so knowledge and confesse the same.

Fox. Martyrs. A Letter of Latimer, to Sir Edward Boynton, fol. 1586.

Prescobald, as he earnestly beheld this ragged stripling, who was not so disguised in his tattered attire, but that his countenance gaue signification of much towardnes and vertue in him, with conformity of manners agreeing to the same, being moved with pity demanded of what country he was, and where he was borne.
Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 436.

Because of this his ring, she could not hide,
By all her paintings any one deformitie
He saw most plainly that in her did bide,
Vnto her former beauties no conformity.
Harrington. Orlando, book xvii. st. 61.

You, it seemeth, are none of those wee he speaketh of: for he meant it of the publick authorised doctrine of the Church of England, and of conformers unto the said doctrine of that Church.
Mountague. An Appeale to Cæsar, ch. vii.

I think those who make laws, and use force, to bring men to church-conformity in religion, seek only the compliance, but concern themselves not for the conviction of those they punish; and so never use force to convince. For, pray tell me, when any dissenter conforms, and enters into the Church-communion, is he ever examined to see whether he does it upon reason, and conviction, and such grounds as would become a Christian concerned for religion?
Locke. Second Letter concerning Toleration, vol. ii. fol. 264.

True holiness, we must know, is seated only in the soul, and is indeed nothing else but the right disposition of the several faculties of the soul, and their acting conformably to the law and nature of God. Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 39.

If the compact about matters of religion, be that those should be punished in their temporal, who neglect or despise their eternal interest, who, I beseech you, is by this agreement rather to be punished; a sober dissenter, who appears concerned for religion and his salvation, or an irreligious, prophane or debauched conformist? Locke. A Third Letter for Toleration.

A new world of policy was opened, to which it was necessary we should conform, whether we would or not; and my only thought was how to conform to our situation in such a manner as to unite to this kingdom, in prosperity and in affection, whatever remained of the empire.
Burke. Speech at Bristol, previous to the Election.

We, on the contrary, by the help of that spiritual sense, are able to explain all the prophesies of one and the same Messias, conformably to the event, and even to the time which the Jews themselves prefixed for the completion of them.
Hurd. Works. Sermon 5. vol. v.

In the Hebrew poetry, as I before remarked, there may be observed a certain conformation of the sentences, the nature of which is, that a complete sense is almost equally infused into every component part, and that every member constitutes an entire verse. Lowth. Lecture 3. part i.

The case is the same, if the husband should be the conformist; though how the law is to operate in this case I do not see: for the act expressly says, that the child shall be taken from such Popish parent. Burke. On the Popery Laws.

In conformity, indeed, to the unfeigned friendship which had so long been cemented between us, I rejoice in every advantage that can attend you, be it ever so inconsiderable, much more, therefore, in one so important to your happiness.
Melmoth. Cicero. Letters. From Trebonius, book xii.

CO'NFORT, CONFORTA'TION, CONFORTA'TIVE, CONFORTA'TORY. See COMFORT. Fr. conforter; to confirm, help, strengthen, reinforce; to encourage, cheer up; to solace, to recreate.

——— The sonne of al hevene
Conforteth him in here continence.
Piers Ploukman. Vision, fol. 308.

Or if he take confortatiues
to helpe hym at his neede.
Drant. Horace. Satyre 2.

For life, and limmes confortityue.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Lollius.

CONFORT — CONFOUND.

It is evident that his full and fervant aim is, in this close of his epistle, to leave behind him a strengthening confortatory unto the whole Church of the New Testament then in the world, and in them unto the whole Catholick to succeed to the end of the world, against the fears of falling away.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part iv. fol. 239.

For corroboration and comfortation [some editions, confortation,] take such bodies as are of astringent quality, without manifest cold. Bacon. Natural History, sec. 962.

CONFO'UND, v. CONFO'UNDED, adj. CONFO'UNDEDLY, CONFO'UNDEDNESS, CONFO'UNDER. Fr. confondre; It. confondere; Sp. confundir; Lat. confundere; con, and fundere, to pour. Fundere est in fundum jacere. Vossius. But fundus is of uncertain Etymology.

To pour together, to mix or mingle, to blend; to cause to be indistinct or indeterminate, perplexed or intricate, or involved; to deprive of the quality or power of distinction or discernment, of activity or presence of mind; and thus, to perplex, to disorder, to amaze, to astonish, to stupify.

Ihesu so meke, I þe biseke, on croice þat was wonded.
Grant me þat bone, þe Scottes sone alle be confonded.
R. Brunne, fol. 283.

For whi? Scripture seith, ech that beleueth in him schal not be confoundid. Wiclif. Romaynes, ch. x.

O holy saint Prosperous, how mightely, with the Scripture of Paul diddest thou confound this heresie, twelve hundred yeares agoe or thereupon. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 41.

That he for the perfighte loue whiche he bare to the noble feates of chyualrie and marciall actes, in auoidyng the slowe worme and deadly dormouse called idleness, the ruine of realmes and confounder of nobilitie, &c.
Hall. Henry IV. The fourth Yere.

I denie that any such perswasion is nourished in them, by suffering three or foure to communicate, but the contrarie rather, for the Godly example of these fewe may eyther prouoke the rest to the like diligence, or else confounde them and make them ashamed. Whitgift. Defence, fol. 533.

Whereat amaz'd, as one that unaware
Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
Or 'stonish'd as night-wanderers often are,
Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood
Even so confounded in the dark she lay.
Shakspeare. Venus and Adonis.

REMONST. Of the same strain is their witty descent of my confoundedness.
ANSW. Speak no more of it, it was a fatal word that God put into your mouth, when you began to speak for Episcopacy, as boding confusion to it.
Milton. Animadversion upon Remonstrants Defence.

Hateful confounders both of blood and laws,
Vile orators of shame, that plead delight;
Ungracious agents in a wicked cause,
Factors for darkness, messengers of night.
Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamond.

NOV. JUN. Tell you! why, sir, are you my confessour?
ROM. I will be your confounder if you do not.
[Draws a pocket dag.
Stir not, nor spend your voice.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, act iv. sc. 1.

For the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old.
Waller. On a War with Spain.

I blush and am confounded to appear
Before thy presence, Cato
Addison. Cato, act iv. sc. 1.

CON-FOUND. — CON-FRIER.

It was upon this very account that Christians took the pains to translate and publish them [Scriptures;] not to confound religion but to confirm it. Bentley. Free-thinking.

When the loud winds, usurping on the main
For angry Juno, labour'd to destroy
The hated relics of confounded Troy.
Waller. His Majesty (being Prince) escaped.

Our critic confounds the nature and order of things to make Paganism passive and unprovoked at a principle, which subverted the whole system of their religion, namely, the unsociability of the Christian faith, and yet mortally offended with a practice the most sacred and universal in Paganism, namely, mysterious and nocturnal rites. Warburton. The Divine Legation. Preface.

With no reason on earth to go out of his way,
He [Garrick] turn'd and he varied full ten times a day.
Though secure of our hearts, yet confoundedly sick,
If they were not his own by finessing and trick.
Goldsmith. Retaliation.

CONFRACT, Lat. confractum, the past participle of confringere; con, and frangere, to break.

The body being into dust confract,
The spright diffus'd, spread by dispersion.
More. On the Soul, part iii. can. 1. st. 9.

CONFRATERNITY, Lat. con, and frater, a brother; of uncertain Etymology. See Vossius, and Schedius in Lennep. Verstegan uses Confrater. See CONFRIER.

A brotherhood, a society of brethren.

And all these live in one society, & confraternity, and by the name of brethren.
Stowe. Of the Vniversities, ch. x. fol. 971.

And shall Patæcian, the notorious thiefe, be in better state after this life when he is once departed, only because he was entred and professed in the orders of this confraternity, than good Epaminondas? Holland. Plutarch, fol. 23.

But the most part of the arguments and conjectures which prove it, may not be uttered and taught, but unto those who are professed in the absolute religion and confraternity trieterical, of Bacchus in our country. Id. Ib. fol. 583.

England is not left out of the comprehensive scheme of their malignant charity; and in England we find those who stretch out their arms to them; who receive from them tokens of confraternity, and standards consecrated amidst their rites and mysteries.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

If then the first Christians did take the care you mention (and I am wholly of your opinion in that point) their solicitude might as candidly, perhaps, and as reasonably be derived from a sense of their duty, and an honest endeavour to discharge it, as from the mere desire of increasing the honour of their confraternity by the illustrious integrity of its numbers.
Watson. Apology for Christianity, let. 4.

To day I am just come from paying my adoration at St. Peter's to three extraordinary relics, which are exposed to public view only on these two days in the whole year, at which time all the confraternities in the city come in procession to see them.
Gray. Works. Letter 19. To his Mother.

CONFRICATION, Lat. confricare, atum; (con, and fricare,) to rub together.

It hath been reported, though it be scarce credible, that ivy hath grown out of a stag's-horne; which they suppose did rather come from a confrication of the horne upon the ivy, than from the horne itself. Bacon. Natural History, Cent. vi. sec. 550.

For sometyme the fyer toke by itself in the woodes by the mountaynes, through the vehemente confrication, freatinge and gatheringe by the trees, whyche happened by force of wynde, whereby arose a greater fyer & flame.
Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 64.

CONFRIER, Fr. confreres; fellows of one and the same company or society. Cotgrave. See CONFRATERNITY. Verstegan uses Confrater.

Gild-brother, a confrater, one that is a brother or confrere of the gild.
Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, ch. vii.

It was enacted, that none of the brethren or confriers of the said religion within this realm of England, and land of Ireland, should be called Knights of Rhodes. Weever.

CONFRO'NT, v. CONFRONTA'TION, CONFRO'NTER. } Fr. confronter; It. confrontare; Sp. confrontar; q. frontem fronti objicere; to place front to front. Skinner. See AFFRONT.

To stand or cause to stand front to front, face to face; opposite, in opposition.

When on the fishie Seuerne's bordering costs
Oppos'd for fight, the battels ranged were,
A noble knight confronting both the hosts,
Did boldly in the midst aduance his speare.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 597.

Thus briefly I haue set you downe his devise, which albeit sound and reason seemed to countenance, yet that tyranne custome hath so confronted, that it will neuer be admitted.
Camden. Remains. Languages, fol. 32.

While continence a precious liquor pour'd
Into the wound, and suppled tenderly:
Then binding up the gaping orifice
Reviv'd the spirits, that now she 'gan to rise
And with new life confront her heartless enemies.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 11.

And if the word [for the barbarians] or [by the barbarians] be also in the Hebrew text, it is no less manifest, that the most barbarous Arabians of the desert were and are the confronting, and next people of all other unto it.
Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. x. sec. 3.

[Bastanus] could not endure an equal (much less a confronter) in authority. Speed. The Romans, book vi. ch. xxv.

Some gloss'd, how love and wisdom were at strife
And brought my proverbs to confront my life.
Prior. Solomon. Pleasure, book ii.

It is therefore fitter for such finite, weak, ignorant beings as we, to be humble and meek and conscious of our ignorance, and jealous of our own judgment, when it thus confronteth infinite wisdom. Derham. Physico-Theology, book iii. ch. iv.

(His) [Epicurus] monstrous errors he [Gassendi] all along strives to palliate, by confronting them with others as bad, amongst the Theistic sects of philosophy.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iii. sec. 4.

Such is the republic to which we are going to give a place in civilised fellowship: The republic which with joint consent we are going to establish in the centre of Europe, in a post that overlooks and commands every other state, and which eminently confronts and menaces this kingdom.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

The argument would require a great number of comparisons, confrontations, and combinations, to find out the connection between the two manners. [of architecture.]
Swinburne. Spain. Letter 44. p. 442.

CONFU'SE, v. CONFU'SE, adj. CONFU'SED, adj CONFU'SEDLY, CONFU'SEDNESS, CONFU'SELY, CONFU'SION, CONFU'SIVE. } Lat. confusus, the past participle of confundere, to Confound. q. v. To mix, mingle or blend; to cause to be indistinct or indeterminate, perplexed or intricate, or involved; to deprive of the power or quality of distinction or discernment; of activity or presence of mind; and thus, to perplex, to disorder, to amaze, to astonish, to stupify.

Alas! I ne have no language to tell
The effecte, ne the torment of min hell:
Min herte may min harmes not bewrey;
I am so confuse, that I cannot say.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2232.

USE

The kynge somdele had an enuie
And thought he wolde his wittis plie
To set some conclusion,
Whiche shulde be confusion
Vnto this knight.
Gower. Conf. Am., book i. fol. 25.

And assone as he was come, he sente to defye the Frenche kyng, who was at Compyengne; wherof Loys, of Trauchen, who had alwayes before excused the duke, was so confused, that he wold no more returne agayne into Brabant, but dyed of sorowe in Fraūce. Froissart. Cronycle, ch. xxxviii.

Being willing to retire in that order, as the L. Baglione had prescribed vnto them, and could not, they cast themselves at the last into a confuse order, and retired, they being mingled amongst the Turks. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Loss of Famag.

And so when the most gracious Lord Jesus came forth, & saw a very great, but a confuse rabblement of all sortes of people (for there were men, women, and children) he was moued with compassion. Udall. Mark, ch. vi.

They vse both the Olde and Newe Testament, and reade both in their owne language, but so confusedly, that they themselues that doe reade, vnderstand not what themselues doe say.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Richard Chancelour, vol. i. fol. 253.

Ye shall not only endevour your selfs, and employ your most diligence, to enquire and fynde out such canker'd parsons, vicars, curats, which do not truely and substantially declare our said injunctions, and the very word of God, but momble confusely, saying that they be compelled to read them.
Burnett. Records. An Original Letter of the King's, No. 63.

Whiche whanne ioye was proposed to hym he suffride the cross and dispiside confusioun and sittith on the right half of the seete of God. Wiclif. Hebrewis, ch. xii.

And in the erthe ouerleiynge of folkis, for confusioun of soun of the see and floodis. Id. Luke, ch. xxi.

Thus haue I geuen you here the labours of a meany of Nērothes builders in the settynge vp this their great castel of confusyon.
Bale. Apologie, fol. 22.

The most confuse and licentious māner of beholding such spectacles, hee reformed and brought into order.
Holland. Suetonius. Augustus, fol. 59.

And as, when with unweildie waves, the great sea forefeeles winds,
That both wayes murmur, and no way, her certaine current finds
But pants and swells confusedly.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xiv. fol. 189.

——— Into this wilde abyss,
The womb of Nature and perhaps her grave,
Of neither sea nor shore, nor air, nor fire,
But all these in thir pregnant causes mixt
Confusedly. Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 914.

Till I saw those eyes, I was but a lump, a chaos of confusedness dwelt in me.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Elder Brother, act iii. sc. 5.

As in the first chaos confusedly
Each element's qualities were in th' other three;
So pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places, yet all are in all.
Donne. To Sir Henry Wotton.

As when a name lodg'd in the memory,
But yet through time almost obliterate,
Confusely hovers near the phantasie.
More. On the Soul, part ii. book ii. can. 3. st. 11.

The retrait of the sunne had made a publicke and noted change, in the frame of nature; this particular alteration of the shadow in places limited, might satisfy no lesse, without a confusive mutation in the face of the world.
Hall. Cont. Hezekiah Sick, Recovered, Visited.

Amphion so made stones and timber leap
Into fair figures, from a confus'd heap:
And in the symmetry of her parts is found,
A power, like that of harmony in sound.
Waller. At Pens-Hurst.

But as he wrote at second hand and from hearsay onely of things, which he himself had not seen, he is observed to have jumbled his facts together more confusedly, and described them more inaccurately, than the rest, who related them from their own knowledge. CŌFUSE — CONFUTE
Middleton. On the Variations in the Four Evangelists.

So that we have no kind of thing in the world, but our sins and follies that we can call our own; and those, God knows are so far from affording matter of boasting to us, that they ought to fill us with shame and confusion.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 3. vol. iv.

——— If we, unbroke,
Sustain their onset; little skill'd in war
To wheel, to rally and renew the charge,
Confusion, havock, and dismay will seize
The astonish'd rout.
Smollett. The Regicide, act ii.

When lo! ere yet I gain'd its lofty brow,
The sound of dashing floods, and dashing arms,
And neighing steeds, confusive struck mine ear.
Warton. Eclogue 4.

CONFU'TE, v. CONFU'TE, n. CONFU'TEMENT, CONFU'TER, CONFU'TABLE, CONFU'TANT, CONFUTA'TION, CONFUTA'TIVE. Fr. confuter; Sp. confutar; It. confutare; Lat. confutare; con, and ancient futare, which Festus explains, arguere. But this acceptation, Vossius remarks, is metaphorical. He adds, est enim futare, a futo vase, quia ut futo fervens aqua, ita oratione compescantur adversarii. And Varro says, vas aquarium vocant futum, quo in triclinio allatam aquam infundebant.

Confutare, in its primary application, then, is to pour cold into hot water; to allay the fervour, to repress the ardour. And thus, metaphorically,

To abate the force of argument; to resist, to repell it, to show its weakness; to prove its fallaciousness; to convict or convince of error, to disprove.

If his reasons bee light, and more good may be done in confuting his, than in confirming our owne; it were best of all to set vpon him, and put away by art, all that he hath fondly said without wit. Wilson. The Art of Rhetorike, fol. 114.

I was of one poynt very fast & sure, that sache thynges as I write are consonant vnto the comon Catholike fayth and determinacions of Christe's Catholike Churche, and are clear cōfutacions of false blasphemous heresies by Tyndall and Barnes putte forthe vnto the countrary. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 845.

Some men may be confuted in their errors, and persuaded out of them; but no man's error can be confuted, who together with his error doth not believe and grant some true principle that contradicts his error; for nothing can be proved to him who grants nothing, neither can there be as (all men know) any rational discourse, but out of grounds agreed upon by both parts.
Chillingworth. Rel. of Protestant Church, ch. iv. part i.

The third affirmeth that the roots of mandrakes do make a noise, or give a shreek upon eradication, which is indeed ridiculous and and false below confute. Sir Thomas Brown, book ii.

It be generally known, how and by whom ye have been instigated to a hard censure of that former book entitled The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, an opinion held by some of the best among reformed writers without scandal or confutement, tho' now thought new and dangerous by some of our severe gnostics.
Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

For error is no good confuter of error, as it is no good conversion that reforms one vice with another.
Taylor. On Repentance, ch. vi. sec. v.

Now against the rancour of an evil tongue, from which I never thought so absurdly, as that I of all men should be exempt. I must be forc'd to proceed from the unfeigned and diligent inquiry of mine own conscience at home (for better way I know not Readers) to give a more true account of myself abroad than this modest confuter as he calls himself, hath given of me.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

CONFUTE — CONGE.

Which conceit being already convicted, not only by Scaliger, Riolanus, and others; but daily confutable almost euery where out of England; we shall not further refute.
Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. viii.

A conceit not only injurious unto truth, and confutable by daily experience, but somewhat derogatory unto the Providence of God.
Id. book ii. ch. vi.

Now that the confutant may also know as he desires, what force of teaching there is sometimes in laughter; I shall return him in short, that laughter being one way of answering a fool according to his folly, teaches two sorts of persons.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

When a gentleman was commending Dr. Fisher, Bishop of Rochester his great paines in the confutation of Luther's books, the wise prelate said heartily, that he wish'd he had spent all that time in prayer and meditation which he threw away upon such useless wranglings. Taylor. Rule of Conscience. Preface, vii.

For when disputes are wearyd out,
'Tis interest still resolves the doubt:
But since no reason can confute ye,
Ill try to force you to your duty.
Butler. Hudibras, part ii. can. 2.

Our author knows he has all the common people on his side, and they only read the Gazettes of their own writers; so that every thing which is called an answer, is with them a confutation.
Dryden. The Duchess of York's Papers Defended.

He [our Saviour] foresaw that the great and popular objections to him would be that he was a magician; and therefore he confuted it before hand, and ejected evil spirits, to show that he was in no confederacy with them.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. ii. fol. 8.

He reckons Damasus and Ambrose amongst the most strenuous defenders of the faith, and confuters of heretics.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. fol. 23.

In the mean time, while affliction presseth hard upon us, while our deliverance is deferred, and the enemy is suffered to reproach and blaspheme; our prayer must be, that God would give us courage and utterance, still to confess him before men, and boldly to speak "his word of truth" for the edification of some and the confution of others. Bishop Horne. On the Psalms, psalm 119.

Albinus, in his fifth section, divides Plato's Dialogues into classes. Not into two general ones of exoteric and esoteric; but into the more minute, and different, of natural, moral, dialectic, confutative, civil, explorative, obstetrick, and subversive.
Warburton. Remarks on Sykes, vol. ii. fol. 207.

CO'NGE, v. } Fr. congé; It. congedo; Mid. Lat.
CO'NGE, n. } comiatus. The Etymology, Menage, Skinner, and Du Cange, agree to be from the Lat. commeatus. The Italian Menage traces thus, commeatus, It. commiato, comiato, comjato, congedo. The French, thus, commeatus, commiatus, comjatus, congé. In as far, says Skinner, as commeatus signifies the liberty of going here and there, congy is applied by us to the respectful bending of the body towards our friend, as if beseeching leave or liberty to depart. In correspondence with this, is the English expression, To take leave.

"Fr. congedier; to dismiss, discharge, licence, give leave unto, permit to go, suffer to depart." Cotgrave.

For conscience accuseþ þe. to congie þe for evere.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, fol. 49.

The kynge comaunded conscience. tho to congie alle hus officers.
Id. Ib. fol. 74.

Howe Laomedon the king of Troie,
Whiche ought well haue made him ioie,
Whan thei to rest a while hym preyde
Out of his londe he them congeyde.
Gower. Conf. Am., book v. fol. 102.

Wherfore the kynge being with the delayes discontented, sodēly with his wyfe departed, without takynge of theym any congie or leue. Fabyan, ch. 244.

I haue congied with the duke, done my adieu with his neerest.
Shakspeare. All's Well that Ends Well, fol. 247.

Fit time for him thence to depart it found,
To follow that, which he did long propound,
And vnto her his congee came to take.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 6.

Vpon a brace of milke white steedes
The two viragoes meete
The knights, and each the other did
With ciuill congies greete.
Warner. Albion's England, book ii. ch. vii.

The said Lord of Northumberlaund maid his devor at the departynge, of Gambads and Lepps, as did likewise the Lord Scrop the father, and many others that retorned ageyn, in takynge their congie.
Leland. The Fyancells of Margaret, Daughter of Henry VII.

With congees all salute him as he past,
And upon him their gracious glances cast.
Drayton. David and Goliah.

The humble insect humbly bow'd,
And all his lowest congees paid,
Of an alliance wondrous proud
To such a huffing tearing blade.
Somervile. The Ant and the Flie. Fable 3.

CONGE'AL, v. } Fr. congeler; Sp. congelar;
CONGE'ALMENT, } It. congelare; Lat. congelare;
CONGE'ALABLE, } con, and gelare; perhaps γελ-
CONGE'ALABLENESS, } âν, splendere, to shine.
CONGE'ALATION. } To bind a fluid or liquid substance into a solid by cold, by frost; as water into ice; to bind, fix, or fasten; met. as if by cold, to concrete, to coagulate.

This precious Margarite that thou seruest, sheweth it self discended by nobley of vertue, from his heauenliche dewe, nourished and congeled in mekenesse, that mother of all vertues.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, book ii.

If a thing be engendred in good matter, commonlie and for the more part it followeth, after the congelement vertue of the first matter, and it be not corrupte with vices, to proceade with encrease of good virtues: eke right so it fareth of badde.
Id. Ib.

Assub, he saith, is thilke same
For whiche in sondrie place is founde,
Whan it is fall downe to grounde
So as the fire it hath aneled,
Like vnto slime, whiche is congeled.
Gower. Conf. Am., fol. 143.

Blacke or deepe redde wynes and thicke, do bind and congele that which they doo fynd in the body.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book ii.

He who told one who then was Fortune's childe,
As if with horrour to congeale his bloud:
That Caius Marius farre from Rome exil'd,
Wretch'd on the ruines of great Carthage stood,
Though long both plagu'd by griefe, and by disgrace,
The consul-ship regaind, and dy'd in peace.
Stirling. Choruses in Julius Cæsar, chorus 5.

And therefore waters frozen in pans, and open glasses, after their dissolution do commonly leave a froth and spume upon them; which are caused by the airy parts diffused in the congealable mixture. Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. i.

But I am not so uncharitable to think that all our thoughts of kindness to death are the congelation of such black melancholick vapours; 'tis, I hope, in some an obedience to Plato's precept, the πειράσθαι ἐυσχημονεῖν, the endeavouring to behave one's self comely in whatever fortune. Hammond. Works. Sermon 4. vol. iv.

Enter the citty, clip your wiues, your friends,
Tell them your feats, whils't they with ioyfull teares
Wash the congealement from your wounds and kisse
The honour'd gashes whole.
Shakspeare. Antony and Cleopatra, fol. 361.

GEAL — ON- IAL.

It [the island of Sal) hath its name from the abundance of salt that is naturally congealed there, the whole island being full of large salt ponds. Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1683.

And yet this hot and subtile liquor I have found upon trial, purposely made, to be more easily congealable (in the sense freshly explained) by cold than even common water.

Boyle. New Observations on Weather Glasses, vol. ii. p. 493.

Not here to repeat what we formerly delivered of the easy congealableness of oil of aniseeds, we have (as we elsewhere note to another purpose) distilled a substance from benzoin, which becomes a fluid, a consistent body. Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 497.

Near them little plates of sugar plumbs, disposed like so many heaps of hail-stones, with a multitude of congelations in jellies of various colours. Tatler, No. 148.

When Priam strains his aged arm, to throw
His unavailing jav'lin at the foe;
(His blood congeal'd and every nerve unstrung)
Then with the theme complies the artful song;
Like him the solitary numbers flow,
Weak, trembling, melancholy, stiff and slow.
Pitt. Vida's Art of Poetry.

CONGE'NERATE, CONGE'NERACY, CONGE'NEROUS, CONGE'NEROUSNESS. Lat. congenerare, atum; con. and generare, formed from γένος, to beget, or bear. v. Congenite.

That they are ranged neither according to merit, nor congeneracy, of their conditions. More. Expos. Seven Ch. fol. 172.

And therefore as this number ten (according as I noted before) was called κόσμος, for the comprehensiveness of the title; so, I conceive, congenerous to this are those names of εἱμαρμένη, &c. these all of them being of a comprehensive signification.

More. Appendix to Defence of Philosophic Cabbala, fol. 119.

Rational means, and persuasiue arguments, whose force and strength must lie in their congenerousness and suitableness with the ancient ideas and inscriptions of truth upon our souls.

Hollywell. Saviour of Souls.

Then these things being carried respectively, sight to the eyes, and whiteness to the object, which did actively beget it, the eye becomes full of sight, and sees, and is not made sight in the abstract, but an eye seeing; and that which did congenerate the colour, is fitted with whiteness in the abstract, but a thing white, whether wood or stone. Cudworth. Morality, book i. ch. iii.

In this place we should introduce the wolf, a congenerous animal, if we had not fortunately a just right to omit it in a history of British quadrupeds. Pennant. British Zoology. The Wolf.

CONGE'NIAL, CONGENIA'LITY, CONGE'NIOUS. See CONGENITE. Of or pertaining to the same kind, suited or adapted to the kind, nature or disposition.

But, as two voyces in one song embrace,
Fletcher's keen tribble, and deep Beaumont's base,
Two, full, congenial souls; still both prevail'd;
His muse and thine were quarter'd, not impal'd.
Berkenhead. On the Collection of Fletcher's Works.

Even the pride that I take in a certain congeniality (as I may term it) with your lordship's studies, will scant let me cease.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 299.

In the blood thus dropp'd there remains a spirit of life congenious to that in the body. Hale. Remains, p. 288.

For models, made to mend our kind,
To no one clime should be confin'd;
And manly virtue, like the sun,
His course of glorious toils should run;
Alike diffusing in his sight
Congenial joy, and life, and light.
Swift. The Birth of Manly Virtue.

That approbation which the world has uniformly given, I have endeavoured to justify by such proofs as questions of this kind will admit; by the analogy, which painting holds with the sister arts, and consequently by the common congeniality, which they all bear to our nature. Sir Joshua Reynolds. Discourse 15.

CONGENITE, adj. Lat. con, and genitus, past participle of geno, Gr. γέν-ω, ειν, to beget, to bear. CON-GENITE. — CON-GIARY.

Begotten or born together; produced in union with some thing else; connate.

From an inclination it came to a firm persuasion and so to a law. God, in this, ruling in our hearts something after the manner by which he reigns in Heaven, even by significations of what is fit, by inspirations and congenite notices, by natural necessities.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. i.

Did we learn such an alphabet in our embryo state? And how comes it to pass that we are not aware of any such congenite apprehensions? We know what we know; but do we know any more? Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. iv.

Superstructing almost their whole physics upon abstracted reason; by which I mean the rational faculty, endowed but with its own congenit, or common notions and ideas.

Boyle. The Christian Virtuoso, part i.

Some here restrain that maxim ("whatsoever is sinful, is also voluntary,") only to sinful actions; but it may be also true of sinful habits, which, though congenit with our natures, may be yet said to be free and voluntary. South. Sermon 13. vol. viii.

CONGERIES, congerere; to keep together; con, and gerere, which Vossius interprets manum administrate, formed from χερ-ὸς, oblique case from χείρ, the hand. Pliny mentions a crow, which in time of drought was seen lapides congerentem in situlam monimenti, "casting stones into the bucket of a sepulcre," till by heaping up (tali congerie) many stones, he brought the water to rise so high, that he could drink with ease.

A number of separate particles, or distinct bodies heaped, piled or collected together into one mass; a collection.

A cherry, I say, is nothing but a congeries of sensible impressions, or ideas perceived by various senses: which ideas are united into one thing (or have one name given them) by the mind; because they are observed to attend each other.

Berkeley, vol. iii. p. 327.

The teeth in the jaws was a triangular congeries of small teeth in the roof of the mouth.

Pennant. British Zoology. The forked Hake Cod Fish.

Their most remote account reaches to Tatuma and Tapuppa, male and female stones or rocks, who support the congeries of land and water, or our globe underneath.

Cook. Voyage, vol. vi. book iii. ch. ix.

CONGE'ST, v. CONGE'STION. Congerere, congestum, to keep together. (See CONGERIES, above.) To heap or pile up together; to collect or gather into one mass, to amass. See an additional Example in v. Conject.

I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
Must for your victory us all congest,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.
Shakspeare. A Lover's Complaint.

So is the opinion of some divines, that, until after the Flood, were no mountains, but that by congestion of sand, earth, and such stuff as we now see hills strangely fraughted with, in the waters they were first cast up

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 9.

But 'midst thy boundless joys, unbridled youth,
Remember still this sad, but certain truth,
That thou at last severely must account;
To what will thy congested guilt amount?
Blackmore. Creation, book vii.

CONGIARY, Lat. congiarium, from congius, the name of a measure, perhaps from Concha, a shell.

He gaue congiaries often times to the people, but lightly they were of diuerse summes, one while 400, another while 300, and some times 2 cc. and fiftie sesterces: and he left not so much as boyes under age, whereas they had not wont to receive such congiaries, unlesse they were above eleuen yeares old.

CON. GIARY.

Holland. Suetonius. Augustus, fol. 57.

To this man last rehersed the peoples favour and affection most inclined, by reason of many congiaries and largesses, which he had given amongst them in publick, by meanes whereof many a man was obliged and bound unto him. Id. Livius, fol. 980.

Moreover not only things but customs, civil and religious, are preserved upon coins, as sacrifices, triumphs, congiaries, &c.
Priestley. On History, part ii. lect. 6.

How be it, himselfe when he returned out of Asia, in a congiarie or largesse, that hee gave unto the people, made a dole and distribution of more than an hundred thousand measures of gallons apiece. Holland. Plinie, vol. i. fol. 420.

The Roman Congius (from congerendo, increasing by augmentation) was ¼th of the Amphora, and nearly equal to our gallon. It contained ten Roman pounds of water; and according to a calculation by Mr. Norris, its cubical contents = 207.597 English inches. (Archæol. vi. 221.) The son of M. Cicero is recorded by Pliny to have swallowed two such measures of wine at a single draught, (xiv. 28;) and a still more bestial instance of sottism is mentioned by the same author (ibid.) of Novellius Torquatus, who filled some of the highest offices in the State, and acquired the cognomen of Tricongius for having been able to drain three Congii at once, a feat which he performed in the presence of Tiberius, to the great delight, no doubt, of that Imperial monster. A statutable Congius of Vespasian is preserved in the Museum Kircherianum at Rome; and a measure under a similar name appears, from a charter of King Edmund, ann. 946, to have been then used in England.

The first Congiary of which we read in Roman history, was that of Ancus Martius, who distributed 6000 modii (pecks) of salt to the people. (Plin. xxxi. 41.) Livy mentions one occasion, u.c. 539, on which, during the celebration of the Ludi Romani with more than ordinary magnificence, a Congius of oil was given to every street in Rome. (xxxv. 2.) The Ædiles, who distributed this largess, were M. Corn. Cethegus and Scipio Africanus. Lucullus, on his return from Asia, gave a hundred thousand casks of Greek wine as a Congiary. Julius Cæsar imitated Lucullus, and on the banquets by which his Triumphs were celebrated, sent rich wines to each table with profuse liberality. (Plin. xiv. 17.) The custom afterwards became more common, and not only wine, oil, and corn, but money also was distributed by almost every subsequent Emperor. The enormous expense occasioned by these largesses may be estimated by a reference to a learned Excursus de Congiariis Romanis, appended by Brotier to the Dialogus de Oratoribus, 17, attributed to Tacitus. In this, from a MS. in the Imperial library, is given a list of the Congiaries distributed from the reign of Julius Cæsar to that of Constantius and Maximianus. Nero was the first Emperor who recorded the gift of a Congiary on his medals. Trajan gave to each citizen £5. 8*s.* 4*d.*, but it is probable this was the amount of no less than three Congiaries, which the younger Pliny has celebrated in his Panegyric. Antoninus Pius in nine Congiaries disbursed to each citizen £26. 13*s.* 4*d.*, a larger sum than any of his predecessors. He was surpassed by M. Aurelius Antonius, and by Commodus, each of whom, the one in seven Congiaries, the other in eight, gave individually £28. 6*s.* 8*d.* The expenditure of Septimus Severus, is computed at £36. 13*s.* 4*d.* to each citizen, in eight Congiaries. In one of them, the third, on the decennial anniversary of his reign, he gave the enormous sum of £1,666,666. 13*s.* 4*d.* in portions of £10., each. Valerian and Gallienus in four Congiaries gave £41. 13*s.* 4*d.* Diocletian and Maximian in all (but the number of the Congiaries is unknown) £50. 5*s.*, the largest sum recorded. It was nearly equalled by Constantine and Galerius, the last Emperors who distributed Congiaries. In two of them they gave £48. 12*s.* 6*d.*

No person was entitled to partake of a Congiary unless he was enrolled in some one of the Tribes. Suetonius mentions an attempt to defraud Augustus, by the manumission of a number of slaves immediately before the day on which a Congiary had been promised. The Emperor, however, refused to admit any to his bounty, but those who were bonâ fide objects of it at the time in which he proposed it, (Aug. 42.) and he never gave to children under eleven years of age, (ibid. 41.)

Congiarium is usually distinguished from Donativum, a military largess; but it seems employed indiscriminately for it by Cicero, Ad Att. xvi. 8, and by Q. Curtius, vi. 2. See also besides the authorities quoted above, Alex. ab Alex. v. 24.

Congearium, as given by Du Cange, Ex Chartâ, ann. 1346, apud Sebast. Rouillardum, in Lehuno, appears to have been a Conge (q. v.) or leave of absence; not as some have understood it, a Congiarium, in the classical sense which we have explained above. The words of the Charter are, Item (Præpositus) habet ratione sui officii, jus et potestatem dandi omnia et singula Congearia in totâ terrâ nostrâ percipiendique omnes profectus provenientes ex illis Congeariis.

CONGLA'CIATE, Conglacia'tion. } Conglaciare, atum; con, and glaciare; in glaciem convertere, to convert into ice. Gesner. A gelando est glacies, quasi gelacies. Vossius. And gel-are, perhaps from γελ-άω splendere, to shine.

To bind or fix a fluid or liquid into a solid by cold, by frost, as water into ice; to congeal.

For water commonly concreteth first in its surface, and so conglaciates downwards. Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. i.

Predictions may be made of future comets, which as we conjecture may be foretold; and of all sorts of meteors; of deluges, draughts; heates; conglaciations, &c.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats.

CONGLO'BE, v. Conglo'bate, v. Conglo'bate, adj. Congloba'tion, Conglo'bulate. } Lat. conglobare; con, and globus, a ball, which Vossius deduces from glomus, and that from the Hebrew. See Conglomerate.

To gather, collect or coalesce into a globe, or ball, or sphere.

So high as heav'n the tumid hills, so low
Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep,
Capacious bed of waters; thither they
Hasted with glad precipitance, uprowl'd
As drops on dust conglobing from the drie.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book vii. l. 290.

This may after conglobate into the form of an egg.
Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. vii.

In this spawn of a lentous and transparent body, are to be discerned many specks, or little conglobations, which in a small time become of deep black. Id. book iii. ch. xiv.

'Tis clear, that it is not done by meer conglobation.
Digby. On the Soul, ch. ii.

——— ——— Along their face
The big round drops cours'd down with silent pace,
Conglobing on the dust.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xvii.

——— When the trumpet's call,
As sounding brass, collects us round heaven's throne
Conglob'd, we bask in everlasting day,
(Paternal splendour !) and adhere for ever.
Young. The Complaint. Night 7.

None want a place, for all their centre found,
Hung to the goddess and cohe'r'd around,
Not closer, orb in orb, conglob'd are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen.
Pope. The Dunciad, book iv.

Heaven's gifts, which do like falling stars appear
Scatter'd in æther ; all, as in there sphere,
Were fix'd, conglobate in his soul ; and thence Shone through his body, with sweet influence.
Dryden. Upon the Death of Lord Hastings.

Oft, where the zenith's lofty realms extend,
Ere mists conglobing, by their weight descend.
Brookes. Universal Beauty, book ii.

Matter being supposed eternal, there never was a time, when it could be diffused before its conglobation, or conglobated before its diffusion.
Johnson. Review of four Letters from Sir Isaac Newton, &c.

The succession of objects will be broken, separate parts will be confused, and many particular features and discriminations will be compressed and conglobated into one gross and general idea.
Id. A Journey to the Western Islands.

Swallows certainly sleep all the winter. A number of them conglobulate together, by flying round and round, and then all in a heap throw themselves under water, and lye in the bed of a river. Id. Boswell's Life of Johnson.

CONGLOBATE and CONGLOMERATE are terms opposed to each other in Anatomy, as applied to the Glands. Conglobate Glands present a smooth, uniform, undivided surface ; Conglomerate Glands are a union of several under one membrane.

CONGLO'MERATE, v. / CONGLO'MERATE, adj. / CONGLOMERA'TION. } Conglomerare, atum, to wind up into bottoms, (i. e. balls.) Minshew. Con, and glomerare. See CONGLOBE, above.

To wind or roll up into balls ; to collect or gather up into masses ;—by weaving or spinning ; and thus, to interweave.

This suggests to the spider the fancy of spinning and weaving her web, and to the bee of the framing of her honey-combs, but especially to the silk-worm of conglomerating her both funeral and natal clue.
More. Immortality of the Soul, book iii. ch. xiii.

The beams of light, when they are multiplied and conglomerate, generate heat. Bacon. Natural History.

And yet there is a great affinity betwixt the nidifications of birds, and these conglomerations of the threads of the silk-worm.
More. Immortality of the Soul, book iii. ch. xiii.

Proceeding very warily in the breaking one of these stones, we found that in the centre of it there lay a soft and oval stone, as it were the kernel of those conglomerated shells.
Boyle. The Usefulness of Natural Philosophy, part ii. ess. 2.

Eternal damps, and deadly humours drawn
In poisonous exhalations from the deep,
Conglomerated into solid night,
And darkness, almost to be felt, forbid
The sun, with cheerful beams, to purge the air.
Thomson. Sickness, book ii.

CONGLUTINATE, v. / CONGLU'TINATE, adj. / CONGLUTINA'TION. } Fr. conglutiner ; Sp. conglutinar ; It. conglutinare ; Lat. conglutinare ; con, and glutinare, to glue together.

"Fr. conglutiner ; to conglutinate, join, glue, close knit, with or together." Cotgrave.

Also by reason of the affinitie, whiche it hath with mylke, it is conuertible into bloud and fleshe, specially in those persons, whiche do inhabyte the northe partes, in whom naturall heat is conglutinate.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book ii.

All these together conglutinate and effectually executed, maketh a perfect definicion of iustice.
Id. Governour, fol. 159.

But for as muche as the whole bodye is perfectly conglutinate in itself, it commeth to passe, that the spirite of Christe practiseth his efficacie in euerye member accordyng to their seuerall capacitie and ordre. Udall. Ephesians, ch. iv.

It is said moreover, that the white of an egg is very good to conglutinate or sowder any wound.
Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 351.

For generative seed is the superfluous excrement of that nourishment which is conglutinate to the substantial parts of the body. Id. Plutarch, fol. 830.

His is no mixion nor conglutination, but a certaine troublesome striving and combate. Id. Ib. fol. 911.

Mathiolus relates that in many the bones having been very well set (which circumstance, he requires as necessary) have had their broken parts conglutinated within three or four days.
Boyle. Of Natural Philosophy, part ii. ess. 5.

When the callus is making, and the broken parts of the bone begin to be conglutinated together, a portion of that blood, which had flowed to the part affected, is carried to the skin, and permeates that.
Id. An Essay on the Porousness of Animal Bodies.

CONGO.

CONGO, or LOWER GUINEA, is the name formerly given to all the maritime Districts of South Africa, between Cape St. Catherine (Cabo di Sta. Caterina) in latitude 2° south, and Cabo Negro in 16° south ; a tract of country inhabited by Negro tribes resembling each other in person, habits, and manners ; and, as their languages show, derived from the same common source. The first navigators in these seas found the whole country subjected to one paramount Chief, the Mani-kongo, or Sovereign of Kongo ; but this Empire like others in more civilized parts of the world, gradually fell to pieces ; the Governors of different Provinces rendered themselves independant, and for the last two centuries and a half the dominions of the Mani-kongo have been split into the States or Kingdoms of Loango, Kongo Proper, Angola, and Bengéla, (or Bankella,) besides some minor Principalities of little note. The Zaïre, or Kongo River, divides this region into two distinct portions ; the Northern part which contains the petty States of Angoï and Kakongo, together with the Kingdom of Loango ; and the Southern part comprehending the modern Kingdoms of Kongo, Angola, and Bengéla. The two last of these have been already noticed, (xvii. 595, xviii. 457 ;) and the first, the subject of the present article, will therefore complete the account of the Southern division of this extensive region.

Boundaries.

In its present acceptation, Kongo is restricted to the country between the rivers Zaïre and Dande, as its northern and southern limits ; and is bounded on the east and south by the River Vumbra, the Serras de Cristal, de Sol, de Salitre, de Prata, and the River

CONGO. Barbela, issuing from the Lake Akilunda, and flowing in a northerly direction till it meets the Zaïre. The boundaries first assigned by Duarte Lopez, (Pigafetta in Purchas's Pilgrimes, ii. 989,) are much more extensive. He considers the Bahia das Vaccas (13° south) as the southern extremity of the coast, or western boundary, which terminates at Cabo de Sta. Caterina, in 2° 30′ south latitude, allowing ten degrees and a half, which he estimates at 630 miles, for the whole extent of the Kingdom from north to south. A line drawn from Cabo de Sta. Caterina to the confluence of Zaïre and Vumbra is his northern boundary; one running in the direction of the mountains just named, across the lake to Serras de Prata, which separates Kongo from Malemba is according to him the eastern confine; and returning from that point to the Bahia das Vaccas, over a space of 450 miles, we have his southern boundary of Kongo. His account indeed appears confused, for he adds, (995,) "This doth part the Kingdom of Angola in the middle;" but Angola in his time comprehended all Bengéla, and the northern half of it was then annexed to Kongo. In another place, (ii. 998,) he assigns to the Kingdom of Kongo very different boundaries, nearly the same as those given by modern Geographers. From the mouth of the Kwansa to Cabo de Padrão (at the mouth of the Zaïre) 375 miles; from thence the northern boundary is 450 miles; and from that point going southward, across the Crystal and Saltpetre Mountains, to the Lake Akilunda, at the foot of the Silver Mountains, is the eastern boundary of 500 miles; the southern is the Kwansa, itself issuing from that lake, and falling, after a course of 360 miles, into the Atlantic (in latitude 9° 25′ south.) There is, however, some confusion in the statements of Lopez, as given by his translator Pigafetta; and many substantial reasons might be assigned for doubting the accuracy of his distances inland, as measured from the coast.

Besides Kongo, properly so called, and the Kingdom of Angola, he takes into his account some countries to the south of the latter, and furnishes a few hints as to their elevation, soil, and climate. The northern half of Angola lies, as has been mentioned, between the mouth of the Kwansa and the Bahia das Vaccas, (Cows' Bay;) the southern part extends from that bay to Cabo Negro (15° 30′ south,) 220 miles (i. e. 220, as appears from other passages;) and to the south of this headland he places (994,) the Kingdom of Matama; the southern boundary of Angola, he says, crosses the Monti Freddi (Serras Frias,) which are called at the highest part of the chain Monti Nevosi (Serras Nevadas.) If the Praya das Neva (Snowy Beach,) nearly in latitude 30° south, be, as is not improbable, one of the extremities of these Alpine heights, the southern limit of an extensive chain is thus determined; and the other ranges mentioned above, probably run in lines parallel to each other, and form, as it were, a gradation of descents to the coast, from the high table-land in the centre of the peninsula, (Ritter's Erdkunde.) Even considerably to the north of this point, there is no indication on our modern maps of mountains visible from the sea; and the total absence of rivers marks this as a part of that vast desert which stretches, as Mr. Campbell learned, (Travels in South Africa,) from the shores of the Great Orange River to the southern confines of Bengéla, and is bounded on the south-east by the country of the Béchwánas, (Booshoeannas.) This desert, which has been aptly termed the Southern Sahrà, is probably itself at a considerable elevation above the sea, and descends with an almost imperceptible slope from the foot of the central hills, which appear like the G'háts in the western peninsula of India, to form a fork somewhere about the 28th parallel of south latitude, enclosing a central area raised far above the level of the ocean, but much lower than the summits of the mountains by which it is enclosed. CONGO.

Where there are so many different levels, the climate must vary proportionably. On the mountains it is doubtless in most places moderate, and in some, as Battell informs us, (Purchas, Pilgr. ii. 975,) very cold: but on the low lands near the coast, the heat is intolerable, and few tropical regions are more fatal to an European constitution than these. To be appointed Governor of Angola, is considered by a Portuguese Nobleman as the severest mark of his Sovereign's displeasure. Andrew Battell, however, lived there nearly eighteen years, frequently exposed to the greatest privations; Father Cavazzi more than twelve, and Merolla sixteen; so that its insalubrity is not perhaps quite so great as has been represented. The mortality which swept away Captain Tuckey, and so many of his party, is certainly to be ascribed more to excessive fatigue, without sufficient nourishment, than to any effect of the climate; but the excess of moisture in the lower parts of the river must render its atmosphere very pernicious, while the extraordinary dryness of the air on the hills above, (Tuckey, 151,) is in all probability highly beneficial to the health. The seasons, as usual under the Tropics, are two, the dry and rainy; the former lasts, near the Zaïre, from the beginning of April to the end of September, and is called Gondiasivù; the latter is divided into three portions; the first called Mallola mantiti, (the early rains,) continues from that period to the middle of October; the second, Vulaza mansanzi, from the beginning of November to the middle of January; and the third, Vulaza chintomba, through the whole of February and March. It is only in the two last that the rains are excessive; and in the first the principal agricultural labours are performed by the women, on whom in this, as in other uncivilized countries, those duties devolve. (Tuckey, 201.) Climate.

The winds vary little, but generally blow from the east or west of the north during the winter months, and from the opposite quarters during the summer; and it appears from a comparison of the accounts of Lopez and Captain Tuckey together, that the seasons on the Zaïre and in the country to the south, are, as on the opposite coasts of Ceylon, at the opposite periods of the year, the converse of each other; the wet season in Kongo and Angola beginning in April, when the droughts commence on the Zaïre.

The vallies and plains are watered by numerous streams, of which the principal ones are the Kwansa and the Zaïre, or Kongo River. The Bengo or Semse, Dande, Ambris, and Lelunda, and those streams of inferior size lying between the other two. The Bengo and Dande are navigable by vessels of some size for twenty or thirty miles up the country, but have not more than six or seven feet of water at their mouths. The Ambris has a harbour at its entrance, but the passage is too narrow and rocky to admit any but small craft. The Lelunda, which is said by some Rivers. Bengo. Zenze. Dande. Ambris. Leloon writers to issue from the same lake as the Kwansa, wishes the foot of the Outeiro, or hill of Kongo, on which stands the Bansa, or ancient Capital of the country, and the Portuguese town of San Salvador. After many windings in a west-south-westerly direction, this river runs into the Atlantic, and has a strong current in the rainy season; but in the droughts it is almost every where fordable. The Kwansa is represented as issuing from the Lake Akilunda, and appears to be the second river in the Kingdom; it is two miles in breadth at its mouth, and is navigable for nearly 100 miles, but has probably no depth of water, as it is said to be passable only by small vessels.

The Zaïre, or Kongo, is not only the largest river on this coast, but one of the largest in the world. The name Zaïre is, according to Merolla, a corruption of Zevoco, (Zevoro?) "I do not know," and if so is of Kongoese origin; but it is unknown to the natives, who told Captain Tuckey, that they call the river Moyenzi Enzaddi, i. e. "the river which swallows up all others." It is however possible that the last of those two words, will prove to be the term Zaïre or Zaïri, with the article en or 'n prefixed; for the letters d and r appear to be interchangeable in the Kongo language, as they are in most of the Indian dialects; and we find Cadde-in-pemba in Captain Tuckey's vocabulary, is Kari-a-bemba in Merolla's; and dea corresponds with gu-ria. The first Portuguese writers, deceived by the erroneous accounts of Ptolemy, and by a disposition on the part of their adventurous countrymen to magnify the extent of their discoveries, fancied that the lake from which the Nile issued, was the common source of the other great African rivers; hence they transferred the names of Abyssinian Provinces to the neighbourhood of the lake Akilunda; and doing thus, Purchas, who always names his authority, did nothing more than follow Lopez. He has been therefore unjustly accused of disingenuousness. (Tuckey, xii.) The Lake Dembra, Gojam, and other places, were repeated to fill up vacant spaces. The magnitude of the Zaïre was exaggerated by the earlier navigators, few, if any of whom, had ever gone up to any distance above its mouth. It appears from the report of the natives, to be formed by the junction of two considerable streams; one of which flows in a direction north-west of the point of confluence, and the other issues from an extensive morass, conjectured to lie somewhere between the 2nd and 3rd parallels of northern latitude, and the 17th and 18th meridians, east of Greenwich, the sources of each being to the north of the Line. A large sandy island divides the united streams immediately below their point of union, but they soon rejoin each other, and flow with an uninterrupted course to about latitude 4° 45′ south, where the stream begins to be broken by projecting rocks. Its banks then gradually become projecting at Sulullu-Anzaza; the schistus or slate, forms a ledge across the stream, which is the first and largest Yalála or rapid; seven or eight miles lower down there is a second Sangála (Sanga Yalála,) where a passage of about fifty yards in width is left on the southern side of the stream. From Bansa-n-inga, fourteen or fifteen miles below this rapid, to Point Sandi, nearly forty miles lower, the banks are formed by high perpendicular cliffs, and the width of the stream is reduced to about half a mile; while near Vúki Filan, about seventy miles higher up, (213,) it forms a fine expanse or sheet of water from four to five miles in breadth, free from all rocks, and its width is at least half as large as the highest point which Captain Tuckey had an opportunity of seeing, (217.) Below Point Sandi it widens again rapidly; but from Embomma to Rhinoceros Island its course is much interrupted by shoals and Islands. The interval between Cabo de Padrão (Cape Padrone,) and the Mocna Mocsa Bank is, according to Captain Tuckey, an estuary, for the true mouth of the river begins at Fathomless Point (Punta do Palmerinho of the old maps?) where it is not three miles in breadth; and "allowing," he adds, "the mean depth to be forty fathoms, and the mean velocity of the stream 4½ miles an hour, it will be evident that the calculated volume of water carried to the sea has been greatly exaggerated." (84, 85.)

The distance to the mouth of the river from the point where it begins to widen is about 140 miles, and the hills less elevated, though still rocky and barren, gradually retire from the stream, and leave a wide space on each side for the accumulation of alluvial earth, which being constantly supplied with water, has of course a rich vegetation. There are several lakes in different parts of the low lands, which are doubtless in some places swampy and liable to inundations; but the most remarkable sheet of water in the whole country is the Lake Akilunda, which has almost disappeared from our maps, though its existence is well attested. It lies on one of the elevated levels, or terraces, bounded by the ranges of hills already mentioned, and is nearly under the parallel of 7° 30′ south. It is said to be the source of the Barbela, one of the streams which join the Zaïre, and stretches from north to south, containing many fertile islands. When the second Embassy from the King of Portugal in 1490, reached Ambasse, the Royal residence, news was brought that the Mundi Ketes, who inhabit some of these islands, had rebelled; in consequence of which, the King of Kongo and his subjects embraced Christianity, and he then unfurled the banner of the cross, marched against the rebels, and reduced them to obedience. After his return, some Portuguese were sent, together with some of his servants, to make discoveries in the interior of the country, and they then visited this lake, (Barros, Decadas de Asia, Lixboa, 1552, fol. 35,) which is also mentioned by subsequent writers.

Mountains and minerals.

The different chains of mountains, parallel in all probability with each other and the coast, contain, as their names often indicate, metals, and other valuable mineral substances. The second range in point of elevation seems to be the Serra de Cristal, or Crystal Mountains; and the third, the Serras de Prata and the Serras de Ferro, (the Silver and Iron Mountains;) the Serras de Salitre, (Saltpetre Mountains,) appear to be a continuation of the chain which runs from south-east to north-west. Gold is said to be found near San Salvador, in the north-western part of Congo. In Bamba, between the rivers Ambris and Dande, there is iron; and gold according to Father Carli, who had been in that part of the country. In the Province of Pemba, between the Lelunda and Ambris, and in Sonyo, (Sonho,) between that Province and the sea, there is abundance of copper; that found in the former being so pale and yellow as to be sometimes mistaken for gold. Copper is also found in great purity and abundance in Angola, which is rich in silver ores; those metals

CONGO. indeed usually occur together, and there are strata of silver as well as of copper in the Province of Bamba. Iron is most plentiful in Sundi, one of the northern Provinces of Kongo, and near the Zaïre. Gems do not appear to have been found in this country, but there are extensive beds of various coloured marbles; jasper, porphyry, jacinth, and other ornamental kinds of stone, capable of receiving a high polish, and fit for splendid works of sculpture or architecture. Rock salt is found in many places on the lower levels, especially below Massingano. (Battell, 978.)

Vegetables. The vegetable productions are very numerous, and the rich black loam common in the lowlands is extremely fertile, affording two crops annually. In the commencement of the rainy season, the women, their only labourers, set fire to the withered herbage, and as soon as a few showers have fallen, hoe up the ground with the lsegà, a short-handled hoe, at the same time scattering the seed. That sown in January is reaped in April; and the grain sown in September is ripe and cut in December, according to Carli, (568,) but Merolla mentions March as the season for sowing, and June as that of harvest in Sonyo, and this agrees better with the accounts given by Captain Tuckey's party who passed through that Province; but as the soil and seasons differ in different parts of the Kingdom, the harvest and seed-time must vary in the same manner. The mountains seem to be uniformly bleak and barren; such at least are those on each side of the Zaïre; the lowlands, especially the districts of Batta and Pemba, have a luxuriant vegetation. Rice is the commonest grain, but according to Lopez it is not much valued; luko (Sorghum ?) massa or Kongo corn, and massa Manputa, i. e. Portuguese corn, seem to be different kinds of millet, (Sorghum,) and mampunni or maize, (Zea mayz,) is grown for feeding pigs and cattle. Massa mamballa, aseli and eluvi are other sorts of grain in common use. Various kinds of pulse, such as nkasa, (Erythrophlæum,) ovranda, nkansa, the Brazil beans of the Portuguese, and kangula are cultivated and eaten by the natives. The mandoï, (i. e. Mandolí, Glycine subterranea,) and incumbe, (Arachis hypogæa,) or ground nuts, as well as the manioc, (mandioca of the Portuguese, i. e. Jatropha manihot,) are universally cultivated as articles of food. Most of the Tropical fruits are common, especially pine-apples, (Annanás,) and anonas. The forest trees mentioned by the earlier travellers, are: 1. the Enseda or Ficus religiosa, well named by the Portuguese Arbor de raiz, or tree of roots. It is the mirrone of Merolla, (625,) who has given it an Italian name, (mirrone, an augmentative from mirro,) and it is as much an object of adoration in Kongo as in Hindústán. 2. The Mofumo or Bombax; and 3. Elikondo or Alikundi. These are very curious and remarkable; the former for its pods containing the cotton, called kapok by the Malays, and the latter for its astonishing size. Andrew Battell had seen some "as big as twelve men could fathom," and some which, being hollow, "held he believed, not less than forty tuns of water." He had known "three or four hundred Negroes supplied for twenty-four hours from one tree, and yet the trunk not empty." (Purchas, Pilgrimes, ii. 985.) It might be naturally conjectured from these accounts, that this tree is the Adansonia digitata, frequently seen by Captain Tuckey and his companions on the banks of the Zaïre; but Merolla's description and plate shows that it is a bombax, and probably the species called Pentandrum. The mabokke, mentioned by Merolla, is perhaps the Annona muricali, or sour-sop of the West-Indians; and the gego or ogige, called Gangi, on the upper banks of the Zaïre, which is a kind of ximenia, both produce fruits which are highly valued. The kóla, (i. e. the fruit of the Sterculia acuminata,) which, under the cognate name of guru, is so well known to the natives of Bornú and Kashnà, is as common and as much esteemed here as in the rest of Equinoctial Africa. Various kinds of palms and several medicinal plants are mentioned by the old writers; particularly the angriaria and kisekko, which act as corroborants; the kikongo, a deobstruent; the minya-minya, at once a poison and its antidote; the donno, an inferior kind of cinnamon; the mofrosso-sonyo another antidote, and the pao de cobra (serpent wood) a powerful febrifuge. Medicinal vegetables.

These imperfect notices are gleaned from Lopez, Battell, and the Italian Monks, who were almost the only sources of information respecting Kongo before the return of the vessels sent to explore the Zaïre. That expedition, though far from producing the results anticipated, and most disastrous in some of its consequences, has added considerably to our geographical knowledge; and the unwearied assiduity of Professor Smith, enabled him in the short period during which his constitution resisted the effects of excessive fatigue without proper nourishment, to make such a collection of specimens as shows all the leading characteristics of the vegetable world in this part of Africa. A very able summary of the information thus acquired, has been given by Mr. R. Brown in the fifth section of the appendix to The Narrative of Captain Tuckey's Expedition; and to that work, from which every student in Botany will derive no ordinary pleasure and instruction, the reader must be referred for those details which would extend this article beyond its proper limits.

Dr. Smith's Herbarium, formed in a period not exceeding two months, contained specimens of more than 600 different species, a number far greater than that of other collections formed under more favourable circumstances, and in a much longer time. Mr. Brown, therefore, is of opinion that it may be considered as sufficient to determine the proportions which the primary divisions of the whole vegetation bear to each other, and the principal natural orders indigenous in the tract examined. With regard to those proportions, it appears that the dicotyledonous plants in this tract, are to the monocotyledonous nearly as 4 to 1; and that the acotyledonous are to the phœnogamous as about 1 to 18: the natural orders also contained in the Herbarium of Dr. Smith amount to 87, besides a few genera not referable to any known families. The Anonaceæ, containing Anona Senegalensis, and Unona Æthiopica of Dunal, the Piper Æthiopicum of the old Botanists.

Among the monocotyledonous plants, the first and most remarkable order is the Palmæ, of which the Elæis Guineensis, called mabà or embà by the natives, is the species most worthy of notice, as furnishing an oil in universal use. The only remaining palms were a kind of Corypha, mistaken for an Hyphæno by Professor Smith; the Raphia vinifera or Sagus palmapinus, the Calamus secundiflorus, and a species of Elate, much like the Indian Palmëira or wild date.

Of the acotyledonous tribes there appear to be none but ferns, and of them the Herbarium from Kongo contains twenty-two species.

orm tation opical a.

The observations on this collection will apply to the vegetable productions not only of this tract, but to almost the whole of the western coast of Africa included within the tropics; for it appears from the Senegal to the Zaïre "there is a remarkable uniformity in the vegetation, not only as to the principal natural orders and genera, but even as to the species of which it consists." (Brown, l. c. p. 466.) Many of the trees which characterise the landscape, such as the Adansonia, Bombax pentandrum, Anthocleista, (musanga of the natives,) Elæis Guineensis, Raphia vinifera, and Pandanus candelabrum, are general along the whole extent of coast. The nkasa or nkashe, (a species of Erythrophlæum,) called the ordeal tree by Dr. Smith, (329,) bears a close resemblance to the red-water tree of Sierra Leone. (Winterbottom, i. 120.) The cream fruit of that place, (Sierra Leone Report, p. 173,) resembling a Lerbera though of a different genus, was found near the Zaïre; and the Chrysobalanus icaco, (the cocco plum of the West Indians,) occurs almost everywhere, as well as an Antidesma, the "country currants," of Sierra Leone.

lents.

Maize, (Zea mayz,) Cassava, (Jatropha manihot,) two kinds of peas, (Cytisus cajan and a species of Phaseolus,) and ground nuts, (Arachis hypogæa, and Glycine subterranea,) are the principal articles cultivated for food. Plaintains, (Musa sapientum,) papaws (Carica papaya,) pumkins, (Cucurbita pepo,) limes and oranges, (Citrus medica and Aurantium;) pine apples, (Bromelia ananás,) tamarinds, (Tamarindus medica,) and the safú, (Poupartia ?) are the most valuable fruits. Yams (Dioscorea) are rare; but a kind of bird-pepper (Capsicum) is common; and the malaguetta, a species of Amomum, not the Granum Paradisi, was observed. "It is," adds Mr. Brown, (469,) "particularly deserving of attention, that the greater part of the plants cultivated on the banks of the Kongo, and nearly the whole of the most important species, have probably been introduced from other parts of the world, and do not originally belong even to the Continent of Africa." In the same manner two kinds of millet appear to be the sorts of grain most common on the western coast, (Sierra Leone Report, 170, and Merolla, 653;) and all the accounts furnished by Negroes, (Annals of Oriental Literature, 535,) from the countries south of the Sahra, mention durra and duguno as the ordinary articles of food; now those names are manifestly corruptions of the Arabic words dhurrah and dhuen, significant terms, not merely arbitrary appellations, in the Arabic language, and universally applied by the Arabs to grains similar in external appearance, the common and saccharine Sorghum, Penisetum typhoïdes and Panicum miliaceum.

als.

The animals peculiar to Kongo are few, if any, for the mpakasse or mpangessa, probably the antilope, bubalis or harte-beast of the country to the north of the Cape Colony; and the impalanca (Mpalanka,) another species of the same genus, the gazelle-pasan of Buffon, (xxx. 334, ed. de Sonnini,) and antilope Oryx of Linnæus. The nfossi is perhaps the Moschus pygmæus; but the descriptions, or rather hints of the early travellers, are too imperfect to justify any thing more than a conjecture that the animals they mention are the same as those observed elsewhere. This may also be said with respect to the other divisions of the animal kingdom; and the number of new species both of birds and fishes discovered by the indefatigable naturalists attached to Captain Tuckey's party, is very inconsiderable.

Inhabitants

The natives of Kongo appeared to Captain Tuckey from their features and complexion to be a mixed race; but it should be remembered that he never quitted the shores of the river, and hardly went beyond the limit at which the effects of foreign intercourse would cease.

Language.

Their language is a more correct criterion of their origin, and it shows not only that the inhabitants of the whole range of country, comprehended under the term Kongo in its widest acceptation, are derived from the same stock, but that they have a remote, though distinct affinity with the Káfirs and Béchwánas on the eastern coast; (see Marsden, in Tuckey's Congo, 389;) whose language also manifests a like remote connection with that of the Káfir tribes further north, the Makúas and Monjus. Those of Kongo, Loango and Angola, are distinct dialects, the first being apparently the most perfect; and much more artificial than Mr. Marsden seems willing to allow; he appears, indeed, not to have seen the abstract of Brusciotte's Grammar given by Adelung, (Mithridates, iii. 211.)

National character.

The national character of this people appeared to Captain Tuckey and his companions in a very favourable light. They were uniformly gentle, good humoured and humane; betraying none of those ferocious passions which have been ascribed by the older writers to the Jagas; but those monsters were a tribe of foreign conquerors, not indigenous in the country near the sea.

The faults of the Kongoese are those occasioned by a hot climate and a low degree of civilization; indolence, drunkenness, and debauchery: and these failings have been carefully fostered, if not created, by the slave-dealers, almost the only Europeans with whom the natives have had any intercourse for the last century and a half. The character given by Cavazzi, almost the only authority followed by the author of the Universal History, (xvi. 61, 199,) notwithstanding the crowd of names at the foot of the page, is completely disproved by the report of Captain Tuckey's party; and indeed that worthy father does not seem in other points to deserve much credit, for his own statements of the extraordinary populousness of Kongo are at variance with his account of their extreme indigence, (63, 65.) The natives of Kongo are immersed in the darkest ignorance, and seem to possess scarcely any thing like oral traditions of the history of their forefathers.

Government.

Their government is in some degree like that of the feudal States in Europe and Asia. Almost every township forms a separate community, governed by its Chenu or Chief, who acknowledges no superior except the Lindi-n-kongo or King of Kongo, who resides at Bansa Kongo, or San Salvador. These petty Principalities are hereditary in the collateral not in the direct line, the brother or female uncle of the deceased being his heir and not his son. The Prime-minister is called the Mafukka, i. e. the receiver or collector; the inferior officers are the Mombella, Makaya, and Mambúk. The slaves are either domestic or marketable; the former are never sold except after trial and condemnation for some offence; the latter are purchased on speculation to be sold again at a profit. The laws of retaliation prevail as amongst the Arabs, but they are only exercised in extraordinary cases. The greater part of the people whom Captain Tuckey's party saw, were professedly Christians, but the whole of their Christianity seemed to consist in wearing crosses and relics, and sometimes repeating a few Aves and Pater Nosters, of which it may be supposed they did not understand one word. Their faith in fetishes (feitiços, charms, amulets) is unbounded; and this superstition, which seems to be universal among the Negroes, in many points resembles the tábu of the South Sea Islanders; thus things under the influence of the fetish, like those which are tabued, cannot be used or even touched. By means of the fetish also, the Ganga-m-kissi, or Priest, discovers thieves, murderers, or any other culprits. The presiding Deity (Kissi, or Mkisso) of each village, is called Mavonga; each house also has its Dii Penates male and female; the feitiço, therefore, is a spell to propitiate the Divinity, or avert his wrath, not the God himself. These Mkissos, however, are inferior agents more feared than the Supreme Deity, (Zambi-am-pungo,) as being nearer, and more immediately concerned about his creatures, than the Creator himself. They have likewise some dark notions of an Evil Spirit, whom they call Kari-am-bemba, or Kadi-am-pímba. They keep the bodies of their friends unburied for a long time after their decease; swathing them up in as many of the best wrappers as they can procure; and planting their graves with trees and flowers, making also long and mournful lamentations for the dead.

CONGO.

Religion.

Intestine wars

The internal feuds maintained by the Law of Retaliation mentioned above, and a continual state of warfare with the more distant tribes, for the purpose of procuring slaves, would either of them be alone a sufficient bar to any communication beyond the immediate neighbourhood; but the practice of seizing every defenceless stranger, and lying in ambush to entrap the unwary, is so universal, that no Negro can venture without great risk, beyond the boundaries of his own particular district; hence their utter ignorance of every thing beyond the distance of a few day's journey, and their dread of engaging in any long excursion; hence also the groundless reports of the cannibalism of their eastern neighbours. But though no traces of such atrocities were discovered by Captain Tuckey, it must be remembered that he hardly passed beyond the boundaries of Kongo, and had no intercourse with the Jagas or Anzikas, whose inhuman banquets are distinctly recorded by Andrew Battell, as having been witnessed by himself; to say nothing of the concurrent testimony of Lopez, Cavazzi, and the Dutch, as quoted by Dapper: nor can any unprejudiced person doubt that this odious practice of feasting on the carcasses of their enemies still prevails among several of the uncivilized tribes in the heart of Africa. The Portuguese made themselves sovereigns of the maritime regions in Kongo, soon after their navigators discovered its coasts in the latter part of the XVth century; and their Missionaries, (who had always a political as well as a religious object in view,) never failed to urge all the native Chiefs whom they could influence, to acknowledge the supremacy of the Throne of Portugal; so that in the two following centuries, the Portuguese territory extended inland over a space of several hundred miles. This area was divided into five or six larger and many smaller Provinces; most, if not all of them, before and since, separate States. Their new Sovereigns, gave them titles, according to their size and importance, similar to those customary in Europe: so we hear of the Grand-Duchies of San Salvador and Bamba; the Duchy of Sundi; the Marquisate of Pemba; and the County of Sonyo. The first, which derived its name from the Capital, once, if the print in Dapper's Africa can be trusted, was a considerable town adorned with fine churches, and well-built streets and squares; placed in a commanding and peculiarly healthy position, on the summit of a hill washed by the river Lelunda; but when Father Zucchelli, (Travels, p. 345,) visited it about a century ago, it was already one heap of ruins. So rapid was the decline of the Portuguese power in these countries, in which the climate is so fatal to European constitutions; and in which the same defects of internal administration prevailed, as in their other colonies; colonies which have been only preserved to the mother country by the ignorance of enemies who were unequal to the attack of European fortresses, or by the weakness of the colonists themselves, which prevented them from shaking off a yoke, the weight of which they severely felt.

Portuguese territories.

The authorities for Kongo are, 1. De Barros, Decadas de Asia, Lixboa, 1552, folio. 2. Duarte Lopez, (from 1580 to 1590,) in Filippo Pigafetta's Relationi del Reame di Congo tratti dalli scritti di Odoardo Lopez, Portoghese, Roma, 1591, translated into Latin by Reinius, and printed in De Bry's Navigationes; into English by Abraham Hartwell, London, 1597, and well abridged by Purchas, (Pilgrimes, ii. 980,) and Astley, (Voyages, iii. 132.) 3. Andrew Battell, (1589—1608,) in Purchas, (ii. 970.) 4. Father Giovan. Antonio Cavazzi, (1654—1667,) in his Istorica Descrizion de' tre regni Congo, Matamba, ed Angola, ridotta dal P. Fort. Alamandini, Bologna, 1687, and Milano, 1690, quarto, translated into French by Father J. B. Labat; Ethiopie Occidentale, traduit de l'Italien du P. Cavazzi, augmentée de plusieurs relations, Paris, 1732, 5 vol. in 12, the substance of which is given in the Modern Universal History, vol. xvi. 5. Father Dionisio de' Carli, (1666—1667,) the French translation of whose work is entitled Relations curieuses d'un voyage de Congo, Lyon, 1680, octavo. In English, in Churchill, i. 611, and in Astley's Collection, iii. 143. 6. Merolla, (1682—1688,) in his Relazione del Viaggio di Congo ridotta dal P Angelo Piccardo, Napoli, 1726, octavo, given entire in Churchill, (i. 651,) and abridged in Astley, (iii. 143;) and 7. A Narrative of the Expedition to explore the River Zaïre in 1816, under the direction of Captain J. Tuckey, R. N. London, 1818, quarto.

For the Languages, the reader may consult the Abbé Proyart, Histoire de Loango, Paris, 1776, octavo; De Grandpré, Voyage à la Côte occidentale d'Afrique dans les années 1786 et 1787, Paris, 1802, octavo; Hyazinthi Brusciolli a Vetralla Regulæ quædam pro difficillimi Congensium idiomatis faciliori captu, &c. Romæ, 1659, octavo; Pedro Diaz, Arte de lingoa di Angola, Lixboa, 1697, octavo; and Ant. de Coacto Fides Mysteria, Roma, 1661.

NGRA-LATE.

CONGRA'TULATE, v. CONGRATULA'TION, CONGRA'TULATOR, CONGRA'TULATORY, CONGRA'TULANT. } Fr. congratuler; Sp. congratular; It. congratulare; Lat. congratulari; qui gratulatur, alienam felicitatem sibi gratam et jucundam esse verbis ostendit. Gr. χάριτες; Lat. garites, gartes, grates; from χαίρ-ειν, gaudere. Vossius.

To express our sympathy in the good fortune or happiness of another; that such good fortune is grateful, agreeable, pleasing to us; that we rejoice in his joy; share or partake in it.

The inhabitants of Burdeaux hearing of the erle's arriual, sent to him messengers in the darke night thāking and congratulating for his thither commyng.
Hall. Henry VI. The thirty-first Yere.

I answered, that your maiestie had sent messengers to Ken-Can: and that you would not haue sent messengers vnto him, or letters vnto Sartach, had not your highness bene perswaded that they were become Christians: because you sent not vnto them for any feare, but onely for congratulation, and curtesie's sake, in regard that you heard that they were conuerted to Christianitie.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i.

He that in glory of his fortune sat,
Admiring what he thought could never be,
Did feel his blood within salute his state,
And lift up his rejoicing soul, to see
So many hands and hearts congratulate
Th' advancement of his long-desir'd degree.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book ii.

Nor was this shew of love dissimulation,
But true unfained kindnesse, and good faith,
But yet Gradasso's faint congratulation
Makes men surmise he thinks not as he saith.
Harrington. Orlando, book xxx. st. 68.

And certainly, as an accumulation of paternal honour in deeming us worthy to succeed him, nothing more noble, more illustrious, could befall us than the judgment of such a prince; nothing more fortunately auspicious could happen to us at our first entrance upon the government, than such a congratulator.
Milton. Letters of State. Richard Cromwell to Charles Gustavus, King of Sweden.

The custome was, one primacye to haue to doe with an other by congratulatorye letters soone after the certaintee of their election was knowne, to keepe the unitie of the church.
Fox. Martyrs. Letter of Tonstall and Stokesley to Cardinal Pole.

The lords desired the concurrence of the commons to a congratulatory declaration from the houses to the army, and to a letter to the general. Whitelock. Memoirs, Anno 1647.

Forth rush'd in haste the great consulting peers,
Rais'd from their dark divan, and with like joy
Congratulant approach'd him, who with hand
Silence, and with these words attention won.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 458.

Men meet each other with erected look
The steps were higher that they took,
Friends to congratulate their friends made haste;
And long inveterate foes saluted as they past.
Dryden. Threnodia Augustalis.

My congratulations keep their distance, and pass no farther than my heart. There it is that I have all the joy imaginable when I see true worth rewarded, and virtue uppermost in the world. Id. Dedication of Troilus and Cressida.

The worthy president, who is their most devoted champion, has lately shown me two copies of verses composed by a gentlemen of his society; the first congratulatory ode inscrib'd to Mrs: Touchwood upon the loss of her two fore-teeth.
Spectator, No. 17.

He [Edward VI.] both wooed for his uncle, recommending him unto the queen [Katherine Par] and after the marriage wrote her a congratulatory letter. CONGRA TULATE.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI., Anno 1548.

You congratulate me on the prosperous situation of my affairs in general, and particularly on the friendship of Milo, together with the vain and ineffectual schemes of the worthless Clodius. CONGRE-GATE.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Publius Lentulus. Letter 2. book ii.

Still Cali lives; and must he live to morrow?
That fawning villain's forc'd congratulations
Will cloud my triumphs and pollute the day.
Johnson. Irene, act iv. sc. 6.

CONGREE, v. to agree together. See AGREE.

For gouernment, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keepe in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and naturall close,
Like musicke. Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 71.

CONGREET, v. A. S. gret-an; Dutch, groet-en; Ger. gruss-en. "Gret-an, gretan sendan, salutare, salutem dicere; to salute, to greet, to send greeting." Somner.

Since then my office hath so farre preuayl'd,
That face to face, and royal eye to eye,
You haue congreeted.
Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 92.

CO'NGREGATE, v. Co'NGREGATE, adj. CONGREGA'TION, CONGREGA'TIONAL, CONGREGRA'TIONISTS, CONGREGA'TION-HOUSE. } Fr. congreger; Sp. congregar; It. congregare; Lat. congregare; con, and grex, a flock; from ἀγείρ-ειν, and that from ἄγ-ειν, cogere in unum.

To flock together, to herd together; to come, or cause to come together in a flock or herd; to collect, gather, or assemble.

In the mean season caused they their hyred seruantes to blowe it forth abroade throughoute all the hole realme, that they were there congregated for an wholesome unite and reformacion of the church of Ingland, to stoppe so the mouthes of the comen people. State Trials. Trial of Sir John Oldcastle, vol. i. p. 226.

The Duke of Somerset and other, whiche narrowly escaped, fled with the Queene and Prince Edward, into the bishopricke of Durhame, in which place they determined to congregate and gather a new armye and power, and if no hoope were of recouery, they then agreed to fly into Scotland.
Hall. Henry VI. The thirty-eighth Yere.

Thē y^e kyng beyng warned of y^e cōgregacions y^t this Wyllyam made, cōmaunded hem to cease of such doyngys, y^t the people myght exercyse theyr artis & occupacios.
Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1198.

Into their secretes come not my soule, and into their congregacion be my honour not coupled.
Bible, 1551. Exodus, ch. xlix.

In this parliament it was first concluded; that deposed King Richard should continue in a large prison, and be plenteously served of all things necessary both for viand and apparell, and if any persons should presume to reare warre or congregate a multitude to deliver him out of prison, that then he should be the first that should die for that seditious commotion.
Prynne. Soveraigne Power of Parliament, part i. fol. 95.

The heauens herald staid not to reply,
But past away, his doings to relate
Vnto his Lord; who now in th' highest sky,
Was placed in his principall estate,
With all the Gods about him congregate.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vii. can. 6.

But from this congregation hee sequestered and removed the base multitude of mechanicall labourers and slaves.
Holland. Suetonius. Claudius, fol. 165.

The congregations of Christians were become so great, that in every city, they were obliged to build new and bigger churches to receive them. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book v. ch. vi.

CONGREGATE. — CONGREGATION.

In witness whereof, we haue caused these our letters testimoniall to be sealed with our common seal. Dated at Oxford in our congregation-house, the 5. day of October in the yeare of our Lord, 1406. Fox. Martyrs. The History of J. Wickliffe, fol. 412.

Then, with a breath, he gave the winds to blow;
And bade the congregated waters flow.
Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book i.

But suppose the first churches were barely congregational, by reason of the small number of believers at that time, yet what obligation lies upon us to disturb the peace of the church we live in, to reduce churches to their infant state?
Stillingfleet. Sermon 6. vol. ii.

Whether to genial dews above
You melt the congregated skies,
Or teach the torrent streams below
To wake the verdure of the vale.
Whitehead. Ode 2. For the new year.

With farther preparation, and a little more experience, he preached in a more public pulpit, before one of the largest and most polite congregations at London.
Dr. Horne. Life, by Jones.

But may he not think too ill of their spirit? I verily believe he doeth; or if he doeth not, is there not an equal share of the same spirit in too many of the presbyterians and congregationalists there.
Archbishop Secker. Answer to Dr. Mayhew's Observations.

Congregation, in its Ecclesiastical application, ordinarily means an Assembly of People, met together for Divine worship; though it also signifies a Company or Society of religious, taken out of some particular Monastic Order, and constituting a kind of inferior Order. Such are the Congregations of Saint Maur, of Cluny, of the Oratory, &c. &c.

Congregations at Rome.

In the Constitution of the Papal Court, the term Congregation is applied to certain Assemblies of Cardinals, instituted for the direction and controul of Roman Catholic affairs, both temporal and spiritual, under the supreme government of the Pope. The number of Cardinals varies in different Congregations; but each of them has its Chief, or President, and a Secretary, who registers the proceedings of the Congregation, and writes letters in pursuance of their decrees. The instruments, which are to be despatched, are signed by the President, and the Seal of the Congregation is affixed by the Secretary. Not fewer than sixteen different Congregations have been instituted by different Popes, which take their denominations from the peculiar business which is submitted to their consideration.

The principal of these Assemblies are, the Congregations of Rites and of Relics, of Bishops and Regulars, of the Holy Office or Inquisition, of the Index, and the Congregation de Propagandâ Fide.

Congregation of Rites.

1. The Congregation of Rites was founded by Pope Sixtus V. for regulating the ceremonies of the Romish Church. It has authority to explain the rubrics of the Missal and Breviary, whenever any difficulty arises concerning the construction of them; and also to regulate the ceremonies and rites of the new Offices of Saints, which are added to the Calendar of that church, when any person is canonized. In cases of dispute respecting the precedency of Churches, the sentence of this Congregation is definitive.

Of Relics

2. The Congregation of Relics superintends the relics of ancient Martyrs, which are said to be found in the Catacombs of Rome; and distinguishes their bones, shrines, and tombs, from those of the heathens, who were buried in the same subterraneous caverns.

CONGREGATION. Of Bishops and Regulars.

3. The Congregation of Bishops and Regulars was instituted by Pope Sixtus V., for the purpose of regulating disputes between Bishops and the Monastic Orders. In connection with this, we may notice the three Congregations, whose functions are sufficiently designated by their appellations, viz. The Congregation for the examination of Bishops, instituted by Pope Gregory XIV., for the investigation of the qualifications of such Ecclesiastics as are nominated to Bishoprics; The Congregation of the morals of Bishops, instituted by Pope Innocent XI., for inquiring into the morals of those who are recommended to Ecclesiastical dignities; and The Congregation for the Residence of Bishops, which has the power of enjoining, or dispensing with the residence of the Italian Bishops, and of obliging all Abbots to reside with their respective communities.

Of the Holy Office.

4. The Congregation of the Holy Office, or Inquisition, was instituted by Pope Paul III. at the suggestion of Cardinal Carafa; by whom, on his subsequent elevation to the Papal Chair under the name of Paul IV., the privileges of this Congregation were greatly enlarged. To these, Sixtus V. added statutes. This tribunal takes cognizance of heresies, and all novel opinions; as well as of apostacy, magic, witchcraft, the abuse of the Sacraments, and the circulation of pernicious books. With the Cardinals, who compose this Congregation, are associated many Prelates and Divines of different Orders, both regular and secular, who are called Consulters and Qualificators of the Holy Office.

Of the Index.

5. The Congregation of the Index. The Popish Clergy present at the Council of Trent, alarmed at the circulation of the Reformed doctrines, and considering the number of pernicious and heretical books, (as they were pleased to term them,) deputed certain Cardinals and other Divines to compile an Index of works to be prohibited. This was afterwards approved by Pius IV. in 1564; and certain General Rules, relative to prohibited books, were drawn up and sanctioned by Papal authority. (See a translation of them in Townley's Illustrations of Biblical Literature, vol. ii. p. 478—485.) Succeeding Pontiffs greatly enlarged the Tridentine Index; and the Rules of the Index were also modified or enlarged by explanations and additions. The Deputation, or Committee, which had originally been appointed by the Council of Trent, was erected into a special Court or Congregation at Rome by Sixtus V. (who obtained the Papal tiara in 1585,) for the examination of the Index; and it is known by the appellation of The Congregation of the Index. An account of the different expurgatory Indexes issued since the Council of Trent, and particularly by this Congregation, is given in Townley's Essays on various Subjects of Ecclesiastical History and Antiquity, p. 149—153.

De Propagandâ Fide.

6. The Congregation de Propagandâ Fide was founded in 1622, by Pope Gregory XV., for the purpose of taking cognizance of all affairs relative to the propagation of the Roman Catholic Religion throughout the world; of superintending all Missions; and of appointing and changing the Ministers necessary for that purpose. This Congregation consisted of thirteen Cardinals, two Priests, one Monk, and a Secretary, who were required to refer the most weighty matters to the decision of the Pope, but who were to decide in all other cases according to their judgment. The revenues of this Congregation were greatly augmented by the liberality of individuals, as well as of the succeeding Pontiff Urban VIII., who in 1627 instituted the Apostolic College or Seminary for the propagation of the Faith, for the education of young men to be employed under the direction of The Congregation de Propagandâ Fide, to whose superintendance this seminary is intrusted. When the students have completed their education, they are employed either as Missionaries, Bishops, or Vicars Apostolic, in foreign parts, according to the exigency of the occasion, and the abilities of the individuals. In the Palace of the Congregation, there is a Printing Office, furnished with types in most languages, and with able printers and correctors, who are continually employed in works for the propagation of the tenets of the Church of Rome. During the late troubles in France and Italy, the labours of this Congregation were necessarily suspended; but since the restoration of Monarchy in France, and of tranquillity in Italy, they have recommenced their operations with considerable vigour.

RE-
ON.

on-
ns.

Of the other Congregations but few particulars are necessary. The Pope's Congregation takes cognizance of the erecting of new Sees and Cathedral Churches, the reunion, suppression, and resignation of Bishoprics, and all matters relative to the Revenues of the Church. The Congregation for explaining the Council of Trent, originated in the appointment, by Pope Pius IV. of certain Cardinals who had assisted at that Council, to put an end to all doubts which might arise concerning its decrees. Sixtus V. fixed this Congregation, and impowered it to interpret all points both of discipline and of Faith. The Congregation of Immunities takes cognizance of all Ecclesiastical immunities and exemptions, in suits against Ecclesiastics, whether Civil or criminal. The Congregation for such Monasteries as are to be suppressed, was instituted by Innocent X., to inquire into the state of the Italian Monasteries, and to suppress those whose temporalities were so far reduced, that the remainder was not sufficient for the maintenance of six religious. This Assembly regulates the pretensions of founders and benefactors, and their heirs, and disposes of the remains of the temporalities of abandoned and ruined Houses. It likewise examines the petitions of such communities or cities as are desirous of founding anew or rebuilding any Monastery, for which it despatches the proper instruments. The Congregation of the Apostolical Visitation is composed of a certain number of Cardinals and Prelates, whose business it is to visit, in the name of the Pope, (as Archbishop of Rome,) the six Bishops who are Suffragans to the metropolis of Rome. The Congregation of Indulgencies investigates the applications of those who sue for indulgencies; and to The Congregation for the Building of Churches is confided the charge of superintending the repairing and beautifying of St. Peter's Church, for the building of which it was originally founded by Clement VIII. This Congregation is said to have the peculiar privilege of altering the wills of testators who bequeath sums to pious uses, and of applying the money to the support of the fabric of Saint Peter's. Aymon's Description of the Court of Rome; Townley's Essays on various Subjects of Ecclesiastical History, ess. 8.

CO'NGRESS,
CONGRE'SSION,
CONGRE'SSIVE.

Congredi, congressus, to go, meet or assemble together; con, and grad-i, which Vossius thinks may be from the Hebrew; Schedius from Gr. γέρ-ειν, (Lat. ger-ere,) the obsolete theme of γέρ-ας, præmium, and of other words.

CON-GRESS.

A meeting or coming together, an assembly, a concourse, a communication.

CONGRUE

For if that be male which generates in another, that female which procreates in itself, if it be understood of sexes conjoyned, all plants are female; and if of disjoyned and congruous generation, there is no male or female in them at all.

Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. vi.

It follows not that all such approaches were unlawfull: as appears in the case of a leprous wife, with whom that it is lawfull to have congress is so certain, that it is told as an heroick story of Dominicus Catalucius, a Prince of Lesbos, that he did usually converse with his wife that was a leper, as still knowing it to be his own flesh, which no man hates.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. ii.

All which I have meant hitherto in reference to their visible congresses one with another.

More. Immortality of the Soul, book iii. ch. vii.

And if the danger be an excuse and can legitimate the congression even where there is hasard to have a diseased child begotten, in one case, then so it is in the other.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. ii.

Hereupon the congress grew wholly desperate, and all parties prepared for the field without any other view for the three months following the first rise of this pretension.

Sir William Temple. Memoirs, vol. ii. fol. 339.

——————— Alas! the thoughts
Of that sweet congress, the preceding night,
Soften'd my dreams, and all my senses lull'd;
And with more joyful heart at morn I rose.

Warton. Eclogue 5.

CONGRU'E, v.
CO'NGRUE, adj.
CO'NGRUENT,
CO'NGRUENCE,
CO'NGRUENCY,
CONGRU'ITY,
CO'NGRUOUS,
CO'NGRUOUSLY.

Lat. congruere, a gruibus, (cranes) which never separate, either when flying or feeding. Festus. The Lat. grus, contracted from Gr. γέρ-ανος, of unknown Etymology. To flock or come together; to convene or concur; to be convenient, or consistent, suitable or agreeable, fit or proper.

The Scholastic distinction between merit of congruity and merit of condignity seems well explained by Hobbs.

But there is between these two sorts of merit, this difference, that in contract I merit by virtue of my own power, and the contractor's need; but in this case of free-gift, I am enabled to merit only by the benignity of the giver. In contract, I merit at the contractor's hand that he should depart with his right; in case of gift, I merit not that the giver should part with his right; but that when he has parted with it, it should be mine, rather than another's. And this I think to be the meaning of that distinction of the schools, between meritum congrui, and meritum condigni. For God Almighty, having promised Paradise to those men (hoodwinked with carnal desires) that can walk through this world according to the precepts and limits prescribed by him; they say, he that shall so walk, shall merit Paradise ex congruo. But because no man can demand a right to it by his own righteousness, or any other power in himself, but by the free grace of God only; they say, no man can merit Paradise ex condigno.

Hobbs. Of Men, part i. ch. xiv.

Grammar, first hath for to teche
To speake vpon congruitee.

Gower. Conf. Am., book vii. fol. 150.

I cal not them gramarians, whiche onely can teache or make rules, wherby a chylde shall onelye lerne to speake congrue Latine, or to make sixe versis standynge in one fote, wherin perchance shall be neyther sentence nor eloquence.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, fol. 57.

It is therefore congruent, and accordynge, that as one excelleth another, in that influence, as thereby beinge nexte to the similitude of his Maker: so shulde the estate of his person be auaunced in degree, or place, where vnderstandynge maye profyt.

Id. Ib fol 4.

CONGRUE Infidels may haue this attrition (for you graunt, that it cōmeth of naturall strength) and yet shall it not folowe of congruence, that they must receiue grace, and also remissiō of their sinnes.
Barnes. Workes, fol. 273.

But in conclusion the Frenshe kynge so entreated theym, that they agreed to rest there styll, and that of a congruency, for they might dwell in no lāde where they shulde more surely be defended. Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1273.

And as for the bishoprike of Durham, to say the very truth, he could not of good congruity but reward his old chaplaine.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 374.

And sauing for y^t^ point which is no smal mater, elles as for his rules of rhetorike or gramaticall congruitie either, or ouersight in resoning, as thiges of no great weight, I would not much vouchsafe to touche.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 875.

I might conclude that his [Henry VII.] actes passed all the noble acts of his noble progenytours syne the Conquest, and may most congruly aboue erthly prynces be lykenyd vnto Salamon Kynge of the Israelytes, and be called the seconde Salamon.
Fabyan. Anno 1485.

——— Right conueniently
And full congruentlye
As nature could diuise.
Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparow.

I professe and denounce in like manner, that neither haue you any iust congrue occasion in my book so to iudge, muche lesse to raile of me.
Fox. Martyrs. Alanus Copus the sycophant, answered.

But now it is congruent, that leaving him swallowed in the gulphs of sorrow and versifying, we turn and recount what hapned to Sancho Panza in his embassage.
Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. i. p. 241.

By her meanes winding himself into the favour of Nero, he easily obtained the chief place among his minions and favourites (such was the congruence of their humours and dispositions.)
Holland. Suetonius. Otho, fol. 223.

But this we maie see, what it is to haue a prince learned himselfe, who feeling and tasting the price and value of science and knowledge, is thereby not onelie the more apt to rule, but also to instruct and frame his subjects, from a rude barbaritie, to a more ciuil congruencie of life, and to a better understanding of things.
Fox. Martyrs. King Alfred religious and learned, fol. 130.

The congruity of things is their suitablenesse to such or such a state or condition; and 'tis a great law in the Divine and first constitutions, that things should incline and move to what is suitable to their natures.
Glanville. Preexistence of Souls, ch. xiii.

This of hope is a middle temper, and so a little more congruous and apportion'd to the middle state, more ingenuous than fear, and not so elevated as love.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 6. vol. iv.

We cannot but conclude from such a train of causes so fitly and congruously complying together, That it was really the counsel of an Universal and Eternal Mind, that hath the overseeing and guidance of the whole frame of nature.
More. Antidote against Atheism, ch. iv. fol. 51.

Of good congruence all subjects become most bound to their soveraigns and princes, and them ought most faithfully to love, honour, obey, serve and dread
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII.

After one sight of it, they sent their proxies of serving-men and porters to clap in the right of their patrons; and it was impossible ever to have gotten off the nonsense of three hours for half a crown, but for the providence of so congruous an audience.
Dryden. Vindication of the Duke of Guise.

Thus by man's referring the knowledge of the creature to the Creator's glory, it becomes in some sense, and congruously to its own nature, the praiser of its Maker.
Boyle. Usefulness of Natural Philosophy, part i. ess. 3.

Though these [the discourses and instructions of Mentor] were well suited to the main design of the author, which was to form the mind of a young prince, yet they seem not congruous to the nature of epic poetry. Blair. Lecture 44.

CONIA, in Zoology, a genus of the class Cirripedes, order Acamtosomata, family Balanidii. Leach. CONI

Generic character: shell quadri-partite, divisions equal; operculum bi-partite. CONJE

Type, Balanus porosus, Auct.

CONIBOS, a tribe of Indians on the Ucayale, whom Father Gieval first saw on his voyage to discover the true Amazons or Maranon.

He found during his two voyages, (the last made in 1791,) that several very singular tribes existed on this great river, amongst which, the Conibos, were noticed, from being nearly as fair as Europeans, though much discoloured by the bites of mosquitoes, and from the custom of painting themselves. The Conibos were the most considerable race on the Ucayale, and the least savage, except the Casibos, a warlike people, who occupied a large portion of its eastern shores. The Panos were a small tribe who had sworn obedience to Anna Rosa, an Italian Lady educated at Lima, who had chosen the desert for her home, and had founded a Convent amongst these Indians at Sariacu. Twenty-five nations are enumerated as having been seen by Father Gioval, but there are no good accounts of them.

CONIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Digynia, natural order Umbelliferæ. Generic character: partial involucre, passing only half round, mostly three-leaved; fruit globular, with five striæ, notched on both sides.

Three species, C. maculatum, the Common Hemlock, is a native of England, growing usually about dunghills, it is poisonous, but has been employed as a medicine. Withering, Br. Pl.

CONJE'CT, v.
CONJE'CTOR,
CONJE'CTURE, v.
CONJE'CTURE, n.
CONJE'CTURER,
CONJE'CTURAL,
CONJE'CTURALLY,
CONJECTURA'LITY.

Lat. conjicere, conjectum, to throw together; (con, and jacere, to throw;) Fr. conjecturer; Sp. conjeturar; It. congietare, congetturare. Conjicere proprie est res plures in unum jacere locum. Hinc ad mentem transfertur. Nec tamen tam signat multa in mente conjungere, quam, ubi junxeris, unum pluribus consideratis colligere. Vossius.

To throw together, met. the thoughts; to throw, cast, or take out; to pick out or select from thoughts so thrown together; to guess, to divine.

In the passage from Shakspeare's Othello, the Commentators have altered conceits, in the first folio, to conjects.

Him that one hateth, hate we all
And coniect how to doen him fall.
Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 148.

——— They but dorst han swore,
That to Janicle, of which I spake before,
She doughter n'as, for as by conjecture
Hem thoughte she was another creature.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8259.

Moreouer after the thinges be inuēted, coniected, perceyued, and by long tyme and often consydered, and that the mynd dysposeth herselfe to executiō or actual operation: thanne the vertue, named prudence, first putteth her selfe forwardes.
Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, fol. 225.

That whych is presently doon we perceyue, that whyche is to come, we coniect or dyuyne. Id. Ib. fol. 222.

When thou hast tolde thy tale which is but short and sweet
Then let my loue coniect the reast
till she and I do meete.
Turbervile. To his ring given to his Ladie, &c.

ECT. Nether shall oure delyuerance come so to pass, nor by sicke meanis as we coniecter.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. x.

You shal perceiue the treasons false of Greeks, and of this one Coniecture all. Phaer. Æneidos, book ii.

But without doubt (by all coniectures of reason) the said islands fall all without the limitation of Portingal, and pertaine to Spayne.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Robert Thorne, vol. i. fol. 218.

The oration coniecturall is when matters bee examined, and tried out by suspitions gathered, and some likelihood of thing appearing. Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorike, fol. 92.

Nor [do] these men cast on mee particular calumnies but per satyram congested and conjected at a mass upon the Church of England in pretence of mee.

Mountague. An Appeale to Cæsar.

——————That your wisedome
From one, that so imperfectly conceits
Would take no notice, nor build yourselfe a trouble
But of this scattering, and vnsure obseruance.

Shakspeare. Othello, fol. 324.

Because he pretends to be a great conjector at other men by their writings, I will not fail to give ye readers, a present taste of him from his title, hung out like a toling signpost to call passengers. Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

I will set downe the Lord's prayer as it was translated in sondrie ages, that you may see by what degrees our tongue is risen and thereby coniecture how in time it may alter and fall againe.

Camden. Remains. Languages, fol. 22.

I am the man, of thine intent (quoth hee)
And purpose now, that sure coniecture hath,
And better than thou weenest know I thee,
I proffer thee my seruice and my faith.

Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book x. st. 10.

If a man seeth in present, that which he hath seen before, he thinks that that which was antecedent to that which he saw before, is also antecedent to that he presently seeth: As for example, he that hath seen the ashes remain after the fire, and now again seeth ashes, concludeth again there hath been fire: and this is called again conjecture of the past, or presumption of the fact.

Hobbs. Human Nature, ch. v.

By his natural prudence, without the help of instruction before or after, he [Themistocles] was both of extemporary matters upon short deliberation, the best discerner, and also of what for the most part would be their issue the best conjecturer.

Id. Thucydides, book i. fol. 74.

So shall the weight of these coniectural gheasses, and the face of M. Hardinge's truthe, whiche he so mutche magnifieth without cause, the better appeare.

Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, fol. 263.

But for old English names which here are the scope of my care, I must sift them as I may out of old English Saxon treatises, as I have happened vpon here and there: and some coniecturally, referring all to the iudgment of such, as shall be more happy in finding out the truth. Camden. Remains. Names, fol. 54.

Who [Aristotle] in matters of difficulty, and such which were not without abstruities conceived it sufficient to deliver conjecturalities. Sir Thomas Brown, book vii. ch. xiv.

What those things were which some among the Corinthians built upon the foundation of Christianity, whereby they endanger'd their salvation, we may probably conjecture by what the apostle reproves in his epistle, as the tolerating of incestuous marriages, communicating in idol feasts, &c. Tillotson. Sermon 9.

If this be a good objection, it will at all times equally hinder us from abounding in the offices of charity; since there is no time, when we may not entertain such conjectures as these, and alarm ourselves with such fears and forebodings.

Atterbury. Sermon 7. vol. ii.

But because these conjecturers do not allow glass to be pervious to common air, we shall at present press them with this experiment, which we have divers times made.

Boyle. Experimental History of Cold, Tit. 9.

I would beseech my readers not to look upon any thing as my opinion or assertion, that is not delivered in the intire series of my own words; least a transcriber should make me deliver those things resolutely and dogmatically, which I deliver but hesitantly and conjecturally. CONJECT. CONJOIN.

Boyle. Some Considerations touching Experimental Essays in general.

Either they, that hoped to make this use of the experiment, have little experience of it, and write conjecturally, or else they have made it with a success very different from ours.

Id. Experimental History of Cold, Tit. 14.

When men had nothing to trust to, in their predictions, but their own ingenuity, they did well to deal in equivocal or enigmatic expression, and might leave it to chance, or to the passions of their votaries, to find an application for their random conjectures. Hurd. Works. Sermon 1. vol. v.

Certainly such a religion (though accompanied with some degree of superstition,) together with a belief of the honestum and the turpe, and with a tolerable system of morality, and with some conjectural hopes of a life after this, is far preferable to atheism.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. i. fol. 251.

CONIFEROUS, bearing fruit in shape of a cone, q. v.

In transplanting of these resinacious, and coniferous trees you must never diminish their heads, nor be at all busy with their roots, which pierce deep, and is all their foundation.

Evelyn. On Forest Trees, ch. xxi

CONILITES, in Zoology, a genus of Fossil, many-chambered shells, of the family Orthocerata of Lamarck. Generic character: shell conical, straight or slightly bent; sheath thin, distinct from the contained nucleus; the latter is slightly separable, multilocular, divided by transverse septa.

One species, C. pyramidata, Fossil Britany.

CONJO'IN, v. CONJO'INING, n. CONJO'INT, adj. CONJO'INTLY, CONJU'NCT, adj. CONJU'NCTION, CONJU'NCTIVE, CONJU'NCTIVELY, CONJU'NCTLY, CONJU'NCTURE. Fr. conjoindre; Sp. conjuntar; Lat. conjungere, to put, place or bring together; con, and jungere, quasi in unum agere. Jungo a jugo, n inserto, jugo a ζυγῶ. Ζυγ-ός, formed from ξύαγος, παρὰ τὸ δύο ἄγειν. See Vossius, and also Schedius in Lennep. Tooke derives the Lat. jug-um; It. giogo, and English yok or yoke, from geoc, the past tense and past participle of the A. S. verb, ge-ican, (Eng. eke,) addere, adjicere, augere, jungere.

"Fr. conjoindre; to conjoin, (connect,) combine, couple, co-unite; to joyn, associate; fasten, knit; marry, make sure with or together." Cotgrave.

Conjuncture is used emphatically, for a combination of important, critical circumstances.

But oft hir wittes ben made blynde,
All oneliche of this ilke poynte,
That hir abydyng is conioynte
Forth with the body for to dwell.

Gower. Conf. Am., book vii. fol. 144.

And the cause, why the poete conioyneth experience and memorye together (as it were in a lefulle matrimonye, experience bygettynge, and memorie alwaye producynge that incomparable fruite, called sapience) is, for that memorie in her operation properlye succedeth experience.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, fol. 222.

Thus was this ladie fast
conioynde in sacred knot:
Where prime and tender yeres were spent deuoyde of slaunder's blot.

Turbervile. Upon the Death of Elizabeth Arkundle.

IN. In such wyse temperyng and qualifying his infinite power and virtue to the measure and capacitie of manne's nature: that it mai be hable to abyde the metyng together & cõioyning therof.
Udall. Luke, ch. i.

If fortune frendly fawne and lend the welthy store,
Thy frende's conjoyned joy doth make thy joy the more.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Praise to a true Frende.

These broiles haue oft my cheekes with teares bedew'd,
My heart is rent, my hope bereau'd, my ioys are gone,
My life is lost, if you conioyne not both in one.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 93.

All that he had done with King Lewys in his ambassade for the conioyning of this new affinitie, was both frustrate and vaine.
Grafton. Edward IV. The fourth Yere.

He loketh the coniunctions,
He loketh the recepcions,
His signe, his houre, his ascendent.
Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 138.

Therefore no man can defile his owne bodye with any maner of superstition, but he doth separat himself, from that coniunction and vniõ wherby we ar made the members of the Sonne of God.
Caluine. Foure Godlie Sermons, serm. 1.

Wherin Saint Hierome was rather contente to ioyn the Latine coniuncion with the Greke woorde, and call it compresbyter, thẽ to chaunge that woorde signifying the office into seniores and consenior, signifying but the age.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 426.

The emperor like a wise prince, seying then the aspect of the planet reygned contrary to hys purpose, ceased for to talke of that mater any more till an other daye when the coniũccion should be in more meker signes stirynge to peace.
Hall. Henry IV. The fourth Yere.

Some traditions rely but upon single testimony at first, and yet descending upon others, come to be attested by many, whose testimony though conjunct, yet in value is but single, because it relies upon the first single relator, and so can have no greater authority, or certainty, than they derive from the single person.
Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 5.

For as Nestorius teaching rightly that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinferre that in Christ those natures can by no coniunction make one person; so Eutyches of sounde beliefe, as touching their true personall copulation became vnsound, by denying the difference which still continueth between the one and the other nature.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book v. fol. 293.

And indeed I am induc'd fully to this understanding of St. Paul's words by the conjunctive particle [ἡ] which he uses.
Taylor. Sermon 23. part i.

Let them be considered, root and branch, first severally, then conjunctively. Fuller. Worthies. Oxfordshire.

Their office is as well severally as conjunctly to watch with diligence over the flock committed to their charge, both publickly and privately, that no corruption of religion or manners grow amongst them. Spotiswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1575. book vi.

You see now what power was acquir'd in civil matters by the conjuncture of philosophy and divinity.
Hobbs. Behemoth, part ii. fol. 533.

But when I considered that also the actions of men, which singly are inconsiderable, after many conjunctures, grow at last either into one great protecting power, or into two great destroying factions, I could not but approve the structure of your poem, which ought to be no other than such as an imitation of human life requireth.
Id. A Letter concerning Sir William D'Avenant's Preface.

Thus the feet of the otter are made, the toes being all conjoyned with membranes as the feet of geese and ducks are.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book vi. ch. i. note 3.

Hence, v. 5, he exhorts them to be united in friendship one to another, that with one heart and one voice they might conjointly glorify God, and receive one another with the same good will that Christ has received the Jews.
Locke. On Romans, sec. 13. ch. xiv. note 7.

So they made no advances till the Duke of Marlborough came back, who carried over Lord Viscount Townsend, to be conjunct plenipotentiary with himself, reckoning the load too great to bear it wholly on himself. CONJU — CON JUGA
Burnett. Own Times. Queen Anne. Anno 1709.

Heaven (that hath plac'd this island to give law
To balance Europe, and her states to awe)
In this conjunction doth on Britain smile,
The greatest leader, and the greatest isle.
Waller. A Panegyric to my Lord Protector.

They must be understood conjunctly, so as always to go together, ask so as to seek, seek so as to knock: that is, as St. Paul expresseth it, a man must continue instant in prayer.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 31.

The historian not only tells us, they did this upon occasion of that one conspiracy; but that it had been their common practice to give this power to their consuls, in all like conjunctures of danger. Hoadley. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 8.

——————— Who from our looms
Take largely for themselves, and for those tribes
Of Indians, ancient tenants of the land,
In amity conjoin'd, of civil life
The comforts taught, and various new desires,
Which kindle arts, and occupy the poor.
Dyer. The Fleece, book iv.

She and the sun with influence conjoint
Wield the huge axle of the whirling earth,
And from their just direction turn the poles,
Slow urging on the progress of the years.
Glover. On Sir Isaac Newton.

I'll try to come with my supplies;
To muster up my sober aid,
What time your lively pow'rs invade;
To act conjointly in the war
On dulness, whom we both abhor.
Smart. Reason and Imagination.

The single state of man seems to be used by Shakspeare for an individual, in opposition to a commonwealth, or conjunct body of men. Johnson. Observations on Macbeth.

Finding King James irremediably excluded, he voted for the conjunctive sovereignty, upon this principle, that he thought the title of the prince and his consort equal, and it would please the prince their protector to have a share in the sovereignty.
Id. Life of Sheffield.

But I will neither ostentatiously display my own endeavours to assist you in this conjuncture nor dwell upon the unworthy treatment you have received from others.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Publius Lentulus. Letter 16. book i.

CONITE, a particular variety of Magnesian carbonate of lime, which is found in Iceland.

CO'NJUGATE, v. / Co'NJUGATE, n. / CONJUGA'TION, / Co'NJUGAL, / CONJUGA'LITY, / Co'NJUGALLY. — Lat. conjugare; con, and jugum. See CONJOIN, above. To put, place or bring under the same yoke; to join, couple, or unite. Conjugal is applied to the union—by marriage; connubial, matrimonial. "Conjugation doth as it were yoake, and couple verbs together with their moods, tenses, and declinings, under one and the same theme." Minshew.

Can skantly the tensis of his conjugations.
Skelton. Speak. Parrot.

I was neuer discontented with your former allegacion out of Saynte Augustyne, concernyng vowes syngular, quod alius vouit castitatem cõiugalem, that some men voweth coniugall chastyte, or faythfull clennesse in marryage. Bale. Apology, fol. 64.

He shall set naught by y^e^ God of his fathers, neither shall he regarde the coniugale sone in wedlock, nor sette awght by any God at all, for he shall exalt himself aboue all thinges.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. xii.

For those drawing as well marriage as wardship, gave him both power and occasion to conjugate at pleasure the Norman and the Saxon houses, which by degrees might prove a second conquest of affections, harder than the first.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 101.

N-ATE. -URE

But now it is no new wonder but a pursuance of the same conjugation of great and divine things, that the fame and religion of Jesus was with so incredible swiftness scattered over the face of the habitable world, from one end of the earth unto the other.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. iv.

But I must also observe other great conjugations of mercy; for he that is to pass through an infinite, must not dwell upon every little line of life. Id. Sermon 26. part ii.

Whether his first design be to withdraw
Our fealty from God, or to disturb
Conjugal love, then which perhaps no bliss
Enjoy'd by us excites his envy more:
Or this, or worse, leave not the faithful side
That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ix. l. 263.

And if it be true both in divinity and law, that consent alone, though copulation never follow, makes a marriage, how can they dissolve it for the want of that which made it not, and not dissolve it for that not continuing which made it, and should preserve it in love and reason, and difference it from a brute conjugality.
Id. Of Nullities in Marriage.

Such a hater looses by the due punishment that privilege, Deut. xxiv. 1, to divorce for a natural dislike; which, though it could not love conjugally, yet sent away civilly, and with just conditions. Id. Doctrine, &c. of Divorce.

All the various mixtures and conjugations of atoms do beget nothing but new inward texture and alteration of surface.
Bentley. Sermon 2.

I do not wonder at your lordship's being terrified with the account that has been given you of the number of conjugations in the Greek language; but I hope you will instantly recover your spirits upon being told, that, instead of thirteen, they are but two.
Sharpe. Of the Greek Tongue. Letter 7.

Whenever an action is good and virtuous, it is not only natural, but carries with it a felicity flowing from and essential to the very nature of it. Paternal, conjugal, filial affection, are they not full of delights?
Hoadley. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 94.

In lifeless strains let vulgar satire tell
That marriage oft is mixt with heav'n and hell,
That conjugal delight is sour'd with spleen,
And peace and war compose the varied scene;
My Muse a truth sublimer can assert,
And sing the triumphs of a mutual heart.
Blackmore. Extempore Verses.

CONJU'RE, v. Fr. conjurer; Sp. conjurar; It. conjurare; Lat. conjurare; simul jurare, et alterum alteri promittere fidem; con, and jurare, to swear.
CONJU'RER, n.
CO'NJURER,
CO'NJURING, n.
CONJU'REMENT,
CONJURA'TION,
CONJU'RATOR.
Juro, says Vossius, a jure dicitur, cum qui jurat, religiosè spondeat, se aliquid, ceu jus esset, servaturum. The Gr. ἐξορκίζω, Lat. adjuro, is rendered conjure by Wiclif.

To swear together; to bind themselves by an oath to some common purpose; to complot, to conspire, to confederate, to combine.

To call upon with the solemnity of an oath; with zeal, with fervour; to beg or beseech, to supplicate or intreat earnestly.

"The Conjurer," says Minshew, "seemeth by praiers and invocation of God's powerful names to compel the Devil to say or doe what he commandeth him."

This abbot, which was an holy man,
As monkes ben, or elles ought to be,
This yonge childe to conjure he began.
Chaucer. The Prioresse Tale.

And thervpon he gan coniure,
So that through his enchantement
This ladie, which was innocent,
And wiste nothynge of this guile,
Mette.(i. e. dreamt.)
Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 138.

CONJURE

And gan out of hir cofer take
Hym thought an heuealy figure,
Whiche all by charme, and by coniure
Was wrought.
Gower. Conf. Am., book v. fol. 403.

But Theseus was stille and the prince of prestis seide to him, I conjure the bi the lyvinge God that thou seye to us if thou art Crist the Sone of God. Wiclif Matthew, ch. xxvi.

Whē such an image or idolous prince is thus vp set or constituted by authoritie (this oath once made that he shall alwayes defende them) he maye in no wyse speake, but oute of that spirit y^e^ their cōiurers, cōfessours I shuld sai, haue put into him.
Bale. Image, b. 2.

And by coniurers the seade of kyngs is thrust from staate,
Whereon agreuyd people worke ofteymes their hidden haate.
Surrey. Ecclesiastes, ch. iv.

And in lyke manner of the leapers thou canst proue nothing: thou canst neuer coniure out confession thence, howbeit thou hast an handsome example there. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 15.

And in the end he repeteth how he coniured God in Horeb, and ouercame him with prayer, where thou mayest learne the right manner to pray. Id. Ib. fol. 22.

I cal him a good counsaylor, which (as Cæsar sayth in the coniuration of Catiline) whiles he consulteth in doubtfull matters, is voyde of all hate, friendshyppe, displeasure, or pitie.
Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, fol. 238.

In coniuring of holy water they pray, that whosoeuer be sprinckled therewith may receaue health as well of body as of soule, and likewise in makyng holy bread and so forth in the coniurations of other ceremonies. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 156.

And by that means searche foorth and innestigate, the whole intent of their coniuration, and after what waye they intended to procede in the same.
Hall. Henry VII. The ninth Yere.

Other taryed still behynd to accompany Syr Robert Clifforde, when he returned agayne into England, whose tariyage meruelously debilitated and appalled the courages & hartes, of the coniuratours. Id. Ib.

For it was not very easye to vnderstand, who were the coniuratours and complices or partakers in that same sect.
Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 212.

And you (my lords) by those same Goddes
Whose sight I hope anon,
I coniure, that ye him inuest
Your king, when I am gon.
Warner. Albion's England, book ii. ch. ix.

——— And in proud rebellious arms
Drew after him the third part of heav'ns sons
Conjur'd against the highest.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 693.

As for science, or certain rules of their actions, they are so far from it, that they know not what it is. Geometry they have thought conjuring. Hobbs. Of Man, part i. fol. 115.

The duke beyng by certayne of the king's counsell diligently vpon interrogatories examined what things he knewe preiudiciall to the king's person, opened and declared frankly and freely all the coniuration without dissimuling or glossing.
Grafton. Richard III. The third Yere.

If ever we could have hoped to have been informed of the reason of the present advantages allowed to the wicked, it should have been when the prophet Jeremy (one sanctified even in his mother's womb) did so earnestly ask God this question, with a conjuration upon his justice, saying, Lord, thou art just when I argue with thee; yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are ll they happy that deal treacherously.
Mountagne. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 16.

Both these Williams before rehersed were rather taken of suspicion and jelowsie, because they were nere of bloud to the coniurators, then for any proued offence or crime.
Grafton. Henry VII. The twenty-seventh Yere.

CONJURE — CONNATURALIZE.

Whilst in this mill wee labour and turne round
As in a conjurer's circle, William found
A meanes for our deliverance: "Turn your cloakes," Quoth he, "for Puck is busy in these oakes."
Corbet. Iter Boreale.

Nevertheless, to write now the reforming of education, though it be one of the greatest and noblest designs that can be thought on, and for the want whereof this nation perishes, I had not yet at this time been induc'd, but by your earnest entreaties, and serious conjurements. Milton. Of Education.

In this month of May, certain persons, no good friends, as it seems to Queen Mary, had meetings together, to calculate what should befall the queen (perhaps) and her issue, and used unlawful arts of conjuring and witchcraft.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1555.

And hereupon certain men, June 5, were commissionated to proceed to further examination of these conjurours upon such points as they should gather out of their former confessions touching their lewd and vain practices. Id. Ib.

As though the hearing of their Latin lies and conjuring of water and salt, were rather the service of God, than the study of his most holy word. Id. Henry VIII. Anno 1546.

My little fields within doors, though by their novelty they appear too extravagant to you to subsist even in a regular imagination, are in the effect things that require no conjuration.
Tatler, No. 203.

As the Druid worship paid the highest respect to the elements of fire and water, it was very natural that they, who abounded with so many conjurations for the discovery of doubtful facts or future events, should make use of these elements in their divination. Burke. An Aridgement of English History.

CONNARUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Monodelphia, order Decandria, natural order Terebintaceæ. Generic character: calyx five-parted; corolla, petals five; one style; capsule two-valved, one-celled, one-seeded.

Seven species, natives of the South of Africa and the East Indies.

CONNA'TE, CONNA'SCENCE. } Lat. con, and nascor, natus. Nascor, ex gnascor, a γεννάω. See CONGENITE.

Born together, or at the same time with.

And this the practice of Christians hath acknowledged, who have baptized these geminous births, and double connascencies with several names. Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xv.

'Tis (as it were) the first dawning of the spirit upon the soul, in those connate principles born with us into the world, and discovering, though very imperfectly, some general truths.
South. Sermons 10, 11, 12. vol. ii. p. 238.

CONNA'TURALIZE, v. CONNA'TURAL, adj. CONNATURA'LITY, CONNA'TURALLY, CONNA'TURALNESS. } Lat. nascor, natus, born. It. connaturale; Sp. connatural; Fr. connatural; natural unto all alike; also agreeable to nature. Cotgrave.

To cause to be, or make natural; agreeable to nature; to the same nature.

How often have you been forced to swallow sickness, to drink dead palsies and foaming epilepsies, to render your intemperances familiar to you—before ever you could connaturalise your midnight revels to your temper. Scott. Christ. Life, vol. i. fol. 4.

First in man's life we find an appetite
To learn and know the truth of ev'ry thing,
Which is co-natural, and born with it,
And from the essence of the soul doth spring.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul. Reason 1. sec. 30.

I yield it just, said Adam, and submit.
But is there yet no other way, besides
These painful passages, how we may come
To death, and mix with our connatural dust?
Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 529.

Iron in a particular sympathie moves to the loadstone, but yet if it exceed a certain quantitie, it forsakes those affections, and like a good citizen & a true patriot, moves to the earth, which is the region and country of its connaturalls. CONNATURALIZE — CONN
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, book vii. ch. i.

There are also some principles which are indeed naturally known, that is, by principles of natural reason: but because they are not the immediate principles of our creation and proper being, they have the same truth, and the same seat, and the same certainty; but not the same prime evidence, and connaturality to the soul.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience.

Some common notions seem connaturally engraven in the soul, antecedently to discussive ratiocination. Hale.

Yet there was in Sir Henry such a propensity and connaturalness to the Italian language, and those studies, whereof Gentilis was a great master, that this friendship between them did dayly increase. Walton. Life of Sir H. Wotton.

But they made a shift to gather up her [Truth] scattered limbs, which as soon as they came together, by a strange sympathy and connaturalness, presently united into a lovely and beautiful body.
Rust. Funeral Sermon. On Jer. Taylor.

The very sound of his [Virgil] words has often somewhat that is connatural to the subject. Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Such is the sweetness of our sins, such is the connaturalness of our corruptions, so great our confidence of impunity here, that, except we looked for an account hereafter, it were unreasonable to expect that any man should forsake his delights, renounce his complacencies by a severe repentance, create a bitterness to his own soul. Pearson. On the Creed.

If this be true, it is impossible the nature of such beings should be expressed, or the least essential property be any way imitated, while between the medium and themselves there is nothing connatural. Harris. Hermes, book iii. ch. iii.

CONNAUGHT, one of the four Provinces into which Ireland is divided. It occupies the western side of the Island, and presents a great extent of coast to the Atlantic Ocean, by which its western outlines are deeply indented. The inhabitants of the Province are named by Ptolemy Cangeni and Concani, by Strabo Coniani et Coniscii. It was formerly a distinct Kingdom, a dignity which it enjoyed till the reign of Henry IV. After this period it was divided among a number of petty Chiefs; but these claims have now passed away, and the distinction is not attended to in any public Acts. The extent of Connaugnt is stated at 4108 Irish square miles, which contain a population of 1,053,918 individuals, according to the returns of 1821. Connaught comprises the Counties of Galway, Leitrim, Mayo, Roscommon, and Sligo; each of which will be described under its respective name.

CONNE'CT, v. CONNE'CTION, CONNE'CTIVE, adj. CONNE'CTIVE, n. CONNE'CTIVELY. } Lat. connectere; con, and nectere, to knit together. A. S. cnitt-an, or nict-an, nectere; the A. S. thus supplying the Root. Tooke, ii. 300. Our older writers use the verb connex, (q. v.) formed from the past participle of connectere. "Nectere propriè sit nendo conjungere; sed generatim sumitur pro vinculo aliquo jungere, ac colligare." Vossius.

To knit, enwrap or enfold, to unite, to link or join; to tie or fasten together.

What other cause the frame could so contrive
That when tempestuous winds the ocean drive
They cannot break the tie, nor disunite
The waves which roll connected in their flight?
Blackmore. The Creation, book i.

So much good method and connection may
Improve the common and the plainest things.
Roscommon. Horace. Art of Poetry.

NECT- NEC- UT.

I call him ours; for, be assured, I cannot separate myself from any thing with which you are connected.
Melmoth. Trebonius. To Cicero. Letter 11. book xii.

For 'tis not hers by false connections drawn
At splendid slavery's sordid shrine to fawn.
Warton. On the Death of King George II.

As in the drama all events should tend
In course unbroken to the purpos'd end;
So must the picture's business still maintain
The same connective unity of train.
Scott. Essay on Painting.

If to many words at once, then as they [accessories] serve to no other purpose than to connect, they are called for that reason connectives. Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. fii.

CONNECTICUT, one of the original thirteen United States of America, and one of the five States comprising the section of that country distinguished by the name of New England.

t and aries.

Connecticut is situated between the parallels of 40° 58′ and 42° 2′ of north latitude, and the meridians of 71° 45′ and 73° 39′ of west longitude from Greenwich. It is bounded on the north by the State of Massachusetts, on the east by that of Rhode Island, on the south by Long Island Sound, and on the west by the State of New York. Its mean length from east to west is about ninety miles, and its mean breadth from north to south fifty-three miles, and its area contains 4674 square miles, or 2,991,360 acres.

ry.

The present territory of Connecticut was, at its first settlement by the English, in the possession of the Pequots, Mohegans, Pedunks, and many other smaller Indian tribes. The County was first planted by the settlers from Massachusetts, who established themselves on the Connecticut River: other emigrants from England, fixing on a different spot, two distinct colonies arose, which were called Connecticut and New-Haven. They continued under separate local Governments until the year 1662, when the Royal Charter of Charles II. united them under the general name they now hold. This Charter was remarkable for its Republican features, and was so favourable to Civil liberty, that the people of this State were content to be governed by it after the revolution from the mother country; and it continued to exist until 1818, when it was remodelled as a Constitution. The early settlers of Connecticut, exposed to a rigorous climate, suffered alike from want of food and shelter, and laboured under heavy difficulties, in clearing the surface of the soil, and maintaining continued and harassing conflicts with the surrounding savages, whose inroads were headed by their celebrated leader Philip, the most skilful and persevering enemy the settlers ever encountered; fire and devastation marked his path, and his exploits long kept the colonists in distress, confusion, and alarm. The political rights also of Connecticut were continually menaced by the Governors of New England, one of whom, Sir Edward Andros, they deposed and imprisoned. The supplies of men and money from Connecticut mainly contributed to the final conquest of Canada: at one period, 6000 troops from this Province were in actual service, and her expenses exceeded the allowanee made by the British Parliament, by the great sum of £400,000.

Connecticut made rapid advances in wealth and population during the brief period of repose between the termination of the Canada campaign and the breaking out of the war of Independence, to the successful result of which latter event, she contributed her due proportion, though suffering but little from the actual presence of hostilities. The history of this State affords no material incident since the revolution, except that of the people and their delegates opposing the late war with Great Britain.

CONNECTICUT.

Face of the country.

The face of the country in Connecticut is greatly diversified by hills and vales; the elevations are moderate, occurring in quick succession, presenting a beautiful and constantly varying prospect, which but for the absence of park scenery, might be compared, in some respects, to that of England. Long Island interposing itself as a barrier to the Atlantic, the shores of Connecticut, on the north side of the Sound, enjoy the advantages of an inland sea, and are of themselves interesting. Several ranges of hills come from Massachusetts, and run southward through the whole breadth of the State, dividing the water-courses, and terminating in bluffs and points on the Sound.

Soil and productions.

The great body of the State of Connecticut is excellent land, fit for all the purposes of agriculture; much of it has been under actual culture near a century, and still retains its original strength. The lands of Fairfield County, in the south-west angle, and the land on the Connecticut River, are the best in the State; the country along the Quinebaug is also very fertile. The principal production is maize, then rye, grass, and potatoes, oats and flax are also raised extensively. Almost every farmer has one or more orchards, from which great quantities of cider are annually made; the crops of pumkins, onions, (particularly in the neighbourhood of Weathersfield,) turnips, and beans are also of great consequence to the cultivator.

Climate.

This State may be said upon the whole to enjoy a favourable climate, and it is undoubtedly very healthy. The extreme of cold has sometimes sunk the mercury to 10° below zero of Fahrenheit; but the thermometer rarely indicates 30° of frost. Except on the sea-coast the snow lies often three months on the ground, and the winter continues nearly five months; the springs are consequently sometimes backward, but the summer and autumn are delightful; the greatest heat at the warmest season seldom exceeds 84° though it has been noted at 91°.

Rivers.

The principal rivers of Connecticut are the great river of that name, the Thames and its branches, and the Housatonic.

River Thames.

The River Thames in the eastern part of the State is formed by the junction of the Shetucket and Norwich rivers at Norwich Landing, only fourteen miles above the mouth of the Thames in Long Island Sound.

Shetucket.

The Shetucket comes from the north-west, under the name of the Willamantic; the east branch of Shetucket is called the Quinebaug, falling in three miles above its junction with Norwich River.

Quinebaug and Norwich rivers.

The falls of the last stream one mile above the landing, are singularly beautiful and romantic. The Housatonic River rises in Massachusetts, but runs almost its entire course through this State, entering in at the north-west corner, and discharging itself into Long Island Sound, between Milford and Stratford. It is navigable only for twelve miles, to Derby, for sloops and small vessels. Almost immediately after entering Connecticut, the Housatonic is precipitated over a perpendicular fall of sixty feet; the direction of the stream is south for thirty-five or forty miles, when it turns to the south-east for an equal distance, and again proceeds south to the end of its course, having a total length of upwards of ninety miles. The Shepaug and Naugatuck are branches of the Housatonic. The Quirimpiack falls into the Bay of New-Haven in Long Island Sound.

CONNECTICUT.

Smaller streams.

Upwards of fifty smaller streams also discharge themselves into the Sound; and indeed the whole of Connecticut is remarkably well watered, affording numerous mill-seats.

Exports.

The principal exports from Connecticut are horses, mules, butter, cheese, cider, maize, beef, and pork; the value of exports by shipping, for the year ending 30th September, 1820, was 421,931 dollars, (£94,931. sterling:) the foreign trade is carried on principally with the West Indies, which is, however, small, compared with the coasting trade to the southern States: a considerable amount of tonnage is also employed in transporting the raw material of those States to a European market.

Tonnage

The amount of tonnage belonging to the State of Connecticut was

	Tons.
In 1774	11,317
1795	35,482
1815	50,358
1821	45,724

At which latter period the amount was distributed as follows:

	Tons.
In Foreign trade	14,312
Coasting trade	29,025
The Fisheries	2,357

And the proportion of the State tonnage to that belonging to the whole tonnage of the United States, divided into 100 parts was in 1795, 4·7; in 1821, 3·7.

Manufactures.

In Connecticut, a larger proportion of the population is engaged in manufactures than in any other State, except Rhode Island. The formation of culinary vessels from tin is carried on to so great an extent, as to have become proverbial, the ware thus made, is taken by pedlars, generally members of the families of the manufacturers, and sold in all parts of the United States and the Canadas. It is, however, remarkable, that the Official return of the manufactures in this State has not specified this branch; a circumstance to be attributed to the manufacture being carried on by individual families without a formal establishment or capital. Distilled spirits from grain are obtained in large quantities in Hartford County. Litchfield County is the principal seat of the iron manufactures. In 1818, there were sixty-seven cotton factories in this State, but they have since very much diminished. Large quantities of fire-arms were made during the late war. Hats, buttons, and wooden clocks are manufactured to a very considerable extent.

Government.

Connecticut is governed according to a Constitution settled in 1818, which resembles in its general provisions those of most of the other States of America. The Legislative, Executive, and Judicial departments of the Government are strictly separated. The first is composed of a Senate and House of Representatives; the Members of both which bodies are annually elected, and meet once in each year. The Executive department consists of a Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, both of whom are annually elected by the people. The Governor has no veto upon legislative acts, but bills disapproved of by him, must be redetermined by Yeas and Nays, and the names of the Members entered on the Journals. The Lieutenant-Governor is ex officio President of the Senate. The Judicial power is vested in a supreme Court of Errors, a Superior Court, and the usual inferior Courts. The Judges and Justices of the Peace are elected by the Legislature; the Judges hold their office quamdiù se bene gesserint; Justices of the Peace are annually appointed. No Judge or Justice can retain his office after attaining the age of seventy.

CONNECTICUT

Every white male citizen of the United States who has gained a settlement in Connecticut, arrived at the age of twenty-one years, paid a State tax within the year, and maintains a good moral character, is a qualified elector. No person is bound to support or to be associated with any religious sect. The Governor and all Officers of the State are liable to impeachment, which must be prosecuted by the House of Representatives and tried by the Senate. No pardoning power exists in case of conviction from impeachment.

Revenue

The revenue of the State is derived from an income tax, so small, that in 1817, it was only 48,362 dollars (£10,881. sterling,) which much more than pays all their public functionaries. This State has a large school fund, which, in 1818, amounted to 1,608,673 dollars, (£361,951. sterling.)

School fund.

A large portion of the yearly income of this fund, together with 12,000 dollars, are annually devoted to the maintenance of schoolmasters in every Township, of which there are 122. The whole sum thus paid in 1818, was 82,914 dollars, (£18,656. sterling,) being nearly double the amount of the taxes. This probably is the only Government in the world which gives more to the people than they pay into the treasury.

Civil divisions and population.

Connecticut is divided into eight Counties, subdivided into Townships or Towns as they are here termed, having a population as stated in the subjoined Table.

Counties.	No. of Towns.	Population in 1820.	Chief Towns.
Hartford	18	47,264	Hartford
New-Haven ..	17	39,616	New-Haven
New London..	15	35,943	New London
Fairfield.....	18	42,739	Fairfield
Windham	15	31,684	Brook-Green
Litchfield	22	41,267	Litchfield
Middlesex	7	22,405	Middletown
Tolland	10	14,330	Tolland
Total..	122	275,248

It is also stated officially that there were engaged

	Persons.
In agriculture	50,518
In commerce.....	3,581
In manufactures	17,541

but this last number is much over-rated.

Connecticut is, with the exception of Massachusetts, the most populous State in the Union, in proportion to her extent; having an average of fifty-nine persons to each square mile.

Educat

The school endowment before mentioned proves how well education in this State is provided for, and their higher institutions are not neglected. Yale College in New-Haven, is one of the oldest and most respectable in the United States; it was founded in 1701; the Library is numerous, the Philosophical and Chemical apparatus complete, and the Mineralogical cabinet very superior: the Medical institution connected with the College has a valuable Anatomical museum and a Medical library; the whole number of students in 1820, was 412. There is also an Episcopal Theological Seminary in New-Haven. The American Asylum for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb at Hartford, is patronized by the Congress of the United States, and has fifty pupils. The Foreign Mission School at Cornwall, is for the education of heathen youths, who are afterwards sent home to instruct their countrymen; in 1820, there were twenty-nine pupils, of whom nineteen were American Indians, and six from the islands of the Pacific. Several natives of the Sandwich Islands have already returned thither well qualified. A Law School has been long established, at Litchfield, with thirty students. Many flourishing subscription academies exist also in various parts of Connecticut, besides the common schools.

TEC-UT.

The most numerous religious denomination are the Congregationalists; the Episcopalians and the Baptists are next in number. In 1818, there were 213 congregations of the first named persuasion; about 70 of the Baptists, and 69 of the Episcopalians. There are but few of any other denomination The sabbath is observed with very great strictness; and in the towns, churches have the privilege of extending a chain across the streets in which they stand, during the time of divine service, to prevent the passing of carriages; in former days they exercised this custom on the highways to the obstruction of travellers, but this is no longer the case. It has latterly been stated that the tenets of the Unitarians have spread into this State from Massachusetts.

There are five incorporated cities in Connecticut, viz Hartford and New-Haven, the Capitals of the States, the Legislature sitting at each alternately; Middletown, New London, and Norwich. Hartford lies on the west bank of the Connecticut River, fifty miles from the mouth; it is flourishing and well situated for trade, with a rich and extensive back country, latitude 41° 38′ north, longitude 4° 18′ east of Washington, or 72° 37½′ west of Greenwich. New-Haven lies round the head of a bay indenting four miles from Long Island Sound; the city is well laid out on a plain mostly surrounded by hills; the harbour is sheltered, but shallow, and gradually filling up; to obviate the inconvenience a jetty or pile nearly a mile in length has been constructed, latitude 41° 17½′ north, longitude 4° 4′ east of Washington. Middleton is a pleasant and improving town on the west bank of Connecticut River; the amount of shipping belonging to this port was lately 20,000 tons, latitude 41° 33′ north, longitude 4° 19′ east of Washington. New London is near the south-east corner of the State, on the west bank of the Thames; it is a considerable commercial town; the harbour is large, safe, and commodious, with five fathoms water; it is defended by two forts, latitude 41° 20′ north, longitude 4° 52′ east of Washington. Norwich is on the point at the junction of the Shetucket and Norwich rivers which form the Thames, twelve miles above New London. Litchfield, Weathersfield, Saybrook, Stafford, Cornwall, Fairfield and Bridgport are the other more remarkable towns, though not sufficiently so to require detailed accounts here.

See Cary's and Lea's American Atlas; American Statistics; Official Documents of the American Congress, &c.

CONNE'X, v. CONNE'X, n. CONNE'XING, CONNE'XION, or CONNE'CTION. See CONNECT, above. To knit, inwrap or infold, to unite, to link, to join, to tie or fasten together.

CONNEX — CONNIVE.

The high and mightie Prince Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, &c. agreed him to put and putteth all maner matters and quarrells in deede, with all their incidentez cyrcumstaunces, dependentez and connexes, that touchen hym and hys persone.

Hall. Henry VI. The fourth Yere.

All my thought, care & study is (you noble princes and men of high honor) to inuent the meane, study & way, how both my kyngdomes by the benefite of Almightie God enlarged & amplified, by the cõexyng & ioyngyng the one to the other may be left to my posteritie cleane & pure with out domestical dissencion or ciuile discord. Id. Henry V. The eighth Yere.

For as it is an aphorism most true, so is it also very closely connex with piety and religion; and such a philosophy we are to expect from so holy a man as Moses.

More. Appendix to the Defence of the Philosophick Cabbala, fol. 138.

But above all, let this be observed (which is the grace and spirit of civile history,) that the causes and consultations be connexed, with the events.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, book ii. ch. iv.

This history [Milton's] when it first came abroad, had only the reputation of the putting of our old authors neatly together in a connex'd story, not abstaining from some lashes at the ignorance, or I know not what, of those times.

Wood. Fasti Oxon, vol. i. fol. 266.

But the most noble and profitable invention of all other, was that of speech, consisting of names and appellations, and their connexion, whereby men register their thoughts; recal them when they are past; and also declare them one to another for mutual utility and conversation. Hobbs. Of Man, ch. iv. fol. 107.

——————Intermixt with these
Large globous irons fly, of dreadful hiss,
Singing the air and from long distance bring
Surprising slaughter; on each side they fly
By chains connext, and with destructive sweep
Behead whole troops at once.

J. Philips. Blenheim.

The connex way of reasoning is, saith Simplicius, when two things are joined together, as antecedent and consequent, so that by the position of the antecedent the consequent follows, and by taking away the consequent, the antecedent is taken away.

Stillingfleet. Sermon 12. vol. iii.

We may, therefore, surely conclude, that there must be a future state, wherein those rewards shall be bestowed, and this love of God to good men made to appear, and the eternal and inseparable connexion between virtue and happiness manifested, in the sight of angels and men. Atterbury. Sermon 1. vol. ii.

As there must needs be a connexion, so that connexion will best answer its end and the purpose of the writer, which, whilst it leads, by a sure train of thinking, to the conclusion in view, conceals itself all the while, and leaves to the reader the satisfaction of supplying the intermediate links, and joining together, in his own mind, what is left in a seeming posture of neglect and inconnexion. Hurd. Commentary on Horace. Introduction.

CONNI'VE, v. CONNI'VENT, CONNI'VENCY, CONNI'VER, CONNI'VANCE. Lat. connivere; con, and nivere, to wink. "Fr. conniver; to wink at, suffer, tolerate, bear with; to see and not to see, to make as though he neither saw nor knew ought of the matter." Cotgrave.

And therefore laws are not made with exact and purest measures, but in compliance and by necessity, not always as well as they should, but as well as they may: and therefore the civil power is forc'd sometimes to connive at what it does not approve.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. iii.

His [God] legal justice cannot be so fickle and so variable, sometimes like a devouring fire, and by and by connivant in the embers, or if I may so say, oscitant and supine.

Milton. Doctrine, &c. of Divorce.

CONNIVE. — CONNOTE.

Heresie, conscious of her owne injustice, could be content to goe away with a leg, or an arme of sound principles, as hoping to make up the rest with her owne mixtures: Truth cannot abide to part with a joynt, and will rather endure to leese all by violence, than a piece through a willing connivency.

Hall. Cont. Salomon's Choice, &c., vol. i. fol. 1156.

All sins which we give allowance to, being committed, or not hindered by us if we may, are ours, as if we committed them; first commanders, abettors, counsellours, consenters, commenders, connivers, concealers; not hinderers; each of these will be found guilty before God's tribunal.

Junius. Sin. Stigm. (1639.) p. 825.

After this division, and translation of the empire unto Charles the Great, the Roman empire for a time, by permission and connivence of the French and German states, went by succession till Charles the Grosse.

Prynne. Fourth Part of the Soveraign Power. Appendix, p. 9.

Those [the Protestants] of Swithland (having lately provoked the Pope) had no other hope of peace; those of France of the exercise of their religion; those of the Palatinate, and adjoining countries of the least connivancie to say their prayers, then by the earnest meditation of our gracious master.

Cabbala. The Lord Keeper to the Lord Viscount Anan.

Now the earth being such a one, and all its parts having an equal propension, or connivency to the centre, they must needs be in greatest rest, and most immoveable when they are all equidistant from it. Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

——————And hast thou undone us?
By thy connivance, nodding in a corner.

Ben Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, act iv. sc. 4.

Do not think that Christ will patronize or connive at any of your sins which you live in; or that he will save you, whether you repent or no. Bishop Beveridge. Works. Sermon 89.

The rest of the vices in St. Paul's black list, which were not warm'd at their altars, and fostered in their temples, were yet by the connivance of the law cherish'd in their private houses, and made a part of the uncondemned actions of common life.

Locke. Works. Romans, ch. v. sec. 5. Notes.

In many of them, the directors were heartily concurring; in most of them, they were encouraging, and sometimes commanding; in all they were conniving.

Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

Government will not perhaps soon arrive at such purity and excellence, but that some connivance at least will be indulged to the triumphant robber and successful cheat.

Johnson. The Falkland Islands.

CONNOISSEU'R, CONNOISSEU'RSHIP. } Fr. cognoistre, to know. See COGNITION. Connoisseur is generally applied to

One who has skill and judgment in the arts; in matters of taste.

These arts of speech the guides and marshals are;
But logic leadeth reason in a dance,
Reason the connoisseur and bright load star,
In this world's sea t' avoid the rock of chance.

Davies. On Dancing.

Your lesson learn'd you'll be secure
To get the name of connoisseur;
And when your merits once are known,
Procure disciples of your own. Swift. On Poetry.

If therefore, in the course of this inquiry, we can shew that there are rules for the conduct of the artist, which are fixed and invariable, it follows of course, that the art of the connoisseur, or, in other words, taste, has likewise invariable principles.

Sir Joshua Reynolds. The Seventh Discourse.

I leave to learned fingers, and wise hands,
The artist and his ape, to teach and tell
How well his connoisseurship understands
The graceful bend, and the voluptuous swell:
Let these describe the undescribable.

Lord Byron. Childe Harold, can. 4. st. 53.

CONNO'TE, v. CONNO'TATE, CONNOTA'TION. } Con, and notare, to mark. Notare from the supine notum. Nam eo rem notamus, ut e nota sua cognoscamus. Vossius.

To mark, signify or designate one thing in conjunction with another; to co-signify; and, (as is now more commonly used) to Denote, q. v.

Then saye I nowe that in Englād this woorde congregacyon didde neuer signifie the noumber of Christen people, as Christen people with a connotacyon or consyderacyon of theyr fayth or Chrystendome. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 417.

The very metaphor used by the apostle, and chose out here as ex proposito to express himself by, viz. Not to be found naked, doth secretly, and yet most elegantly connotate (together with, and over and above all that else hath been spoken of the import of it) the very separate state of an ungodly soul, now come out of the body, to be the very subject he is a speaking of.

Goodwin. Works, vol. v. part iii. fol. 43.

It is inferred that therefore his repentance was withall significantly connotated thereby.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. part i. book ii. ch. iii.

[This faith] doth also connote, and imply (indeed comprehend according to the meaning of those who use the word) such acts of will, as, supposing those persuasions to be real and complete, are naturally consequent upon them, and are in a manner necessarily coherent with them. Barrow. Sermon 4. vol. ii.

CONNUBIAL, Lat. connubialis; con, and nubere, id est, operire, to cover. Nubis instar velare ac tegere. Vossius. A married woman is in English law books, called A feme-covert.

Pertaining to the state of matrimony, marriage or wedlock; matrimonial, conjugal.

——————Into thir inmost bowre
Handed they went: and eas'd the putting off
These troublesom disguises which we wear,
Strait side beside, were laid, nor turnd I weene
Adam from his fair spouse, nor Eve the rites
Mysterious of connubial love refus'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 743.

——————————Long connubial joys
He promis'd to himself, allow'd by fair
Elfrida's beauty; but deluded, dy'd
In height of hopes. Philips. Cider, book i.

There is at least this reason, why we should be less deceived in our connubial hopes than many, who enter into the same state, that we have allowed our minds to form no unreasonable expectations, nor viciated our fancies, in the soft hours of courtship, with visions of felicity, which human power cannot bestow.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 167.

CONNUMERATION, Lat. con, and numerare, atum, to count: from the Gr. νέμ-ειν, distribuere, to distribute. Cæsar Scaliger, and Vossius

A counting together.

How could he otherwise have missed the opportunity of insisting upon the connumeration of the three persons, the assertion of their joint testimony and of their unity.

Porson. To Travis, p. 225.

CONOBEA, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia, natural order Lysimachiæ. Generic character: calyx five-cleft; corolla two-lipped; capsule one-celled, four-valved, many-seeded.

One species, C. aquatica, native of Africa. Willd.

CONOCARPUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Combretaceæ. Generic character: corolla, petals five, or none; seeds naked, solitary, inferior; flowers in bunches.

Three species, trees, natives of the West Indies.

CONOHORIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Berberides. Generic character: calyx of one leaf, deeply five-cleft, segments lanceolate, acute; petals five, ovate-oblong, reflexed at the apex; nectaries five, shaped like the petals; stamens short, attached to the base of the nectaries, anthers erect; germen superior.

One species, C. flavescens, a shrub, native of the woods of Guiana. Aublet. Guian.

CONOPS. CONOPS, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Diptera, family Conopsariæ. Generic character: trunk simply bent at the base, the remainder directed straight forwards; antennæ much longer than the head, terminating in a fusiform club.

Type, C. aculeata, Fab.

CONOPSARIÆ, in Zoology, a family of insects of the order Diptera, including the genera Conops, Zodion, Myopa, Bucentes, Stomoxys.

The insects composing these different genera, are readily distinguishable from each other. The abdomen in Conops is elongate, slender at the base, curved and enlarged towards the extremity, the head considerably larger than the thorax. They are extremely quick and lively in their motions, and are found in meadows. In Myopa and Zodion the abdomen is sessile, nearly cylindrical, slightly enlarged at the extremity, and arched. They are found on flowers. The larva is unknown. In Stomoxys, the abdomen is short, furnished with long stiff hair. These insects resemble very much the common window Fly, but are distinguished from it by the trunk, which in Stomoxys is always exserted. They are very troublesome insects, pricking acutely the skin of man and of animals, especially in autumn.

CONOSPERMUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx none; corolla of one petal, gaping, bearing the stamens, superior lip arched, inferior lip three-cleft; stigma obtuse; one naked seed, crowned with down.

One species, C. Smithii, native of New South Wales. Persoon.

CONOSTYLIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: corolla semisuperior, six-cleft, persisting, pubescent, the hairs branched; anthers erect; style conical, three-parted; stigma simple; capsule bursting at the apex, three-celled, many-seeded.

Four species, natives of Australia, and C. Americana, figured in Purth's Flora of North America.

CO'NQUER, v. Co'NQUEROR, Co'NQUERESS, Co'NQUERABLE, Co'NQUERAMENT, Co'NQUEST, Co'NQUESTOR. Formerly written conquire. (See ACQUIRE.) Conquir-ere; con, and quær-ere; ipsum quærere, ab eo quod quæ res ut recuperaretur (reciperetur, Vossius,) datur opera. As now generally applied, to conquire, is

To acquire or gain by force; to take by force, to vanquish, to subvert, to overcome. See the Example from Blackstone.

Now is Roberd Christen, he dightes his nauie,
And ferde ouer þe see, and conquered Normandie.
Duke þan was he cald, þorgh conquest of hond,
Alfrid he left still here in Inglond. R. Brunne, p. 25.

All Cristen folk ben fled fro that contree
Thurgh payenes, that conquereden all aboute,
The pleges of the north by lond and see.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4962.

And that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edwarde the Thirde for all his great prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere.
Id. The Testament of Love, book i.

And all aboue depeinted in a tour
Saw I Conquest, sitting in gret honour,
With thilke sharpe swerd over his head
Yhanging by a subtil twined thred.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2030.

Loue asketh pees, and euer shall:
And who that fighteth most withall,
Shall lest conquere of his emprise.
Gower. Conf. Am., book iii. fol. 60.

In Indee the superiour
Whan that he was full conquerour,
And had his wilfull purpose wonne,
Of all this earth vnder the sonne.
Id. Ib. book iii. fol. 61.

Thē cōquired Greate Alexander the Medis & begane ye third monarchie, called the empire of the Grekis, which stod 260 yeris.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel. The Argument.

This vision was shewed him, to thentent he shuld teche his chirche how that both vnder the Medis and Perses the conquirers of Babylon, and also vnder Alexander the conquirer of the Persies, and at last vnder Antiochus, that Anticryst and skourge of the Jewes, shoulde be persecuted and plaged.
Id. Ib. ch. viii.

What way she conqueresse doth returne, and foote from foes doth bend:
That way the youth by stealth his nimble reignes about doth wend.
Phaer. Æneidos, book ii. p. 271

He sette his sonnes to scole, and his doughters he sette to woll werk, takyng example of Charlys the conquestour.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 179.

As the torture doth not make a martyr, so doth not the conquest, but the justnesse of the cause, make a valiant man; if the Romanes then cannot shew us by what right they conquered the world, we will never call their strength in conquering it, fortitude, or crown it with the name of vertue.
Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 451.

But the English-Saxon conquerours, altred the tongue, which they found here, wholly; so that no British words; or prouinciall Latine appeared therein at the first.
Camden Remains. Languages, p. 21.

Shall women be condemn'd for excellency? Let sore eyes sooner brand the sun for brightness. Is it not proof enough of man's weakness to be overcome, but when he is captiv'd he must revile his conqueress? Feltham. On St. Luke, ch. xiv. v. 20.

And now by this the noble conqueresse
Her selfe came in her glory to partake.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 7.

Yet for all that, how stifly struts he by,
All trap in the new-found braverie.
The nuns of new-won Cales his bonnet lent
In lieu of their so kind a conquerment.
Hall. Satire 7. book iii.

It has been observed of Greece, that when it was subdued by the Romans, itself subdued its conquerors, softened their savage temper and refined their manners; and afterwards of the Romans themselves, that wherever they conquered, they in some degree civilized the world. Law. Theory of Religion, p. 95.

O Queen, have mercy! freely we acknowledge
That, nor our ointment, nor ought else on earth,
Thy unresisted fury can restrain,
O mighty conqueress of human kind!
West. Triumphs of the Gout.

Let a man apply to this work, by frequent returns, and short intervals, while the heap is small, and the particulars few, and he will find it easy and conquerable. South. Sermon 11. vol. ii.

Revenge is one of the most importunate and violent [passions] that are incident to human nature; which yet we are sure is conquerable under all the strongest temptations to it, that can well be conceived, from the account of good David.
Atterbury. Sermon 4. vol. iii.

One thing however is clear. There were conquerors, and conquests in those days; and consequently, all that devastation, by which they are formed, and all that oppression, by which they are maintained. Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

What we call purchase, perquisitio, the feudists called conquest, conquaestus, or conquisitio: both denoting any means of acquiring an estate out of the common course of inheritance. And this is still the proper phrase in the law of Scotland: as it was among the Norman jurists, who styled the first purchaser (that is he who brought the estate into the family who at present owns it) the conqueror or conquereur. Which seems to be all that was meant by the appellation which was given to William the Norman.

CONQUER. — CONSANGUINITY.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book ii. ch. xv.

CONSANGUI'NEOUS, } Lat. consanguineous; con, CONSANGUI'NITY. } and sanguis, blood, of uncertain Origin. Of the same blood.

They shall seke confederacions and affinities by bloud, consanguinitie in maryages, and all in vayne.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. ii.

They keepe the first and second degrees of consanguinitie inuiolable as we do: but they haue no regard to the degrees of affinity: for they will marrie together or by succession, two sisters. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i. fol. 99.

Am not I consanguinious? Am not I of her blood?

Shakspeare. Twelfth Night, fol. 261.

They [the Jewish Church] accounted a proselyte to be, to all intents and purposes, so new-born, that they judged him, from henceforward a perfect stranger to all his natural relations, even to that degree, that he might lawfully marry with such persons as, before his being a proselyte, he could not, by reason of consanguinity or affinity, contract matrimony with.

Sharp. Sermon 13. vol. iii.

Her have I known indulging grief,
And shunning company's relief,
Unveil her face, and looking round,
Own, by neglecting sorrow's wound,
The consanguinity of sound. Green. The Spleen.

The Civilians distinguish CONSANGUINITY into lineal, descent in the same line, and collateral, descent from the same stock; and both are included under the definition, Vinculum personarum ab eddem stipite descendentium. The degrees are computed by the Canon Law (and the same computation has been adopted in Common Law also,) in the following manner: The common ancestor being assumed as a fixed point we reckon downwards, and in whatsoever degree the most remote of two parties is distant from the common ancestor, in that degree are the parties related to each other. Thus A is related to his brother in the first degree, as they are both removed but one degree from their father. A is related to his nephew in the second degree, for the nephew is two degrees removed from the common ancestor, A's father and his own grandfather. Marriage is prohibited by the Church to the fourth degree of Consanguinity, inclusive. Consanguinity terminates in the seventh degree, except in succession to the Crown, in which it has no bounds. The Civilians term brothers born of the same father Frates Consanguinei, in opposition to those born of the same mother, Fratres Uterini.

According to the common rule of arithmetical progression, it is evident that at the distance of 20 generations, each individual has 1,048,576 lineal ancestors. To find the number of lineal ancestors at any given degree, 2 must be raised to that power, the index of which = the number of degrees. Thus $\overline{2}^2 = 4$ the number in the second degree; $\overline{2}^5 = 32$ the number in the fifth degree. If we suppose that each couple of ancestors leave on an average only two children behind them, the number of collateral kindred to each individual in 20 generations = 274,877,906,944. The number in any given degree may readily be found by squaring half the number of lineal ancestors at that degree; thus the number of lineal ancestors in the sixth degree = 64, the half of them = $32 \cdot \overline{32}^2 = 1024$ the number of collateral kindred in the sixth degree. See Blackstone, Treatise on the Law of Descents in Fee Simple; Essay on Collateral Consanguinity, &c., more particularly as it is regarded by the Statute of All Souls College in the University of Oxford; Watkins, Law of Descents; Barton's Elements of Conveyancing, vol. v.

CONS/ GUINI — CON SCIEN

CO'NSCIENCE, n. } Fr. conscience; It. conscienza; Sp. consciencia, Lat. conscientia; vel scientia communis cum alio, vel certa apud animum nostrum, nostrorum factorum scientia. Gesner. Con, and sci-re, which Vossius thinks is by metathesis from ἴσκ-ειν, and ἴσκ-ειν from εἰδ-ειν, (Lat. vid-ere,) thus—εἰδ-ειν, εἰσ-ειν, and thence ἴσκ-ειν or ἴσκ-ειν, videre.

Co'NSCIENCED, adj.
Co'NSCIENCELESS,
CONSCIE'NTIOUS,
CONSCIE'NTIOUSLY,
CONSCIE'NTIOUSNESS,
Co'NSCIONABLE,
Co'NSCIONABLENESS,
Co'NSCIONABLY,
Co'NSCIONARY,
Co'NSCIOUS,
Co'NSCIOUSLY,
Co'NSCIOUSNESS,
Co'NSCIENCE-SAKE,
Co'NSCIENCE-STRETCHERS.

Conscience is the name given to that, (sc. faculty or power, feeling or sentiment,) by which we see, look, within ourselves; by which we see, look, or examine into our thoughts; by which we distinguish, discern, ascertain, assure ourselves of, know, right from wrong. A conscientious man is one who is guided and directed by a well-meaning, a good conscience. See particularly the Examples from Taylor, South, and Sharp.

But sore wept she if on of hem [his small houndes] were dede,
Or if men smote it with a yerde smert:
And all was conscience and tendre herte.

Chaucer. The Prologue.

For oure glorie is this, the witnessyng of oure conscience, that in symplenesse and clennesse of God and not in fleischli wisdom but in the grace of God we lyuyden in this world, but more plenteousli to ghou. Wiclif. 2 Corynthians, ch. i.

[Cordeilla] sayd, most reuerent Fader where my ii. susters haue dissymulyd with the, with theyr plesaunt wordes fruteles, I knowynge y^e^ great loue and faderly zele that towarde me euer before this tyme thou hast borne, (for which I may not speke to y^e^ otherwyse than my cõscyence ledyth me.) Therefore I say to the, fader, I haue loued the euer as my fader, and shall cõtinually, whyle I lyue, loue y^e^ as my naturall fader.

Fabyan, vol. i. ch. xiv.

Wherefore they were afrayd lest his innocẽt blode wolde be auenged and required at their handis, & therefore to be defended, they (as now do all siche) lyke combrouse conscienced clerkis and bishopes, be settinge vp of these their baners and images of the empreours and kinges contend and siewe to gette their fauour, but all was in vayne. Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. ix.

He [God] hath given us conscience to be in God's stead to us, to give us laws, and to exact obedience of those laws, to punish them, that prevaricate, and to reward the obedient. And therefore conscience is called the Household Guardian, the Domestick God, the Spirit or Angel of the place: and when we call God to witness, we only mean, that our conscience is right, and that God and God's vicar, our conscience, knows it.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. i.

Else, what could a handful of gummers have done in the sight of a hecatombe? or, how might I appeare at this altar, except with those affections, that no lesse love the light and witnesse, than they have the conscience of your vertue?

Ben Jonson. The Alchemist. To the Lady Wroth.

Yet with his forraign hearte she does begin
To treat of love her most unstudy'd theame,
And like young conscienc'd casuists, thinks that sin,
Which will by talk and practice lawfull seeme.

Davenant. Gondibert, book ii. ch. vii.

So they play the dissemblers with the church of God by their facte, offending the godly, whome eyther they provoke to fall with them, or make more carelesse and conscience-lesse if they be fallen. Fox. Martyrs. John Bradford's Letter to Dr. Hill.

CE.

One thousand pounds well nigh were due to him [Dr. Hammond] at his death; yet there appeared neither specially nor any man's hand amongst his writings; so confident he was that his conscientious debtors would faithfully pay what was freely lent them.
Fuller. Worthies. Surrey.

He considered that vengeance belonged to God, which concluded him conscientiously obliged not to take it into his own hands.
Hammond. Works. Of Contumelies, ch. i. sec. 3.

Indeed if the minister's part be rightly discharg'd, it renders the people more conscionable, quiet and easy to be govern'd; if otherwise, his life and doctrine will declare him.
Milton. Reformation in England, book ii.

See, sir, your mortgage which I only took,
In case you and your son had in the wars
Miscarried: I yield it up again: 'tis yours.
CAS. Are you so conscionable?
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Lawes of Candy, act i. sc. 1.

So that let him beare himselfe in his chronicle as vprightlie and as conscionablie as he may possible, yet he shall be sure to find them that will be more prest to blab foorth his pelfish faults, than they will be readie to blaze out his good deserts.
Holinshed. Ireland. Stanihurst to Sir Henry Sidneie.

6. There be four things a minister should be at; the conscionary part, Ecclesiastical story, school divinity, and the casuists.
1st, In the conscionary part, he must read all the chief fathers, both Latin and Greek wholly. Selden. Table Talk, p. 71.

We see in Augustus Cæsar, who was rather diverse from his uncle, than inferior in virtue, how when he died, he desired his friends about him to give him a plaudite, as if he were conscious to himself that he had played his part well upon the stage.
Bacon. Advancement of Learning, book ii.

Whereas suspition is as oft begot out of consciousnesse in ourselves either of what we have done or would practise, as it was from the sense of other men's failings. Feltham. Resolve 42.

Which extremities, as I cannot consent, neither for myne own conscyence-sake, before Almighti God, nor yet with the reasonable oredyte of that place I do possesse; so my humble suite is, that your majestie will never require it of me.
Strype. Life of Parker. Letter to the Queen in behalf of Dr. Clerk.

Conscience is a Latin word, (though with an English termination) and, according to the very notation of it, imports a donble or joint knowledge; to wit, one of a Divine law or rule, and the other of a man's own action: and so is properly the application of a general law, to a particular instance of practice.
South. Sermons, vol. ii. p. 446.

Conscience, taken in general, is nothing else but a man's judgment or persuasion concerning moral good or evil, or concerning what he ought to do, and what he ought not to do, and what he lawfully may do. Sharp. Works. Sermon 16. vol. iii.

But besides the future reward of a holy and conscientious course, which is unspeakable and full of glory; it hath also this present fruit, this earnest, as I may say, and ready money in hand, the peace and satisfaction of our own minds, which is more valuable than thousands of gold and silver. Tillotson. Sermon 38.

Nor can force be lawfully used, upon your principles, to bring any man to either of them, because such things are required to their communion, which not being requisite to salvation, men may seriously and conscientiously differ, and be in doubt about, without endangering their souls.
Locke. Works. A third Letter of Toleration.

'Twill be a wonderful conscientiousness in them, no where, that I know to be parallel'd, if they will content themselves with less profit than they can make.
Id. Further Considerations concerning raising the value of Money.

Who pick'd a fob at holding forth,
And where a watch for half the worth,
May be redeem'd; or stolen plate
Restor'd at conscionable rate.
Butler Hudibras, part ii. can. 3.

So there be a devout, industrious, and modest search after the truths of Scripture proportionably to the abilities and opportunities that God vouchsafes, and a conscionable conforming of our lives to our discoveries, it is much to be hoped, that we may miss a great many theological truths without missing salvation.
Boyle. Life, p. 48.

The experience of the primitive and heroical ages of the church does gloriously manifest, that the inducements and dissuasives held forth in the Bible, though destitute of those embellishments and advantages, where they are conscionably entertained, and seriously pondered, are sufficient to raise virtue to a pitch philosophy durst scarcely aim at. Boyle. The Style of the Holy Scriptures.

CON-SCIENCE. — CON-SCRIBE.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemn'd by fate
To daily death; and every several place,
Conscious of her disdain and my disgrace,
Must witness her just punishment; and be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me.
Dryden. Theodore and Honoria.

But it is farther enquir'd, whether it be the same identical substance? This few would think they had reason to doubt of, if these perceptions, with their consciousness, always remain'd present in the mind, whereby the same thinking thing would be always consciously present, and, as would be thought, evidently the same to itself.
Locke. Of Human Understanding, book ii. ch. xxvii.

Consciousness is the perception of what passes in a man's own mind. Id. Ib. book ii. ch. i.

"For that," quoth he, "let me alone;
We've store of such and all our own,
Bred up and tutor'd by our teachers,
The ablest of conscience-stretchers."
Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 3.

Let us consider the world therefore as God's great family; and ourselves as servants in that family as acting immediately, whatever our situations are, under our great master; and of discharging the several offices, which he hath assigned, with a conscientious regard to our duty. Gilpin. Sermon 5. vol. i

But still many may be of a different opinion, who may conscientiously believe the doctrines, and practise the duties of the gospel, whether they see them shadowed out in the Psalms or not. Bishop Horne. Preface, vol. ii. p. lxvi.

The consciousness of your merit must always incline you to believe, it is envy alone can be silent in your praise; as on the other side, you cannot imagine me so weak, as to desire to be transmitted to posterity by any hand, which could not secure to himself the same glory it bestowed.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Lucius Lucceius.

In the 9th Henry VIII. The Court of Conscience, or Court of Requests, Curia Conscientiæ, was erected in London, and an Act of Common Council then appointed Commissioners to sit in the Court twice a week, to determine all matters between Citizens and Freemen of London, in which the debt or damage was under 40*s*. This Act of Common Council was confirmed 1 stat. James I. By this the Court issues its summons, the Commissioners examine on oath, and decide by summary process, making such orders touching debts "as they should find to stand to equity and good Conscience." The Commissioners may commit to prison for disobedience of their summons. Various subsequent Acts have regulated and extended these powers. Courts of Conscience have been established in various parts of the Kingdom, and the debts brought before them have usually of late been enlarged to £5.

CO'NSCRIBE, Co'nscript, n. Co'nscript, adj. Conscri'ption. Lat. conscribere, conscriptum; con, and scribere, to write. Verbum militare cum novi milites scribuntur; et in decurias describuntur. Ernest.

To write; sc. upon tables the name of those, who were chosen to serve as soldiers; and thus, to enroll, to enlist; and, in old English, to Bill, q. v.

This armie (whiche was not smalle) was conscribed and come together to Harflete, at the mouth of the riuer of Seyne, expecting wind and weather.
Hall. Edward IV. The ninth Yere.

CON-SCRIBE. — CON-SECRATE.

He conscribed and prepared a new host, and with all the studye and industrye, that he could practise, or vse, he imagened how to compasse Thomas Lord Stanley, which had maryed his syster, that he might be one of the confederacy and coniuracion.
Hall. Edward IV. The ninth Yere.

And so in doyng his errand in the name of all that prouince, he sayed these wordes, O fathers conscripte, O happie people.
Golden Boke, H h. 3.

Not having any gallies there but three, which lay on dry land unrigged, as they have done a long time past, none assembly of the states of that land, none order, provision of victual, towardness in conscription of men of war, or appearance of such thing.
Burnett. Records. Another despatch of the Cardinals concerning Divorce.

Such as were chosen into the senate by Brutus, after the expulsion of Tarquin the Proud, to supply the place of those whom that king had slain were called Conscripti, i. e. persons written or enrolled together with the old senators, who alone were properly styled patres. Adam. Roman Antiquities, p. 3.

Although the title Conscript Fathers, Patres Conscripti, appears latterly to have belonged to all the Senators of Rome without distinction, Livy has shown that it originally marked a certain portion only. The first care of Brutus after the expulsion of Tarquin was to complete the Senate, which had been diminished by the murders of the Tyrant, to its integral number 300. The vacancies were supplied from the Equestrian Order, traditumque inde fertur ut in Senatum vocarentur, qui Patres quique Conscripti essent; Conscriptos, videlicet in novum Senatum adpellabant lectos. (ii. 1.) See also Tacit. Ann. xi. 25, where the Historian distinguishes the families descended from the original Senate of Romulus as Majorum gentium, and those from the restored Senate of Brutus as Minorum gentium. This passage has been quoted by Hoffmann, (ad voc.) with the interpolation of Ludovicus Vives, (see the note of Gronovius on the passage of Tacitus,) paucis jam reliquis familiarum quas Romulus majorum gentium L. Tarquinius minorum, Brutus Conscriptorum appellaverant. See also Rosini Antiq. vii. 5.

CO'NSECRATE, v.
Co'NSECRATE, adj.
CONSECRA'TION,
Co'NSECRATOR,
Co'NSECRATORY.
} Fr. consacrer; It. consagrare; Sp. consagrar; Lat. consecrare; con, and sacrare, q. sacrum facere; to make or cause to be holy or sacred.

To hallow, dedicate, devote unto, set apart for the service or honour of. See the Example from Hobbs.

And therefore hee decreed, that the byshops should consecrate no sub deacon, except hee woulde first vow chastitie. This is openly in the Pope's lawe. Barnes. Workes, fol. 331.

Being a mā of the laitee he entred into the temple of God, nor was any thing afeard to eat the consecrate loues.
Udall. Luke, ch. vi.

Dyuerse of them asked hym in great anger, Whether it were meteriall breade after the consecracyon or not? Then loked the Lord Cobham earnestly vppon the archbishop, and sayde, "I beleve, surely that it is Chryste's bodye in fourme of breade; sir, beleue not you thus?" And the archbisshoppe sayd, "Yes mary do I." State Trials. Trial of Sir John Oldcastle.

Their diuine seruice is all done and said in their owne language, that every man may vnderstand it: they receiue the Lord's supper with leauened bread, and after the consecration, they carry it about the church in a saucer, and prohibite no man from receiving and taking of it, that is willing so to do.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Richard Chancelor, vol. i. fol. 253.

To consecrate, is in Scripture, to offer, give, or dedicate, in pious and decent language and gesture, a man, or any other thing, to God, by separating it from common use; that is to say, to sanctify and make it God's, and to be used only by those, whom God hath appointed to be his public ministers, and thereby to change, not the thing consecrated, but only the use of it, from being profane and common, to be holy, and peculiar to God's service. Hobbs. Leviathan, part iv. ch. xliv.

CON-SECRAT — CONSE-CRATIO

All things are God's already, we can give him no right by consecrating any, that he had not before, only we set it apart to his service. Selden. Table Talk.

Next morn the bishops twaine, the heremite,
And all the clarks and priests of lesse estate,
Did in the middest of the campe vnite
Within a place for prayer consecrate.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book xi. st. 4.

For at the consecration of a bishoppe, euery man perceiueth by paiment of his bulles, that he entendeth to bee one, yet when he is twise asked whether he will be a bishop, he must twise say naye, and at the third time take it vpon him, as compelled thereto by his awne will.
Grafton. Edward V. The first Yere.

And therefore Moses consecrated Aaron, agitatus à deo consecrationis principe, saith Dionysius, Moses performed the external rites of designation, but God was the consecrator.
Taylor. Sermons, part iv. sec. 6. fol. 29.

Think with yourselves, whether it is not really a great mercy and kindness to all of us, that one day in the week is, by a public law, consecrated to a holy rest.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 14. vol. iv.

But when the state should hap to reel,
'Twas to submit to fatal steel,
And fall, as it was consecrate,
A sacrifice to fall of state.
Butler. Hudibras, part i. can. 1.

But that no designs might be carried on, which they should not understand, never was there such an invention to that purpose, as auricular confession: and yet that the people may haue greater reverence to their priests, they are told, that they can make their God at any time by pronouncing the five words of consecration.
Stillingfleet. Sermon 2. vol. ii.

To this [the prayer for the state of Christ's church,] the consecratory prayer which we now use was joined as a part of it,—And it was ordered, that the whole office of the communion, except the consecratory prayer, should be used on all holy-days, when there was no communion, to put the people in mind of it, and of the sufferings of Christ.
Burnett. History of Reformation. Anno 1548.

That sense [continued sense of mankind] not only, like a wise architect, hath built up the august fabrick of states, but like a provident proprietor, to preserve the structure from prophanation and ruin, as a sacred temple, purged from all the impurities of fraud, and violence, and injustice, and tyranny, hath solemnly and for ever consecrated the commonwealth, and all that officiate in it. Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

This consecration is made, that all who administer in the government of men, in which they stand in the person of God himself, should have high and worthy notions of their function and destination. Id. Ib.

Consecration is the devoting or setting apart of any persons, things, or places, to the worship and service of God.

The Mosaic Law ordained that all the first-born, both of man and beast, should be sanctified, or Consecrated to God. The whole race of Abraham, especially the tribe of Levi, and more particularly the family of Aaron, were thus Consecrated. (Exodus, xiii. 2, 12, 15; Numbers, iii. 12, 45. viii. 16. xviii. 6.) But, besides these Consecrations which were of Divine appointment, there were others which depended on the will of men, and which were either permanent or temporary. Thus, Joshua devoted, or Consecrated the Gibeonites to the service of the tabernacle. (Joshua, ix. 27;) and David and Solomon, in like manner, devoted the Nethinims to the Temple-service for ever. (Ezra, ii. 43, 58. viii. 20.) Hannah Consecrated her son Samuel to Jehovah, to serve all his life in the Tabernacle. (1 Samuel, i. 11:) and the Angel who promised Zechariah a son, commanded him to Consecrate him to the Lord. (Luke, i. 15.) The Hebrews sometimes devoted their fields or cattle to the Lord; after which they were no longer in their power. (Leviticus, xxvii. 28, 29.) And David and his successors often vowed and Consecrated the spoils which they had taken in war. Instances of the Consecration of persons occur in the New Testament. Christians in general are Consecrated to the Lord, as a chosen generation, a holy nation, a peculiar people. (1 Peter, ii. 9.) Bishops and other Ministers of the Gospel are in a peculiar manner Consecrated or set apart to the service of God.

The Scriptures likewise contain examples of the Consecration of places to the service of God, and to the purposes of Religion. Moses Consecrated or dedicated the Tabernacle which he built in the Wilderness, (Exodus, xl. Numbers, vii.;) and Solomon, the magnificent Temple which he erected. (1 Kings, viii.) The Israelites, who returned from the Babylonish captivity, dedicated the new Temple which they had built, (Ezra, vi.) with great solemnity. The Maccabees, having cleansed this Temple after it had been polluted by Antiochus Epiphanes, again Consecrated the altar. (1 Maccabees, iv.) Selden says, that the practice of Consecrating things to sacred uses, was derived from the Jews to the Heathens, (De Synedriis, lib. iii. c. xiv. sec. 3;) but Spencer, on the contrary, ascribes them to a Pagan origin. (De Leg. Heb. lib. iv. c. xiv.) The former opinion is, perhaps, the best supported.

Churches, Church-yards, the sacred vessels, and other utensils belonging to the worship of God, are Consecrated things; but the Church of Rome Consecrates almost every thing, as bells, candles, water, oil, crosses, pictures, &c. &c., besides Churches, Chapels, Monasteries, and other Religious Houses.

Among the ancient Christians, the Consecration of Churches was performed with peculiar solemnity. In what manner it was done for the first three centuries, we have no certain evidence. Bingham thinks it highly probable that the Christians, during this period, used the same ceremonies as the Jews did; who dedicated both their private houses and the walls of their cities, (Nehemiah, xii. 27, 43. Psalm xxx. title,) as well as their Temple, with solemn thanksgivings and with prayer, for a sanctified use of them. In the IVth century of the Christian æra, however, under the reign of the Emperor Constantine, Churches were no sooner erected, but they were solemnly Consecrated; and the dedications of them were celebrated with great festivity and rejoicing. On such occasions, it was usual for a whole synod of the neighbouring or provincial Bishops to assemble. Thus, the Church at Jerusalem, which was erected by Constantine, over the supposed site of the Sepulchre of our Saviour, was Consecrated in the presence of a full synod of all the Bishops of the East. The solemnity ordinarily began with a panegyrical oration or sermon, in commemoration of the founder, which was followed by prayers, among which there seems to have been one in particular for the Church which was then to be dedicated. The act of Consecrating Churches was so peculiarly reserved to the office of Bishops, that Presbyters were not allowed to perform it. Anciently, Churches were always dedicated to God, and not to Saints, though they were sometimes distinguished by their names as a memorial of them. Consecration was performed, indifferently, on any day; but, whatever the day was, it was usually kept and observed among their annual festivals. To this, Pope Gregory, surnamed the Great, added a new custom here in England; which was, that on the anniversary of the dedication of Churches, and particularly of those which had been heathen Temples, the people might build themselves booths round the Church, and there feast themselves, in lieu of their ancient sacrifices while they were heathens. The wakes, which are still observed in some English Counties, are the remains of these feasts of dedication. (Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticæ, book viii. ch. ix.)

CONSECRATION.

The Consecration of a Church is performed with much ceremony in the Church of Rome, by whose members this rite is usually termed a Dedication. As a preliminary step, the relics, which are to be deposited in the Altar of the new Church, are put into a clean vessel, together with three grains of incense; to which a piece of parchment is added, containing the day of the month and year, and the name of the officiating Bishop. Three crosses are painted on each of the Church walls, and over each cross a candle is placed. On the morning appointed for the ceremony, the Bishop, arranged in his Pontifical vestments, and attended by the Clergy, goes to the door of the Church, where they recite the seven penitential Psalms; after which he makes a tour of the Church walls, sprinkling them in the name of the Holy Trinity. This rite being performed, he knocks at the Church-door with his pastoral staff, repeating, from the XXIIId Psalm, Attollite portas, et introibit Rex Gloriæ. A Deacon, shut up in the Church, demands Quis est iste Rex Gloriæ? To which the Bishop answers, Dominus fortis et potens: Dominus potens in prælio! At the same time, the Bishop crosses the door, repeating the following verse:

In the Romish Church.

Ecce Crucis signum, fugiant phantasmata cuncta!

On the admission of the Bishop and Clergy into the Church, the Veni Creator is sung. Then one of the Sub-deacons takes ashes, and sprinkles them on the pavement in the form of a cross; next follow the Litanies and other parts of Divine Service. After which, the Bishop with his pastoral staff describes, as with a pen, two alphabets in the ashes sprinkled by the Deacon; and proceeds to Consecrate the altar, by sprinkling it with a mixture of water, wine, salt, and ashes, in the name of Jesus Christ. The Consecration of the altar is followed by a solemn procession of the relics, which are deposited under it with great ceremony. During the whole of this imposing solemnity the Church is finely adorned, and tapers are lighted upon the altar. Mass is afterwards performed by the Bishop or by some other person. (Broughton, Hist. Dict. vol. i. p. 311.)

The Law of England takes no notice of Churches or Chapels, until they are Consecrated by the Bishop; although the Canon Law supposes that, with the Bishop's consent, Divine Service may be performed, and the Sacraments may be administered in Churches and Chapels not Consecrated; but no new Churches can be Consecrated without a competent endowment. The Consecration may, however, be performed, indifferently, on any day, provided it be in the time of

In the Church of England.

CONSECRATION. CONSECUTE.

Divine Service; and every Bishop is left to his own discretion, as to the form he may adopt for this purpose. Only, by the statute 21 Henry VIII. ch. xiii. (which limits the number of Chaplains,) it is assigned as one reason, why a Bishop may retain six Chaplains, because that number is necessarily occupied in the Consecration of Churches. After the Restoration, a form of Consecration was drawn up by the Convocation in 1661, but this was neither authorized nor published; though it is said to have been occasioned by the offence taken at the introduction of many Popish ceremonies by Bishop (afterwards Archbishop) Laud, at the Consecration of Saint Catherine Cree Church, A. D. 1630. Another formulary was drawn up in the year 1712, for the Consecration of Churches and Chapels, and Church-yards, or burial-places, by the Bishops, and sent down to the lower House of Convocation on the second of April: it was altered by a Committee of the whole House; and, on being reported to the House on the ninth day of the same month, it was agreed to, with some alteration. This form, however, not having received the Royal assent, was not enjoined to be observed, though it is now generally used. It is given at length in Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, title Churches, sec. 2; and in 1799 it was established (with the omission of two or three unimportant passages) by the Bishops, Clergy, and Laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the United States of America, in General Convention assembled.

A Church once Consecrated may not be Consecrated again; and where a Church-yard has been enlarged, there has been a new Consecration of the additional part. (Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, vol. ii. p. 336.)

The term CONSECRATION is also particularly used for the benediction of the elements in the Eucharist. The Romanists define it to be the conversion of the bread and wine into the real body and blood of Christ: and that this is the sentiment of that Church, is evident from the Priest's elevating the Host immediately after Consecration, for the people to adore it.

CO'NSECTARY, adj. } Lat. consequi; con, and Co'NSECTARY, n. } sequi, to follow. See CONSECUTE.

Following, consequent.

Of which the natural consectary is, that to resolve a phænomenon into sympathy, is not alwaies to take sanctuary in the Asylum of Fools.

Henry More. The Preface general, fol. 14.

No argument but causes enter the definition; a consectary is but the effect of those causes.

Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

Thus he endeavours to entangle truths: and when he cannot possibly destroy its substance, he cunningly confounds its apprehensions; that from the inconsistent and contrary determinations thereof, consectary impieties, and hopeful conclusions may arise, there's no such thing at all.

Sir Thomas Brown, book i. ch. x.

CONSE'CUTE, } Lat. consequi, consecutus; (con, CONSECU'TION, } and sequi, to follow.) Cominus
CONSE'CUTIVE, } sequi dum attingas; to follow so
CONSE'CUTIVELY. } as to overtake; and is so used (met.) in the Example from Burnett. See another in v. COLLOCATE.

To follow close after, to pursue, to overtake, to come up with, to reach, to attain, to gain.

Fr. consecution; a consequence or consequent; an order, succession, following, a necessary issue or ensuing. Cotgrave.

Which his grace accepteth, as touching your merits and acquittal in no less good and thankful part, than if y^e^ finding the disposision of things in more direct state, had consecuted all your pursuits and desires.

Burnett. Records. Another Dispatch of the Cardinals concerning Divorce.

But on the tother side likewise as this argumēt or consecusion is trew, God saith y^t^ who so believe not hys church, is to be taken as a painim, ergo that thing is trew; so is this consecusiō trew, Chryste's church sayth y^t^ who so breake hys vow of chastyte sinneth deadly, and whoso holdeth it for lefull holdeth an hercsie, ergo these twoo thinges be trewe.

Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 454.

For the force of consecutions is many times very deceitfull, and such as may easily betray our discourse.

Hall. Christian Moderation, vol. iii. book ii. sec. 11.

I shall only advertise the reader of two things; the one, that the Dutch did, indeed, make three consecutive voyages to Nova Zembla.

Boyle. Preface to New Thermometrical Experiments.

But, having for this purpose exposed some serum of human blood to cold air, consecutively, the serum was not found to congeal, though some grumous parts of the same blood did, as has formerly been noted.

Id. Appendix to the Memoirs for the History of Human blood.

In the structure and order of the poem, not only the greater parts are properly consecutive, but the didactic and illustrative paragraphs are so happily mingled, that labour is relieved by pleasure, and the attention is led on through a long succession of varied excellence to the original position, the fundamental principle of wisdom and virtue. Johnson. Life of Blackmore.

CONSE'NSE, } Lat. consentire, consensum; con,
CONSE'NSION. } and sentire, to think or feel. See CONSENT.

A sense or feeling in union, combination or association with some other sense or feeling.

There may be a simple internal energy or vitual autokinesie, which is without that duplication, that is included in the nature of συναισθησις, con-sense and consciousness, which makes a being to be present with itself, attentive to its own actions, or animadversive of them, to perceive itself to do or suffer, and to have a fruition or enjoyment of it self.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 159.

A great number of such living and thinking particles could not possibly by their mutual contact and pressing and striking compose one greater individual animal, with one mind and understanding, and a vital consension of the whole body: any more than a swarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women can be conceived to make up one particular living creature compounded and constituted of the aggregate of them all.

Bentley. Sermon 2.

CONSE'NT, v. } Lat. consentire, consensum;
CONSE'NT, n. } con, and sentire, to think or CONSE'NTER, } feel; (perhaps by metathesis
CONSE'NTING, } from αισθάν-ομαι.)
CONSE'NTIENT, } To think and feel as others
CONSE'NTINGLY, } think and feel; to be of the CONSENTA'NEOUS, } same mind, opinion, thoughts
CONSENTA'NEOUSLY. } or sentiments; to accord, to agree; and thus—to accede, to concur, to allow, to admit, to grant, to concede, to yield.

The next yere folowand of Edward coronment,
Leulyn of Walsland into France he sent,
Þe Mountfort douhter to wedde, hir frendes alle consent.

R. Brunne, p. 236.

Here now ye sen, that dedly sinne hath first suggestion of the fende, as sheweth here by the adder; and afterward the delit of the flesh, as sheweth here by Eve; and after that the consenting of reson, as sheweth by Adam.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 153.

SENT

There is an olde sayed saw, that a man entēding to auoyde the smoke, falleth into the fyre: So here, the queene myndyng to preserue her husband in honour, & herselfe in authoritie procured & consented to the death of this nobleman, [the D. of Glocester] whose onely deathe brought to passe that thynge, which she wolde most fayne haue eschewed, and toke from her that iewell, whiche she moste desired. Hall. Henry VI. The twenty-fifth Yere.

And what consent to the temple of God with mawmetis.
Wiclif. 2 Corynthians, ch. vi.

A swete consent, of musick's sacred sound,
Doth rayse our mindes (as rapt) al vp on high,
But sweeter sounded, of concord, peace, and loue
Are out of tune, and iarre in euery stoppe.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glass.

Thē techeth he on the tother side y^t whosoeuer after his baptisme had, & the story fayth, that is (sayth he) the fayth with which we belieue the articles of the fayth as men belieue a story or a cronicle, doe any deadly sin of purpose, that it is to wit as he sayth, not of weakenesse or frailty, but of malice or wyllingly with a consenting to y^t sinne: that a man shall neuer after be forgiuen in this worlde nor in none other.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 542.

For he sayde that nouther he nor all the lordes that were there of Englande coulde not conclude fermely on no peace, without the generall consentment of the people of England.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 213.

And as reason is essential unto law; so likewise unto human lawes, common consent.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iii. ch. vi.

When the wills of many concur to one and the same action and effect; this concourse of their wills is called consent, by which we must not understand one will of many men (for every man hath his several will) but many wills to the producing of one effect. Hobbs. Human Nature, ch. xii.

But whosoeuer was the manqueller of this holy man, it shall appere, that both the murtherer, and the consenter, had condigne and not vndeserved punishment, for their bloudye stroke, and butcherly act. Hall. Edward IV. The tenth Yere.

I say again, that he who denies there are such spirits, shews that he himselfe hath a spirit of contradiction in him, opposing the current and consentient opinion of all antiquity.
Howell. Letter 23. book iii.

But if by concupiscence, we mean the second acts of it, that is, avoidable consentings, and deliberate elections, then let it be as much condemned as the apostle and all the church after him hath sentenced it; but then it is not Adam's sin, but our own by which we are condemned; for it is not his fault that we chuse.
Taylor. An Answer to a Letter concerning Original Sin.

They doing it [making a contract] without witnesses, may recede from it, either consentingly, or against the will of one of them. Id. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. i.

Moreover, in coupling women by way of matrimony, it would be a good law, and consentaneous to reason, if out of all dowrests exceeding £100. there should be two out of every cent. deducted and put into a common treasury for the putting off hard favour'd and poor maids. Howell. Letter 7. book iv.

Whereof Thales being the head, he is consentaneously thereunto by Aristotle, made to be ἀρχηγὸς τῆς τοιαύτης φιλοσοφίας, the prince and leader of this kind of atheistical philosophy, he deriving all things whatsoever, as Homer had done before him, from water, and acknowledging no other principle but the fluid matter.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 123.

He was asked, why he did contrary to the king's authority within his kingdom, dissuade many, that they should not consent to the opinion of the king and parliament.
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Anno 1535.

Now I do affirm the consentient and constant doctrine of the primitive church to be this? that the souls of all the faithful, immediately after death, enter into a place and state of bliss, far exceeding all the felicities of this world, though short of that most consummate perfect beatitude of the kingdom of heaven, with which they are to be crowned and rewarded in the resurrection: and so on the contrary, that the souls of all the wicked are presently after death in a state of very great misery, and yet dreading a far greater misery at the day of judgment.
Bishop Bull. Works, vol. i. p. 64.

It is by means of this communication of the nerves, that whatever affects the soul, is demonstrated (whether we will or no) by a consentaneous disposition of the præcordia within, and a suitable configuration of the muscles and parts of the face without.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book v. ch. viii.

CONSENT — CONSEQUENCE.

But if Paracelsus did always write so consentaneously to himself, that his opinion were confidently to be collected from every place of his writings, where he seems to express it, I might, &c.
Boyle. The Sceptical Chymist.

To reconcile this, the ancient Christian writers generally agree, that their consent ought not to be slighted.
Jortin. Discourses on the Christian Religion, vol. i. p. 13.

It follows from what has been said, that such as cannot honestly assent to this formulary, must (if they aspire to be public teachers of religion) unite themselves with some other consentient church.
Hurd. Works. Charge to the Clergy of Lichfield and Coventry.

CONSENTES, quasi consentientes, Marcianus Capella, 1; or quasi consulentes, a conso, the same as consulo, Arnobius, iii.; Junius. Six male and six female Deities worshipped at Rome, whose gilded images stood in the Forum. Varro, De Re Rustica, i. The following distich, quoted by Apuleius (De Deo Socratis) from Ennius, has been said by numerous writers to contain the names of the Consentes:

Juno, Vesta, Minerva, Ceres, Diana, Venus, Mars,
Mercurius, Jovis, Neptunus, Vulcanus, Apollo.

Apuleius, however, says not a word respecting the Consentes, and only gives these two lines as a list of such Gods, to the contemplation of whom, although they are invisible, the human intellect may raise itself.

The history of these Deities is most obscure and contradictory. Marcianus in his third Book states, that their names were unknown. Varro (loc. cit.) distinguishes two kinds of Consentes; those whose images were in the Forum, and those who influenced Agriculture; and he proceeds to give their names, which differ from the catalogue of Ennius. Manilius (Astr. ii.) assigns to each of the Consentes the protection of one month in the year, and one sign of the zodiac, and in this he is supported by a marble Calendar, preserved in the Farnese Palace.

CO'NSEQUENCE, Co'NSEQUENCY, Co'NSEQUENT, adj. Co'NSEQUENT, n. Co'NSEQUENTLY, CONSEQUE'NTIAL, CONSEQUE'NTIALLY, CONSEQUE'NTNESS. Lat. consequi, present participle consequens, following with. See CONSECUTE. Fr. consequence; It. consequenza; Sp. consequencia.

That which follows, comes next in order, in succession, in connection; met. the event, the effect, the result; the inference, the deduction.

It is also applied emphatically; as a matter of consequence; i. e. of great, serious, important consequence. And thus—consequential, (in Fr. consequentieux,) as applied to persons; thinking, conceiting himself to be of great, serious, important consequence.

Men shall thinke it a good consequent.
Frith. Workes, fol. 68.

These were the allyes and consequentes, and also the preparations of the one partye, and of the other.
Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 49.

The head of the church must of consequence and duty preach in the church; and must offer "Sacrificia pro peccatis mortuorum."
Strype. Memorials. A Sermon at the Funeral of Queen Mary.

Whether it suffer not detriment, by attributing lesse then of right belongeth; the iudgement be theirs, that vprightly and indifferently shall weigh the consequences of their euil purpose, who in seeking to detract from the author of these discoueries, doe so much as in thē lieth, wound, deface, and tread vnder foot the thing itselfe.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Lawrence Keymis, vol. iii. fol. 666.

CONSEQUENCE.

And consequently, to say that the Pope cā deliuer any soule out of purgatory, (if there were but one) is but a vaine lie, except he can proue that he goeth down vnto them, and preacheth vnto them the woorde of God, (which is the salt that must season them, and key that must let them out) for other loosing there is none. Frith. Workes, fol. 59.

For it is nat conuenient that such raskall as be now in Flaunders, shulde be suffred to rule a countrey: for by them chyualry and gentylnes mygt be distroyed, ye and consequentlye all Christendome. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 404.

There are, indeed, such consequences as are plainly necessary, and those which in their first sight carry in them no lesse certainty, then the principles from which they were immediately derived: Of this nature are they which are reciprocally deduced from their certain and intriusicall causes to their effects.
Hall. Christian Moderation, vol. iii. book ii. sec. xi.

PHIL. Likewise of consequencie, you (master doctor) must needs denie, which you haue said, that these wordes, This is my body, being only spoken, be sufficient to make the body and bloud of Christ in the sacrament, as you haue vntruely said.
Fox. Martyrs. The sixth Examination of John Philpot, fol. 1642.

There are disputes in Christendome concerning matters of greater concernment, then most of those opinions that distinguish sects and make factions; and yet because men are permitted to differ in those great matters, such evils are not consequent to such differences, as are to the uncharitable managing of smaller and more inconsiderable questions.
Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying. Introduction.

When a man hath so often observed like antecedents to be followed by like consequents, that whensoever he seeth the antecedent, he looketh again for the consequent; or when he seeth the consequent, maketh account there hath been the like antecedent, then he calleth both the antecedent and the consequent, signs one of another, as clouds are signs of rain to come, and rain of clouds past. Hobbs. Human Nature, ch. iv. fol. 8.

But if they demand it, they are not to be denied, only let the minister in general represent the evil consequents of an unworthy participation.
Taylor. Holy Dying. Of Absolving the Sick Penitent, sec. 4.

Which doctrine savoureth very strongly of anabaptisme, and doth depriue those of the effectes and fruites of the sacramentes, which haue been partakers of them without the worde preached when they were ministred, and so consequently euen yourselfe, for it is not like that there was a sermon at your christening.
Whitgift. Defence, fol. 566.

Let them draw the entire thrid through their fingers, and examine the consequentness of the whole body of the doctrine I deliver. Digby. Of Bodies. Dedication, B.

Here are, on the other hand, virtue and piety, and the eternal happiness that is consequent upon them; and these do likewise invite us to make them our principal aim.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 12. vol. vi.

For Gildas tells us the decay of it [British nation] began by civil wars among themselves, and high discontents remaining as the consequents of them. Stillingfleet. Sermon 1. vol. i.

I think them [the papists] the less dangerous, at least in appearance, to our present state; for not only the penal laws are in force against them, and their number is contemptible; but also their peers and commons are excluded from parliament, and consequently those laws in no probability of being repealed.
Dryden. Preface to Religio Laici.

All that is revealed in Scripture has a consequential necessity of being believed by all those, to whom it is proposed; because it is of Divine authority, one part as much as another.
Locke. A Second Vindication of the Reasonableness of Christianity.

Wherefore they who affirm, that to serve God in hope of the reward which he hath promised, is a slavish and sinful obedience, do consequentially cast a very foul slur upon all those eminent patterns and examples of virtue, which the Holy Ghost here sets forth and propounds to our imitation.
Bishop Bull. Works, vol. i. p. 370.

The estimation in which we stand in respect to our neighbours, will be in proportion to the degree in which we excel or are inferior to them in the acquisition of intellectual excellence, of which trade and its consequential riches must be acknowledged to give the means. Sir Joshua Reynolds. The ninth Discourse.

Can you then assume any more evident principle, from which the truth of these axioms [that a whole is greater than a part] may be consequentially inferred?
Beattie. On Truth, part i. ch. ii. sec. 1.

CONSERENTES, a title used by Arnobius (lib. v.) to the Lares, a conserendo; the application of which is sufficiently explained by the Legend of Ocrisia, the mother of Servius Tullius, whose pregnancy (see COMPITALIA) was imputed to a curious fancy of one of these playful Deities.

CONSERTION, Fr. consertion; a joyning, coupling; interlacing, intermingling. Cotgrave. Some editions of Young read conception.

What order, beauty, motion, distance, size!
Concertion of design, how exquisite!
How complicate, in their Divine police.
Young. The Complaint. Night 9.

CONSE'RVE, v.
CONSE'RVE, n.
CONSE'RVER,
CONSE'RVANT,
CONSERVA'TION,
CONSERVA'TOR,
CONSE'RVATORY, n.
CONSE'RVANCY.

Fr. conserver; Sp. conservar; It. conservare; Lat. conservare; (con, and servare,) from the Gr. ἐρύ-ειν, quod idem notat. Vossius. ἐρύ-ειν, trahere; a notione autem trahendi, extrahendi, erpiendique eam habet servandi, custodiendi, similesque. Lennep.

To withdraw or shelter from harm or danger, or injury; to protect, to keep safe, to guard, to defend.

Minshew says, conserves, or conserve, things conserved or condited, as grapes, cherries, plummes, &c.

Conservatory, a place for conserving or sheltering plants, &c. which require such shelter from the weather.

Remembreth you that Jesus Syrak sayth: a man that is joyous and glad in herte, it him conserveth flourishing in his age: but sothely a sorweful herte maketh his bones drie.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. p. 74.

And yet phisike of his conserve
Maketh many a restrauracion
Unto his recreation.
Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 131.

Our generall vsed him singularly well, banqueted him most royally with the choyce of many and sundry conserves, wines both sweete and other, and caused his musicians to make him musike.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Thomas Cavendish.

It remaineth therefore, that as your lordship from time to time under her most gracious and excellent maiestie, haue shewed yourself a valient protectour, a careful conseruer, and an happy enlarger of the honour and reputation of your country; so at length you may enioy those celestial blessings, which are prepared for such as tread your steps, and seeke to aspire to such divine and heroical virtues. Id. Ib. Epis. Dedicatorie.

A certain heathen man could vse this saying, that it was a miserable thing to forsake & betray the causes why we live for y^e conservation of life.
Caluine. Foure Godlie Sermons, serm. 2. D. 7.

Vpō this became he, not only hys chief coūsailour, but also the high bishop of his soule, and cōseruatour of his body, the preseruation of hys whole health & life to him committed, onely.
Bale. Image, p. 2. K. 2.

The schools say, heavy bodies fall downwards, out of an appetite to rest, and to conserve their nature in that place which is most proper for them; ascribing appetite, and knowledge of what is good for their conservation (which is more than man has) to things inanimate, absurdly. Hobbs. Leviathan, ch. iii.

BEG. I am Christophere Sly, call not mee honour nor lordship: I ne'er drank sacke in my life and if you giue me any conserues giue me conserues of beefe.
Shakspeare. Taming the Shrew, fol. 209

They'll fetch you conserve from the hip
And lay it softly on your lip,
Through their nibbling bills they'll chirup
And fluttering feed you with the sirup.
Drayton. The second Nymphal.

Edwin Erle of middle England, and Marcarus or Marcatus Erle of Northumberland, earnestly mindyng the conseruation of their country, and to defende the libertie thereof, moued the nobilitie and commons to crowne Edgar Atheling.
Grafton. William the Conquerour. Anno 1067.

But good conservative is no other then the reception and fruition of things agreeable to our nature; and this good, though it bee most simple and native; yet it seemes to be of all other kinds of good, the softest and lowest.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, book vii. ch. ii.

The Holy Spirit is the great conservative of the new life; only keep the keeper, take care that the spirit of God do not depart from you. Taylor. Of Confirmation, fol. 32.

By how much they should be more intent than others, upon the fair dispensation of law and liberty (as such who were not the conservators and assertors of their own liberty onely, but of the rest of the Grecians) by so much ought they more diligently to observe and provide, to their uttermost endeavours, for themselves against them, whose mind and counsels were contrarily inclined.
Usher. Annals. Anno Mundi 3833.

Adam's sin was punished by an expulsion out of Paradise, in which was a tree appointed to be the cure of diseases, and a conservatory of life. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. vi. sec. 1.

For the amity which, on their parts, as they sent them word, they meant to conserve and maintain with the emperor.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary I. Anno 1553.

So, my life, from this moment, I shall read all the learned cooks who have ever writ, study broths, plaisters, and conserves, till from a fine lady I become a notable woman. Tatler, No. 53.

If we take the angel of the waters to be the guardian or conserver of them, perhaps as the Romans (in whose empire St. John wrote) had special officers to look to their aqueducts and other waters; it may not be amiss to observe upon the by, that he is introduced praising his and his fellow-spririts' great Creator.
Boyle. Inquiry into the received Notion of Nature.

The papacy, as it hath been usurped in our native country, was either the procreant or conservant cause, or both procreant and conservant, of all the ecclesiastical controversies in the Christian world.
Puller. Moderation of the Church of England, p. 493.

There is another thing that doth farther demonstrate the superintendence of the great Creator and conservator of the world; and that is, that things of great and absolutely necessary use, have soon and easily occurred to the invention of man; but things of little use, or very dangerous use, are rarely and slowly discovered, or still utterly undiscovered.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book v. ch. i.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, more than any other, is manifest from their rooting, drying or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Id. Ib. book x. note 11.

All your sophisters cannot produce any thing better adapted to preserve a rational and manly freedom than the course that we have pursued, who have chosen our nature rather than our speculations, our breasts rather inventions, for the great conservatories and magazines of our rights and privileges.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

CONSI'DER, v.
CONSI'DERABLE,
CONSI'DERABLENESS,
CONSI'DERABLY,
CONSI'DERANCE,
CONSI'DERATE, adj.
CONSI'DERATELY,
CONSIDERA'TION,
CONSIDERA'TIVE,
CONSIDERA'TOR,
CONSI'DERER,
CONSI'DERING, n.
CONSI'DERINGLY.

Fr. considerer; Sp. considerár; It. considerare; Lat. considerare; a contemplatione siderum videtur appellari. Festus; i. e. from the contemplation of the stars; in vulgar English, from Star-gazing.

To view with care, with attention, to look into or inspect, to examine; to think of, to study, to reflect, to meditate upon carefully, attentively; to weigh well or deliberate upon, to pause, to hesitate; to have respect or regard to, to respect or regard; and thus—

CONSIDER.

Considerable is—to be considered; worthy of consideration, respect, or regard.

But mercy, lady bright, that knowest wele
My thought, and seest what harmes that I fele,
Consider all this, and rue upon my sore.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2335

But if we consider what wars they be that haue made their name so terrible, we shal find them to haue ben none other then against the barbarous Moores, the naked Indians, and the vnarmed Netherlanders, whose yeelding rather to the name thē act of the Spaniards, hath put them into such a conceit of their mightines, as they haue considerately vndertaken the conquest of our monarchie, consisting of a people vnited & alwayes held sufficiently warlike.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Portugall Voyage, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 135.

Where is Uriell the angell, which came to me at the fyrst? for he hath caused me to come in many consyderacyons and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcyon, and my prayer to rebuke. Bible, 1551. Esdras, ch. x.

Consider whose thou art; and who; a princess,
A princess of the royal blood of Scotland,
In the full spring of youth, and fresh in beauty.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, act i. sc. 2.

For the sense there are two considerables: the motion made on the brain, and the soul's act consequent thereupon, which we call animadversion. Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. viii.

The assembly shall lay a considerable pecuniary mulct upon any one who shall be proved to have entered so far into a quarrel as to give uncivil language to his brother-professour.
Cowley. Essays. The College.

Nor doth all the glory that riseth out of them, to him, rise up to a considerableness in comparison of what shall, and doth, out of us; and especially, out of this our union with him.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part iv. fol. 95.

Behold yourselfe, so by a sonne disdained:
And then imagine me, taking your part,
And in your power, soft silencing your sonne:
After this cold considerance, sentence me.
Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 97.

——— Care
Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows,
Of dauntless courage, and considerate pride
Waiting revenge.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 603.

This aduertisement of Dryander, Fraunces didde willinglie accept, promising hereafter to moderate himselfe more considerateile. Fox. Martyrs. The Spanish Martyrs, fol. 848.

You marueylously forget yourself, and confusedly go from matter to matter, without any consideration.
Whitgift. Defence, fol. 504.

——— Yea, at that very moment,
Consideration like an angell came,
And whipt the offending Adam out of him;
Leauing his body as a paradise,
T' inuelop and containe celestial spirits.
Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 69.

Fear makes a Christian circumspect and considerative with himself, how he may keep from miscarriages in the performance of his great work. Hopkins. Sermon, fol. 637.

I'lle not dissemble, sir, where'er I come,
I love to be considerative.
Ben Jonson. The Fox, act iv. sc. 1.

It could not escape a typical thought of Christ, from mystical considerators. Sir Thomas Brown. Cyrus Garden.

Yea, with a spitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast, which forc'd such way,
That many maz'd considerings, did throng
And prest in with this caution.
Shakspeare. Henry VIII. fol. 217.

Nothing he could now do would signify much toward the common safety, unless England could grow into a posture of being more united at home, and more considered abroad, than they seemed likely to be by the present course of our affairs.
Sir William Temple, vol. iv. p. 465.

CON-SIDER. — CONSIGN.

Finally, considering the promises of Christ to his church, that he will be with them to the world's end, and that the Holy Ghost shall lead them into all truth; then may we justly say, that if this, our faith, be an error, it hath prevailed universally, not one hundred year, but two, three, four, yea a thousand year: and more than that, even to the ascension of Christ, as appeareth by the testimonies of all holy writers.

Thomas Watson, in Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1553.

The said trustees being desired to have regard in the distribution to the piety and orthodoxness of the parsons, to their pains and faithfulness in performing the work of their ministry, to the smallness of the worth of their livings, and to the considerableness of income they yield the impropriation.

Boyle. Appendix to the Life.

The choicest books that Rome or Greece have known,
Her excellent translators made her own:
And Europe still considerably gains
Both by their good example and their pains.

Roscommon. Essay on Translated Verse.

Nay, we see the wisest and most considerate men in the world, after all their enquiries and speculations before our Saviour's time, did but very little towards convincing mankind of the certainty of those things, how firmly soever they might believe them themselves. Sharp. Works. Sermon 7. vol. vi.

Having at first entertained a suspicion, that the vulgar principles were less general and comprehensive, or less considerately deduced from chymical operations, than was believed.

Boyle. Preface to Physiological Considerations.

Moses, having his mind fixed upon him who is invisible, acted more from the consideration of him whom he could not see, than of him whom he saw to be highly displeased with him: not fearing the wrath of the king; for he saw him who is invisible.

Stillingfleet. Sermon 1. vol. iii.

He requires no more from men, but what every considerative man knows is fitting to be done, whenever he reflects upon his actions. Id. Sermon 3. vol. i.

Such as hath been the brood of Epicurian and profane considerers in all times, who have earnestly plodded, and strained their wits, to exclude God from any inspection or influence upon our affairs. Barrow. Sermon 11. vol. i.

The use of this catalogue of sins is this: Upon days of humiliation, especially before the sacrament, read them consideringly over, and at every particular ask thine own heart am I guilty of this? The Whole Duty of Man, p. 409.

At the same time for the encouragement of our Negroes, of which we had a considerable number on board, we promised them that on their good behaviour they should have their freedom.

Anson. Voyage round the World, book ii. ch. xi.

If I am not to be honoured with a public thanksgiving, till I shall have taken every one of these considerable towns, I am by no means upon equal terms with the rest of our generals.

Melmoth. Cicero. Vatinius to Cicero. Letter 28. book xi.

This, with the other explanations, has made the work considerably larger; and by increasing its bulk has I am afraid, added to its faults. Burke. On the Sublime. Preface.

We apply it [enthusiasm] through an indolent custom, to sober and considerate assertors of important truths, as readily as to wild and extravagant contenders about them.

Byrom. Enthusiasm.

CONSI'GN, v. CONSIGNA'TION, CONSI'GNMENT. } Fr. consigner; It. consegnare; Sp. consignar; Lat. consignare; con, and signare, from signum, a mark or sign. Of unsettled Origin. Minshew says, consignation is a signing or setting his hand to with others, a sealing. Fr. consignation; Sp. consignacion. Consigned, in Shakspeare, Troilus and Cressida, is explained by the Commentators, sealed. Consigning, in Henry IV., seems equivalent to sanctioning, giving sanction to. Consignare, in Low Latin, is to imprint the sign of the cross in oil on the forehead of the Baptized: and see the Examples from Tindal and Strype.

To sign, to give, grant or deliver any thing formally signed; to the care, custody, charge, or use of another; and thus, simply to give, grant, or deliver, to commit, to intrust.

O closet garden all void of weedes wicke
Cristallen well, of clerenesse clere consigned.

Chaucer. A Balade to our Ladie, fol. 330.

For my father hath consigned and confirmed me with his assured testimonie, to bee that assured sauyng health and earnest peny of euerlastyng life. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 457.

To the intent that they laying their hands upon them, and consigning them with holy chrism, should pray for them, that they might be confirmed in the Holy Ghost.

Strype. Memorials. The Judgment of Dr. Buchmaster concerning Confirmation.

To this I answer, that the words "Signo te signo sanctæ crucis, et confirmo te," &c. with the consignation, with the cream, imposition of hands of the prelats, be the signes.

Id. The Judgment of Stokesly concerning Confirmation.

All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee and come to dust.

Shakspeare. Song in Cymbeline.

Our coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remembred) all our state,
And heauen (consigning to my good intents)
No prince, nor peece, shall have iust cause to say,
Heaven shorten Harrie's happy life, one day.

Id. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 99.

As many farwels as be stars in heauen,
With distinct breath, and consign'd kisses to them,
He [time] fumbles vp into a loose adiew.

Id. Troylus and Cressida, fol. 97.

For if either any man brings in what is written, or what he says is delivered, then the first being express Scripture, and the second being consigned in Scripture, no man can be charged with superinducing what is not written, he hath his answer ready; and then these are zealous words absolutely to no purpose; but if such general consignation does not warrant every thing that pretends to tradition, but only such as are truly proved to be apostolical; then Scripture is useless as to this particular.

Taylor. The Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 5.

We then grieve the Holy Spirit, when, having taken upon ourselves the covenant of baptism, and thereby consecrated and consigned ourselves to God, we either refuse to admit the spirit to take possession of us, or having admitted him, do not shew that respect, nor observe that decency, nor express that kindness, that is due to so worthy a guest.

Sharp. Works. Discourse 3. vol. v.

But I assured him at the same time, that, though I were agreed with Sweden and Holland to make him an offer of the concert, yet we would not do any thing towards it till he had powers to consign the money immediately, without any new dispatches and difficulties from Brussels.

Sir William Temple. Works. To Sir John Trevor.

Many Mahommedan doctors teach that believers shall all enter into a state of happiness after the resurrection, some immediately, others after certain punishments; but that infidels shall be consigned over to eternal misery.

Jortin. Discourse on the Christian Religion, dis. 1. vol. i. p. 19.

We have not the least doubt of your being thereby enabled to increase your consignments of this valuable branch of national commerce, even to the utmost of your wishes.

Burke. Report of a Committee on the Affairs of India.

CONSI'GNIFY, CONSI'GNIFICANT, CONSIGNIFICA'TION. } Lat. con, and significare; q. signum facere; to make a sign or mark.

To mark out, denote, one thing in addition to or combination with another.

But I find not one of those words or any consignificant or equivalent to them, in all our Saxon laws.

Spelman. Of Feuds and Tenures, part ii. fol. 7.

The cypher, which has no value of itself, and only serves (if I may use the language of grammarians) to connote and consignify, and to change the value of the figures, is not several and various, but uniformly one and the same.

Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. i. p. 305.

NIFY. He calls the additional denoting of time, by a truely philosophic word, a consignification. Harris. Philological Inquiries.

CONSIMILARY, CONSI'MILITY. } Lat. con, and similis; Gr. ὁμαλὸς, even.

Like, having like appearances, like qualities.

Nor yet inadequate their congruous use
Of mucilages, lymph, and lacteal juice;
The flood consimilary ducts receive,
And glands refine the separated wave.
Brookes. Universal Beauty, book iii.

By which means, and their consimility of disposition, there was a very conjunct friendship between the two brothers and him.
Aubrey. Anecdote of Sir Walter Ralegh, vol. ii. fol. 511.

CONSI'ST, v. CONSI'STENCE, CONSI'STENCY, CONSI'STENT, CONSI'STENTLY. } Fr. consister; Sp. consister; It. consistere; Lat. consistere; (con, and sistere, to stand,) to stand or stay together. Gr. ἱστημι. To be, stand or stay together,—in one body, in one mass; to be, rest, reside, remain, abide or continue, in one fixed or solid state,—in uniformity, congruity, or agreement; to be uniform with, agreeable or suitable, fit or proper, connected with, concurrent to; and, emphatically, to be.

Sith that in change her choise doth chief consist
The hauke may cheek, that now comes faire to fist.
Uncertaine Auctors. The Lover to his Loue hauing forsaken him.

For an answer understand, right honorable, that winter here mentioned consisteth not in cold weather, short days, and long nights, but in cold zeal and affection, and in short deuotion towards God, and in cold love and charity towards our neighbours.
Strype. Memorials. A Sermon at the Funeral of Queen Mary.

——— Tho' the use
Of such set entertainments more consists
In custom, than in course; yet reverend sir,
I am still made your servant by your presences.
Ford. 'Tis Pity she's a Whore, act v. sc. 6.

If the union of the parts consist only in rest; it would seem that a bagg of dust would be of as firm a consistence as that of marble or adamant. Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatising, ch. v.

——— Nigh founder'd on he fares,
Treading the crude consistence, half on foot,
Half flying. Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 941.

We are as water, weak, and of no consistence, always descending, abiding in no certain place, unless we are detained with violence; and every little breath of wind makes us rough and tempestuous, and troubles our faces.
Taylor. Sermon 8. part iii.

Thus also in practical philosophy there be some præambula operationis, some common precepts which must be instilled into us, to work a consistency in our tempers, firm enough for the undertaking and performing all moral tasks.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 9. vol. iv.

Though constant and consistent now it be.
Yet, when kind beams appear,
It melts, and glides apace into the sea
And loses itself there. Cowley. Coldness.

The one inward in our minds, which is that we properly call repentance, (μετάνοια,) and that consists in such a sense of our sins, and hatred of them, as makes us heartily sorrow for them and resolve to commit them no more. And the other is outward, and shews itself in our lives, and that consists in the actual forsaking those sins which we so resolved against.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 8. vol. iii.

I am coming to consider the most material point you mentioned, when you recommended, in so high a tone, the consistency of popery, with the civil and religious liberties of this nation, from the temper and example of the archbishop of Cambray.
Headley. Works. Letters signed Britannicus, &c. let. 64.

I shall handle these in their due extent, by shewing that no one kind of true peace is consistent with any sort of prevailing wickedness; whether by peace we mean the peace a man hath with himself in the tranquillity of his mind; or the peace which men have in society with one another. CONSIST. — CONSISTORY.
Stillingfleet. Sermon 10. vol. i.

To fancy that God originally created a certain quantity of matter and motion, and left them to frame a world at adventures, without any determinate and particular view, design or direction; this can no way be defended consistently, but must of necessity recur to downright Atheism.
Clark. On the Attributes, p. 160.

From all this it appears, that their defection from the God of Israel, wicked and abominable as it was, did not however consist in the rejecting him as a false God, or in renouncing the law of Moses as a false religion; but only, in joining foreign worship and idolatrous ceremonies to the ritual of the true God.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book v. sec. 2.

——— At early day,
Sweet slumber shaken from her opening lids,
My lovely Patty to her dairy hies.
There from the surface of expanded bowls
She skims the floating cream, and to her churn
Commits the rich consistence.
Dodsley. Agriculture, can. 3.

[They come] from one who wishes to preserve consistency; but who would preserve consistency by varying his means to secure the unity of his end.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

And what sure mark distinguishes the wise?
Consistent wisdom ever wills the same;
Thy fickle wish is ever on the wing.
Young. The Complaint. Night 8.

I found it next to impracticable, to deliver short, unadorned, didactical sentences, consistently with the copiousness, irregularity, and enthusiasm peculiar to ode-writing.
Hurt. Thomas a Kempis. To the Reader.

CONSISTORY, CONSISTO'RIAL, CONSISTO'RIAN. } Fr. consistoire; It. and Sp. consistorio; Lat. consistorium, from consistere. (See CONSIST.) The place where any number of individuals (consistunt) stay, remain, or abide together. Locus ubi circa principem consistunt amici illius et consiliarii. Gesner.

And in consistorie atte courte. do calle youre names.
Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 39.

And so befell, sone after on a day
This false judge, as telleth us the storie,
As he was wont, sat in his consistorie
And yaf his domes upon sondry cas.
Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12095.

Also when Pope Bonyface of Rome, and his cardynals, knewe the trouthe, they were right ioyfull, and drewe togyther in consistory, and sayde howe their greatest enemy the Frenche kynge was beaten with a cruell rodde, seyng God had taken fro hym his wytte. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 139.

And [I denounce and show for accursed] al those that let prelates or ordynaries for to holde consystory sessyon, or chapytres, for to enquyre of synnes, and of excesse, in good amendment of maanes soul.
Strype. Memorials. The general Sentence, or Curse.

Paul the Fourth was sworn at his election to the papacy to make but four cardinalls, which oath he presently broke, in open consistory maintaining it is an article of faith, that the pope cannot be bound, much lesse can bind himself.
Feltham. On the Low Countries, part ii. fol. 97.

He [John Branston] sate judge in the consistory, when a churchwarden, out of whose house a chalice was stolen, was sued by the parish to make it good to them, because not taken out of the church-chest (where it ought to have been reposited,) but out of his private house. Fuller. Worthies. Chesshire.

Answere was returned from the said churches, That they had heard alreadie of those consistoriall lawes, and did acknowledge them to be Godly ordinances, drawing towards the prescript of the Word of God.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity. Preface fol. 8

CONSIST. — CONSOCIATE.

You fall next on the consistorian schismaticks; for so you call Presbyterians, pag. 40, and judge them to have enervated the king's supremacy by their opinions and practise, differing in many things only in terms from popery.
Milton. Brief Notes on Dr. Griffith's Sermon.

For all the treasure and other princely ensigns and imperiall ornaments, together with the præfect and the consistorians, were inclosed within the compass of the wals.
Holland. Ammianus. Valens and Gratian, fol. 422.

He knew, when he told you this story, that he did not appeal from the sentence given in the court in Jersey, to any consistorial court of the bishop of Winchester.
Hoadley. Works. Letter to Clement Chevallier, Esq., vol. iii. fol. 951.

The CONSISTORIUM of the latter Roman Emperors was first applied to the place in which their Privy Council met, and thence to the Council itself. So in the Romish Church, the Consistory is the place in which the College of Cardinals meet, with the Pope at their head, and also the meeting itself, which assembles for the reception of Princes or their Ambassadors, for the Canonization of Saints, for the promotion of Cardinals, and other important affairs. Among the Reformed Churches on the continent, both Lutherans and Calvinists, the Consistory is an Assembly of Ministers, appointed to regulate their affairs, discipline, &c. In England, the Consistory is a Court Christian, or Spiritual Court, formerly held in the nave of the cathedral church, or in some chapel, aisle, or portico, belonging to it, in which the Bishop presided, and had some of his Clergy for assessors and assistants. This Court is at present held by the Bishop's Chancellor or Commissary, and by Archdeacons or their officials, either in the cathedral Church or other convenient place in the Diocese, for the hearing and determination of matters and causes of Ecclesiastical cognizance, which may happen within such Diocese. (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, vol. ii. p. 12.)

CONSO'CIATE, v. / CONSO'CIATE, n. / CONSOCIA'TION. — Lat. consociare, atum; con, and socius, a follower, from sequi, to follow. Vossius.

To follow with, to join as follower or companion, to accompany, to unite with, to coalesce, to combine, to confederate.

I am yet willing to grant, that generally in nature the best outward shapes are also the likeliest to be consociated with good inward faculties. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 79.

If that gracious hand will exempt us from the common judgment of our consorts in evil, we have cause to bless his mercy; but if his just hand shall sweep us away in the company of our wicked consociates, we have reason to thank none but ourselves for our sufferings. Hall. Select Thoughts, vol. iii. fol. 720.

Because the soul joyned to the body draws from the society of the flesh incentives and arguments to sin; therefore both of them are punished, as being guilty of consociation.
Taylor. On Repentance, ch. vii. sec. 1.

He will rather conclude that those few that should happen to clash, might rebound after the collision; or if they cohered, yet by the next conflict with other atoms might be separated again, and so on in an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, without ever consociating into the huge condense bodies of planets.
Bentley. Sermon 7.

The 3d relates to a man, as he is a being integrated by a human mind and living body, strictly associated by certain laws of union or consociation established by God in this monadical creature. Boyle. The Christian Virtuoso, part ii. sec. 2.

With every wind to waft large commerce on,
Join pole to pole, consociate sever'd worlds
And link in bonds of intercourse and love
Earth's universal family.
Mallet. Amyntor and Theodora.

Thus Epictetus, a thorough Stoic, if ever there was any, speaking of death says, But whether do you go? no where to your hurt: you return from whence you came, to a friendly consociation with your kindred elements.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iii. sec. 3.

CONSO'LE, v. / CONSO'LER, / CO'NSOLATE, v. / CONSOLA'TION, / CONSOLA'TOR, / CONSO'LATORY. — Fr. consoler; It. consolare; Sp. consolár; Lat. consolari. A solari, est consolari, quod (si placet esse a solus) propriè notet adlocutione eorum animos lenire, qui sibi soli videntur relicti, postquam orbati sunt parente, conjuge vel pignoribus aut amicis. Vossius.

To soothe by converse the minds or feelings of the solitary; to comfort, to solace, to cheer, to encourage, the lonely, the forsaken, abandoned, or deserted.

Thynkest thou it a small thynge of the consolacions of God? and are they wyth thee a lyinge worde.
Bible, 1551. Job, ch. xv.

And in yeldynge graces to oure moste consolatrice, that moste blessyd virgyn our lady saynt Mary: y^e^ virgyne, here I agayne salute with thee seconde of the foresay'd vii. joyes.
Fabyan. Secunda pars Cronicarum, ch. xlix.

He also commaunded his glorious apostles to preach it, and confirmed it with so many myracles, and did also geene to the confirming and writing of it, the glorious consolatour of the Holy Ghost. Barnes. Workes, fol. 293.

Wherin he reporteth of the coragious
Wordes, that were moche consolatory
By Eschines rehersed, to the great glory
Of Demosthenes, that was his utter fo,
Fewe shall ye fynde or none that will do so.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

——————— I will begone,
That pittifull rumour may report my flight
To consolate thine eare.
Shakspeare. All's Well that End's Well, fol. 242.

But, what may somewhat consolate all men that honour vertue, we do not discover the latter scene of his [Belisarius] misery in authors of antiquity, or such as have expressly delivered the story of those times.
Sir Thomas Brown, book vii. ch. xvii.

He makes his father Laertes a gardener all that while, and seeking his consolation for the absence of his son in the pleasure of planting and even dunging his own grounds.
Cowley. Essays. Of Agriculture.

Consolatories writ
With studied argument, and much perswasion sought
Lenient of grief and anxious thought:
But to th' afflicted in his pangs thir sound
Little prevails, or rather seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint;
Unless he feel within
Some source of consolation from above.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 657.

Fortune foretun'd the dying notes of Rome,
Till I, thy consul sole, consol'd thy doom.
Dryden. Juvenal. Satire 10.

This excellent young woman has nothing to consolate herself with but the reflection that her sufferings are not the effect of any guilt or misconduct, and has for her protection the influence of a power which, amidst the unjust reproach of all mankind, can give not only patience, but pleasure to innocence in distress.
Tatler, No. 199.

But that what we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, he will do it, we have his own word; and that to, not only once, but again, that we might have strong consolation, and be the more fully assured of it. Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 31.

My present employment is the reviewing some consolatory thoughts on the loss of friends, which my poor Lady Susan's death obliged me to entertain myself with, and which I am now recruiting. Boyle. Letters of. Works, vol. vi. p. 48.

Mr. Pope retired with some chagrin to Twickenham, but consoled himself and his friend with this sarcastic reflexion—"We shall take our degree together in fame, whatever we do at the university." Warburton. Life, by Hurd.

In this season, therefore, of dejection occasioned by the indisposition of my wife, the dangerous sickness of some of my servants, and the death of others, I have recourse to my books, as to the sovereign consolers of my sorrows.

Melmoth. Pliny. Letter 19. book viii.

However, it affords me a very sensible consolation, that there is strong reason to hope the prudence of your friends will be able to elude the force of those iniquitous schemes which have been projected to your prejudice.

Id. Cicero. Letter to Publius Lentulus, book i. let. 19.

The punishment of real tyrants is a noble and awful act of justice; and it has with truth been said to be consolatory to the human mind.

Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Console, Fr., in Architecture, a projecting bracket usually in the form of the letter S. Vitruvius (iv. 6,) seems to speak of a Console under the terms ancon, (ἀγκὼν,) and prothyris, (προθυρὶς.)

CONSO'LIDATE, v. Conso'lidate, adj. Consolida'tion. } Fr. consolider; Sp. consolidar; It consolidare; Lat. consolidare, to fix into one whole, one mass. Vossius adopts the Etymology of Festus; solum, Oscè totum, et solidum significat.

To form, fix or fasten, to conjoin, to close, to unite, into one whole, one mass; to render firm, hard, compact, confirmed. See to Soulder.

In so moche that it seemeth, that no operation or affairs may be perfecte, nor no science or arte complete, eccept experience be there vnto added, wherby knowledge is ratyfied, and (as I mought saye) consolidate.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, p. 231.

Consyderynge the vtilitie in rydynge great horses, it shall be necessary (as I haue sayde) that a gentylman do lerne to ryde a great and fierce horse whyles he is tender, and the braunes and sinewes of his thighes not fully consolidate. Id. Ib. p. 64.

Sometimes, they find the mines not yet consolidated and digested throughly into metal; when, by their experience knowing after how many years they will be ripe, they shut them up again till then. Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xiv.

Take a wanton garish loose spirit, let him be but in the presence of a superior whom he feares and reverenceth, and it consolidates him.

Goodwin. Select Cases. The Vanity of Thought, p. 46.

We are divided between good and evil; and all our good or bad is but a disposition towards either, but then the sin is arrived to its state and manhood, when the joynts are grown and firm by the consolidation of a habit.

Taylor. On Repentance, ch. v. sec. 3.

And yet when that was done, would he be far enough from making the extension of body (which is the cohesion of its solid parts) intelligible, till he could shew wherein consisted the union or consolidation of the part of those bonds or of that cement, or of the least particle of matter that exists.

Locke. On Human Understanding, book ii. ch. xxiii.

The last thing considered by the board of controul among the debts of the Carnatick, was that arising to the East-India Company, which after the provision for the cavalry, and the consolidation of 1777, was to divide the residue of the fund of £480,000. a year with the lenders of 1767.

Burke. Speech on the Nabob of Arcot's debts.

CO'NSONANT, adj. Co'nsonant, n. Co'nsonance, Co'nsonancy, Co'nsonantly. } Fr. consonance; It. consonanza; Sp. consonancia; Lat. consonare, (con, and sonare,) perhaps from tonare, and this from τόνο-ειν, intendere, et peciatim vocem vel sonum intendere. Vossius.

"Those letters," (says Wilkins,) "are styled consonants, in the pronouncing of which the breath is intercepted by some collision or closure, amongst the instruments of speech." On a Real Character, part iii. ch. xii.

Sounding together, sounding in unison, uniting in sound, symphonious, harmonious, concordant; and thus, agreeing, consisting with.

For in ye Scriptures is no cõfuse ordre, but a cõfourme & cõsonãt ordre, one chaptre alwais approuyng & declarynge an other.

Bale. Apologie, p. 55.

Yet I think that confession is not necessarily deduced of Scripture, nor commanded as a necessary prescript of Scripture, and yet it is much consonant to the law of God, as a thing willed, not commanded.

Burnett. Records. Resolutions of some questions concerning the Sacraments, quest. 15.

For wheras all ye olde holy doctours & saintes of euery age, write so full & so whole, & so cõsonãtly togither against al kindes of scismes & heresies, &c.

Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 829.

The British language, which our vowels wants,
And jars so much upon harsh consonants,
Comes with such grace from thy mellifluous tongue,
As do the sweet notes of a well-set song.

Drayton. Queen Catherine to Owen Tudor.

As in every thing else, beauty and favour is composed and framed (as it were) of many members meeting and concurring in one, and all together at the same time, and that by a certaine simmetry, consonance, and harmony.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 50.

Which could we suppose in a single instance; yet a multitude of musical consonancies would be as impossible, as to play a thousand tunes upon a lute at once.

Glanville. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. iv.

If it be so, it is better to do what I have a mind to quietly, then to vex myself, and yet do it nevertheless: and that it is so, I am taught in almost all the discourses I have read or heard upon the seventh chapter to the Romans: and therefore if I may have leave to do consonantly to what I am taught to believe, I must confess myself to be under the dominion of sin, and therefore must obey. Taylor. On Repentance. Preface, fol. 3.

They all plead Scripture for what they say; and each one pretends, that his opinion, be it ever so absurd and ridiculous, is consonant to the words there used.

Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 6.

Had read out all th' imaginary duels
That had been fought by consonants and vowels.

Butler. Satyre. Human Learning, part ii.

Soft sigh'd the flute; the tender voice was heard,
Warbling the varied heart; the woodlands round
Apply'd their quire; and winds and waters flow'd
In consonance. Thomson. Spring.

Sin discomposeth all the consonancy in man making a discord between flesh and blood, which is the cause of all evil, and finally of the last of all dissonancies, which is death.

Tatler, No. 274.

And therefore I shall rather observe, that consonantly thereunto God was pleased to consider man, so much the more than the creatures made for him, that he made the sun itself stand still, and at another time to go back, and divers times made part of the universe forget their nature, or act contrary to it.

Boyle. Usefulness of Natural Philosophy, part i. ess. 2.

This severe vengeance on enormous offenders was believed, not only consonant to the rules of human, but to be the object, and to make the especial care of the Divine justice.

Hurd. Works. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

His stanzas are too long, especially his epodes; the ode is finished before the ear has learned its measures, and consequently before it can receive pleasure from their consonance and recurrence. Johnson. Life of Gray.

Though these consonancies chyming in the writer's head, he might not always be aware of the imitation.

Hurd. Works. On the marks of imitation.

CONSO'PITE, v. Conso'pite, adj. Conso'piate, v. Consopia'tion. } Lat. consopire, itum, i. e. somnum inducere; to bring on sleep, to lull to sleep; sopor, of uncertain origin.

CONSOPITE. — CONSPICUOUS.

Wherefore Divine providence brought it to passe for the good of the man, and that he might more vigorously and fully be enrich'd with delight, that the operations of the masculine faculties of the soul were for a while well shaked and consopited.
Henry More. Mora. Cabbala. fol. 35.

Both will and intellect that worketh best,
When sense and appetite be consopite.
And grosser phansie lull'd in sweet rest.
More. On the Soul, part iii. can. 1. st. 28.

And thus now the body is gotten uppermost, the lower qualities have greater exercise and command then the higher, those being very vigorously awakened, and these proportionably shrunk up, and consopited. Glanville. Preexistence of Souls, ch. xiv.

One of his lordship's maxims is, that a total abstinence from intemperance or business, is no more philosophy, than a total consopiation of the senses in repose.
Pope. Works. Letter to Mr. Dagby, let. 16.

CONSPI'CUOUS, CONSPI'CUOUSLY, CONSPI'CUOUSNESS, CONSPICU'ITY, CONSPECTU'ITY.

Lat. conspicuus, (quod ab omnibus conspicitur,) from conspicere, conspectum; con, and specere, to see, to look.

That may be seen: seen plainly, clearly; from its situation; and thus, eminent; from its appearance, and thus, bright.

Eminent, remarkable, distinguished, bright, brilliant, famous, celebrated, renowned.

——— A matchlesse sepulchre,
The sacred boast of the Achæians ruind
Vpon the Hellespont; where most it mind
(For height, and conspicuity) the cies
Of liuing men, and their posterities.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, fol. 365.

Their modesty likewise, whether with respect to themselves, or others, is conspicuous. In enumerating the apostles, Mark and Luke put Matthew before Thomas: but Matthew gives him the precedency to himself. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book v. ch. ii.

——— in these vacant rooms
First you succeed, and of the wheeling orb,
In the most eminent and conspicuous point
With dazzling beams and spreading magnitude
Shine the bright pole-star of this hemisphere.
Carew. A Masque at Whitehall, Anno 1633.

To walk, that is to go about conspicuously in the sight of all men, breaking forth into works, (as the sun after the dispersions of a mist or cloud) whereby all men see and acknowledge his faith and obedience.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 15. vol. iv.

I answer; 1. All that St. Austin says, is not true. 2. Though this were true, it were nothing to your purpose, unless you will conceive it all one, not to be, and not to be conspicuously visible.
Chillingworth. Religion of Protestants, ch. v. part i.

A man I thought deserving to be crown'd;
First by my father pointed to my sight,
Nor less conspicuous by his native light.
Dryden. Sigismunda and Guiscardo.

If there be not now such a power actually and conspicuously exercised in the world, then, &c.
Clark. On the Attributes, p. 439.

The conspicuousness of which quality [inoffensiveness] in pigeons hath made them though erroneously, be supposed to have no gall.
Boyle. Usefulness of Natural Philosophy, part i. can. 2.

They affect singularity, for want of any thing else that is singular; and finding in themselves strong desires of conspicuousness, with small abilities to attain it, they are resolved with Erostatus, that fired Diana's temple to be talked of for having done so, to acquire that considerableness by their sacrilege, which they must despair of from their own parts.
Id. Some considerations touching the Style of Holy Scriptures.

You have not the least reason to doubt of my zeal to serve you: of which I have given many conspicuous testimonies in this province, as well as at Rome
Melmoth. Cicero. To Appius Pulcher. Letters. book vi.

CONSPIRE, s. CONSPI'RER, CONSPI'RANT, adj. CONSPIRA'TION, CONSPI'RATOR, CONSPI'RACY, CONSPI'RINGLY.

Fr. conspirer; Sp. conspirár; It. conspirare; Lat. conspirare; con, and spirare, to breathe; as it were to breathe together in one action, to agree or consent with one breath. Minshew. Vossius thinks spiro, a sono fictum. Martinius, quasi σὺν ἄρᾳ, trahe aera. Tooke, the A. S. spiri-an, (Ger. speiren; Dutch, spuren;) Scoteh, to speir or spire. "To search out by the track, or trace, to inquire, and make diligent search." Somner. And see ASPIRE. Lye says Spirian after, is to aspire after; investigare, quærere, inquirere, explorare, indagare, insectare. For Speir see Dr. Jamieson's Dictionary of the Scottish Language.

To conspire, then, will be to search or seek after, or pursue eagerly, ambitiously, in union with others; to join, unite, agree, combine, concert, complot, confederate, in the same pursuit; for the attainment or acquisition of the same end or object.

From thennes forth the Jewes han conspired
This innocent out of this world to chace.
Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13495.

Whan shapen was all hir conspiracie
Fro point to point, how that his lecherie
Parformed shulde be ful sotilly,
As ye shul here it after openly,
Home goeth this cherl that highte Claudius.
Id. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12081.

Symon, which was made their espie
Within Troie, as was conspired,
Whan tyme was, a token fired.
Gower. Conf. Am., book i. fol. 37.

But suche a false conspirement
Though it be prive for a throwe,
God wolde not it were vaknowe.
Id. Ib. book ii.

Go sister, and go tel my wordes to my disdainfull foo:
I was not she that did conspire with Greekes to Troy to goo.
Phaer. Æneidos, book iv.

For we see such miseries, hange ouer the whole state of common wealth, through the great misorder of your sedicion, that it maketh vs much to reioyce that we haue bene neither parteners of your doings nor conspirers of your counsayles.
Sir John Cheke. Hurt of Sedition, A. 2.

But as soon as it was day, certaine Jewes made a conspiracion, and cursed them selues to the deuyll and to damnacion yf they did eyther eate or drynke, before they had slayne Paule.
Udall. Actes of the Apostles, ch. xxiii.

And finally those of the people were strongest at the gates, so that they wold not suffre them to be openedde. In such sorte, that the conspyratours could not execute their trahisone.
Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 111.

But the serpent Idre of enuy and false conspyracy, whiche euer burned in the harte of Edricus, was kyndeled so sore, that of pure force it must breke out vpon a lyght occasion.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 204.

It hath bene the vsuall practise of all sectaries and especiallie Anabaptists, who count them all as wicked, and vngodlie, as worldlinges, and men players, as idle and slouthfull, that conspire not with them in their confused platforme.
Whitgift. Defence. Preface, fol. 5.

Stand ye secure ye safer shrubs below,
In humble dales, whom heav'ns do not dispight;
Nor angry clouds conspire your overthrow,
Envying at your too disdainful height.
Hall. Satires. A Defiance to Envy.

He fell againe into another newe trouble and daunger; being called into question as one of Catiline's conspiracie, both before the questor Norius Niger in his house, and that by L. Vettius who approached him; and also in the senate, by P. Orrius unto whom for that he detected first the plots and designements of the conspiratours, were rewards appointed by the state.
Holland. Suetonius. Julius Cæsar, fol. 7.

York, with his youngest son t'wards Ireland bears;
Warwick to Calais, where his safety lay;
To that sure harbour of conspiracy,
Envy's retreat, rebellion's nursery.
Daniel. History of Civil War, book vii.

'Twere now time to reduce this operation to practice, and shew you, 1. What directions conscience is able to afford from every of those laws for the ruling of all actions of that kind; and secondly, what an harmony and conspiration there is betwixt all these laws, one mutually aiding and assisting the other, and not violating and destroying. Hammond. Works, vol. i. fol. 210.

But these conspirers couched all so clene
Through close demeanour, that their wiles did weane
My heart from doubts, so many a false deuice
They forged fresh, to hide their enterprise.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 406.

Whosoever shall put away, either violently without mutual consent for urgent reasons, or conspiringly by plot of lust, or cunning malice, shall put away for any sudden mood, or contingency of disagreement, which is not daily practice but may blow soon over, and be reconcil'd, except it be fornication; that man, or that pair, commit adultery.
Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

Roaring she tears the air with such a noise
As well resembled the conspiring voice
Of routed armies, when the field is won;
To reach the ears of her escaped son.
Waller. The Battle of the Summer Islands, can. 3.

I know thou'lt say, my passion's out of season,
That Cato's great example and misfortunes
Should both conspire to drive it from my thoughts.
Addison. Cato, act iii. sc. 1.

In the happiness of those retirements, [Cicero] has more obliged posterity by his moral precepts than he did the republick in quelling the conspiracy of Catiline.
Dryden. Dedication of King Arthur.

That those three [the Holy Spirit, the Father, and Son] joyned and confederated (as it were) are conspiringly propitious and favourable to us. Barrow. Sermon 34. vol. ii.

Then shall thou find, whilst friends with foes conspire
To give more proof than virtue would desire,
Thy danger chiefly lies in acting well;
No crime's so great as daring to excel.
Churchill. Epistle to Wm. Hogarth.

Is it alien to the office of a good member of parliament, when such practises increase and when the audacity of the conspirators grows with their impunity, to point out in his place their evil tendency to the happy constitution which he is chosen to guard?
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

I shall here, with the utmost veracity, give a short acount of Catiline's conspiracy; a memorable attempt, both for the enormous wickedness of it, and the danger it threatened.
Rose. Sallust. The conspiracy of Catiline, p. 7.

CONSPIRACY, in Law, the Conspiring to obstruct, pervert, or defeat the course of public justice; to injure the public health, as by selling unwholesome provisions, or to effect any public mischief; offences punishable by indictment. Every confederacy to injure individuals, or to do acts which are unlawful or prejudicial to the community is a Conspiracy; and an indictment lies, not only when it is entered into for an illegal purpose, but also when it is to effect a legal purpose by unlawful means, and this although such purpose be not effected; the Conspiracy, or unlawful agreement, though nothing be done in it, being the gist of the offence. The punishment attendant on it previous to Edward I. was most severe, such as forfeiture of lands, disqualifying a party as a witness or juror: the usual modes of punishment now however, are, fine, imprisonment, and finding surety for good behaviour. For a full legal description of Conspirators see statute 2, 33 Edward I. Journeymen and workmen in general who refuse to work, in consequence of a combination, till their wages are raised, may be indicted for a Conspiracy, though each may insist individually on raising his wages if he can; a more summary mode of punishment by proceeding before Magistrates is, however, given for this offence by the statute 39 and 40 George III. ch. 106. Combinations amongst Victuallers or Artificers to raise the price of provisions, or any commodities, or the rate of labour, have been made liable to severe punishment by enactments of particular statutes. See 2 and 3 Edward VI. ch. 15, and 36 George III. ch. 3, which relates to Journeyman Paper-makers. The actual fact of Conspiring need not be given in proof upon an indictment, but may be inferred from collateral circumstances; nor can one person alone be guilty of a Conspiracy, though he may be prosecuted for having Conspired with others.

CONSPISSATION, Lat. conspissare; con, and spissare, to thicken, spissus, a συσδνὸς, quod est densus, obscurus.

Denseness, thickness.

For body's but this spirit, fixt, gross by conspissation.
More. Infinity of Worlds, st. 13.

CO'NSTABLE, n. Co'NSTABLERIE, Co'NSTABLESHIP, Co'NSTABLEWICK, Co'NSTABULATORY. Fr. connetable; It. conestabile; Sp. condestabile. Verstegan thinks that this word might more rightly be kingstable, (King in A. S. cuning.) Columen regis, the support or stay of the King. Spelman, Menage, Du Cange, Vossius, and Skinner, agree that it is a corruption of comes stabuli, "an officer," as Blackstone observes, "well known in the Empire; so called, because like the Lord High Constable of England, he was to regulate all matters of chivalry, tilts, tournaments, and feats of arms, which were performed on horseback." Com. i. 355.

Manie flowe to churche, & the constable vnnethe
Atarnde [return'd] aliue, & manie were ibrogt to dethe.
R. Gloucester, p. 539.

The constable and dame Hermegild his wif
Were payenes, and that contree every wher;
But Hermegild loved Custance as hire lif;
And Custance hath so long sojourned ther
In orisons, with many a bitter tere,
Til Jesu hath converted thurgh his grace
Dame Hermegild, constablesse of that place.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4953.

Than drede had in her baillly
The keeping of the constablery
Toward the north I vnderstond.
Id. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 136.

Than the constable went forthe, and then cam in diuerse seculers and they scorned me on euery syde, and manassed me greatly.
State Trials. Trial of Master William Thorpe.

Men thinks the constable seeth a tyme where in he may do the the king his master good service, or else he wold not see him sent thither.
Lodge. Illustrations of British History. Sir Richard Morysin to the Privy Council, 1553.

Bicause he had nat the Martell, whiche is the token of the offyce of the constablery as he was commoned to do; therefore the offyce was vacant and voyde.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 193.

——— The same thing
In a low constable and in the king
I reverence. Donne. To the Countesse of Sallsbury.

This king granted unto the church of Canterbury, and to William and his successors, the custody of constableship of the castle of Rochester for ever. Baker. Henry I.

CONSTABLE. If there was not a minister in every parish, you would quickly find cause to increase the number of constables: and if the churches were not employed to be places to hear God's law, there would be need of them, to be prisons for the breakers of the laws of man. South. Sermon 4. vol. i.

Which office and constableship were granted upon his decease, to Sir William Pickering, Knt. a worthy and honorable gentleman, and employed much in embassies, with all the fees and profits thereunto accustomably arising, together with the herbage and panage of the park thereto belonging.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1709.

A great deal was said, both at the bar by lawyers, and at the debate of the house, upon the point of jurisdiction and of the exemption of a constabulatory.
Burnett. Own Times. Queen Anne. Anno 1709.

The Lord High CONSTABLE of England was anciently an Officer of the Crown of the highest dignity; this office appears to have been first granted by William the Conqueror to Walter, Earl of Gloucester, or according to others, to William Fitzosborne or Roger de Mortimer, and became hereditary in two different families, as annexed to the Earldom of Hereford; and in that right, after a lapse of two centuries, was revived by judgment of law in the person of Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, who being attainted of high treason, 13 Henry VIII., 1521, this office became forfeited to the Crown, since which there have been no Lord High Constables appointed, except at Coronations and on other solemn occasions; the 13 Richard II. statute 2, specifies the authority and jurisdiction belonging to this Officer. See Agard's Antiquity of the Constable of England, in Hearne's Collection, ii. 77; Leigh's do. ibid. 81. The Constable of France was the first officer of the Crown and chief of the army. Anne de Montmorency, who perished on the scaffold, was the last who held this dignity, which was suppressed by an edict of Louis XIII.

There are also the Constable of the Hundred, or High, Chief or Head Constable, probably sprung from this office, and the Constable of the Village, or Petty Constable. The first known mention of the Chief Constable, though there is reason to suppose the office was instituted long before, is in a Writ or Mandate of 36 Henry VIII. preserved in the Adversaria to Watts's edition of Matthew Paris, by which mandate "it was provided that in every hundred there should be a Chief Constable, at whose mandate all those of his hundred sworn to arms should assemble and be observant to him, for the doing of those things which belong to the King's peace." The first notice in the statutes which appears to be taken of the Constable is 13 Edward I. ch. 6, Westminster, wherein "it is ordained that in every hundred or franchise there shall be chosen two Constables to make the view of armour, and to present the default of armour, and of the suits of towns and of highways," &c.; since which period the office has been familiarly known in Law, and various duties imposed upon it by different statutes. Both the High and Petty Constables are chosen at the Leet or Term of the Hundred, or by Justices of the Peace, and in some places by the Parishioners of Towns and Parishes, according to ancient and particular usage.

In Westminster, by statute 29 George II. ch. 5, the High Constable is chosen annually by the Dean or High Steward, or his Deputy.

The duties of Constables are multifarious, but may be summed up under two heads; repressing felonies, and keeping the peace, of which they are conservators by the Common Law; they are also bound to execute the precepts of Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace, and Coroners. CON. STABL. — CON. STANT

There are various grounds of exemption from serving the office, such as age, sixty-three being mentioned in the statute 31 George II. ch. 17; being Aldermen of London, Apothecaries, Attornies, practising Barristers, Dissenters being Teachers or Preachers, Foreigners naturalized, Militia-men, President and Fellows of the College of Physicians, Prosecutors of Felons, Surgeons, and others.

Constables of Castles were Governors of the Castles of the King or of great Barons; offices frequently hereditary or held by feudal tenure; such were the Constable of the Tower, the Constable of London or Baynard's Castle, the Constables of the Castles of Dover, Windsor, Chester, Flint, &c. some of which offices, though not now hereditary, still exist; these are the Constables intended in Magna Charta, ch. 17, 20, and who in the statute West. 1, (3 Edward I. ch. 17,) are called Constables of fees, and there considered as Keeper of Prisons, formerly a constituent part of all Castles. The statute 5 Henry IV. ch. 10, stating the oppression of these Constables, and enacting that no party should in future be imprisoned but in the Common Gaol, probably suppressed a course of tyranny indulged in by them.

A Constable of the Exchequer is mentioned in the Dialogus Scaccarii, lib. i. ch. 5; in the statute De Scaccario, 51 Henry III., statute 5; in Fleta, lib. ii. ch. 31; and in Madox's History of that Court, p. 274.

The Constable of the Staple is also mentioned in some old statutes, 27 Edward III. ch. 8; 15 Richard II. ch. 9; 23 Henry VIII. ch. 6.

CO'NSTANT, adj. Co'NSTANTLY, Co'NSTANCE, Co'NSTANCY, Co'NSTANCENESS. Lat. constans, present participle of constare, to stand together; (con, and stare,) to stand. Sto, Gr. στάω, στῶ. Standing together, sc. firmly, fixedly, steadily, without change or variation; and thus, firm, fixed, steady, unchanging, unvarying.

No more of this make now I mentioun,
But to Grisilde agen I wol me dresse,
And telle hire constance, and hire besinesse.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale.

And last of all he was called before the bishoppes in a common assemblye at London, where he so constantly defended himselfe that he had preuailed, if he might haue bene heard, as indeed he was not. Frith. Workes. Life, fol. 3.

The fire it cannot frese,
For it is not his kinde;
Nor true love cannot lesse
The constance of the minde.
Surrey. The Louer excuseth himself, &c.

And all these before named albeit they haue not yet obteyned the rewarde promysed them for their godly lyuynge, whiche reward shal be geuen them at the general resurrection of the bodyes: yet haue they deserued perpetuall prayse for the constantnes of theyr fayth. Udall. Hebrewes, ch. xi.

These things we now repeat, that a testimony might remain with the king, signed by us: that he might not doubt of our constancy.
Strype. Memorials. The Duke of Saxony, and Landgrave of Hesse to the King.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so ensconc'd his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust.
Shakspeare. Rape of Lucrece.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, the Capital of the whole civilized world, from the time of Constantine the Great till the division of the Roman Empire, and successively the Metropolis of the Eastern Emperors, and the Turkish Sultáns, comprehends, within its limits, the site of Byzantium, but has been extended over a triangular area more than twelve times as large as the space covered by that ancient fortress. Its peculiar Position.

position, between a wide estuary and the Thracian Bosporus, now called the Canal of Constantinople, (in Turkish, Khalîji Costantinúyeh) have been already noticed in the account of Byzantium, (xix. 109;) where it should have been mentioned that the longitude and latitude there given (41° 1′ 27″ north and 28° 55′ 15″ east) are those of the Mosque of Santa Sophia, just beyond the walls of the old city, and about midway between the two seas. The present name of Names.

Constantinople was imposed by its founder himself, who, when he had completed this new seat of Empire, in the twenty-fifth year of his reign (A. D. 330,) celebrated its birth-day, on the 11th May, with great festivities, and caused its names Anthusa, Constantinopolis, the Second and New Rome (Ἀνθουσα, Κωνσταντινούπολις, Δευτέρα καὶ Νέα Ῥώμη) to be inscribed on a column erected in a public place, called the Strategium, near his own Equestrian Statue, (Socrates, i. 16; Meletii Geogr. iii. 65.) The Arabs, consistently with the rules of their language, from Costantín formed the derivative Costantiniyyeh, a name which often occurs in Turkish writers; but the term most commonly used is Stanbol, evidently a corruption of Εἰς τὴν πόλιν (Istimbólin or Stimbóli, according to the pronunciation of the Greeks,) (Hyde's Syntagmata, i. 61,) and this has of late years been converted, by the ingenuity of some fanatic, into Islámból, which is meant to signify the City of Islám, (i. e. the true Faith,) but in reality has no meaning at all.

Its commanding position makes this City the key as it were both of Europe and Asia, an advantage which has been noticed by almost every traveller; and the innumerable vessels which even now crowd its harbour, present such a scene of commercial activity as shows what it must have been when it was the Capital and emporium of the world.

"Ancient Byzantium," says the Baron de Tott, (Mem. i. 3,) "the walls of which enclose the Grand Signior's Seraglio, covered the point which terminates the harbour, and now presents a forest of cypresses, crowned by innumerable cupolas covered with lead, adorned with gilt balls, and rising in succession one above the other, so as to form a pyramidal basis to the lofty tower of the Divan.

"The Harbour from Seraglio Point to the Kïosk of Kyat-hanah stretches for more than 2000 toises (about 2½ miles) along one of the sides of a triangle which forms the area of Constantinople: the opposite side covered by extensive suburbs, including the towns of Galata and Pera, presents a picture, the splendour of which is increased and varied by an uninterrupted chain of villages along the shores of the Bosporus, as far as the eye can reach towards the Black Sea. Just such another unbroken line of houses and gardens covers the Asiatic coast, as far as the town of Scútari, opposite to the entrance of the harbour, and a little more than two miles distant. The whole is backed by steep hills of a bold broken outline, covered with corn-fields, vineyards, or woods, forming such a prospect as can hardly be equalled. The boats which are continually crossing from one shore to the other, seem to unite Europe with Asia; some of them arrive every morning filled with peasants from the surrounding villages, who come to earn their bread in the Capital, and return in the evening to their families; others are plying in every direction, laden with provisions for the consumption of the countless multitudes; and if to these are added the larger vessels daily coming in from the Archipelago and the Black Sea, laden with foreign or domestic produce, an imperfect idea may be formed of the incessant movement by which this scene is animated."

"After what has been said of the external grandeur of this wonderful City," says Dr. Clarke, (ii. 4, 5,) "the reader is, perhaps, ill prepared for a description of the interior; the horror, the wretchedness, and the filth of which are not to be conceived. Its streets are narrow, dark, ill-paved, and full of holes and ordure. In the most abominable alleys of London or of Paris there is nothing so revolting. They more resemble the interior of common sewers than public streets. The putrifying carcases of dead dogs, with immense heaps of filth and mud, obstruct a passage through them. Owing to the inequalities and holes in the narrow causeway, it is almost impossible to proceed without danger of putting an ancle out of joint. We landed at Galata, in the midst of dunghills, where a number of large, lean, mangy dogs, some with whelps, wallowing in the mire, and all of them covered with dirt, were sprawling or feeding: as they were roused by our coming on shore, the noise became so great that we could not hear each other speak."

This description, though substantially true, is rather highly coloured; the larger streets are very passable on horseback, if not on foot, and the dogs are not everywhere so noisy and troublesome as at the landing place of Galata. There are also some modern, and the remains of several ancient buildings, within the walls of Constantinople, which will gratify the stranger's curiosity, and compensate for the nuisances by which he is incommoded.

The first objects which attract his attention on the approach by land, are the Seven Towers, and the massive walls which stretch across to the shore of the harbour. They were built in sixty days, by command of Theodosius the Younger, (A. D. 447,) in order to replace those of Constantine, which had been ruined by an earthquake in the preceding year: and "are still," says M. Lechevalier, (i. 103,) "in a wonderful state of preservation." They are double, enclosed by a ditch twenty-five feet wide, and separated by an interval of eighteen feet. The inner wall is the highest, and both are flanked by a row of "mural towers," 250 in number, according to Gyllius, (Constantinop.

Topographia, lib. i. c. 19.) "The same promiscuous assemblage of the works of ancient art—columns, inscriptions, bas-reliefs, &c. seen in the walls of all the Greek cities, is here," says Dr. Clarke, (viii. 175,) "remarkably conspicuous: but the ivy-mantled towers, and the great height of this wall, added to its crumbling, ruined state, give it a picturesque appearance exhibited by no other city in the Levant: it resembles a series of old ruined castles, extending for five miles, from sea to sea." The walls towards the Sea of Marmora are lower, single, and remarkable only for their solidity; they are also flanked with towers, and approach very near to the edge of the water; in many places not leaving room even for a foot-way. They were rebuilt in the first half of the IXth century by the Emperor Theophilus, whose name appears in many inscriptions still seen in different parts of them. The Cyclopean walls of Byzantium, so clearly described by Herodian in his History of Severus, (l. iii.) are no longer discernible, though traces of them might, perhaps, be discovered, if the precincts of the Seraglio could be examined. The magnitude and circumference of the area enclosed by the walls of Constantinople, have been variously estimated. The oblong figure, formed by the body of the city, when its angles have been pared off, says Gyllius, (i. 4,) is somewhat more than one mile in breadth, and three in length; the circuit not quite thirteen. Bondelmonte, whose exactness M. Lechevalier praises, (i. 103,) reckons six miles from Aivân-serâï to Seraglio Point; seven from that point to the Seven Towers, and five from these to the point whence he sets out. "Son évaluation n'est pas rigoureusement exacte;" adds M. Lechevalier, and according to his map, the first of those distances measures about 9450 toises, (2613 fathoms,) the second 3800, (4053 fathoms,) and the third 3300, (3599 fathoms;) giving 9550 toises, (10,196 fathoms,) for the whole circumference. Estimated, therefore, in common miles and round numbers, the Northern side of the triangle will be rather less than three miles; the Southern rather more than four and and a half; and the Western exactly four miles; eleven and a half miles being the amount of the whole circuit.

The New, like the Ancient Rome, was said to be built upon seven hills, though, more correctly speaking, there are only two hills included within its circuit: the first is the long ridge, which is terminated by the headland, now called Seraglio Point, (Serdî Burni,) the Bosporian Promontory, or Golden Horn, (Chrysoceras,) of the Ancients; and the other a low hill, with a broad level summit, called Xerolophos by the Greeks. The latter occupies the south-western angle, and nearly one-third of the whole area. (Gyllius, i. 18.) These two heights are separated by a wide and deep valley, running in a north-westerly direction, parallel with the harbour called the Golden Horn. The surface of the northern range is very unequal; the declivity towards the valley just described being steep and nearly uniform; while the summit forms a series of six hills, rising one above the other, from Seraglio Point to the western boundary of the city, and separated on the northern side by vallies of different widths, which gradually open towards the shore of the harbour. The whole is enclosed by a belt of level ground, which varies much in width. These six peaks or hummocks on the northern ridge, together with the Xerolophos, on the southern side of the valley, form the seven hills of the Second Rome, which has been so often compared with those of the first. They also serve as an excellent clue to the stranger, in his search for the monuments of its ancient grandeur, still scattered over this labyrinth of narrow winding streets and purblind alleys.

Seven Towers.

On approaching Constantinople by the Sea of Marmora, the first object that strikes the eye is the fortress of the Seven Towers, (Yedi Cullehler and Heptapyrgion;) an irregular pentagon flanked with five round towers at the angles, and two square ones of an enormous size on each side of the western entrance. Its almost circular form gave it the name of Cyclobion, which occurs in the Byzantine historians, and it was probably commenced in the latter half of the Xth century. It was ruined by Paleologus, in order to show his contempt for Cantacuzenus, who vainly boasted that he had rendered it impregnable; and it was rebuilt by Mohammed II. after the fall of Constantinople; since which period it has been considered as a sort of citadel by the Turks, though originally nothing more than an out-work to protect the Golden Gate; a sort of triumphal arch, erected by Theodosius the Younger, in commemoration of his defeat of the tyrant Maximus, in A. D. 388. The name of this Gate was probably derived from the gilding on its columns and an inscription, long since obliterated, but characteristic of the degraded taste which then prevailed.

Gates.

Hæc loca Theodosius decorat post fata tyranni:
Aurea Sæcla gerit qui portam construit auro.

As this Gate is within the enclosure of the Seven Towers, the State prison of the Turkish Empire, it has usually been inaccessible to Europeans; nor was its existence known till Messrs. Lechevalier and Kauffer, two officers in the French service of Engineers, obtained an introduction to the Governor of that prison. A triumphal arch, placed between two large marble towers, and ornamented with Corinthian pilasters, in a moderate style of sculpture, was the first object which attracted their notice. Few persons will be disposed to doubt that this is the Gate of Theodosius; though it must be acknowledged that M. Lechevalier seems to have adopted his opinion rather hastily: nor is it clear that this is the Gate of the Seven Towers, described by Gyllius, (iv. 9,) who took that called Kapaneu Kapoussi in Lechevalier's plan for the Porta Aurea of the Ancients, (iv. 8.) Meletius, however, whose authority is of some weight, expressly says, (i. sec. 18. ch. xxviii. 10,) that the Gate of the Seven Towers, then closed, was that adorned by Theodosius, whom he erroneously calls the Great. Gyllius (iv. 9) describes six bas-reliefs on each side of a gate, then closed up, but near the Seven Towers, which it is clear he supposed to be the Porta Aurea. These sculptures, he says, were in the best style, (antiquum opus summo artificio factum:) it is singular that no other traveller should have noticed them, and that M. Lechevalier should have entirely overlooked this passage in the Topographia Constantinopoleos. The Tóp Kapí, or Gate of St. Romanus, now walled up. It derives its present name (Cannon Gate) from the bombardments sustained in different attacks by the Turks, particularly in that which completed the subversion of the Byzantine Empire, and it was through this Gate that Mohammed II. made his triumphal entrance into his new Capital.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

On the southern side of the City the gate of Dáúd Páshá (Dáúd Páshá Capú-sí) may be noticed as being probably that of St. Amillianus, which, according to some of the latter Byzantine historians, was the western boundary of the City, in the time of Constantine; but Gyllius, (i. 3,) has given some good reasons for calling the authority of these writers in question.

There is nothing very remarkable in any of the twelve gates towards the harbour, two of which have been walled up by the Turks; but it may be useful to observe, that the Chifút Capú-sí, or Jew's Gate, of the Turks, is probably the Porta Neorii, or Dock Gate, of the Greeks, and the point whence a chain was stretched across to Galata, the Regio Sycena of the lower empire. The Greeks now call this gate Horæa, (Ὡραία,) or the Beautiful.

The Regio Sycena, comprehending a considerable portion of the suburbs on the north side of the harbour, formed the fourteenth of the Districts into which Constantine divided his New City, in imitation of ancient Rome; the Turks have made many more subdivisions, each named from the principal building within its limits; as the Suleïmaniyyéh Mahalleh-sí, Válideh Sultán Mahalleh-sí, &c. An idea of the general appearance of the town may be collected from the passages cited above; and a still more distinct notion will be formed, if the reader pictures to himself groups of houses two stories high, with windows almost innumerable, and projecting roofs inclined at a small angle, closely resembling those which adorn every landscape on a Chinese skreen or tea-tray. An English traveller who was reflecting upon this resemblance, as he stood on the deck of the vessel which carried him into the harbour of Constantinople, was not a little amused on hearing the mate of the ship, who just came up from below a few minutes afterwards, exclaim in the instant that he saw the town, "What a queer place is this! It's for all the world like Canton in China." But the Chinese town is probably much more gay in its appearance. None but the Sultán himself and his most favoured servants are allowed, by the Sumptuary laws of Turkey, to adorn their houses with gay, lively, or various colours; a rusty brown or some other dismal hue is the only one which a prudent subject can venture to lay on; and were it not for the circles inscribed with Máshá 'llah, (God's will be done!) in the centre of the cornice, tablets containing texts of the Korán at the corner of the house, to ward off the effects of the evil eye, and ornaments round the window frames which break the uniformity of the whole, nothing could be more gloomy and monotonous than the prospect presented by a Turkish town. But the charms of shade under a burning sun, and the almost indispensable necessity of extensive gardens, in countries in which women of the higher classes have so little power of enjoying air and exercise beyond the walls of their own habitations, have caused the Turks to leave no spot unoccupied where trees could be planted; nor is there any city in the world, perhaps, where the line of buildings is more frequently interrupted by rich masses of foliage. The swelling domes and tapering minarets of the mosques which crown every eminence, together with the large latticed windows, leaving scarcely any vacant interval in the upper stories of the houses, give an air of lightness to the whole, which the Turkish style of building is, on a nearer view, little calculated to produce.

General aspect.

"The houses of private individuals," says M. Mouradgea d'Ohsson, (iv. 238,) "are called Ev; those of the great, especially the officers of State, Cónác or Kháneh, and none but the palaces of the Sultán and Grand Vezír are termed Serâï, whence Europeans have formed the word Seraglio. The former is called by the Turks Serâï Húmayún; the latter Serâï Sadr Aálí, the Palace of the Prime Minister; or Páshá Capú-sí, the Páshá's Gate;" a term which is applied to the residence of all the Ministers of State: thus they speak of the Defterdár Capú-sí, the Aghà Capú-sí, &c. as we say the Foreign-office, War-office, &c.; the gate of his palace being the place where the court of each functionary was anciently held, and his official business transacted

These are the only buildings which are allowed to be ornamented externally. They are the Sultán's property, and therefore not liable to the Sumptuary law; but except the Cónác of the Aghà of the Janissaries, few can be said to be adorned; and the style of ornament is as frail and perishable as the honours of those who possess this envied privilege. Walls, whether of wood or stone, stuccoed and painted to look like particoloured marble; cornices covered with festoons of flowers; landscapes in the vacant spaces in a style considerably below that of sign-painting with us; and eaves richly carved and gilt are the decorations of these palaces, and of the country-houses of European residents, who are no longer restricted as they were in the days of Busbequius. It need scarcely be added, that this gaudy coat soon disappears under the frost and rains of winter, as well as the blistering sun in summer.

Pious dations

As charity is strictly enjoined by the code of Mohammed, and the necessity of endowing pious foundations has been deduced from various texts of the written and oral law, large sums are continually expended on the erection of Mosques, Hospitals, Caravanserais, Schools, and Colleges, and there is a vast number of such edifices in the Turkish Capital. But utility and not external show is the object of these establishments; few of them, therefore, are distinguished by any outward ornament, except some trellis-work and gilding on the pent-house roof over the entrance, and a long inscription in gilt letters, recording the founder's name and the date of the building.

These foundations, called Vacufs by the Turks, are generally provided with ample revenues, rarely, if ever, touched by the agents of Government; though under a despot nothing can be absolutely secure; and it is affirmed, with much appearance of truth, that the present Páshá of Egypt (Mohammed Alí) has seized upon the revenues of the Mosques and medrésehs in the most daring manner. This, however, if true, is almost unprecedented, and no property is considered at Constantinople as more secure than that devoted to such purposes. The wealthy Greeks therefore generally make over their lands and houses to some Mosque or Imáret, on condition of retaining them on a sort of tenure, paying a small quit-rent annually, and being liable to fine on the death of the present occupant or transfer into other hands.

Mosq

The Mosques, though not liable to the Sumptuary laws, have seldom much external splendour; more, however, than any other public buildings. They frequently form one side of a spacious quadrangle, surrounded by a corridore, and ornamented with a basin and jet-d'eau in the centre. The decorations of the arches and portals are in a style approaching to that of the Moorish buildings in Spain; but the capitals as well as the columns themselves are generally the spoils of Grecian or Christian Temples. Many of the Mosques at Constantinople were Christian Churches; but none of that class are remarkable for their architecture except Ayà Sofiyah, (Ἡ Ἁγία Σοφία, Sancta Sophia,) which has sustained little alteration since it was first purged of its idolatrous ornaments, according to the Turkish historians, by Mohammed II. The mosaics on its roof are still visible, and would be more so, but for their great elevation and the "dim religious lights" under the dome in the centre of the edifice, the sides of which they adorn; some inscriptions of the same age and date are also legible. Its exterior is striking but not beautiful: placed on the summit of the first hill, in a most commanding position, its capacious and singularly oblate dome, crowning a multitude of clumsy hemispheres and buttresses, rising one above the other, form an astonishing mass of building which is everywhere conspicuous. Its form is that of a Greek cross, measuring 270 feet from east to west, and 240 from north to south. There are two vestibules; the first of which was the narthex appropriated to the penitents, who were prohibited from advancing further; and the second is the proper entrance, from which nine gates of bronze, covered with bas-reliefs, lead into the body of the church. Forty columns, unequal in their dimensions and the value of their materials, support sixty smaller ones, which enclose a spacious gallery (gynæceum) anciently appropriated to the women. Four enormous pillars connected by large arcades support the dome, the first structure of the kind ever attempted. Its diameter is 105 feet, with a perpendicular depth only of 18, and an elevation of 165 above the floor of the building. The Turks are persuaded that it is formed of pumice-stone. It is lighted by twenty-four narrow windows between arches of mosaic work, standing in rows over each other, and gradually diminishing to the summit of the semicircle by which they are all bounded. The recess under the hemisphere, at the eastern end of the church, was anciently the altar and is now the mihráb, (or place in which the officiating Imam stands with his face turned towards Mecca.) The story, that the conqueror, Mohammed, rode into this church on horseback on the day of the capture of the City, is inconsistent with the respect paid by Musulmen to places of worship, and is unsupported by the testimony of the Turkish historians; nor is anything of the kind said in the oratorical invective of Cardinal Isidore. (Clarke's Travels, iii. Appendix, No. 11. p. 381.) The vast dimensions of the edifice, rendered more striking perhaps by the imperfect light which makes its way through the small and ill-glazed windows, leave an impression on the mind which can scarcely be felt in any other place; but there is nothing like decoration or ordinary architectural beauty to charm the eye; and the few ornaments added by the Turks, such as tablets round the dome containing the names of the four first Khalifs, and the minber or pulpit, from which the Khutbah (prayer for the Sultán) is delivered, are in a wretched taste, calculated only to counteract the effect produced by the gloom and solemnity of the edifice which they disfigure. The 19th plate in Mouradgea d'Ohsson's Tableau Général de l'Empire Ottoman, gives an admirable representation of the interior; and Grelot's prints, though coarse, are faithful, and show the details of the building both within and without. The Tájút-tevaríkh recites some ridiculous legends, which show the veneration in which the Turks hold this Mosque, and account for its distinctive privileges; such as that of being the only one from the minarets of which the Temjíd can be chanted, at the commencement of Ramazán, (Tab. de l'Emp. Ott. ii. 354.)

CONSTANTINOPLE.

Sultan Ahmet and Soolaimanea.

The Mosques most worthy of notice after Sta. Sophia are, that of Sultán Ahmed, and the Suleïmániyyéh; the first, erected by Ahmed I., on one side of the At-meïdán, in A. H. 1018, (A. D. 1609,) is one of the most splendid of the Royal Jámís; and the second, built by Suleïmán, the law-giver, in A. H. 957, (A. D. 1550,) occupies nearly the whole summit of the third hill; Edito loco, says Busbequius, (Ep. iii. p. 150,) unde in mare patet amœnus quidem sed longinquus despectus, ac longe oculis objectum habeas Olympum Asiæ montem perpetuâ nive candidum. It contains the mausoleum of its founder, and is regarded with the highest reverence by the Turks. The most elegant of all the Mosques, perhaps, is that of the Sultán Válideh, mother of Mohammed IV., not far from the Custom-house.

Fountains.

To supply the wants of the necessitous is a virtue, as was before remarked, observed by every true Musulman; and the traveller in Turkey can scarcely advance a step without meeting some monument of the munificence of past generations. Many an agazma (Ἁγίασμα, a fountain) will supply him with a refreshing draught—in an unfrequented path where there are scarcely any other traces of the works of man; and every town is crowded with these and similar foundations calculated to relieve the indigent and to promote the performance of religious duties.

The Capital, most particularly, besides the many splendid and spacious Mosques with which it is adorned, can boast of Hospitals, Alms-houses, Schools, Colleges, and Public Libraries, such as rival the rich endowments made by the Khalifs of Bāghdad and Caïro, and surpass any now existing in other parts of the Mohammedan world.

Alms-houses and Hospitals.

At the Imárets, or Alms-houses, food and money are daily distributed either to students in the Schools and Colleges, or to a fixed number of distressed persons; two dishes of hot meat, with bread and vegetables, and four or five aspers, (acchahs,) about a halfpenny of our money. There are imárets attached to most of the Imperial Mosques; but that of Sultán Mohammed, on the summit of the fourth hill, is particularly deserving of notice. Thirty thousand persons are said to receive a daily allowance of food there. The mosques of Báyazìd, (Bajazet,) Selím and Suleïmán are remarkable for the Hospitals (tabú kháneh) built within their circuit: several of the inferior Mosques also have similar establishments; in some of which all patients are admitted whether Christians or true believers. Each of these buildings can receive from 150 to 300 sick persons, who are fed and nursed but not attended by medical advisers. The tímár, or rather bímár-kháneh, attached to the Mosques of Mohammed, Suleïmán and Ahmed, are receptacles for the insane; and those of the Chínís-lí and Khásseki Jámís are appropriated to women thus afflicted. The Schools (mektebú) and Colleges (médréseh,) are usually attached to the Mosques, and occupy one or more sides of the quadrangle in front of those buildings; but they are rarely distinguished by any architectural Schools and Colleges.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

ornaments, and are almost exclusively devoted to such studies as are required from a proficient in Law or Theology. The Turks, however, are not ignorant of the value of other sciences; nor are their Public Libraries restricted to books on Theological subjects. Ethics and Metaphysics, Logic, Rhetoric and Poetry, Algebra, and Geometry, Astronomy, Geography and History have been successfully cultivated by many Mohammedans, and works treating on these subjects are to be found in every considerable collection. Constantinople possesses thirty-five of these useful foundations: the most distinguished are those attached to Imperial Mosques; but there are several placed apart from any religious foundation, and therefore more accessible to Christians. Such are the Kitáb-khánehs, or book-rooms of Sultán Abdu'l Hamíd; of Kupri-lí Ahmed, Páshá and Rághib Páshá, both Grand Vezirs, and those of Atif and Ishmâil Efendi. Some of these collections contain 5000 volumes. The rooms fitted up to receive the books are decorated with much neatness and elegance, as may be seen in M. Mouradgea's plates, (Tableau Gén. de l'Emp. Ott. plate 32 and 33.) They are open on every day in the week except Tuesday and Friday; and the visitors are allowed to read and make extracts from any book they please. These collections are continually augmented by the surplus of funds arising from the original endowment, or by donations from individuals. There are also within the walls of the Seraglio two Libraries, said to contain more than 1500 volumes. One founded by Ahmed III., A. D. 1719, the other by Mustafá III., A. D. 1707. They are open to all the officers of the Court; and it was into the latter of these two that Professor Carlyle was admitted, in A. D. 1800; but he found, as he expected, nothing like a Greek or Latin MS. (Walpole's Memoirs on Turkey, i. 168.) The Theological Treatises, as may be supposed, greatly exceeded in number those on other subjects, amounting altogether to the celebrated number of 666; while there were only forty-two Historical works; seventy-nine on the Belles Lettres; and thirty-one on Medicine. Some trouble and much disappointment would have been spared, had the Professor looked into a very common book, the Tract De Fatis linguarum Orientalium, from which he would have learned (p. 88,) that the library in the Khasné, (Khazínehi Ámireh, the Public Treasury,) was founded only in 1720, (A. H. 1132.) Ráshid, the Historian, quoted by the Baron de Jenisch, says, indeed, that all the books kept in the Treasury were removed into the Library; but he evidently speaks of such books only as the Turks could read. It is not, however, impossible after all that has been said and done about these supposed reliques of "the Library of the Cæsars," that some volumes may be still extant in the subterranean recesses of the Seraglio. The Turks allow the monuments of antiquity to fall to ruin, but they seldom destroy any thing: and Mr. Barthold, formerly one of the dragomans at Constantinople, declared that an eminent Greek merchant assured him that he had seen books from the library of the Paleologi in one of the chambers of the Sultán's Treasury, when admitted for the purpose of ascertaining the value of various articles in gold and silver, which the Government wished to send to the Mint.

Libraries.

Another appendage to the Imperial Mosques is the turbeh or shrine of its Royal founder. Many of these buildings display the utmost splendour and elegance, of which an Oriental architect has any conception. A small circular or octagon chamber covered by a dome, and lighted on all sides by large windows of a grotesque pattern, and screened by gilt trellis-work, contains the sacred deposit. In the centre of the room, immediately over the spot where the corpse is buried, the sandúcah or coffin is placed, covered with a rich pall, upon which texts of the Korán are embroidered in gold characters; some fragments of the hangings of the kábeh and the turban of the deceased being laid at the head, and the whole enclosed by a rail inlaid with mother-of-pearl. The dervishes who are employed in praying for the soul of the departed Prince, are lodged in cells round an adjoining quadrangle, and employed by turns, day and night, in telling their beads and repeating the customary prayers.

Sepulchral chapels.

Seventeen of these turbehs are enumerated by M. Mouradgea, and a superb one was erected at Iyyúb by Selím III., in honour of his mother, several years after the Tableau Général was published. Some of those in Constantinople are represented in his plates; but that of the Válideh Terkhán, mother of Mohammed IV., (pl. 26,) is the largest of all.

Fountain

The numerous fountains, some of them splendidly decorated, are among the first objects which catch the stranger's eye. They are conduits, or reservoirs with basins, into which streams of spring water flow; and over them are tablets adorned with gilt or coloured mosaics on a dark blue ground, and long inscriptions in gilt letters recording the name of the founder, and the date of the foundation.

Convents.

The convents (Tekkiyehs, Záviyehs, or Khánckás,) are generally plain unornamented buildings, but deserve to be visited on account of the singular dances and sleight-of-hand tricks practised by the dervishes their inhabitants, who by thus astonishing the multitude, and exciting their pity and veneration, the more easily secure the eleemosynary contributions upon which they subsist.

Baths.

Few public institutions strictly Turkish in their origin, are more agreeable to Europeans than the hammáms or baths. They contain three spacious apartments, one within the other, paved with marble, and lighted by holes in the dome above, fantastically shaped and filled with coloured glass. The first chamber is a vestibule where the attendants prepare the linen and other articles used by the bathers; round the second there are closets in which the visitors undress, and fasten round their waists the peshtumál, a thin covering which hangs down to the ancles; into the third when thus stripped the bather enters, having high wooden clogs on his feet, to protect them from the floor, which is heated by the vapours from a cauldron immediately beneath. Water either hot or cold, as required, is conveyed by different pipes into marble basins along the sides of the room, and the bather is stretched out upon a raised platform, where the attendant scours him well with cold and warm water, rubbing him over with keffeh-kil, a perfumed saponacious earth, and removing all superfluous hairs, which the Turks hold in great abhorrence. Notwithstanding these baths are frequented by numbers of persons at the same time, every thing is conducted with the strictest regard to decency. Men and women are not, of course, admitted at the same hours; they are open to the latter in the day time, and to the former at night. A clean shirt is thrown over the bather, and a handkerchief tied round his head, as soon as his ablution has been completed; and he returns into the antichamber, called Jámekán, (dressing-room,) where a clean bed is ready for him, and he falls into a refreshing slumber accompanied by a luxurious sensation of repose scarcely conceivable by those who have never enjoyed it. C'est une sorte de régénération, says Mouradgea, (ii. 63,) dont le charme est encore augmenté par des boissons restaurantes, et surtout par un café exquis. Shampooing is seldom used by the Turks, except for women who have lately been confined.

Most of the large areas in Constantinople are occupied by Mosques; but one, equally celebrated by the Turkish and the Byzantine historians, which still remains open, is used for its original purposes, and retains its old appellation; for At-meïdán is a literal translation of Hippodrome, and that place is as much the scene of public ceremonies and political cabals among the present, as it was among the ancient inhabitants of this Capital. This spacious course is 1250 feet long, and 750 wide, and still retains three very remarkable monuments of the ancient magnificence of the Cæsars. The pyramid which was cased in bronze by Constantine Porphyrogennitus; the Egyptian obelisk erected in the time of Theodosius; and, far the most venerable of all, the three twisted serpents which formed the basis of the tripod consecrated at Delphi, after the defeat of Xerxes, nearly five centuries before the commencement of our era. There are few monuments of antiquity, as Gibbon has observed, (ii. c. 17. n. 48,) the history and age of which are so distinctly recorded as this. The heads of the serpents were extant in the time of Gyllius, (ii. c. 13. p. 130. ed. Elz.) which would alone be sufficient to contradict the well-known story of their having been broken by a blow of Mohammed the Conqueror's mace; had not Chishull and La Motraye, who were on the spot at the time, ascribed the injury of this fine monument to the attendants of a Polish Ambassador, who was lodged in the Hippodrome.* The whole of one of the sides of that spacious quadrangle is occupied by the Mosque of Sultán Ahmed, also called Altí Minárch-lí, from its six minarets. "It is," says M. Lechevalier, (i. 12. 8,) "beyond all dispute the finest Mosque which the Turks ever erected."

The Chárshís and Bezestëins, or bázárs, as they are called in Persia and India, will amply repay the trouble of visiting them. The latter are spacious edifices of solid masonry, divided into a number of galleries, on each side of which there are warehouses, which are hired by merchants and tradesmen. Two Kiayàs, or Deputies, appointed by the Government, superintend the management of these repositories, and answer for any theft or disorder committed within their walls. They are all fire-proof, and are the places wherein wealthy Turks deposit their most valuable property, and where public sales by auction are held. The former, or Chárshís, are used for the retail trade; they are therefore the Turkish markets; "an immense assemblage of shops," says Mouradgea, (iv. 210,) "where all the different trades are carried on, and almost every thing requisite for food, clothing, or furniture, may be purchased." These endless rows of stalls on each side of a covered street, wherein the article is often manufactured as well as sold, present a constant succession of novel objects; and the motley throng, drawn together by the variety of articles here exposed to sale, is no less amusing and instructive. Sedate Turks, saturnine Armenians, mercurial Greeks, swaggering Ghaliyon-jís, saucy Franks, thin-bearded Arabs, Bostan-jís, with their long-tailed scarlet caps, dervíshes crowned with dirty extinguishers, are all crowded together, each driving his own bargain, and betraying by his physiognomy and gestures, the characteristics of his calling, nation, and habits. The Kháns are something like our Inns of Court; there are about forty of them in Constantinople, in some one of which every considerable merchant or banker has his office; women are never allowed to enter within the walls of these buildings, day or night, unless the Khánjé, or Odà-bashí, (the Superintendant or his Deputy,) are present. The Válidéh Khání, Vezír Khání, Yení Khání, and Chárahjí-ler Khání are the most considerable. The Caravanserâls are rows of small chambers opening into a square court, built for the accommodation of travellers, who obtain one or two rooms for a small gratuity; their cattle being lodged below, or in an adjoining stable.

The other remains of antiquity, and objects deserving of notice, which a traveller is anxious to see, occur in the following order; but it must not be supposed that they can all be visited in a single day. On entering by the gate opposite to the Yáli-kóshk, (or Summer-house on the shore,) a rapid ascent along the walls of the Seraglio (Serâi-humáyún) leads to the summit of the first hill; one of the last streets, on the right, leads to the Yereh-batán, near which is the site of the Cisterna Basilica, containing 336 columns in the time of Gyllius, (Topog. Constant. ii. 20,) but now a vacant cavity; on turning an angle of the Seraglio-wall, at the top of the hill, the majestic Mosque of Sta. Sophia appears, and behind it the Bábi-humáyún (Sublime Porte,) or entrance of the Seraglio, which covers the whole area of the ancient Byzantium; a little to the right, somewhat further on, is the Arslán-kháneh, or Menagerie, an ancient building, supposed to be the Church of St. Chrysostom; and just beyond it is the Mosque of Sultán Ahmed, (Achmet,) in a large square, of which the north-western boundary forms one side of the At-meïdán, where the column, obelisk, and twisted serpents, just noticed, are still left, as if to remind the Greeks of the glory of their forefathers. A street, passing nearly in a straight line from the

* Clarke's Travels, iii. 76. The Ambassador was Raphael Leszczynski, (Leshtchynski,) Count of Lesno, (or Lissa,) a Palatinate of Posen, (Posnania,) father of the amiable and unfortunate Stanislaus, who was for a short time (1704—9,) seated on the throne of Poland. Count Raphael Leszczynski made his public entry into Constantinople in April, 1700, as Ambassador from the king, [Augustus, Elector of Saxony,] and Republic of Poland, (Aubry de la Motraye's Travels, (London, 1723,) i. 205.) The first writer who notices the injury done to this column is Du Loir, who saw it in 1640; a Jew, whom he seems to have considered as one of the sçavans du pays, told him que c'estoit un talisman contre la Peste, but that, depuis qu'un Grand Seigneur en courant avoit rompu la maschoire de l'un de ces serpens avec sa masse d'armes la contagion avoit fait de continuels ravages. (Voyages, Paris, 1654. p. 53.) The earlier travellers mention the vulgar notion of this column being a talisman against serpents, but say not a word of its having been broken, and as 'Master Henry Blunt, gentleman,' who was at Constantinople only six years before Du Loir, (in 1634,) is silent on the subject, (Travels, p. 25,) the first blow was probably given in that interval. It was only the lower jaw which was injured in Thevenot's time, (1645,) (Voyage du Levant, p. 41.) The story is most distinctly told in a very rare book, Nagy de Harsany's Colloquia Familiaria, (Colon. Brandenburg. 1672. 8vo.) and it is there said distinctly, quorum uni (id est, ex serpentibus) inferiorem mandibulam, Sultan Mahumedes, clavâ confregit.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

Burnt Pillar.

north end of the At-meïdán, leads to the summit of the second hill, and is terminated by the Colonna Bruciata, or Burnt Column, the shaft of which is thirty-three feet in circumference, and stands on a pedestal eighteen feet high. It is formed of five blocks of porphyry, of which the junctures are concealed by wreaths of laurel. (Busbequii Epist. i. 68. ed. Elzevir.) It was originally eighty feet in height, and was surmounted by a fine statue of Apollo; but the statue and the three upper blocks were struck with lightning and thrown down in the reign of Alexius Commenus, who replaced them by several layers of stone in as wretched style, as that in which the Turks have repaired the pedestal. To the south-east of this monument, at a small distance, is an ancient reservoir, erroneously supposed to be the Cisterna Maxima; it is now converted into a workshop for silk-spinners. Following the ridge which unites the second and third hills, just on the verge of the latter, we come to the Mosque of Sultán Báyazìd, (Bajazet,) and after descending the northern declivity, pass by his Turbeh, or sepulchral chapel; the Láleh-lí Jámí, or Tulip Mosque, and near it another cistern, sustained by eighty marble columns, six feet ten inches distant from each other. This was the Cistern of Apsaris, near the walls built by Constantine, which began near the gate of Dáúd Páshá. This reservoir was made in the reign of the Emperor Leo, and the Búdrún Jámí-sí (Mosque of Búdrún,) near it was part of the Convent of Myrelaos. (Gyllius, iii. 8; Meletii Geogr. iii. 93; Lechevalier, 108.) Returning by the Turbeh of Báyazìd, and ascending the ridge between the third and fourth hills, on the summit of which are the Janissaries' barracks, and the Sháhzádeh Jámí-sí, (Prince's Mosque,) a short street passing along the eastern side of it leads to the Búzdughán-kemerí, or aqueduct of Valens, probably first erected by Adrian, ruined by the Avares, A. D. 618, restored by Constantine Copronymus in the latter half of the VIIth century, and entirely rebuilt by Suleïmán the Magnificent in the XVIth. It consists of a double row of pointed arches, formed, like the walls, of alternate layers of brick and stone, and executed in a bad taste. It communicates with another fine aqueduct, nearly 770 feet in length, near Burghàz, a few miles to the west of Constantinople. These aqueducts convey the water of the River Hydralis to the highest parts of the City. The Búzdughán-kemerí terminates at the great Mosque of Sultán Mohammed on the ridge between the fourth and fifth hills; and a small distance to the east of it, on the northern declivity of the fourth hill, near the Chucúr-hammámí, there are the remains of another of the ancient reservoirs. A few yards further to the east is a church still retained by the Greeks, and between it and the Seïreh Jámí, the site of one of the largest cisterns, anciently supported by four rows of Corinthian columns, of which only two remain. That Mosque, called also Kilíseh Jámí (Church Mosque,) is supposed by M. Lechevalier (119,) to have been built on the site of the church of the Holy Apostles, represented by the Byzantine historians as the rival of Sta. Sophia; and just behind it, (not as Dr. Clarke has stated, by an oversight, near the Núr Osmání, iii. 49. 8vo. ed.) is the celebrated sarcophagus of red porphyry, called the Tomb of Constantine. From this Mosque a street, called Degirmen-zocáki, (Mill-street,) leads almost in a straight line down to the Un-capánì Capú-sí, (Granary Gate.) On the declivity at the back of the Mosque of Sultán Mohammed, near that of Ibráhím Páshá, is the Kiz-tásh or Column of Marcian; which has a shaft of granite fifteen feet high, and a capital of the Composite order, surmounted by a cube of white marble, once supporting the statue of Marcian. The inscription on its pedestal, copied by Wheler, is now scarcely discernible. The splendid Mosque of Sultán Selim I. occupies the whole area of one of the branches of the fifth hill, immediately overlooking the Fanàl or Greek Quarter, where the Patriarchal Church and most others have been left in the undisturbed possession of the Christians. Passing along the wall of the City on the shore of the harbour, from the Fener Capú-sí to the Balát Capú-sí, and crossing the valley between it and the nearest hill, the stranger arrives at the Tekir Serâì, on the-sixth hill, in a commanding position, overlooking the walls and the harbour. Pierre Gilles, (Topog. Constantinop. iv. 4. p. 292,) thinks that it was the Palace of Constantine, but M. Lechevalier (137,) says the style of its architecture is much too modern to justify such a supposition.

Cisterna Maxima.

Cistern of Apsaris.

Yení-cheri ódà-sí.

Bozdoghan Kemeri, or Aqueduct of Valens.

The seventh hill is separated from the other six by so wide an interval, and is so far removed from Galata and Pera, the only residence of Europeans in modern times, that its remains of antiquity seem to have been less examined than those of any other quarter. The most remarkable among them is the basis and a fragment of the Column of Arcadius, long one of the greatest ornaments of the City, and still perfect in the time of Gyllius and Busbequius. (Top. Constan. iv. 7; Busb. Ep. i. 68.) At the foot of this hill, on the south-western side, near the Mir-ákhúr Jámí-sí, there is an ancient cistern supported by twenty-four Corinthian columns of granite; and that Mosque itself, which was anciently the celebrated Monastery of Studius, still contains some large Corinthian pillars of the finest verd-antique.

Column of Arcadius.

The Quarter called Fanàl, (Τὸ φανάρι, and Fener,) or Light-house, is almost exclusively occupied by Greeks, and is the town-residence of their most distinguished families. It contains little that can interest the Antiquarian, except the manners, usages, and physiognomy of its inhabitants. It was in fact completely on the outskirts of the ancient City: and was far from a desirable abode, notwithstanding its proximity to the country; for the greater part of it is low, and so hemmed in by the City-walls, as to have neither a free circulation of air nor any extent of prospect. The hills and declivities on the contrary, particularly the area on the summit of the third hill, now the site of the Suleïmániyyeh, command a most extensive view, and enjoy every breeze from the Black Sea or the Propontis. The Greeks therefore after the fall of Constantinople, took refuge in the Fanàl, as an unenviable place of abode, from which they were in no danger of being displaced. Its churches, not excluding St. George, (ὁ Ἅγιος Γεώργιος,) the Patriarchal Cathedral, have no architectural ornament to boast of, and are falling to decay, as permission to repair them can only be purchased by large sums. The latter, however, possesses two pictures of the Virgin in mosaic, the chair of St. John Chrysostom inlaid with mother-of-pearl, and the pillar to which our Saviour was bound, when scourged before his crucifixion; reliques which attract crowds of votaries. Near the Vlakh Serái, or Palace of the Princes of Valachia, is the Cán-lí Kilíseh, (Bloody Fanal.

Church,) or Παναγία εἰς τὸ Μουχλεῖον, a church containing a spring sacred to the Virgin, with the title of Kémagulótissa, (Our Lady of the Cheek,) in allusion to a miraculous cure of the tooth-ache, performed by this water on one of the Greek Empresses.

Beyond the Phanári is the Quarter called Blachernæ (Αἱ Βλαχέρναι,) from a Barbarian who anciently reigned there, (Dionysius Byzant. in Periplo.) and not included within the walls till after the time of Justinian. (Gyll. Top. Const. iv. 5. p. 294.) Its fountain (Ἁγίασμα τῆς Βλαχερναίας,) is still celebrated for its miraculous powers, and a few wrecks may be traced which mark the site of the splendid church, celebrated by Procopius, (i. c. 3,) as one of the most splendid evidences of Justinian's piety.

About a mile beyond the Aiván-hisárí Capú-sí, the Palace Gate, (Aivásar Kapi or Xylóporta of the Greeks,) and the last towards the harbour, is the village of Eyyúb, (Job,) held in the highest veneration by the Turks, on account of its containing the tomb of one of their chief saints and martyrs, Khálid ibn Zeïd, Ebú Eyyúb, one of the Ensár, or partisans of Mohammed, when he was driven by the Koreïsh from Mecca. Eyyúb was afterwards Standard-bearer to Yezíd, son of the Khalif Moâwiyyah, and fell close to the walls of Constantinople, in A. H. 48, (A. D. 668,) in the first expedition made by the Musulmans against that City. (D'Ohsson, i. 304. ii. 518.) Like other Mohammedan Saints, he possessed a gift rarely claimed by the Prophet, the gift of prophecy, and foretold not only his death under Constantine, but the discovery of his tomb also by the Prince who should rescue the City of Constantine from the Unbelievers. Mohammed Fátih (i. e. the Conqueror) therefore commanded his spiritual directors, especially the most favoured among them, Ac Shemsu'd-dín, to offer up prayers in order to obtain this important revelation; these prayers, say the Turkish historians, were heard; and when the holy Shaikh, guided by a vision, led the Sultán to the desired spot in the suburbs, a stone was found on digging, which bore an inscription declaring that the body of Ebú Eyyúb el Ensárí was buried in that spot. Mohammed in pious gratitude immediately founded a Turbeh, (sepulchral church,) Jámi, (cathedral,) Médréseh, (college,) and Imáret, (alms-house,) in the immediate neighbourhood, (Táríkhi Nishánjí Páshá, and Cantemir, p. 106.) As soon as the Turbeh was finished, the Sultán visited it in grand procession, and after he had repeated a few prayers, a splendid sabre was solemnly girt about his loins by Ac Shemsu'd-dín; a ceremony which has ever since been performed for each of his successors, five or six days after the commencement of their reign. Other turbehs in memory of some of the latter Sultáns have also been erected near the holy sepulchre (Macbereh) of Eyyúb, as has been already noticed.

of the lea s.

Beyond Eyyúb there is only one village more (Bakarí-keuï,) on the side of the port so appropriately called the Golden Horn (Chrysoceras) by the Ancients; and of all the delightful excursions which Constantinople and its neighbourhood afford, there is none perhaps more gratifying, none certainly more easily executed, than a sail from the landing-place at Galata to the Sweet Waters, or Sapra-thalas-a, where this basin is formed by the junction of two small streams, anciently called Cydaris and Barbyses, but now simply the rivulets of Alí Bey and Kyat-hanàh (Kyághizkháneh) from villages on their banks. At the commencement of this little voyage, Constantinople and its suburbs rise on each side of the water, like the benches of a crowded and richly decorated amphitheatre; the domes and tapering minarets crowning every hill, with their gilded crescents, and glittering in the sun; the rich foliage of the trees interspersed among the houses; the gay fantastical kïosks, sometimes as fine as paint and tinsel can make them; the forests of towering cypresses presenting a solid mass of verdure, enriched by an endless variety of tints; and most of all, the innumerable vessels of every size and form gliding rapidly along, or moored to the wharfs, and thronged with passengers, more diversified in their accoutrements, features, and occupations, than the vehicles in which they are carried; form such an assemblage of novel and striking objects as is rarely witnessed in any other part of the globe. Just above Galata, where a creek opening to the dock-yard gives a glimpse of the Grand Signior's navy, it is a scene of constant movement. On the other side, the City-walls with their ivy-mantled towers and crumbling bastions, are seen at intervals between the rows of houses which generally line the shore. At the landing-place of Eyyúb the channel begins to narrow, and opposite to it the pretty village of Súd-lí-jeh is scattered over rich meadows, backed by rising grounds. As his boat advances the stranger finds himself gradually retreating from "the busy hum of men;" but the houses of Baharí-keuï still cover the eastern shore; and the opposite side of the water presents the appearance of a beautiful park, with here and there an airy kïosk or a solitary farm; but soon after passing the Mosque of Karà-aghách, and the shadowy trees from which it receives its name, he is suddenly transferred to the most undisturbed solitude. Lofty precipitous hills come down on each side to the water's edge; thick beds of rushes choak up its contracted channel, and the gradual bend of the stream has imperceptibly carried his boat beyond a headland, which completely intercepts every more distant object. The grassy cliffs, not diversified by a single tree or shrub, and apparently too steep to be ascended; the solemn silence of the place, unbroken except by the cry of a sea-bird, or the wind whistling through the rushes; and the wilderness of these mountains, where no traces of human labour are discerned; all combine to form so striking a contrast to the perpetually varying and animated scenes just witnessed, that the impression left upon the mind is such as the lapse of many years is wholly insufficient to obliterate.

The upper extremity of this estuary is divided into numerous channels by many small islands, and being beyond the reach of the almost imperceptible tides of the Mediterranean, its waters are always fresh, whence the European inhabitants of Pera have given it the name of Eaux Douces, or Sweet Waters. The plain, or rather vale of the Kyat-hanàh, (Paper-mill,) on its banks, of which Murádjah has given a faithful representation, (plate 84, Tabl. Gén. de l'Emp. Ott. iv. 185. 8vo. ed.) is a charming spot; the road to it, from Pera and Galata, leading through some of the prettiest villages in the neighbourhood, over hills continually placing the town and harbour in a fresh point of view.

Eaux Douces, or Sweet Waters.

At the water's edge, in the village of Pírí Páshá, is the Cannon-foundery for the army and navy, an establishment for which the Turks are indebted principally to France. The Mosque, whence this village derives its name, is called after its founder; probably the Preceptor of Suleïmán the Magnificent, who is said to have interceded so boldly in favour of the Grand Vezír whom his master had unjustly condemned to death.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

Oke-maidan.

On the heights between Pírí Páshá and Piyáleh Páshá is the Oc-meïdán, a large plain on which the Turkish cavaliers and archers delight to try their skill; as is evidenced by the many white stones scattered over the ground, and marking the greatest distances to which jerìds have been thrown. In the bottom of the valley below the Oc-meïdán, is the Tersánah, (Arsenal) or Dock-yard, near which is the Captain Páshá's Palace, (Capúdán Páshá Serâï.) "Selím I.," says M. Lechevalier, (224,) "was the founder of this useful establishment." It was built in A. H. 922, (A. D. 1516,) but was never placed on a level with those of the western European powers, till under the care of the daring Hasan Páshá, who might be said to have served his apprenticeship among the Corsairs of Algiers, and his deserving successor Kuchub Huseïn, whose tombs are near that of the Válideh Sultán at Eyyúb. Close to the Tersánah are the ruins of the Ainah-lee Cavac.

Tersanà.

Ainah-lí Cavác, (Kïosk of Mirrors,) erected by Ahmed III. for the reception of the fine mirrors sent to him by the Venetians after the peace of Passarowitz, (A. D. 1718.) This banquetting-house has acquired a sort of historical interest from being the theatre of the negociations (A. D. 1783) by which the strongest bulwarks of the Empire were ceded to Russia.

The whole of this neighbourhood is calculated to remind the Turks of their naval heroes. Here is the Mosque and Bázár of Piyáleh Páshá, one of their greatest Admirals, and the conqueror of Scio, (A. H. 973, A. D. 1565,) who held his appointment fourteen years, and gave his name to the next village on the road to Pera; and in the enclosure round the Jámí of the adjoining village, called Cásim Páshá, is his tomb. To the founder of that village Galata owes its prosperity under the Turks. He was a great General, and a favourite of Suleïmán I., who sanctioned his establishment of a new colony in Galata, as well as the sums expended in its embellishment. The principal magazine of marine stores, the Captain Páshá's Palace, and the barracks for seamen (Ghaliyón-jís) are all near the water-side in the village of Cásim Páshá.

Casim Pasha.

Pera.

It is separated from Pera only by the forests of cypresses which fill the Turkish burying-grounds, and some of its streets lend directly to the brow of the hill on which most of the European Ministers' residences stand. Pera derives its name (ἡ Πέραι) from the passage of the Gauls, when they crossed the Bosporus under Brennus; according to Meletius, (iii. 97;) and he adds that hence Galata (ὁ Γάλατᾶν) also received its appellation. Pera, indeed, appears never to have been mentioned except as a part of Galata, till it became the established residence of the Ambassadors to the Porte from Christian Powers. The Turks know it by no other title than the humble one of Dort-yolun-aghzì, or "The Four Vent Way." It consists of one main street running along the brow of the hill which overlooks the harbour, and several cross ones in almost every direction, as narrow and ill-paved, and filthy, and often as steep as can be imagined. Even the Palaces, as they are called, are generally structures of lath and plaster. They have, however, some appearance of regular architecture, particularly those of Venice, (now Austria and France.) The British Palace was commenced under very favourable auspices, on a magnificent plan by an Italian architect employed by Lord Elgin; but the expense of removing and smoothing the blocks of marble destined for its construction so far exceeded all calculation, that little more than the foundation had been laid before the sums mutually subscribed by the Turkish and English Governments had been absorbed, and an indifferent house of common materials was destined to be the superstructure raised on this costly basis.

Galat Serai the I Ogla

Galata Serâï, almost the only public building in this part of the suburbs, is a college for the Ich-oghláns, or "children of the interior." They were originally such children of Christian parents, taken in war, as appeared likely to be fit for the service of the Palace. They are carefully instructed in the Turkish, Arabic, and Persian languages, and are practised from their earliest years in horsemanship and athletic exercises; habituated to a servile dread of their superiors, and instantaneous obedience to their orders, so that when of a proper age they may be fitted for employments immediately about the person of the Sultán, who often inquires into their progress, and is present at their examinations and exercises.

Salee zary. Tope

At the foot of the hill on which the Galata Serâï stands is the Sálí Bázárí, or Tuesday's market, a dirty Quarter inhabited by Greeks and Turks, and Tóp-khanah (the Cannon-foundery) where there is the most convenient landing-place for persons going from Constantinople to Pera. A large square, in the centre of which is a fountain richly ornamented in the Turkish style, surrounded by coffee-houses shaded by trellises covered with vines, leads up the hill by a street inhabited by Chibría-jís, or pipe-makers, where the Mineralogist may find abundant specimens of Keffeh-gil, (Caffa earth) of which they make their pipe-bowls, (Clarke, viii. 152,) to the ancient walls of Galata and the circular tower (buyuk-kulleh) built by Anastasius, which commands so fine a prospect of the harbour, and is the spot whence one of our Panoramas was taken.

Meto

Just beyond Tóp-khanah is the point called Egrí-capú Burnù from the "Crooked Gate" of Galata hard by. This was the Metópon of the Greeks, as the Seraglio Point was their Acropolis, which together with Damalit, (the Head-land of Scútari) formed the entrance of the Golden Horn. The suburb of Galata formed the thirteenth district of the ancient City, and was called Sycæ, from the fig-trees with which it abounded. At the siege by sea and land, in the time of Michael the Stammerer, (A. D. 821,) the Emperor ordered the port to be closed by a chain carried from the Acropolis to a small town on the opposite shore; and so lately as the time of Pierre Gilles there was a gate in Galata called Catena, no doubt from its having been near the place to which this chain was rivetted. The only vestige of remote antiquity now remaining, is the garden of the Convent of Lazarists, which was once a spacious reservoir arched over, and having its roof supported by about 300 columns, according to the same writer, who speaks as if he had witnessed its dilapidation, (iv. 11. p. 329.) But Galata differs in many points from the other suburbs of Constantinople. Some of its streets are wide and rectilinear; advantages rarely regarded by the Asiatics; and its houses built of brick and stone, are constructed with a degree of solidity, as well as in a heavy style of masonry quite foreign to the taste and habits of the Greeks or Turks. Its walls also, in some places double, in others triple, bear the stamp of an age comparatively modern. They are like the work of the Genoese, who established themselves there in the beginning, and obtained permission to fortify their town, from Michael Paleologus, in the latter half of the XIIIth century, (Gibbon's Rom. Emp. vi. 156, &c.;) and appear to have ruled with undisputed sway till after the capture of Constantinople by the Turks.

Galat

ook-

The village of Fonduc-lí occupies the valley beyond Sálí-bázír, and, as has been already observed, continues the line of houses along the shore without any intermission; it might therefore be included in the suburbs of Constantinople; but upon the same principle they might be supposed to comprehend almost all the villages on the Bosporus; some limit therefore must be fixed, and none surely can be less exceptionable than that which excludes all the neighbouring villages, except those on either side of the harbour; thus embracing nearly the same compass as is included in the description of the city supposed to have been written in the times of Arcadius and Honorius.

rities

A complete catalogue of the writers who have illustrated Constantinople, Ancient and Modern, would in itself form a volume; all that can be admitted here, is a brief notice of the most valuable works which give information respecting it. I. Almost every thing relating to the Capital of the Byzantine Emperors will be found in the two following elaborate works; 1. Constantinopolis Christiana, by Dom Du Cange Dufresne, Lutetiæ, 1680, fol.; and 2. Anselmo Banduri's Imperium Orientale, Paris, 1711, 2 vols. fol. A valuable collection of Tracts concerning the Eastern Empire; containing among others (3.) the Topographia Constantinopolcos of Petrus Gyllius, first printed at Lyons, 1561, 4to., but more correctly, and in a more convenient form by the Elzevirs, at Leyden, 1632, 12mo. II. For an account of Constantinople under the Turks, the earliest authority is Gyllius, (1540—1550,) just mentioned; and the next is (2.) the illustrious Auger Gislen de Busbeck, (Busbequius) Ambassador from the Emperor to the Porte, from 1555 to 1561. His truly classical Epistles were reprinted by Elzevir at Leyden, in 1632, in 12mo. 3. Sandys's (1610,) Travels, 1621, fol. 4. Pietro della Valle, (1614,) Viaggi, tom. i. Roma, 1662, 4to. 5. Du Loir, (1639—40,) Voyages, Paris, 1654, 4to., containing many curious particulars; among others an account of a Cameleopard, "qui alloit par toutes les rues de Constantinople portant sa teste à toutes les fenestres pour quester quelque chose à manger." 6. Jean de Thevenot, (1645,) Voyage du Levant, Paris, 1665, 4to., Amst. 1729, 5 vols. 12mo.; an authentic work containing much accurate information. Mr. Dallaway (p. 9,) seems to have confounded John with Melchisedech Thevenot. The latter was merely a compiler, but neither of them were impostors. 7. De Monconys, (1648,) Voyages, Lyons, 1665, 3 tom. 4to. 8. Thomas Smith, (1669,) Remarks on the Manners, &c. of the Turks, London, 1678, 8vo. 9. Jacob Spon et George Wheler, (1675,) Voyages, Amst. 1679, 2 vols. 12mo., or Sir G. Wheler's Travels, London, 1682, fol. 10. Grelot, (1678,) Voyage, Paris, 1680; excellent for the architecture of Sta. Sophia and the Mosques. 11. Corn. le Brun, (De Bruyn, in Dutch,) (1690,) Voyage au Levant; traduit du Flamand, Delft, 1700; faithful but heavy;—valuable for the Plates, which have considerable merit. De Bruyn was a Painter by profession. 12. Jos. Pitton de Tournefort, (1701,) Voyages, Paris, 1717, 2 vols. 4to. 13. Chishull, (1701,) Travels, London, 1747, fol. 14. Aubrey de la Motraye, (1710,) Travels, London, 1723, 3 vols. fol.; Voyages, La Haye, 1727, 2 vols. in fol. His Turkish Costumes are excellent, and his narrative contains much historical matter which is worth reading. 15. Lechevalier, (1784,) Voyage de la Propontide, &c. Paris, 1800, 8vo. has excellent maps and a large plan of Constantinople. 16. Dallaway's (1795,) Constantinople Ancient and Modern; an amusing compilation, but too often inaccurate. 17. Melling's Voy. Pittoresque de Constantinople, Paris, 1808, fol.; a magnificent work. 18. Mouradgea d' Ohsson's Tableau Général de l'Empire Ottoman; a most able and accurate work, which contains excellent plates of the Mosques and other public buildings in the Turkish Capital. But Gyllius and Lechevalier alone will prove amply sufficient to furnish the traveller with every information which it is most desirable for him to possess; and the delightful Epistles of Busbequius, will afford him a very agreeable occupation if he have sufficient leisure.

The Canal of Constantinople, anciently called the Thracian Bosporus (Ox-ferry) is the narrow Strait which unites the Black Sea (Pontus Euxinus) to the Sea of Marmora, (Propontis.) The bold cliffs on each side of its northern entrance, appear as if some convulsion of the earth had rent them asunder, and formed a chasm through which the waters of the Euxine rushing violently, forced the way into the vallies on the opposite side of these heights and bore down every obstacle opposing their passage to the Propontis. "This Strait," says M. Lechevalier, (p. 10,) "surpasses all others in the beauty of its shores, the security of its harbours, and the infinite variety of picturesque objects, which it everywhere presents to the eye." "After passing the light-houses" (at the entrance of the Strait) says Dr. Clarke, (ii. 426. 8vo.) "we saw some fortresses, the works of French engineers; and their appearance upon rugged rocks has a very striking effect. Presently such a succession of splendid objects was displayed, that, in all the remembrance of his former travels, the author can recal nothing to which it may be compared. A rapid current flowing at the rate of a league an hour, conveyed us from the Black Sea. Then, as we were musing upon the sudden discharge of such accumulated waters by so narrow an aqueduct, and meditating the causes which first produced the wonderful channel by which they are conveyed, we found ourselves to be transported, as it were, into a new world. Scarcely had we time to admire the extraordinary beauty of the villages scattered up and down at the mouth of this Canal, when the palaces and gardens of the European and of Asiatic Turks, the villas of foreign Ambassadors, Mosques, minarets, mouldering towers, and ivy-mantled walls of ancient edifices, made their appearance. Among these we beheld an endless variety of objects, seeming to realize the tales of enchantment: fountains, cemeteries, hills, mountains, terraces, groves, quays, painted gondolas, and harbours, presented themselves to the eye in such a rapid succession, that, as one picture disappeared, it was succeeded by a second more beautiful than the first."

CONSTANTINOPLE.

"We passed the gorge of the Canal, remarkable as being the site of the bridge constructed by Darius for the passage of his numerous army; the grandeur of the scenery increasing as we approached the Capital. The sides of the Canal appeared covered with stately pavilions, whose porticoes, reaching to the water's edge, were supported by pillars of marble; when, all at once, the prospect of Constantinople, with the towns of Scútari and Pera, opened upon us and filled our minds with such astonishment and admiration, that the impression can never be effaced. Since nothing can equal the splendour of such a scene, it is impossible by comparison to give any description of what we saw. The reader, by the aid of his imagination, combining all his ideas of Oriental pomp with the utmost magnificence of nature, may endeavour to supply the deficiency." (p. 444.) No one, it may be safely averred, who has had the pleasure of beholding this incomparable scene, will accuse our eloquent countryman of exaggeration; and those who have an opportunity of examining the plates published by M. Melling and the Comte de Choiseul Gouffier, will be able to form a faint idea of a landscape so singularly diversified, as almost to defy the powers of the most skilful artist.

Length.

The Ancients (to whose works accurate references may be found in Dr. Clarke's Travels, ii. 439) assign 120 stadia (= 15 Roman miles) as the length of the Bosporus; but it is doubtful from what point they began to reckon, as the position of the Hieron, or Temple of Jupiter Urius, on the Asiatic coast, which was probably their northern limit, cannot now be easily determined. From the Cyanean Islands to the Pavác Serâi (or Promontory of Chalcedon) is about seven leagues, (Lechev. 44;) and it is six and a half (= 29 miles) to the Tower of Leander; the ancient and modern measurements, therefore, do not materially disagree.

Currents.

The bold rocky capes which intercept the waters of the Euxine in their passage to the Propontis, seem to give them a fresh impulse; and the mountain-streams which descend into the Strait through every valley which it crosses, form, under the lee of those headlands, counter-currents in every bay: nor is the collision between bodies of water moved by an opposite impulse any where more strikingly perceptible. The course of the Canal is from north-east to south-west as far as the Gulf of Buyuk Déreh, (Bathycolpos,) whence it runs for some miles in an easterly direction, making some bends near Yení-keuï and Cántí-jeh, till it reaches Kizlar Burnù, (Hermæum Promontorium,) just below the Rúm-ílí hisárí, or European Castle; whence it passes with a slight curvature round the points Akíndí Burnù, (Estiæ,) and the Defterdár Burnù, (Clidion;) then resuming its original direction, it proceeds in an uninterrupted stream till the Seraglio Point (Acropolis) divides its waters; a small portion of which mingle with those of the Golden Horn, and the larger part flowing, in a direction nearly due south, into the Sea of Marmora, (Propontis.)

Bends or elbows.

There are, on the whole, seven acute angles, or elbows in the channel of the Bosporus, which give rise to as many different currents, (Gyllius, De Bosp. iv. p. 53. ed. Elzev.; Lechevalier, p. 46,) the rapidity and collision of which render it almost impossible to row round the points, especially between the Capes Akíndí and Kizlar Burnù, where the Turks have characteristically named the current Sheïtán Akíndí-sí, or Devil's-race. The rapidity of the waters of the Bosporus, coming with all their force against the shores of the harbour, necessarily produces a counter-current on its western side, which is probably increased in winter by the flooded state of the torrents running into it. This constant and rapid movement of the waters is undoubtedly the main cause of their continuing unobstructed, notwithstanding all the rubbish from the city thrown into them for ages, and the alluvial matter brought down by the tributary streams; but the temperature, saltness, rapidity, and especially the depth of this Strait, have not yet been examined with the requisite accuracy; and till that has been done, it is idle to think of accounting for the phenomena which must be in great measure dependant on them.

Fondo lee.

On the European side, the first village which occurs is Fonduc-lí, (Aianteum ?) which took its rise from a palace built over the water by Huseïn Aghà, a wealthy subject of Mohammed IV. (1649—1687,) for the purpose of gratifying his master's love of fishing from the windows of his kïosk. Immediately beyond Fonduc-lí is a park and country-seat of the Sultán, called Dólmah-bághcheh-sí, (the Melon-garden,) "one of the most delightful points of view in the whole of the Canal," says M. Lechevalier, (p. 53,) "on account of its fantastic pavilions and luxuriant groves, which rendered it a favourite retreat of Selím III." This garden is on the site of the Jasonium, and adjoining to it is the splendid Palace of Beshik-tásh, (the port of the Rhodians,) and a smaller one built by the mother of Selím III. with a front in a regular style of Grecian architecture. But the Turbeh of Hájí Bek-tásh, who may be termed the patron Saint of the Janissaries, gives this place a sort of sanctity in the eyes of the Turks; especially among the members of that corps, who are as often called Bek-táshás as Yenicherís (new soldiers) by the Turkish historians. A little further on is the Tomb of Khaïru'ddín Barbarossa, (Ænobarbus, in Gyllius,) and then the Defterdár-Burnù, (Secretary) called by the Ancients Clidion, just above Ortah-keuï. It terminates the first bend of the Canal, and shuts out the view (as its ancient name implies) of the rest of the Strait. Between this point and Akíndí Burnù, (Estiæ,) lies Cúrú-cheshmáh, (the dry Spring,) where most of the Greek Princes have their country-houses, and where they console themselves by a cumbrous magnificence within for a compulsory humility without. Some, however, employ a large portion of their wealth in a manner more honourable to themselves, and more consistent with the titles which they claim, in forming large and splendid libraries for the use of their families; and in providing their children with an education which may qualify them to feel the value of such an inheritance.

Dolma Bagtch ace.

Beshik tash.

Cape Defter Boorn Orta k

Kooroo Tcheem

Devil's curren

The current round Akíndí Burnù (Sheïtán Akíndí-sí) is so strong, that, according to Dionysius of Byzantium, (Gyllius, De B. Thr. x. p. 152,) the crabs are unable to advance against it, and are obliged to make their way over the rocks till they come to stiller water. The point opposite to Akíndí Burnù is Kizlar Burnù, (Hermæum Promont.) just beyond which is the European Castle, (Rúm-ílí hisárí,) built by Mohammed II. in the middle of the XVth century. From a spot a little above the gate of this castle (called Neoncastron by the Greeks) to the place Ciconium (Cormon) on the opposite shore, the distance is only about five stadia, (less than three quarters of a mile;) and here, it can scarcely be doubted, was the bridge of Darius. (Gyll. l. c. 171-2.) This was also the place where the Goths and the Crusaders passed over from Europe into Asia. In the bay behind the European Castle is the village of Báttah-óghlú Límání, a name which, mistranslated, has, together with Kiz Burnù, (Cape Woman,) been supposed to allude to the heroism of Phidalia, who, when Byzantium was attacked in the absence of the men, drove the enemy as far as this place; in consequence of which, a rock near the shore received her name. (Lechev. 60; Gyll. 79.) Báltah Límání was called Savantácopa by the Greeks in the time of Gyllius, and is the Portus Mulierum (Women's Harbour) of Pliny. A large creek, called by Lechevalier "the Gulf of Leosthenios," more properly Isteniah, or Ithenia, is the next harbour. Its ancient name, the Bay of Leosthenes, or Lasthenes, (Sinus Leosthenius,) was changed in later ages into Sosthenia, whence its present appellation came. To the north of it was the point called Commarodes, from the groves of Arbutus, (Unedo,) which covered the adjoining heights. This appears to be the Yeni-keuï Burnì of the Turks. That point forms a part of the rugged bluff shore, called Bacchiæ by the Ancients, gradually receding into the bay called by them Pharmacia, from Medea's Potions; but Therapia (Θεράπεια) (Tarápiah) by the Greeks, to avert, as Gyllius judiciously conjectures, the evil omen which such a name as Pharmacia (Poisons) would convey; a conjecture confirmed by the testimony of the historian Socrates, (lib. vii. c. 25, 11.) The village of Tarapia has been considerably enlarged since his days, and now comprehends, besides the valley properly so named, that which was then called Linon, on the εὔδιον κολὸν, or tranquil harbour of Dionysius the Byzantine. That valley, which is now the garden of a palace belonging to the Sutzu family, is too picturesque to be disfigured, even by the perverted taste of Greek Princes; and the palace to which it is attached has had the fortune to become successively the residence of the Ambassadors both of France and England. The vale and streamlet of Therapia are excellently described by Gyllius, but ill laid down in Lechevalier's Map, whose trigonometrical surveys scarcely extended so far from the Black Sea, where they begun. The valley called Dialithra (Τὰ κλεῖθρα) by Gyllius, is, probably, the nameless one beyond Kirej Burnì (Cape Lime) in the map.

Round that point the sea opens into a deep bay, the Bathycolpos of the Ancients, now the Gulf of Buyúk Deréh, (the Great Valley,) which forms the first angle of the Canal. This rich vale, with a long line of shore, exposed to the south and shaded by steep hills from the north, has long been a favourite residence of the foreign Ministers of European Powers, and their interpreters, (who have for nearly a century and a half enjoyed a complete immunity from the vexations to which other Christian subjects are liable,) and the more wealthy among the foreigners domiciliated in Pera. The village occupies the narrow interval between the hills and the sea; while the meadows on each side of the stream forming the deréh (a term exactly corresponding with the Arabic word Wádí, and signifying a torrent and the valley formed by it) justly retain their ancient appellation of καλὸς ἀγρὸς, and afford a delightful promenade to the Christian inhabitants, who are here protected by the presence of diplomatic personages, and therefore are rarely disturbed by a visit from the Bostán-jí Báshí. (De Tott, i. 62.)

CONSTANTINOPLE.

The point at the extremity of Buyúk Deréh, now called Mezár Burnì, is the Simas of Dionysius; the valley, of which it is the southern boundary, containing Selectrina, or Sárí Yár, and Yení Mahalleh, is the Seletrina of the Ancients. At a small distance beyond it, there is a very conspicuous promontory, the Milton or Amilton of Dionysius, on which the French engineer Monnier constructed a battery in 1795. Near it there were, in the time of Gyllius, the remains of a small town, called Fanum Europæ by Strabo, and Ἱερὸν Ῥωμελίας by the Modern Greeks; and on the summit of the mountain was the Pharos or Light-house, whence Constantinople is visible. Near the River Chrysorrhoas, which flows through the adjoining valley, is the Rúm-ílí Cavác, or European Castle, built by the Genoese; and there was in the last century the town of Mavra Mola, (or Μαυρο μῶλος,) which contained a celebrated monastery dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and a mole, the remains of which Gyllius saw carried off for the use of some Páshás who were building country-houses on the shores of the Canal, (p. 217.) Near Rúm-ílí Cavác, there is a battery, formed by Toussaint in 1783.

Mezar Boornoo (Tomb-stone cape)

Sarce Yar.

Room-elee Kavak.

Buyúk Límání, (the Great Harbour,) a few miles further on, is the only interval in the abrupt cliff forming the shore, at which there is any landing-place: it was anciently the Port of the Lycians, but it has no harbour; and, like the rest of the coast between Yení Mahalleh and the European Light-house, near the Cyanean Islands, seems to be at present almost entirely uninhabited. It is defended by a small battery, constructed by Lafitte and Monnier: and on the promontory of Carib-cheh Burnù, a few miles further on, there is one made by De Tott, in 1773. The coast continually diverges from this point to the north and west, and is everywhere abrupt and inaccessible, except at the mouth of a stream to the east of the promontory called Panium, on which the European Light-house now stands. This place Gyllius supposes to have been in early times the retreat of Thracian robbers and pirates, for its cliffs present many spacious caverns, such as were the abodes of predatory tribes; and the river, which is the largest of all those on the European side of the Bosporus, affords a plentiful supply of water throughout the year. The extensive woods, and the intricacy of this mountainous tract, render it peculiarly favourable to the concealment of banditti; and the Albanian shepherds, who form, it is probable, the whole of its scanty population, are, by their hardiness, coolness, and resolution, well fitted to brave the vigilance of the Turkish Police. Though nominally Christians, their ignorance is such that their faith is little better than an abject superstition, often fostering their most pernicious habits, and giving sweet unction to the soul under the consciousness of the greatest atrocities.

Buyuke Limany.

European Fanal.

The Cyanean Islands, so much cebrated by the ancient Poets, under the name of Symplegades, "are" as Strabo says, (l. vii. c. vi. p. 463, ed. Oxon.,) "two little isles at the mouth of the Euxine, one close to Europe, and the other to Asia, separated from each other by an interval of about twenty stadia, (about two miles and a half." "They are," says Dr. Clarke, (Travels, xi. 431,) "in fact, each joined to the main land by a kind of isthmus, and appear as islands

Symple-gades.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

when this is inundated;" in stormy weather also, when their craggs only are visible, each has the appearance of more than one island; and hence, as Tournefort has justly remarked, (Voyage, &c. let. 15,) arose the popular belief that they were sometimes separated and sometimes united. The geological characters of these rocks and the neighbouring cliffs, are very remarkable, and indicate, according to Dr. Clarke, "a violent action of fire," succeeded by "attrition in water," affording a striking proof that a torrent had there passed towards the Sea of Marmora.

On the European island there is still a marble altar or pedestal, the inscription on which, decyphered by the learned Leunclavius, has long ceased to be legible. The pillar, represented in Sandys's plate, "is now fallen into the sea,"* says Meletius, whose work was composed a few years before the close of the XVIIth century.

"The mouth of the Canal, viewed from the summit of this insular rock, has the appearance of a crater, whose broken sides were opened towards the Black Sea, and by a smaller aperture towards the Bosporus. On the Asiatic side opposite to the island a little to the east of the Anatolian light-house, a range of basaltic pillars may be discerned, exhibiting very regular prismatic forms; it is, therefore, perhaps, more than probable that the bursting of the Thracian Bosporus, the deluge mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, and the draining of the waters, once uniting the Black Sea to the Caspian, were all the consequence of an earthquake, caused by subterraneous fires, which were not extinct at the time of the passage of the Argonauts, (B. C. 1267,) and whose effects are still visible." (Clarke, ii. 437.) The Cyanean Island on the Asiatic is, probably, less than its companion on the European shore, as it is omitted in the map inserted in the Jehán-numà: where the latter bears the name of Eurekeh-táshí, Spindle Rock, probably from the column already mentioned; the adjoining headland is the Ancyrean Promontory of the Ancients, called the Loaf (τὸ Ψωμίον) by the Greeks; just beyond which is the River Rhebas. On this promontory stands the Asiatic Light-house, guarded by a battery, constructed at the same time as that on the opposite shore. Near Poriyas Límání, about half-way between the light-house and Fil Burnù, there is a fort constructed by the Baron de Tott, in 1773. That promontory (Fil Burni, Cape Elephant) was anciently called Coracion, from the number of crows always hovering about it. Between it and the Anádólí Cavác, is the Kecheh-lí Límán, anciently called Pantichium; and near the latter (the Asiatic Castle) was the Hieron, or sacred territory of Jupiter Urius, where the Argonauts offered sacrifices on their return from Colchis. A battery formed there in 1783 by Toussaint, was augmented by Monnier in 1794: and at that time the ruins of the pier, to which the chain across the mouth of the Bosporus was fastened, were still visible.

Asiatic Fanal.

Poriyás limany.

Feel Boornoo.

Anadoloo Kavak.

Majár Burni, immediately below the Hieron, is the ancient Argyronium, and forms one of the declivities of the loftiest peak on either side of the Canal, called the Giants' Tomb, from a grave of extraordinary dimensions on its summit, which is, in the opinion of M. Lechevalier, (75,) the tomb of Amycus, called "the Giant" by Valerius Flaccus.

Majar Boorn

Nearly opposite to Tarápiah (Therapia) is a Cape called Selví Burni, (Cape Cypress,) and beyond it a beautiful valley, watered by two streams, where a paper-mill was erected by order of Selím III. under the direction of an Englishman, who, in consequence of some early disappointments, had been induced to embrace the Mohammedan religion, and was driven back by his family, when he returned to England, for the purpose of atoning for his errors.

Keat h or Pap Mill.

Bey-cóz, (the Walnut,) and Sultániyyeh Bághcheh-sí, a favourite kiosk of Sultán Suleïmán, are on the site of the meadows where Amycus pastured his herds; and Catungion, an adjoining gulf, terminated by the promontory Glarium, (Cánlíjeh Burnù,) formed a part of his territory. The Anadólí hisár (Anatolian Castle,) built at the same time as the one on the opposite shore, is very near that place, and close to the stream called Geuk Sú, (Heaven's Water,) by the Turks, and Emaretí by the Greeks, which is the largest of all that flow into the Bosporus. On its banks is one of the most splended kiosks possessed by the Grand Signior; and at Istáveróz, (Stavros, the Cross,) about half-way between the castle and Scútari, there is an old palace and a fine Mosque, built by Sultán Abdu'l Hamìd.

Bey ks

Anadole hissar.

Gok soo

Stavros.

Scútari, (Uskudár,) which is adorned with some fine Mosques, and has long possessed the Royal Printing-office, the only one in the Turkish Empire, is built on the site of Chrysopolis, and forms a beautiful object in the views from Constantinople and its suburbs. Its promonotory, opposite the tower of Leander, (Kizculleh-sí,) was called Bos, from the wife of Chares, an Athenian general, her statue having been erected there on the top of a marble column.

Scootary.

The city of Chalcedon, so celebrated on account of its Oracle, the rival of Delphi itself, was not far from Chrysopolis, and is now replaced by the paltry village of Chází-keuï, (Judge-town;) and even the ruins of the Church of St. Euphemia, in which the Council was held, have disappeared. Between this place and Scútari, a small stream near Cavác Serái, a kiosk of Sultán Ahmed, is the fountain called Hermagora by Dionysius of Byzantium. Cází-keui is on a sort of peninsula, terminated by a point, called Múdeh Burni, which is one of the boundaries of the Port of Eutropius, and bears many traces of ancient buildings. The peninsula, called Fenár Bághcheh-sí, (Vineyard of the Light-house,) is the Heræum of the Ancients, and still retains some vestiges of the palace and bath of Justinian

Kadykoi, or Kaszekeuy.

Kavak Se ray.

Moodè Boornoo.

Fenar bagtchè

Together with the authorities named at the close of the preceding article, P. Gyllius's excellent Tract De Bosporo Thracio, (Lug. Bat. ap. Elaev. 1632, 12mo.) should be consulted for information on this subject.

* Ταυτὴν πεσοῦσαν ἤδον τῆς θαλάσσης κεῖται. Geogr. iii. 99. 8vo. edition.

CONSTAT, in Law, the name of a Certificate which the Clerk of the Pipe, or Auditors of the Exchequer, give at the request of a party who intends to plead or move any thing in that Court: the effect of it is certifying what appears (constat) upon record, touching the matter in question, and it is therefore held superior to an ordinary Certificate, as the latter may err, whereas the former certifies that only which is on record. The Exemplification under the Great Seal of the enrolment of Letters Patent, is called a Constat, and is made as available as the Letters Patent themselves by the 3 and 4 Edward VI. ch. iv. and 13 Elizabeth, ch. vi.

CONSTE'LLATE, v. CONSTELLA'TION. } Fr. constellation; It. constellatione; Sp. constellacion; the Lat. constellatus and constellatio, (con, and stella, a star,) are not of classical authority. Constellatio is used by Ammianus. See the Example from Holland's translation. Constellatus by Trebellius Pollio. A constellation is

An assembly or collection of many stars; of the light, of the brilliancy of many stars; of light and brilliancy.

To be bore of bygete in suche constellacion.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 230.

Som wikke aspect or disposition
Of Saturne, by som constellation,
Hath yeven us this.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1090.

And nethles yet some men write
And sayn fortune is to wite:
And some men holde opinion,
That it is constellacion,
Whiche causeth all that a man doothe.
Gower. Conf. Am. Prologus, fol. 4.

He cursed his fate or constellation, and wished that he had neuer comen to Athenes.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, p. 139.

Among the papers of a certain worshipful bourgesse, which by commaundment were searched upon some businesse in controversie, there was found the horoscope of one Valens. And when he was charged often thus farre, namely, why he had calculated the constellation of the Prince? the partie whom it concerned, notwithstanding that, to refell such false slaunders, he promised to shew by good and evident proofes, that it was his owa brother Valens, and that he was a good while since departed: yet without waytyng for evidence of the truth, all torn and mangled he was cruelly slaine.
Holland. Ammianus, fol. 362. Valentinianus and Valens.

So these scattered perfections which are divided among the several cantons of created beings, were, as it were, constellated and summ'd up in this epitome of the greater world, Man.
Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. i.

What artist now dares boast that he can bring
Heav'n hither, or constellate any thing,
So as the influence of those stars may be
Imprison'd in a herb, or charm, or tree,
And do by touch all which those stars could do?
Donne. An Anatomy of the World.

Up, up, fair bride and call
Thy stars from out their several boxes, take Thy rubies, pearls, and diamonds forth and make Thyself a constellation of them all. Id. Epithalamium.

And you will not much wonder, that I place this virtue among those that constellate, if I may speak, an heroic mind, if you consider, whence humility may in such a soul proceed, and what difficulties it may surmount.
Boyle. Greatness of Mind promoted by Christianity, ch. v.

These are the single stars which are sprinkled through the Æneis; but there are whole constellations of them in the fifth book. Dryden. Discourse on Epick Poetry.

When we have once obtained a leading idea in Hebrew, it is pleasant to see how other words in abundance will fall in with it: for hence we have the word Aurora for the light of the morning; Horus, a name of the sun with the Egyptians; Orion, the bright constellation, the brightest in the heavens, &c.
Bishop Horne. Works, vol. i. p. 426.

CONSTELLATE. CONSTITUTE.

CONSTERNATION, Fr. consternation; Lat. consternare, of the same Origin as consternere. Sterno from storno, by syncope from στορέννυω, and that from στορέω; στορ-εῖν, to throw or lay flat.

Consternation is applied to that dejection, that prostration, that inert helplessness of mind, which is caused by fear; by astonishment; to that stupor of the faculties, which is caused by surprise, amazement or wonder. And thus, to the fear itself, to astonishment, surprise, amazement, wonder.

When accidents like thieves, unthought on, set upon us; the consternation gives the deeper wound. Feltham. Resolve 5.

This increased the consternation and belief in every body, that there was nothing but immediate death to be expected: which made all endeavour, might and main, to escape away.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1551.

We now thought all danger was over, but about an hour afterwards, just as the man in the chains had cried "seventeen fathom" the ship struck. The shock threw us all into the utmost consternation. Cook. Voyage, vol. i. book ii. ch. iv.

CO'NSTIPATE, v. CONSTIPA'TION. } Constipare, atum; (con, and stipare,) a στείβ-ειν, fortasse Græco verbo. Varro, lib. iv. Στείβ-ειν, calcare, to tread or trample upon: calcando comprimere, et condensare; to compress, to condense, to thicken, to cram or squeeze close, to close or stop up.

Our body or our sense will be heated by fire; burned by it too, if the heat be too great, as well as wood: it will be constipated by cold water, moistened by humide things, and dryed by dry bodies.
Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxvii.

As Themison, and his old sect of methodists resolv'd, that the laxum and strictum, the immoderate dissolution or constipation were the principles and originals of all diseases in the world, so it will be likely to prove in our spiritual estate also.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 3. vol. iv.

It helpeth squynances, or quyncis in the throte, and desolueth the constipations or stoppinges made of all places, if the places be scarified. Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book iii.

The sky is oftentimes, for many days together, quite overcast with clouds, and the surface of the ground so constipated with frost, that it will sometimes freeze even in the sunshine.
Boyle. An Examination of Antiperistasis.

And thus it is in the lowest and densest region of the air near the surface of the earth, where the whole mass of air is in a state of violent compression, the inferior being press'd and constipated by the weight of all the incumbent. Bentley. Sermon 7.

The reason of which is manifest from what hath been said, viz. in spring, when the earth and waters are loosed from the brumal constipations, the vapours arise in great plenty.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book i. ch. iii. note (a.)

An extended substance must consist of extended parts, that is, of extended substances, and will be so much the thicker and denser in proportion to the number of parts and their constipation. Law. Enquiry, part i. p. 133.

CO'NSTITUTE, v. Co'NSTITUTE, n. CONSTI'TUTER, CONSTITU'TION, CONSTITU'TIONED, CONSTITU'TIONAL, CONSTITU'TIONALIST, CONSTITU'TIONALLY, CONSTITU'TIONIST, CONSTITU'TIONING, n. CO'NSTITUTIVE, CONSTI'TUENT, adj. CONSTI'TUENT, n. CONSTITU'TION-MONGER, CONSTITU'TION-VENDER. } Fr. constituer; It. costituire; Sp. constituir; Lat. constituere, utum; to put, place, or cause to be or stand together; (con, and statuere, from statum, past participle of stare, to stand.) To constitute, as applied in English, is

To cause or make to be, to fix, settle, establish or confirm; to ordain, decree, appoint or determine.

Constitution is applied

CONSTITUTE. to the whole state or condition of bodily strength or health; to that also of the mind; to the whole established state or condition of the laws.

The said noble Osrike, by councell of Bosell,
(Which was the first bishop of Worcester diocese)
Did put in here nunns, to enhabite and dwell,
And Kingburge his sister did constitute abbesse.
R. Gloucester, p. 579.

The grounde my sonne for to seche
Upon this diffinicion,
The worldes constitucion
Hath set the name of gentillnesse
Vpon the fortune of richesse.
Gower. Conf. Am., book iv. fol. 75.

Wherefore I shall specyfye vnto you the condycyons of the enuyous, who that holdeth hym of the subgectes of enuye, she constytueth to deuoure, and byte euery bodye.
Skelton. The Boke of Three Fooles.

Wherefore if men wil be wyse and warned in tyme, let them fere God constituting heithen kinges as was Nebuchadnecer, and now is the Turke to punisshe sinne.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. i.

Than sens fayth is the foundation of justice, whiche is the chiefe constitutour and maker of a publyke weale and by the afore mencioned auctoritie, conseruatour of the same, I maye well conclude, that fayth is bothe the originall, and (as it were) principal constitutour and conseruatour of the publyke weale.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, p. 181.

And yet were they themselues for blynde zeale of their owne constitutions, as redy as their fathers to slea whosoeuer testified vnto them, the same truth which, the prophets testified vnto their fathers. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 30.

This Brutus had three sonnes, who constituted three kingdoms.
Stow. Memorable Antiquities, fol. 22.

For enfranchised Latines, the freedome of Romane citizens and for wome, the priviledge and benefit of those that had four children, which constitutions stand in force and be observed at this day. Holland. Suetonius. Claudius, fol. 163.

But equity that bears an even rein
Upon the present courses, holds in awe
By giving hand a little, and doth gain
By a gentle relaxation of the law:
And yet inviolable doth maintain
The end whereto all constitutions drawe,
Which is the welfare of society,
Consisting of an upright policy.
Daniel. To Sir Thomas Egerton.

For the law and the covenant were the constitutive parts of that whole entercourse, they were the whole relation, and this is that which St. John said, The law came by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. ii.

For some things there are no certain measures, and there are very many constituent or intervening things and circumstances of things by which it is made impossible to give a certain judgment of the whole. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. i. sec. 2.

A man that will not obey the king's constitute.
Preston. Tragedy of Cambises, (about 1561.)

But not that the constitutive essences of all individual created beings were eternal and uncreated, as if God in creating of the world, did nothing else, but as some sarcastically express it, Sartoris instar Rerum Essentias vestire Existentia, only clothed the eternal, increated, and antecedent essences of things with a new outside garment of existence, and not created the whole of them.
Cudworth. Immutable Morality.

That which constitutes the nature of man, and doth formally difference and distinguish him from all other animals, is, not so much the power of reason, as the capacity of being religious.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 15. vol. i.

The love of our country in particular, as we are Britons, is the love of our constitution, and of the establishment in the present royal family. Hoadley. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 2.

Besides, I would fain ask these tender-constitution'd ladies, why they should require more cooling than their mothers before them. Spectator, No. 127.

It is not more necessary to the constituting of a man, that a human soul inhabit in a human body, than it is to the being a true Christian, that the Holy Spirit of God inhabit in the soul and body of the man. Sharp. Works. Discourse 3. vol. v.

CONSTITUTE — CONSTRAIN

And for the more clear and regular proceeding on this copious subject, I shall distribute the globe into its own grand constituent parts.
1st, The earth and its appurtenances.
2d, The waters and theirs.
Derham. Physico-Theology, vol. i. book iii. p. 97.

Men, who their duties know,
But know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain.
Prevent the long-aim'd blow,
And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain:
These constitute a state.
Jones. An Ode in imitation of Alcæus.

If this [the freedom and independency of parliament] be shaken, our constitution totters. If it be quite removed our constitution falls into ruin. That noble fabric, the pride of Britain, the envy of her neighbours, raised by the labour of so many centuries, repaired at the expense of so many millions, and cemented by such a profusion of blood; that noble fabric, I say, which was able to resist the united efforts of so many races of giants, may be demolished by a race of pigmies.
Bolingbroke. Works. Dissertation upon Parties.

If an honest, and I may truly affirm, a laborious zeal for the public service, has given me any weight in your esteem, let me exhort and conjure you, never to suffer an invasion of your political constitution, however minute the instance may appear, to pass by, without a determined, persevering resistance.
Junius. Dedication.

Theories on government, when framed by sober and thinking men, cannot but be of great importance, as serving to remind both the governors and governed of their respective interests and duties; nay, and as tending ultimately to improve establishments themselves; but by degrees only, and by constitutional means.
Hurd. Works. Sermon before the House of Lords, vol. iii. p. 7.

Virgil only knew the horrour of the times before him. Had he lived to see the revolutionalists and constitutionalists of France, he would have had more horrid and disgusting features of his Harpies to describe, and more frequent failures in the attempt to describe them. Burke. To a Noble Lord.

Others may be more constitutionally dull-hearted, and cannot raise their thoughts in so elevated a degree; and yet may still be pious Christians. Gilpin. Sermon 23. vol. i.

If there is a doubt whether the house of commons represents perfectly the whole commons of Great Britain, (I think there is none,) there can be no question but that the lords and the commons together represent the sense of the whole people to the crown, and to the world. Thus it is when we speak legally and constitutionally. Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

Let us hope, and endeavour by all possible means, that it may not be felt too late; and to encourage the constitutionists, or the country-party, in this attempt, let us consider from whom an opposition to it is to be expected.
Bolingbroke. Works. Dissertation upon Parties.

It was an artifice sometimes practised by the candidates for offices, in order to recommend themselves to the good graces of their constituents, to pretend a kindred to which they had no right, by assuming the name of some favourite and popular family.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Trebonius, book xii. let. 10. (note.)

But who gave Robespierre the power of being a tyrant? and who were the instruments of his tyranny? The present virtuous constitution-mongers. Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

The Sieyes, and the rest of the analytical legislators, and constitution-venders, are quite as busy in their trade of decomposing organization. Id. To a Noble Lord.

CONSTRA'IN, v. CONSTRA'INABLE, CONSTRA'INEDLY, CONSTRA'INER, CONSTRA'INT, n. } Fr. constraindre; Sp. constreñer; It. costrignere; Lat. constringere, to press close or tight together; (con, and stringere, of unsettled Etymology.)

To press tight or close together; to compress, to draw together or contract, to bind together, to compel or force together; to compel, to force. See CONSTRINGE, and CONSTRICT.

Men sholde constreyne no clerke to knavene werkes.
Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 78.

N-
AIN.

Women of kind desiren libertie,
And not to be constreined as a thral;
And so don men, if sothly I say shal.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11081.

He was with loue vnwise constreigned,
And she with reason was restreigned.
Gower. Conf. Am., book iv. fol. 83.

And the lord seide to the seruant, go out into weyes and heggis: and constreyne men to entre: that myn hous be fulfild.
Wiclif. Luke, ch. xiv.

Fede ye the flok of God that is among you, purueie ye not as constreyned, but wilfulli bi God.
Id. 1 Petir, ch. v.

To sorowful weping they ought to be constrained
As oft as they call to theyr remembraunce,
Of their good lord the fate and dedely chaunce.
Skelton. The Deathe of Northumberland.

As ye will not doe of yourselves, ye must be compelled to do by others, and that ye refuse to doe willingly, thinke ye must be drawn to doe the same constrainedly.
Sir John Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition, K. 2.

And that ye may well perceiue that his calling is no constrainte of necessity, many whom he calleth, doe willingly for al his calling perish. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 1075.

About the time when days are longer made,
When nights are warmer, and the aire more cleare,
When verdant leaues and fragrant flowers appeare;
Whose beauty winter had constrained to fade.
Beaumont. At the End of His Majesty's First Yere. Sonnet 2.

O! what strange things by deare experience past,
Could this man tell, amazement to constraine?
Who saw the world first full, then all turn'd waste
Yet liv'd himselfe to people it again.
Stirling. Dooms-day. The eighth Houre.

O foule descent; that I who erst contended
With Gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast, and mixt with bestial slime.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ix. l. 164.

What should he do? leaue on the naked sand
This woefull ladie, half aliue, halfe dead?
Kindnesse forbod, pittie did that withstand;
But hard constraint (alas) did thence him lead.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book xvi. st. 61.

CLE. Yet there were some,
That in their sullen looks, rather confess'd
A forced constraint to serve her, than a will
To be at her devotion.
Massinger. The Emperor of the East, act i. sc. 1.

For whereas men before stood bound in conscience to doe as the law of reason teacheth; they are now by vertue of humane law become constrainable, and if they outwardly transgresse, punishable. Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book i. fol. 30.

As when sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with mild rain;
And first the tender blade peeps up to birth,
And straight the green fields laugh with promis'd grain.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, st. 284.

In this choice the age and inclination of the person is to be considered, and constraint always to be avoided in bringing him to it.
Locke. Of Education, sec. 202.

Creon himself, unwilling quits the field,
Enrag'd, defeated, and constrayn'd to yield.
Wilkes. The Epigoniad, book viii.

Of these four hundred thousand political citizens, I look upon one fifth, or about eighty thousand, to be pure Jacobins; utterly incapable of amendment; objects of eternal vigilance; and when they break out, of legal constraint.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

While some on earnest business bent
Their murmuring labours ply
Gainst graver hours, that bring constraint,
To sweeten liberty.
Gray. Ode. On a distant prospect of Eton College.

CONSTRI'CT, v. } Constrictus, past participle of CONSTRI'CTIVE, } constringere; to press tight or CONSTRI'CTION, } close together, to compress, to CONSTRI'CTOR. } draw together, to contract, to narrow. See CONSTRAIN.

CON-STRICT. — CON-STRUCT.

Medlars ar cold and dry cõstrictife or stratninge to the stomake, and therefore they may be eaten after meles as a medycine.
Sir Thomas Elyot. The Castel of Helth, book ii.

Tough or muscular fibres, intended not only to protect them, as hath hitherto been thought: but also by a due constriction to assist them, in straining of their several contents.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book i. ch. v.

Such things as constrict the fibres and strengthen the solid.
Arbuthnot. On Diet.

He was called to a lusty young woman, who, upon an accidental but violent cold, was suddenly taken with such a constriction of the parts inservient to speech and deglutition, as made her altogether unable either to speak or to swallow any thing at all.
Boyle. Appendix to the first Section of the second Part.

You will in one of the following papers find mention of a learned physician of my acquaintance, that, upon diving leisurely, perceived a constriction to be made of his thorax by the action of the surrounding sea water.
Id. An Hydrostatical Discourse, &c.

CONSTRI'NGE, } Lat. constringere, to press tight
CONSTRI'NGENT. } or close together, to compress, to contract or draw, or bring close together. See CONSTRAIN.

But what we would intimate is only this, that their bodies being nothing but coagulated or constringed aire, when they [the Devils] put them in such posture as to constringe their vehicles in a greater measure by far than agitate the single particles of it, that it will then seem not only cold as congealed water does, but more piercingly and stingingly cold, by reason of the subtilty of the parts.
More. Appendix to Antidote against Atheism, ch. xiii. fol. 185.

——— Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen doe the hurricano call,
Constring'd in masse by the Almighty Fenne, [sun?]
Shall dizzie with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his discent; then shall my prompted sword
Falling on Diomed.
Shakspeare. Troylus and Cressida, fol. 112.

Close crowds the shining atmosphere; and binds
Our strengthen'd bodies in its cold embrace, Constringent. Thomson. Winter.

Of tea what have I said? That I have drunk it twenty years without hurt, and therefore believe it not to be poison; that if it dries the fibres, it cannot soften them; that if it constringes, it cannot relax. Johnson. Reply to a Paper in the Gazetteer.

CONSTRU'CT, v. } Lat. construere, constructum;
CONSTRU'CTER, } con, and struere, which Vos-
CONSTRU'CTION, } sius suspects is from στερε-όειν,
CONSTRU'CTIONAL, } i. e. firmum solidumque reddere;
CONSTRU'CTIVE, } and thus equivalent to the CONSTRU'CTIVELY, } English verb, to Ruild, q. v.
CONSTRU'CTURE. } To build or put, place, fix or fasten, firmly, strongly together; metaphorically, to put or place or dispose words together in a sentence. See CONSTRUE.

Construction is applied not only to the putting or placing, the disposition or arrangement of words together; but to the whole when so put together; sc. the signification, or meaning, the explanation or interpretation.

For (besides the diuersitie betweene construction and trãslation) you know there be many misticall secretes in this writer, which vttered in English would shewe litel pleasour.
Phaer. Virgil. Conclusion.

CONSTRUCT. — CONSTRUE.

If therefore you shall impart the same to one, and he to another, and so it pass through my hands, I know not what constructions would be made thereof to my prejudice; for that the hares eares may happily be taken for hornes.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Portugal Voyage, vol. ii. p. 2.

MAL. My lord you use a borrow'd bravery,
Not suiting fair constructions.
Ford. The Lady's Trial, act v. sc. 2.

D. Cole referreth him selfe vnto the construction of the close there written. Jewell. Replie to M. Hardinge, fol. 146.

In which, besides projections of the sphere, there are constructions for many astronomical problems and spherical propositions.
Wood. Fasti Oxon., vol. ii. fol. 117.

And yet, by the antient common law, there was a great latitude left in the breast of the judges to determine what was treason, or not so . whereby the creatures of tyrannical princes had opportunity to create abundance of constructive treasons; that is, to raise, by forced and arbitrary constructions, offences unto the crime and punishment of treason, which never were suspected to be such. Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. iv. p. 76.

As if the original grant express either an estate of inheritance, or for life; or no estate at all, which is constructively an estate for life. Id. Ib. vol. ii. fol. 156.

Ye sons of art one curious piece devise
From whose constructure motions shall arise.
Blackmore. Creation, book i.

The necessity of doing something, and the fear of undertaking much, sinks the historian to a genealogist, the philosopher to a journalist of the weather, and the mathematician to a constructor of dials. Johnson. Rambler, No. 103.

CONSTRUE, v. Fr. construire; Sp. construir; It. costruire; Lat. construere, to put together firmly. See above, CONSTRUCT.

To construe, metaphorically, is to put or place, sc. the words of one language into the order required by the usages of another; and thus, generally, to show the signification or meaning, the explanation or interpretation; to explain, to interpret.

Lete þý confessour syre kyng. construe þis in English.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 71.

Clerkus þat were confessours. couple hem togeders
To construe this clause. Id. Ib. p. 71.

Ac ich can nouht construe canon. ne clergyalliche reden.
Id. Ib. p. 111.

This prayde he him to construe and declare,
Ful often time upon his knees bare.
Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13458.

And then against them al he construeth that ghospell so folishely, that afore God a man would wene almost that a gosling had as much witte as he. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 392.

For as much as it shal not be taken as the party mēt it, but as it pleaseth yᵉ prince to cōstrer it. Id. Ib. fol. 70.

But geue me leaue to conster you this laste verse.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. ix.

Conster what this is, and tel not;
For I am fast sworne, I may not.
Wyat. A Riddle of a gift given by a Ladie.

The monke, more solemnely inter'd
And song for than the king,
Was cause that diuers diuersly
Did conster of the thing.
Warner. Albion's England, book v. ch. xxiv.

They who represent the commons of Great Britain, could not but have some fear, that it might justly be construed as an inexcusable breach of duty towards those whom they represent, and a sort of sharing in the guilt of the present conspiracy itself.
Hoadley. Works. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 15.

They, who have lands, and safe bank-stock,
With faith so founded on a rock,
May giue a rich invention ease,
And construe Scripture how they please.
Green. On Barclay's Apology for the Quakers.

The Jews construed those passages of a temporal deliverance from the Roman yoke, and a temporal reign in Palestine. But did they construe them right?
Bishop Horne. Works. The Case of the Jews. Discourse 8.

CONSTU'PRATE, } Lat. stuprum. Of uncertain
CONSTUPRA'TION. } Origin.

Fr. constuprer; Sp. construpar; to constuprate, ravish, deflower, defile, a woman.

The good gostlye father that constuprated ii. hundred nonnes in his tyme. Bale. On the Revelat, (1653.) P. iii.

Their wives and lovliest daughters constuprated by every base cullion. Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 165.

The first are eyes full of adulteries; every glance whereof is an act of beastliness: the very sight is a kind of constupration.
Bishop Hall. Works. Sermon, vol. ii. fol. 313.

CONSUBJECT, v. con, and subjicere, subjectum; to throw or cast under, to place under. To consubject is To become subjects in union with others; to submit to the same government with others.

But after the destruction of their six first kings which died in the reign of Asa, (they) admitted a seventh of a new family, rather than they would consubject themselves with those of Juda and Benjamin, under a more honourable but more heavy yoak.
Ralegh. History of the World, book ii. ch. xix. sec. 6.

CONSU'BSIST, v.
CONSUBSTAN'TIATE, v.
CONSUBSTA'NTIATE, adj.
CONSUBSTA'NTIATION,
CONSUBSTA'NTIAL,
CONSUBSTA'NTIALIST,
CONSUBSTANTIA'LITY.

Lat. con, and subsistere, to stand or stay under, (sub, and sistere, to stand or stay. See CONSIST.) To subsist with, in union or together with. To consubstantiate, (con, sub, and stans, standing,) is, to unite or co-exist in the same substance; to share or partake of the same nature.

He that means to learn the secrets of God's wisdom must be, as Plato says, τὴν λογικὴν ζωὴν δεδωμένος, his soul must be consubstantiated with reason, not invested with passion; to him that is otherwise, things are but in the dark, his notion is obscure, and his sight troubled. Taylor. Sermon 6. part iii.

And then since all love strictly examined arises out of love to ourselves, 'tis no wonder that we must love her, that is thus consubstantiate with us. Feltham. On St. Luke, ch. xiv. v. 20.

The Lutheran holds consubstantiation an error indeed, but not mortal. Milton. Works. Of True Religion, vol. ii. fol. 123.

This our inheritour Christ Jesus, God with God, light of light, coeternall and cōsubstantiall with the Father and with the Holie Ghost, to the end that he might become our husband (because the husband & the wife must be one bodie & one flesh.)
Fox. Martyrs. Letter of M. John Bradford, fol. 1053.

Or as in spring-time from one sappy twig,
There sprouts another consubstantiall sprig.
Du Bartas. The sixth Day of the first Week.

And how is it like that Marcellinus which died in the twentith yeare of Dioclesian, could write of consubstantialitie of the diuine persons when that controuersie & terme of consubstantialitie was not herd of in the Church before Nicene councell, which was twentie-three yeares after him.
Fox. Martyrs. The ten first Persecutions, fol. 86.

But all your several churches disagree,
The consubstantiating church and priest
Refuse communion to the Calvinist.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

A Papist shall say 'tis dangerous, because, perhaps, it agrees not so well with transubstantiation; and a Lutheran, because his consubstantiation is in hazard; but neither consider, whether transubstantiation or consubstantiation be true or false, but taking it for granted that they are true, or at least gainful, whatever hits not with it, or is against it, must be dangerous.
Locke. Works. Molyneux to Locke.

The third testimony is out of an epistle to Epictetus, to whom Athanasius writing concerning those who held Christ's body to be consubstantial with his divinity, tells him this was so gross a conceit that it needed no solicitous confutation; but that it would be a sufficient answer to say in general the orthodox church was not of that mind, our fathers did not think so.

Tillotson. The Rule of Faith, part iv. sec. 1.

It may serve to guard us from divers errours, such as are that of the Lutheran consubstantialists, and of the Roman transubstantiators, who affirm, that the body of our Lord is here upon earth at once present in many places, (namely in every place, where the host is kept, or the Eucharist is celebrated.)
Barrow. Sermon 31. vol. ii.

To settle the controversial bounds between the Arians, and Semiarians, and the Athanasians or consubstantialists of those days, and to determine how far they agreed, and how far they differed, and how far they were or were not consistent with themselves, is, if not an impossibility, yet certainly a very difficult task. Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

Had those Platonists been authors, they would not have delivered the doctrine of the soul's consubstantiality with the Deity, and its refusion into him, in the gross manner in which we find it in the books of Trismegist.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iii. sec. 4.

There are some who hold two consubsisting wills, an active and an elective, the latter continually directing the former; how truly, I shall not examine.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. part iii. ch. xxvi.

CONSUBSTANTIATION, or IMPANATION, a doctrine introduced into the Church by John, surnamed Pungens Asinus, a Doctor of Paris, about the close of the XIIIth century, and now professed by the Lutherans. His work was published by Allix, in 1686. Determinatio F. Joannis Parisiensis de modo existendi Corpus Christi in Sacramento Altaris. This doctrine teaches, that after consecration the body and blood of our Saviour are substantially present together with the substance of the bread and wine.

CONSUBSTANTIAL, ὁμοούσιος, the word employed by the Fathers at the Councils of Antioch and Nice in opposition to the Arians, to denote the coessentiality of the Son with the Father. The Arians contended that the Son was only ὁμοιούσιος, and the dispute has been characterised by Boileau (Sat. xii.) in some lines which he afterwards suppressed. The Poet addresses himself to Heresy, the daughter of Equivoque. The Church, he says, by her machinations twice nearly became Arian.

Lorsque chez ses sujets l'un contre l'autre armés,
Et sur un Dieu fait homme au combat animés,
Tu fis dans une guerre et si triste et si longue
Perir tant de Chretiens, Martyrs d'une dipthongue.

CO'NSUL, n.
Co'NSULAR,
Co'NSULARY,
Co'NSULATE,
Co'NSULSHIP.
} Fr. Sp. It. and Lat. consul; from consul-ere, to consult, q. v.

The Uenetians have a consul themselues. But all other nations goe to the French nation's consul, who will giue you a chamber for yourselues apart, if you will so haue it.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Wil. Harborne, vol. ii. p. 176.

Juli Cesar first beig consular & eft sone the first emprowr of Rome w^ch raigned 4 yers & 7 monethes.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel. A Brief Supputacion.

Thou shalte cum home and helpe to drinke
a cup of wine with me.
Wine, prest in Taurus consulship.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Torquatus.

Then in a solemne assemblie and election by the centuries, held by the provost of the citie according to the ordinance of Servius Tullius in his commentaries, two consuls were created: L. Junius Brutus, and L. Tarquinius Collatinus.
Holland. Livie, fol. 42.

While the Fecial priests were contending with the senate, for his being delivered to them; he fled for protection, to the people. And so, was not only, not given, nor punish'd but by their means, was made a tribune with consular power. CONSUL.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iii. ch. v.

The beginning of this freedome you must account in regard hereof, That the consularie regiment was annuall, and from yeare to yeare, rather than that the roiall power and jurisdiction that the kings had, was any wit abated and diminished.
Holland. Livius, fol. 44.

Answerable whereunto we observe the decussated characters in many consulary coynes, and even in those of Constantine and his sons, which pretend their pattern in the sky.
Sir Thomas Brown. Cyrus Garden, p. 37.

The draughts of consulary date, were but crude unto these, and opimian wine but in the muste unto them.
Id. Urn Burial, p. 13.

Bearing the honorable offices of preture and consulate he produced upon the stage to act a comicall and wanton enterlude, the gentlemen and dames of Rome.
Holland. Suetonius. Nero, fol. 180.

——————— He is but a new fellow
An in-mate, here, in Rome (as Catiline calls him)
And the patricians should do very ill,
To let the consul-ship bee so defil'd
As't would bee, if hee obtain'd it! A meere up-start,
That has no pedigree, no house, no coat,
No ensignes of a family. Ben Jonson. Catiline, act ii.

You hear not in Polybius, that it rained blood or stones; that a bull had spoken, or a thousand such impossibilities, with which Livy perpetually crowds the calends of almost every consulship. Dryden. The Character of Polybius.

Nevertheless, (and I am sure you are no stranger to the truth I am going to say,) upon laying down my consular office, he prevented me from making the usual speech to the people: and thus, what had never been denied to the lowest and most worthless of our magistrates, he most injuriously refused to a consul who had preserved the liberties of his country.
Melmoth. Cicero. Letters. To Quintus Metellus Celer, book i. let. 3.

Had I not acted then with spirit in opposition to his ill-considered measures, would not the world have thought (and thought too with reason) that the courage I exerted in my consulate was merely accidental, and not the result of a steady and rational fortitude. Id. Ib.

The world, believe me, entertains the highest opinion of your merit, and loudly proclaims that enlarged and generous spirit which distinguishes all your actions; and it particularly remembers, to your immortal honour, the patriotism of your illustrious consulship. Id. Ib. To Publius Lentulus, book ii. let. 2.

CONSUL, the title of the supreme Magistrates among the Romans, after the abolition of Royalty; derived à consulendo, because they consulted the advantage of the State, or because they consulted the Senate. Their number was two, and the period of their Magistracy annual. It was from this latter circumstance that the Consular Government was at first really more free than the Royal; for their power, in the infancy of the Roman Commonwealth, was equal to that of the expelled King, and Cicero (De Leg. iii. 3,) does not scruple to call it Regia potestas. But the authority of the Consuls declined almost from their very first institution; Valerius Publicola, Consul in the first year of the new Government, took from the Magistracy the power of life and death within the City, although in military expeditions this power was still left in the hands of the Consul. He also allowed an appeal to lie to the People against the Consuls. This law was still further confirmed in the year of the city 306, by L. Valerius of the same family with Publicola, and M. Horatius, who moved a law which made it allowable to kill any person who was instrumental in creating any Magistrate without this appeal. But the Consu-

CONSUL. lar power received its principal shock in the year of the city 250, from the creation of the Tribunes of the People, who had a veto on the proceedings of the Consuls and were not subject to their authority. The Consuls, however, still retained a high degree of influence in the State. They presided in the Senate, and in many of the public assemblies; they had the supreme command in war, levied soldiers, and had a share in the appointment of the Military Tribunes and officers; and occasionally were invested with absolute power, when the exigencies of the State appeared to require the promptitude and simplicity of Monarchy. When the Consuls were appointed, the Senate usually assigned to them some particular object to be effected, generally the reduction or management of some country; hence their duties were severally called Provincia. But in the year 631, C. Sempronius Gracchus passed a law, in compliance with which the Provinciæ were determined before the election of the Consuls, and were afterwards settled between themselves, either by lot or agreement. In the more flourishing times of the Empire, the Provincia was some tributary country which was assigned to the government of a Consul after his office had expired; because during their Consulship, the Consuls were expected to remain in the Capital. Before this time, however, the Consul could not leave his appointed Province except by permission of the Senate, unless upon very especial occasions; and in cases of misconduct, the Senate might call on him to resign his Province, although his military command could be only abrogated by the People.

The qualifications for the Consulship, which, however, were not always rigidly demanded, were, that the candidate should be forty-three years of age, that he should have served the offices of Quæstor, Ædile, and Prætor; that he should hold no public office at the time of his election; and that he should be present when chosen.

The Consuls were at first chosen from the Aristocracy only; but the encroachments of the Commons were always directed to the attainment of the Consulship, and in the 378th year of the city, a circumstance trifling in itself produced this anxiously desired consummation. The two daughters of M. Fabius Ambustus, a Patrician, were married respectively to Ser. Sulpicius, a Patrician, and to L. Licinius Stolo, a Plebeian. While the two sisters were in conversation at the house of the elder, the attendant of Sulpicius announced his return by a stroke of his mace on the door, which was the customary form when a Military Tribune returned to his house. The Military Tribunes were created from among the Patricians only, although it was legal to elect them from the Commons. Hence the wife of Stolo was ignorant of the reason of the noise, and being alarmed, was laughed at by her sister for her ignorance. Vexed at the apparent inferiority of her fortune, she complained to her father, who consoled her by telling her that the same honours should soon attend her house which she had seen at her sister's. He immediately organized plans in conjunction with his son-in-law and L. Sextius, a young and active Plebeian; and in eleven years after, Sextius himself was created Consul, and Stolo two years afterwards. Not content with this, Stolo procured a law to be passed, by which one of the Consuls was always to be a Plebeian.

The Consular power, which had been so often threatened with destruction from the encroachments of Democracy, at length received its extinction from the reestablished Monarchy. The name was retained; but as the Consuls were always nominated or elected by the Emperor, they were always at his disposal. Sometimes the Emperor bore the Consulship himself. Constantine created two Consuls annually, one for the East and the other for the West; and Gibbon, with that incomparable skill by which he so often weaves a perfect texture from the raw materials of others, has put together from different passages of Claudian a full account of the solemnities attendant upon their inauguration, (ch. xvii.) In the reign of Justinian the office ceased altogether, after there had frequently been only one Consul in the year. (Procop. Anecd. 26.)

The office of dignity which afterwards obtained the appellation of Comes or Earl, was, in the first times of British history, called Consul, as we learn from the law of Edward the Confessor, cap. ii. Quod modo vocatur comitatus, olim apud Britonas temporibus Romanorum vocabatur Consulatus, et qui modo Vicecomites, tunc temporis Viceconsules vocabantur. In modern times the word Consul denotes an officer intrusted with the protection of any nation's commercial interests. In France, Spain, Germany, and Italy, mercantile Courts, determine questions of law between traders. The mercantile Consuls of England exercise their authority abroad only.

Cuspinian or Speishammes, Comm. in Sext. Rufi libellum de Regid, Consulari Imperialique dignitate.

CONSU'LT, v. Fr. consulter; Sp. consultar; CONSU'LT, n. It. consultare; Lat. consul-ere; CONSULTA'TION, consultum; to hold council; to CONSULTA'TIVE, advise with. Of uncertain Ori- CONSU'LTER, gin. Martinius says, a con and CONSU'LTIVE. salio. Qui consulunt rationibus in unam sententiam, quasi saliunt.

"Fr. consulter; to give or take advice, to consult or deliberate; ponder or think of; rest or pause on the matter." Cotgrave.

Wherfore we pray you, that if we speake a lytle more longe, ye take it not to euill intent and thinke not, that in shewing you, that youe shulde mynde to aduyse & consult well of the matter, wherof is question: that we go about to teache you what you haue to do, as though we repute you ignorāt people.
Nicolls. Thucydides, fol. 101.

Against which treatie the vnited prouinces making open protestation, vsed all meanes possible to hinder it, alleaging that it was more requisite to consult how the enemie now pressing vpon them might be repelled from off their frontiers.
Hakluyt. Voyage. The Spanish Armada.

And they were all called, and had theyr voyce in the common consultacyons that were made for the feates of warre.
Nicolls. Thucydides, fol. 35.

And a day and place being appointed, where the consultation should bee kept in the mean time those miscreants cōspired together about the murthering of the king.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. King of Man.

That the law hath been fined by grave and learned men, meaning the professors of the law, is manifestly untrue; for all the laws of England have been made by the kings of England, consulting with the nobility and commons in parliament, of which not one in twenty was a learned lawyer.
Hobbs. A dialogue of the Common Laws of England, fol. 591.

In the Lord Cobham's and Sir Walter Ralegh's case, a conspiracy, consult and agreement to promote an insurrection, and procure an invasion, was held an overt-act, 1 Jac. I. and their meet-

ULT ing, consulting and agreeing, was laid as an overt-act, though discovered before the thing took effect.
State Trials. Trial of Lord William Russell. Anno 1683.

——————— After short silence then
And summons read, the great consult began.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 798.

To this the king of men replied; O father, all the sonnes
Of Greece thou conquerst, in the strife of consultations.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book ii. fol. 24.

——————— If other hidden cause
Left them superiour, while we can preserve
Unhurt our minds, and understandings sound,
Due search and consultation will disclose.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 445.

Those who sacrifised their children as the Phœnicians did for a remedy against the plague; as also diviners, observers of times, enchanters, whitches, charmers, consulters with familiar spirits, wizards, and necromancers.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iv. ch. viii.

If it be but consultive to the magistrate, then they say no more than we. Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part iv. fol. 158.

He therefore hath been most consultive about the effecting of this and for the bringing it to its performance according to his own desire. Id. Ib. vol. v. part i. p. 109.

None of them elect or choose the emperour, but only those six princes who have a consultative, deliberative, and determinative power in his election.
Bishop Bramwell against Hobbes, p. 27.

And, indeed, Cranmer, Ridley, and Cox, were the chief that managed that affair; [the review of that communion book] though they consulted with Bucer and Peter Martyr.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1554.

When you have gain'd that pass, divide your force;
Your self in person lead one chosen half,
And march t' oppose the faction in consult
With dying Dorax.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, act iv. sc. 1.

Under him (if the father of the family or nation) the elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them; and to share with him in the consultation and conduct of their common affairs. Sir William Temple. On the Nature of Government.

A consult of coquettes below
Was call'd, to rig him out a beau.
Swift. Death and Daphne.

By the consultation of books, whether of dead or living authors, many temptations to petulance and opposition, which occur in oral conferences, are avoided.
Johnson. The Rambler, No. 87.

The consulters [of the oracles] sometimes wrote their requests, and received answers in writing.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, p. 264.

CONSUETUDE, Lat. con, and suere, to accustom. Custom.

Wherfore to say y^t it is sacrilege, or unlawfull to observe this cõsuetude or laws must bee iudged erronious.
Barnes. Workes, fol. 301.

CONSU'ME, v. CONSU'MABLE, CONSU'MER, CONSU'MPTION, CONSU'MPTIVE, CONSU'MPTIVELY, CONSU'MPTIONISH. Fr. consumer; Sp. consumir; It. consumare; Lat. consumere; con, and sum-ere; totum sumere, in nihilum redigere, to take all, reduce to nothing; i. e. sub, and em-ere; which according to Festus signifies, tollere; (to till,) to lift up, to take up.

To take the whole; to reduce to nothing, to leave nothing; to devour, waste, or destroy.

Behold my picture here wel portrayed for the nones
With hart consumed and falling flesh, behold the very bones.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Picture of a Louer.

So fine was never yet the cloth,
No smith so hard his yron did beate,
But those consumed was with moth
Tother with canker all to freate.
Vncertaine Auctors. That eche thing is hurte of itselfe.

CON-SUME.

Wherefore in this you may repose your selves; giving yourselves to serve God devoutly, to live like true and faithful subjects to his majesty, and to provide honestly for the sustentation of your houses, and the relieving of poor people with the hospitality of the same, without consumption, and wilful wast and spoil of things.
Strype. Memorials. Cromwell's Letters to certain Monasteries.

Now let vs see what help we may haue of this medicin against the sickness of ẽuy, which is vndoubtedly botl. a sore tormẽt & a very consumpcion. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 85

I dye, though not incontinent;
By processe yet consumingly;
As wast of fire, which doth relent.
Wyat. The Louer lamenteth his estate, &c.

And all members of the body conspired against the stomacke as against the swallowing gulf of all their labours; for whereas the eyes beheld, the ears heard, the hands laboured, the feet travailed, the tongue spake, and all parts performed their functions, onely the stomache lay idle and consumed all.
Camden. Remains. Wise Speeches, p. 265.

Beastly consumer! not content to eat
The wholesome quarters destin'd for men's meat.
Cotton. On the Great Eater of Gray's Inn.

Another argument drawne from reason, for the world's decay, is, that all the parts of it decay and by degrees grow to dissolution, which should likewise argue a wasting and lingering consumption in the whole. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 55.

By which we are at last brought to this truth that it was taught by God to Adam, and by him taught to his posterity, that they should in their several manners worship God by giving to him something of all that he had given us; and therefore something of our time, and something of our goods: and as that was to be spent in praises and celebration of his name, so these were to be given in consumptive offerings.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. iii.

The question is of both concerning a consumptive sacrifice, the destruction of a towne there, of a whole kingdom here; but differing in the circumstances of place whence they would fetch their fire. Id. Sermon 9. part ii.

A company of little boyes were by their school-master not many years since appointed to act the play of "King Henry the Eighth," and one who had no presence, but (an absence rather) as of a whyning voyce, puiling spirit, consumptionish body, was appointed to personate King Henry himself, only because he had the richest cloaths, and his parents the best people of the parish: but, when he had spoke his speech rather like a mouse than a man, one of his fellow-actors told him, "If you speak not Hoh with a better spirit, your parliament will not you give a penny of money." Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

Our coin and treasure will be both ways equally diminished, and can be restor'd only by an over-balance of our whole exportation, to our whole importation of consumable commodities.
Locke. Further considerations concerning raising the value of money.

When once the necessity appears of paying the duties, and of leaving off the clandestine trade, the price to the consumer must of consequence be immediately advanced.
Headley. Works. Letters signed Britannicus, &c. let. 89.

War our consumption, was their gainful trade:
We inward bled, whilst they prolong'd our pain;
He fought to end our fighting, and essay'd
To stanch the blood by breathing of the vein.
Dryden. On the death of Oliver Cromwell.

It [prayer] is not at all consumptive of our time. For we may attend this work, when we are doing other business.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 15. vol. i.

Every new advance of the price to the consumer is a new incentive to him to retrench the quality of his consumption; and if, upon the whole, he pays the same, his property computed by the standard of what he voluntarily pays, must remain the same.
Burke On a Regicide Peace.

CONSUME. The healing art calls in the snails in consumptive cases.
Pennant. Zoology. Worms, class 6.

CONSUS. CONSU'MMATE, v. CONSU'MMATE, adj. CONSU'MMATELY, CONSUMMA'TION. Fr. consommer; Sp. consumir; It. consommare; Lat. con, and summus, (superrimus, supremus, summus, from supra, above.)

To reach the top or summit, the highest or utmost point aimed at or aspired after; to attain, to finish, perfect, fulfil, complete, or accomplish.

There is not a blessing upon earth, that can any way hope or seem to parallel a sober well grounded assurance here, that in time we shall be saints in heaven; 'tis such a paradise upon earth, that heaven itself seems but a second part of it, differing from it rather in degrees and external accomplishments, than in any distinct specifical kind of happiness; (the Lord of heaven by his mighty working, when it shall please him, begin and consummate it in us.) Hammond. Works. Sermon 1. vol. iv. fol. 565.

Thus broke she off her speech, when as the Muse awhile,
Desirous to repose, and rest her with the isle,
Here consummates her song, and doth fresh courage take,
With war, in the next book, the Muses to awake.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 22.

That all the angels and ætherial powers,
They now, and men hereafter, may discern,
From whose consummate vertue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son.
To earn salvation for the sons of men.
Milton. Paradise Regained, book i. l. 165.

I will shut up this reason with my witty epigram made vpon one who in his writings vndertooke to foretell the very yeare of the world's consummation.
Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 23.

And therefore, so long as God is angry with thee, however rich and happy thou mayst think thyself, thou art in hell though thou knowest it not; and there is nothing wanting to consummate thy misery, but the apprehension of thy sad condition.
Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 85.

But he, consummate master, knew
When to recede, and where pursue:
His noble negligences teach
What other's toils despair to reach.
Prior. Alma, can. 2.

Of this match the queen, who had lost so much time, was very fond, and earnestly desirous of the consummation of it; though afterwards she had but little comfort therein.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1554.

Heaven's king! whose face unveil'd consummates bliss;
Redundant bliss! which fills that mighty void,
The whole creation leaves in human hearts.
Young. The Complaint. Night 9.

He tells us, the main end of jesting at the bar is, not to acquire the credit of consummate humour, but to carry the cause, ut proficiamus aliquid: that is to make an impression on the people.
Hurd. Works. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

When it is said that of his [Christ's] kingdom there shall be no end, the meaning is that it shall not pass away like other kingdoms, and that there shall be no end of it, till the consummation of all things.
Jortin. Discourses. Concerning the Christian Religion.

[They] under the conduct of Felix Rogusinus, a Dalmatian, consummately learned in the Greek, Chaldaic, and Arabic languages, and an elegant designer and painter of ornaments on vellum, attended incessantly to the business of transcription and decoration. Thomas Warton. History of English Poetry.

CONSUS quasi consiliorum Deus, (Festus, 3,) the same Deity as Neptunus Equestris, or ἵππιος. If the reader is not content to derive Neptune's connection with the Horse, from the common legend of his contest with Minerva for the patronage of Athens, he may find two other reasons in Festus, (8,) either that Pegasus was the offspring of the Sea God and the Nymph Pegasis, or that when Saturn was in the habit of eating his children, the life of Neptune was saved by the substitution of a foal. The altar of Consus was underground in the Circus Maximus;—ut ostendatur tectum debere esse consilium. Servius, ad Æneid, viii. 636; and was only exposed to public view during the celebration of the Consualia, (Plut. in Rom.; Dion. Hal. ii.) at the commencement of the Ludi Circenses. On this occasion a mule was sacrificed, (as we are informed by Alexander ab Alexandro, (v. 26,) who does not cite his authority, and probably mistakes a passage in Festus, (2;) in which the sacrifice of mules is not mentioned, but it is stated that mules were employed in the Circus during the celebration of the Consualia,) and all horses and asses enjoyed a day of repose. Plut. Quæst. Rom. 48. There appears some doubt as to the time of the annual celebration of the Consualia. Dionysius (i.) assigns their origin to Evander; they wer probably revived by Romulus, who on the last day of the festivity perpetrated the rape of the Sabines. (Diony. ii.; Liv. i.; Varro, De Ling. Lat. v.) Ovid, by telling the story of the rape of the Sabines in the third Book of his Fasti, plainly refers that event to the month of March; and Servius (loc. cit.) says the same thing; nevertheless, Plutarch (in Rom.) and Dionysius Halicarnassensis, give the Consualia to the XVIIIth day of the month Sextilis. See Rosini, Ant. iv. 12.

CONTABULATE, con, and tabula, est autem taba et tabula παρὰ τὸ τάζω, quoniam tabulata in ædibus, et ulmis planitiem extendebant. Scaliger, De Causis, c. 31. Τάζω, says Vossius, the same as τείνω, that is extendo. But Vossius prefers the Chaldaic.

To board; to strengthen, as with boards.

Bedcords and boards are the best flesh-formers, consolidating, and contabulating his body of errantry into a gum or moving mummia. Gayton. Notes on Don Quixote, vol. iii. p. 2.

CONTACT, n. CONTA'CTION, CONTA'GION, CONTA'GIOUS, CONTA'GIOUSNESS. Lat. conting-ere, actum; to touch together; (con, and tangere, from θίγ-ειν, or θιγγαν-ειν, to touch.) Cont-ages, -agio, -agium, morbus contactu inficiens. Vossius. Fr. contagion; It. contagione.

Contact is simply touch. Contagion is applied to disease, infecting or communicating itself by contact or touch; but the application of this word is much extended by Medical writers. See CONTAMINATE. It is used met. for any spreading evil or mischief.

This is a very true saying and maketh well agaynst his owne purpose, for in deede this contagion began to spring euen in St. Paule's tyme. Frith. Workes, fol. 116.

After the whiche reyne ensued so great excedynge nombre and multytude of flyes, the whiche were to the people so noyous and contageous, that they slewe moche people.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. xix.

He thought it best to make a peregrinaciō & take his progresse into the other quarters of his realm y^t he might wede, extirpate and purdge the myndes of mē spotted & cōtaminate with the cōtagious smoke of dissencion, & preuy faccions.
Hall. Henry VII. The first Yere.

Now that deleterious it [the basilisk] may be at some distance and distructive with corporeal contaction, what uncertainty soever there be in the effect, there is no high improbability in the relation. Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. vii.

Why, Mary, could not thine omnipotent Saviour, as well in absence have commanded Lazarus to live? Is his hand so short, that he can do nothing but by contaction.
Hall. Cont. Lazarus Raised.

But what cause then shall we give of David's remorse; none other, beloved, but that religious and carefull jealousie which still he had over his own thoughts, which made him suspect all things be they never so safe, and never to think himself secure from the contagion of sin. Hale. Remains, part i. p. 179.

Such is the powre of that same fruit, that naught
The fell contagion may thereof restraine;
Ne within reason's rule, her madding mood containe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 7.

For what is this contagious sin of kind,
But a privation of that grace within,
And of that great rich dowry of the mind
Which all had had, but for the first man's sin?
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, sec. 8.

Neuertheless I wist neuer none that right said, that any while were enuenomed with your contagiousnesse, that is, contaminated and spotted doctrine.
Fox. Martyrs. The examination of Wm. Thorp, &c. fol. 488.

Which noysome and pestilent vapor arising forth of a certaine deepe pit, when it once passed the wide mouth thereof, before it was walmed up higher, caused (through the contagiousnesse thereof) the grounds lying round about it to be uninhabitable.
Holland. Ammianus. Julianus, fol. 229.

Swell'd by contact of such a fulsome toad,
He lugg'd about the matrimonial load;
Till fortune, blindly kind as well as he,
Has ill restor'd him to his liberty.
Dryden. An Essay on Satire.

He sees the dire contagion spread so fast,
That where it seizes all relief is vain:
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would, else, the foe maintain.
Id. Annus Mirabilis, st. 244.

But first, by ardent prayer, and clear lustration,
Purge the contagious spots of human weakness.
Impure no mortal can behold Apollo.
Prior. Second Hymn of Callimachus.

Those corpuscles, that impregnate the Ægyptian air upon the swelling of the Nile, are able to put a speedy stop, not only to the contagiousness, but to the malignity of the plague, even when it is assisted by the summer heat, which at Grand Cairo is wont to be excessive.
Boyle. Of the Insalubrity and Salubrity of the Air.

They [the barking shark] will permit a boat to follow them, without accelerating their motion till it comes almost within contact. Pennant. British Zoology. The Barking Shark.

Their propensity to recount the wonderful exceeds all imagination. Neither their learning, judgment, nor integrity, could secure them against the general contagion.
Warburton. Introduction to Julian.

——— Fierce the struggles; while the rout
Of Medes and Cassians carry to the camp
Contagious terrour.
Glover. Leonidas, book v.

CONTA'IN, v. CONTA'INABLE, CONTA'INER, CONTE'NT, n. Fr. contenir; Sp. contener; It. contenere; Lat. contin-ere; con, and ten-ere, to hold; which, Vossius thinks, is of the same origin as τείν-ειν, tend-ere, ut teneamus nervos extendimus.

To hold or keep within, to comprehend, to comprise, to embrace.

There are also manye other thynges whyche Jesus dyd: the whiche yf they should be wrytten euery one I suppose the worlde coulde not contayne the bokes that should be wrytten.
Bible, 1551. John, ch. xxi.

Whereas also we euidently gathered out of the contents of your letter, that you are in like sort readie and willing to put all things in practice, which are by you and your subiects louingly to be performed. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Edward II.

You, who prepare to reade graue Beaumont's verse,
And at your entrance view my lowly straines,
Expect no flatt'ring prayses to reherse,
The rare perfections, which this booke contains.
Beaumont. To my deare Father Sir J. Beaumont.

And you, fair eyes, containers of my bliss,
Motives of love, born to be matched never,
Entombed in your sweet circles, sleep for ever.
Daniel. Complaint of Rosamond.

To whom thus Belial in like gamesome mood,
Leader, the terms we sent were terms of weight,
Of hard contents, and full of force urg'd home,
Such as we might perceive amus'd them all,
And stumbl'd many.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 622.

And when he [Cranmer] came to the last part of his task, he boldly owned his books, avowing the truths in them contained, and disclaimed the Roman doctrine.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1555.

The air containable within the cavity of the æolipile, amounted to eleven grains, and somewhat more.
Boyle. Experiment 36. Touching the Spring of Air.

Because no humane inventions were to be allowed about the worship of God, he had cut out of his Bible the contente of the chapters, and titles of the leaves, and so left the bare text, without binding or covers. Stillingfleet. Sermon 1. vol. ii.

The intimation to Adam—that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head was undoubtedly very obscure. But yet it contained some foundation for a hope, that the great evil, introduced by the fall of man, should hereafter be repaired.
Gilpin. Sermon 1. vol. i.

Among artificial substances the ship [naūs, navis) is feminine, as being so eminently a receiver and container of various things, of men, arms, provisions, goods, &c
Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. iv.

Scarce had he gone when a young lad came by,
And, as the purse lay just before his eye,
He took it up; and finding its content,
Secur'd the treasure, and away he went.
Byrom. Moses's Vision.

CONTA'MINATE, v. CONTA'MINATE, adj. CONTAMINA'TION. Fr. contaminer; Sp. contaminar; It. contaminare; Lat. contamin-are, atum; con, and the obsolete tamin-are, which Vossius thinks is from the Hebrew. Lennep supposes that tagimen, contractè tamen, (from tago, whence tango,) gave birth to the verb tamino, and the compound contamino; and thus, contaminatio, and contagio will have the same origin, and have, with very little difference, the same application. Contagion is more particularly limited to the spreading of disease by contact. Contamination to that of any other defilement.

"Fr. contaminer; to defile, pollute, contaminate; to stain, distain, violate." Cotgrave.

Idoles ar so to be detested of the faithful & godly man, that they shuld not be in his mouthe or tonge, least y^e^ talke had of thē shuld seme to cōtaminat and defile him.
Caluine. Foure Godlie Sermons, serm. 1.

He could finde in his heart to be killed instantly, least if he live longer, some sorrow or sicknesse should contaminate his joyes. Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 507.

That bird and beast incontinently fly,
From the detested and contagious stink,
And rather choose by cruel thirst to die,
Then once to taste of this contaminate drink.
Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles, book ii.

I am glad you shall come home; and would wish you were at home, out of that country so contaminate with innocent blood, that the sun cannot look upon it but to prognosticate the wrath and vengeance of God.
Strype. Life of Sir T. Smith, ch. xiii. Anno 1572. Queen Elizabeth.

CONTAMINATE. — CONTEMN.

We take what he gives: no man's mouth shall condemne my refuter but his owne. What was he that accused mariage of vnholinesse, out of sancti estote; of uncleannesse, out of omnia munda mundis; of contamination with carnal concupiscense? Was it not his owne Pope Innocentius?

Hall. Honour of the Maried Clergie, vol. i. fol. 692.

There is a poison behind, which will contaminate and eat through all this happiness.

Hoadley. Works. Britannicus, let. 65.

Even when the nobility, which represented the more permanent landed interest, united themselves by marriage (which sometimes was the case) with the other description, the wealth, which saved the family from ruin, was supposed to contaminate and degrade it.

Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

The priestly brotherhood, devout, sincere,
From mean self-int'rest and ambition clear,
Should fly the world's contaminating touch,
Holy and unpolluted. Cowper. Expostulation.

CONTECK, Mr. Tyrwhit says, is Saxon. Skinner; a corruption of contest.

Conteke with blody knif, and sharp manace.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2005.

Thou shalt be softe in companie,
Without contecke or foolhast.
Gower. Conf. Am., book iv. fol. 63.

——— I found some contecke and debate,
In regiment where I was woont to rule.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

Let none mislike of that may not be amended:
So conteck, soone by concord, mought be ended.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. May.

But kindle coals of conteck and yre,
Wherewith they set all the world on fire.
Id. Ib. September.

CONTECTION, Lat. conteg-ere, ctum; (con, and tegere, to cover.)

A covering.

Fig-leaves were aptly formed for such contection of those parts. Sir Thomas Brown. Miscellaneous Tracts, p. 15.

CONTE'MN, v.
CONTE'MNER,
CONTE'MNING,
CONTE'MPT, n.
CONTE'MPTFUL,
CONTE'MPTIBLE,
CONTE'MPTIBLENESS,
CONTE'MPTIBLY,
CONTEMPTIBI'LITY,
CONTE'MPTUOUS,
CONTE'MPTUOUSLY,
CONTE'MPTUOUSNESS.

Lat. contemnere; con, and temn-ere, from the Gr. τέμνειν, secare, abscindere, quia quod aspernamur, hoc amputamus atque abscindimus. Perottus. And Vossius, in v. Sperno, which he derives from σπείρειν, spargere, to scatter, to toss away, observes, —Ita propriè sperni dicetur; quod per viam spargitur, ut temni, quod abscinditur; of similar consequential application is the word ABJECT.

To throw or toss aside; sc. as of no value; to abject, to spurn, to disdain, to despise, to neglect.

For these are the rules wherein we must exercise our self, that we may be confirmed in the faith, in y^e^ feare of God, in holines, finally in contempte of the world and loue of the beauenly life.
Caluine. Four Godlie Sermons, serm. 3.

Therfore if ghe han worldli domes, ordeyne ghe tho contemptible men that ben in the chirche to deme.
Wiclif. 1 Corynthians, ch. vi

When Saint Paule also biddeth the Corinthians, that rather then they should sew afore Painim iudges they should appoint for iudges of their own, euen such as were contemptible in the church: he ment not y^e^ an vnknown cõpany should appoint vnknowē iudges. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 827.

Upon your information to us thereof, we shal so aid and assist you in the execution of justice and punishment of al such contemptuous offenders, as the same shall be example to others.
Strype. Memorials. The Lord Protector to the Justices of Peace, &c.

CON-TEMN

And is not the abbot now worthy to be corrected, which al this notwithstanding, hath caused the moak contemptuously stil to continue his lecture? Had not I been worthy correction, if I had contemptuously disobeyed your letter lately addressed unto me, having the equivaleancy of a inhibition?
Id. Ib. Shackston. Bishop of Salisbury to Cromwel.

A visage sterne, and milde; where both did growe,
Vice to contemne, in vertue to rejoyce:
Amid great stormes, whom grace assured so,
To liue vpright, and smile at fortunes choyce.
Surrey. On the Death of Sir T. W.

He was I heard say a seditious man, a contemner of common prayer, I wold there were no mo in England: wel he is gone. I wold he had lefte none behind him.
Latimer. Seventh Sermon before King Edward.

Yet his highnes is advertised and informed, that diuers of his subjects be not only to al these more slow and negligent, but rather contempners and despisers of such good and godly acts and deeds.
Strype. Memorials. A Proclamation for the absteinyng from Flesh in the Lent tyme.

Crucifie unto you the unclean affections, the incendiary lusts of your hearts, which the heathens have performed for the poor empty reward of fame: prefer not riches nor honours before me, which is no more than many philosophers have done for those vulgar changeable Gods which themselves have contemned.
Chillingworth. Sermon 4.

True fame is ever likened to our shade,
He soonest misseth her, that most [haste] hath made
To overtake her; whoso takes his wing,
Regardlesse of her, she'll be following:
Her true proprietie she thus discovers,
" Loves her contemners, and contemns her lovers."
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 2.

Security is the bane of good successe; it is no contemning of a foyled enemy; the shame of a former disgrace and miscarriage, whets his valor & sharpens it to revenge: no power is so dreadfull, as that which is recollected from an overthrow.
Hall. Cont. Ahab and Benhadad, vol. i. p. 1211.

Men so the world shall love, religion hate,
That all true zeal shall in contempt be brought,
The spirituall lights' eclipse shall grow so great,
That lyes the truth, truth shall a lie be thought.
Stirling. Dooms-day. The second Houre.

And should we bear a continued oration, upon such a subject as the stage treats on, in such words as we hear some sermons; I am confident, it would not only be far more tedious, but nauseous and contemptful. Feltham. Resolve 20.

A Nazarite in place abominable,
Vaunting my strength in honour to their Dagon?
Besides, how vile, contemptible, ridiculous;
What act more execrably unclean, prophane?
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1361.

The contemptibility and vanity of this effeminate argument detains vs longer, then for the quality thereof were fitting, did not so much mischiefe issue out of it.
Speed. Edward II. book ix. ch. xi.

Zacharie telleth Boniface, that it is according to the old canons, that Bishops should not be placed in such smal cities, but in more ample and large cities, bycause the contemptiblenesse of the place, dothe oftentimes bring contempt to the person, and a byshop ought to be esteemed and reuerenced.
Whitgift. Defence, fol. 443.

Detesting the rude spoils, done by the armed throng,
The mad tumultuous world contemptibly forsook
And to his quiet cell by Crowland him betook.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 24.

——— ———All these at thy command
To come and play before thee, know'st thou not
Their language and thir wayes, they also know,
And reason not contemptibly.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 394.

Not as our English, he stood and prayed thus with himself, but as the words will likewise bear it, he stood by himself thus; this posture signifying a proud contemptuous behaviour, whilst the publican stood crouching humbly, tremblingly behind.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 8. vol. iv.

And thou, the queen of isles Great Britain why do ye
Your grandsire's goodlike name (with a neglectful ear)
In so reproachful terms and ignominy bear,
By every one of late contemptuously disgrac'd.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 10.

On the contrary we find them extreamly cautious of giving any offence in such matters, which temper they learnt of their lord and master, who complyed with many things, that others might not take advantage by his omission of them, to slight and contemn them. Stillingfleet. Sermon 1. vol. ii.

I am ridiculously enough accused to be a contemner of universities, that is, in other words, an enemy of learning, without the foundation of which I am sure no man can pretend to be a poet.
Dryden. Dedication of the Assignation.

After my fancy had run over the most obvious and common calamities which men of mean fortunes are liable to, it descended to these little insults and contempts, which, tho' they may seem to dwindle into nothing, when a man offers to describe them, are perhaps in themselves more cutting and insupportable than the former. Spectator, No. 150.

But since in his late Socinian creed he says, I would have answered him if I could, That the interest of Christianity may not suffer by my silence, nor the contemptibleness of his treatise afford him matter of triumph amongst those who lay any weight on such boasting, 'tis fit it should be shewn what an arguer he is, and how well he deserves for his performance to be dubb'd by himself irrefragable.
Locke. Works. A second vindication of the Reasonableness of Christianity.

For I hope you do not think, how contemptibly soever you speak of the venerable mob, as you are pleased to dignifie them, that the bulk of mankind, or in your phrase, the rabble are not concerned in religion, or ought to understand it in order to their salvation. Id. Ib. A Vindication, &c.

If the Devil should have a mind to tempt, by suggesting of thoughts, he would tempt a proud man, by filling his mind with foolish and vain conceits of himselfe, and contemptuous thoughts of other men. Sharp. Works. Sermon 5. vol. iii.

But this remonstrance is properly addressed to those that are without, to the contemners of the Christian law.
Hurd. Works. Sermon 5. vol. vi.

I follow trembling; for the cliffs are high,
And hov'ring round them watchful harpies fly,
To snatch the poet's wreath with envious claws,
And hiss contempt for merited applause.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, book i.

Cicero intreats his friend "not to confine himself to the strict laws of history, but to give a greater latitude to his encomiums than Lucceius might possibly think his actions could claim." And never did vanity, it must be acknowledged, utter or conceive a more ridiculous and contemptible wish.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Lucius Lucceius, note 7.

Next, when the mother abbess came,
With an authoritative look,
The feather'd libertine to blame,
Contemptuously his tail he shook.
Cowper. Ver-Vert, can. 4.

CONTEMPT, in Law, disobedience to the Rules, Orders, or Process of a Court which hath power to punish for such offence. Such punishment being the issuing an attachment against the party so disobeying, whereupon he is committed until he clears his Contempt; if the Contempt, however, should actually be committed in Court, he is then liable to instant imprisonment. Contempts may be classed under the following heads: Contempts of the King's Writ; Contempts in the face of the Court; Contemptuous words or writings concerning the Court; Contempts of the rules or awards of the Court; Abuse of the process of the Courts; Forgeries of writs, and other deceits tending to impose on the Court. Contempts or Misprisions, are offences against the King's Prerogative, his Person, or Government, and against his Title. Contempts against the King's Prerogative are so various, that they cannot well be reduced to any certain heads; they principally are, refusing to assist the King for the public good, either in his Councils, or wars, or neglecting to join the posse comitatus, or power of the County, when required by the Sheriffs or Justices; preferring the interests of a foreign Potentate to those of our own; Disobeying the King's lawful commands or prohibitions. Contempts against the King's Person or Government are: charging the Government with oppression or weak administration; doing any act which impliedly encourages rebellion; endeavouring to frighten the King into a change of measures; spreading false rumours concerning him; charging him with a breach of his Coronation oath; speaking contemptuously of him; these, and various other degrees of the same offence, are highly criminal, and punishable with fine and imprisonment, and sometimes pillory. Contempts against the King's Title are: denying such title, and refusing to take the oaths required by law for the support of his Government. Blackstone, in the fourth volume of his Commentaries, p. 121; and Hawkins, On the Pleas of the Crown, vol. i. ch. xxi. treats more largely on these heads.

CONTE'MPER, v.
CONTE'MPERATE,
CONTEMPERA'TION,
CONTE'MPERAMENT,
CONTE'MPERING, n.
Con, and temper-are, from tempus, time, habere rationem temporis; to have regard, to take account of time.

To time, to season, to suit to the time or season, to adapt, to regulate, to bring within order or measure, to moderate, &c. by intermixture;—and thus, to intermix:—to qualify or mitigate the qualities; and thus, to diminish, to dilute.

The swiftest animal [the dolphin] conjoyned with that heavy body, [the anchor] implying that common moral, Festina lente: and that celerity should always be contempered with cunctation.
Sir Thomas Brown, book v. ch. ii.

The mighty Nile and Niger; which do not only moisten and contemperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations.
Id. book vi. ch. x.

As for the condition he interposeth, that I must shew this before the contemperation of affairs to the civil constitutions of cities and provinces, I confess that to be a rigourous condition, and such as unless I be releas'd from that restraint, I shall be utterly disabled to perform my task.
Hammond. Works. Answer to the Animadversions, vol. ii. fol. 59.

But that all the Gods who were before at discord and debate, by reason of their dissimilitude, and whatsoever else jarred, grew to accord and consonance one with another, whereof the cause was the contemperature, moderation and order of number and harmony, the very poets were not ignorant of.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 857.

As therefore dead flies corrupt the ointment of the apothecary, or as poison viciates holsome food: so the contempering of some inferior virtues with more transcendant vices in our stage playes, doth either turn these virtues into poyson, or else deprive them of their efficacie. Prynne. Historie Mastix, part i. p. 97.

It is a manifest sign of the Creator's management and care, in placing the terraqueous globe at that very distance it is from the sun; and contempering our own bodies, and all other things, so duly to that distance.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book ii. ch. v. note a.

I would further know, why this contemperation of light and shade, that is made, for example, by the skin of a ripe cherry, should exhibit a red, and not a green, and the leaf of the same tree should exhibit a green, rather than a red.
Boyle. Experimental History of Colours.

CONTEMPER. — CONTEMPLATE.

From which observation it appears, that there is pretty nearly an equal contemperament of the warmth of our bodies, to that of the hottest part of the atmosphere inhabited by us.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book i. ch. ii. note 3.

I conceive very great hopes of Mr. Parker, but I do always wish, that such juvenile felicities could receive a contemperament for their conduct from some that are better seasoned by longer time. Boyle. Letter from J. Beale.

What am I altered, whether colour be a quality emergent from the different contemperature of the elements, or whether it be only the reflection of the light upon the different situation of the parts of the body. South. Sermon 9. vol. ix.

CONTE'MPLATE, v. CONTEMPLA'TION, CONTE'MPLATIST, CONTE'MPLATIVE, CONTE'MPLATIVELY, CONTEMPLA'TOR, CONTE'MPLATING. Fr. contempler; Sp. contemplar; It. contemplare; Lat. contemplare; con, and templum, which, Joseph Scaliger thinks, is from τέμενος, (from τέμν-ειν, secare, abscindere,) q. a place cut off, separated, set apart; and thus

Consecrated—Deo alicui vel heroi; and as these places were so chosen that the structure raised upon them might be seen, viewed, observed from all sides;—hence, to contemplate is

To view, to behold, to observe, to consider, mark, gaze upon, sc. as an object of attention;—to muse, to meditate upon, think of, reflect upon, study,

——————————— Freres go to scole
And lerne logyk and lawe. and eke contemplation.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 406.

My minde is rapte in contemplation,
Wherein my dazeled eyes onely beholde,
The blacke houre of my constellation,
Which framed me so lucklesse on the molde.
Gascoigne. Hearbes.

But the Psalmes and contẽplatife meditacions, on which your highnesse, in the lieu and place of vayne courtely pastimes and gaming, doeth bestow your night and daies studie, and whiche, &c.
Udall. Preface, Luke.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth:
Will ever acts, and wit contemplates still;
And as from wit the pow'r of wisdom riseth,
All other virtues daughters are of will.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul. The Power of Will, &c. sec. 27.

But first, and chiefest, with thee bring,
Him that yon soars on golden wing,
Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
The cherub Contemplation.
Milton. Il Penseroso, l. 54.

To it he sung the glorious deeds, of great heroes dead,
And his true minde, that practice fail'd, sweet contemplation fed.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book ix. fol. 120.

It is not, I suppose, a more bold than profitable labour, after the endeavours of so many contemplative men to teach the art of meditation: an heavenly businesse, as any belongeth either to man or Christian, and such as whereby the soul doth unspeakably benefit itselfe. Hall. Of Divine Meditation, vol. i. fol. 95.

Since neither wealth, nor honour, arms nor arts,
Kingdom nor empire pleases thee, nor aught
By me propos'd in life contemplative,
Or active, tended on by glory, or fame,
What dost thou in this world?
Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 370.

My selfe a recluse from the world,
And, called vnder ground,
Least that the gould, the precious stones,
And pleasures here be found,
Might happen to corrupt my minde,
For blindnes did I pray,
And so contemplatively heere
I with contentment stay.
Warner. Albion's England, book vii. ch. xxxvii.

Some few others sought after him [God] but as Aristotle saith the Geometer doth, after a right line only, ὡς θεατὴς τῦ ἀληθοῦς, as a contemplator of truth, but not as the knowledge of it is any way useful or conducible to the ordering, or bettering of their lives. Hammond. Works. Sermon 12. vol. iv.

CONTEMPLATE — CONTEMPORE

It is a scheme and face of heaven,
As th' aspects are dispos'd this even,
I was contemplating upon
When you arriv'd, but now I've done.
Butler. Hudibras, part ii. can. 3.

Come, see thy friend retir'd without regret,
Forgetting care, or striving to forget;
In easy contemplation soothing time
With morals much, and now and then with rhyme.
Congreve. Letter to Lord Cobham.

A proper and effectual remedy for this wandering of thoughts I would be glad to find. He, that shall propose such an one, would do great service to the studious and contemplative part of mankind, and perhaps help unthinking men to become thinking.
Locke. Works. Of the Conduct of the Understanding, sec. 29.

It is very possible (to add that upon the bye) that after the light of the moon has (according to what I lately noted) represented to our contemplator the qualifications of a preacher, it may also put him in mind of the duty of a hearer.
Boyle. Occasional Meditations, sec. 4. ch. ii.

To Contemplation's sober eye
Such is the race of man:
And they that creep, and they that fly,
Shall end where they began.
Gray. Ode on the Spring.

Pliny may be considered in these letters as writing his own memoirs; every epistle is a kind of historical sketch, wherein we have a view of him in some striking attitude, either of active or contemplative life. Melmoth. Pliny. Preface, 5.

CONTE'MPORISE, CONTE'MPORARY, n. CONTE'MPORARY, adj. CONTE'MPORARINESS, CONTE'MPORANEOUS, CONTE'MPORANEITY. Lat. con, and tempus, time, perhaps from τέμν-ειν, secare, to cut; quia etsi materialiter, ut loquuntur, sit res continua, formaliter est res discreta. Vossius. Contemporise is peculiar to Sir Thomas Brown. Con, or co-temporaries, are those, who live at the same time.

Yet do they sometimes admit a respect therein; and even in their naturals, the indifferency of their existences contemporised in our actions, admits a farther consideration.
Sir Thomas Brown, book i. ch. xi.

He measures time by land-marks, and has found
For the whole day the dial of his ground.
A neighbouring wood, born with himself, he sees,
And loves his old contemporary trees.
Cowley. Claudian's Old Man of Verona.

The series of the matter, the epoch of the times, and regular succession and contemporarinees of princes.
Howell. Instructions for Foreign Travel, p. 39.

In the third volume of Thurlow's State Papers are several letters and other documents relative to this and the contemporaneous insurrections.
State Trials. Of Colonel John Penruddock.

As this King [Henry VIII.] was contemporary with the greatest monarchs of Europe, viz. the Emperor, the Kings of Spain and France, so he was engaged in many wars, and in divers leagues and pacifications with them or either of them; for the better consulting the peace of mankind.
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Anno 1546.

For this reason therefore I shall publish a sheet full of thoughts every morning, for the benefit of my contemporaries; and if I can any way contribute to the diversion or improvement of the country in which I live, I shall leave it when I am summoned out of it, with the secret satisfaction of thinking that I have not lived in vain. Spectator, No. 1.

EM-SE. ¶-D.

It would mortify an Englishman to consider, that from the time of Boccace and of Petrarch, the Italian has varied very little; and that the English of Chaucer, their contemporary, is not to be understood without the help of an old dictionary.
Dryden. Dedication of Troilus and Cressida.

Michael Drayton, contemporary with Shakspeare, sings their [horse] excellence in the sixth part of his Poly-olbion.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Horse.

It might perhaps be obviated by supposing, That the little book [in Revelations] contains the xi. chapter, only, being a compendium of the third division, and inserted in this place to shew the contemporaneity of the two last and principal parts.
Hurd. Works. Sermon 10. note x. vol. v.

CONTE'ND, v.
CONTE'NDENT,
CONTE'NDER,
CONTE'NDING, n.
CONTE'NTION,
CONTE'NTIOUS,
CONTE'NTIOUSLY,
CONTE'NTIOUSNESS.

Fr. contendre; Sp. contender; It. contendere; Lat. contendere; (con, and tendere,) to stretch, to strive; and tendo, from the Æolic τέννω, for τείνω. The ancient Latins used tenno. Vossius.

To stretch, strive, or struggle with; met. to dispute, to debate, to litigate.

Then Venus answer'd thus, Who is so madde that will forsake
This thing? or gladly wold in warre with thee so long contend?
Phaer. Æneidos, book iv.

Which thing was of all the Russes in the rest of their iourney so willingly done, that they began to quarrell, yea, and to fight also in striuing and contending which of them shuld put their post horses to the sledde.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Richard Chancelor.

Methinks those grave contenders about opinionative trifles, look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby-horse, or like something more ludicrous: since they make things their seria, which are scarce tolerable in their sportful intervals.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. xxiii.

For let me tell you, salvation will not be obtained at such a rate as this; no, there must be great struglings and labour, with earnest contendings, if ever you intend to be saved.
Hopkins. Sermon 24.

But when the wills of divers men produce such actions as are reciprocally resistant one to the other, this is called contention.
Hobbs. Human Nature, ch. xii.

O goodly vsage of those antique times!
In which the sword was seruant vnto right;
When not for malice and contentious crimes,
But all for praise, and proof of manly might,
The martiall breed accustomed to fight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 1.

These men go on both sides contentiously to obtaine their minds, contending whether this image or that image hath bin offered vnto, kissed, censed, or otherwise abused.
Fox. Martyrs. Another Letter, &c. for the Abolishing of Images.

It is very strange that those, who contend so much for the Scriptures being a perfect rule of all things pertaining to worship and discipline, should be able to produce nothing in so necessary a point. Stillingfleet. Sermon 6. vol. ii.

In all notable changes and revolutions, the contendents have been still made a prey to the third party. L'Estrange.

Those who see least into things are usually the fiercest contenders about them: and such eager disputants are fitter to make quarrels than to end them; for they can be contentious for peace sake, and make new differences about the ways of vanity.
Stillingfleet. Sermon 6. vol. ii.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage and your matchless worth,
Dazzling the eyes of all that did pretend,
To fierce contention gave a prosperous end.
Waller. A Panegyric to my Lord Protector.

CON-TEND. — CON-TENT.

The justices were to apprehend and take all such as did contentiously and tumultuously, with companies or routs, dispute, argue or reason, maintain or define the questions before mentioned.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1548.

Do not contentiousness and cruelty and study of revenge seldom fail of retaliation? Bentley. Sermon 1.

For all things, so as may please God, without contentiousness and with truth being examined, ought so to be established by our religiousness.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy, part ii. fol. 206.

Hail, ye who share the stern Minerva's power;
Who arm the hand of liberty for war:
And give to the renown'd Britannic name
To awe contending monarchs.
Akenside. Hymn to the Naiads.

It is sometimes of service, that our examples should be near us; and such as raise a reverence, sufficient to induce us carefully to observe them, yet not so great as to prevent us from engaging with them in something like generous contention.
Sir Joshua Reynolds. The fourteenth Discourse.

——— The Muse's haunt,
The marble porch, where wisdom woat to talk
With Socrates or Tully, hears no more,
Save the hoarse jargon of contentious monks,
Or female superstition's midnight prayer.
Akenside. The Pleasures of Imagination, book ii.

CONTE'NT, v.
CONTE'NT, adj.
CONTE'NT, n.
CONTENTA'TION,
CONTE'NTION,
CONTE'NTED, adj.
CONTE'NTEDLY,
CONTE'NTEDNESS,
CONTE'NTFUL,
CONTE'NTLESS,
CONTE'NTLY,
CONTE'NTMENT.

Lat. contentus, qui continet, quod animo satisfaciat. And thus,

Satisfied, having enough, sufficient, having no wish for ought more or different.

Why do not we then being poore beare it wisely, rather then by lust seeke riches vniustly, and shewe our selues contented with God's ordinance.
Sir John Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition, book iii.

And if anye with this wil not be contented, then let him take it in hand, and doe it anew himselfe, and I nothinge mistruste, but he shall find it an easier thing to controlle a peece or two, than to amend the whole of this interpretation.
Phaer. Virgil. The Conclusion.

Whan the seneshall of Guyngnape and the other knightes sawe these socours cõmyng, thã they sayd to the byssheppe, sir, ye may well leaue your treaty: for they sayd, they were not cõtent as than to folow his counsayle.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. lxxxi.

And that done, he cõmaunded inquyry to be made of his accessaryes of y^e^ whiche he punyssshed by dyuers maner of turmẽtys and dethes, to the great cõtentacion of the countrey.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 230.

Which sithens fortune had allowde,
let eyther well contented bee:
I hate him not for his delights,
then let him doo the lyke too mee.
Turbervile. Of one that was in Reuersion.

CONTENT.

We bode behind, four moneths or little lesse,
But wherevpon that God he knowes—not I,
Yet if I might be bold to giue a guess,
Then would I say it was for to espie,
What raunsome we would pay contentedly.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

All being sayd and done (as appeared) to his contentment, he licenced me and my whole company to depart, who were all in his presence, and were saluted by him with a nod of his head.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Th. Randolph, vol. i. fol. 377.

But thy eyes shall be witnesses (if it content thy will,)
And that (as thou pretend'st) these cares doe so affect thee still.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book iv. fol. 58.

O welcome easie yoke, sweet bondage come,
I seek not from thy toiles for to be shielded,
But I am well content to be o'ercome,
Since that I must commaund when I haue yielded.
Stirling. Aurora, song 10.

'Tis contentation that alone
Can make us happy here below;
And when this little life is gone,
Will lift us up to heav'n too.
Cotton. Contentation.

If there be any happinesse to be found upon earth, it is in that which we call contentation: this is a flower that grows not in every garden: the great Doctor of the Gentiles tells us that he had it; I have learned (saith he) in what estate soever I am, therewith to be content.
Hall. Of Contentation, vol. iii. fol. 497.

Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featur'd like him, like him with friends possess'd,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With that I most enjoy contented least.
Shakspeare. Sonnet 29.

And there with moderate meat, and wine, and fire,
Have pass'd the hours contentedly with chat,
Now talk'd of this, and then discours'd of that,
Spoke our own verses 'twixt ourselves, if not
Other men's lines.
Drayton. To Henry Reynolds, Esq. Of Poets and Poesy.

This question requireth a long answer, and specially unto such men as place felicity in riches, in possessions, and in the greatness of empire, rather than in the quiet safety, peace, and concord of a commonweal, and in clemency and justice, joyned with contention.
Sir Thomas North, fol. 65. Lycurgus and Numa.

And certes I am so much wedded to good fellowship, as if I could maintaine mine house to my contentation, with defraieng of five hundred pounds yearelie.
Holinshed, vol. vi. Ireland, ch. iii.

This grant the king tooke so contentedly, as he openly affirmed he was better pleased with this free contribution of one-tenth for the present, than if he had gotten foure by compulsion.
Speed. Richard II., book ix. ch. xiii.

Miracles, which when they met with a passive willingness, a contentedness in the patient to receive and believe them, were then the ordinary instruments of faith and conversion, would have been but cast away upon obdurate hearts.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 9. vol. iv.

Parnassus him containes, plast in the quire
With poets: what then can we more desire
To haue of him? perhaps an empty voyce,
While him we wrong with our contentlesse choyce.
Beaumont. A Congratulation to the Muses.

Leon. Come, we'l away unto your country-house,
And there we'l learn to live contently.
Beaumont and Fletcher. Rule a Wife and have a Wife, act iv. sc. 1.

For we are sure to loose them; and the best
Of these contentments no such comfort beares,
As may waigh equall with the doubts and feares
Which fixe our minds on that vncertaine day
When these shall faile, most certain to decay.
Beaumont. Of the miserable State of Man.

For who did ever yet, in honour, wealth,
Or pleasure of the sense, contentment find?
Who ever ceas'd to wish, when he had health,
Or, having wisdom, was not vex'd in mind?
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, sec. 30.

O the base degenerate spirits of mankind! that they should be contented to lead the life of brutes (and it would be well if they could die like them too) when it is in their power to live like angels, and God himself.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 5. vol. ii.

A wise content his even mind secur'd,
By want not shaken, nor by wealth allur'd.
Smith. In the Memory of Mr. John Philips.

And thus saying, and thinking, we may bear the heaviest load that can be laid upon us, with contentedness, at least, if not with cheerfulness. Atterbury. Sermon 1. vol. ii.

Now by contentfull submission to God's disposal of things, we do worthily express our due regard to both these, avowing his right, and approving his exercise thereof; but by discontent and regret at what happeneth, we do in effect injure God in both these respects, disavowing his right, and impeaching his management.
Barrow. Sermon 6. vol. iii.

In reading authors, when you find
Bright passages that strike your mind,
And which perhaps you may have reason
To think on at another season,
Be not contented with the sight,
But take them down in black and white.
Byrom. A Hint to a Young Person.

In coverts, (where the few frequent)
If virtue deigns to dwell;
'Tis thus, the little lamp, content,
Gives lustre to her cell.
Cunningham. The Contemplatist.

Many would contentedly suffer the consequences of their own mistakes, rather than the insolence of him who triumphs as their deliverer. Johnson. The Rambler, No. 87.

CONTE'RMINATE, adj. CONTE'RMINOUS, CONTE'RMINABLE. } Con, and terminus; Gr. τέρμων, ονος, from τέρ-ειν; Lat. ter-ere, to rub; because these portions of land maximè teruntur; sc. by the feet;—trodden, trampled upon.
Having the same bounds or limits.

Ethiopia being the conterminate region of Egypt, and not divided so much as by a river.
Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. viii. sec. 10.

There succeeded in the same place the departure of my no less dear niece, your long, and I dare say, your still beloved consort, (for love and life are not conterminable.)
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 477.

This conformed so many of them as were conterminous to the colonies and garrisons, to the Roman laws. Hale.

CONTERRANEAN, con, and terraneus; terra. quod pedibus teratur; (sc. trodden, trampled upon.) Varro, De L. L. lib. 4. Vossius prefers τέιρ-ειν, that is, ξηραίν-ειν, siccare, and refers to the first chapter of Genesis: The dry land.
Of the same land, earth, or country.

I hold also that of the orator to be a wild extravagant speech, when he said, that if women were not conterranean and mingled with men, angels would descend and dwell among us.
Howell. Letter 6. book iv.

CONTESSARATION, Lat. tessara; Gr. τεσσαρα, that is, four; Fr. tessere; squared, or made four-square, like a die. And thus—checked or chequered, variegated.
A variety, an assembly of various appearances.

The first shall be the agreement and contesseration, both in judgment and practice with the primitive church: to whose example doubtless, the nearer we draw, the more we shall approach towards purity and perfection.
Hall. Imposition of Hands, vol. iii. fol. 887.

TES-RA-ON — TEST

C. This, that it was used by Christ in the imitation of the Jews' custom after supper, of distributing bread, and drinking wine about the table, an argument of charity and brotherliness among them. And so by instituting it after supper, Luke, xxii. 20. Christ was pleased to signify to us, that it should be a contesseration of charity among all Christians.

Hammond. Practical Catechism, book vi. sec. 4.

The tree of knowledge became the tree of death to us, and the tree of life is now become an apple of contention. The holy symbols of the eucharist were intended to be a contessecration, and an union of Christian societies to God, and with one another; and the evil taking it, disunites us from God; and the evil understanding it, divides us from each other.

Taylor. On the Real Presence, sec. 1.

CONTE'ST, v. Co'NTEST, n. CONTESTA'TION, CONTE'NTINGLY, CONTE'STLESS. Fr. contester; Sp. contestar; It. contestare; Lat. contestari, (con, and testari,) to witness together; Lat. testis; Gr. θέατωρ, from θέαθαι, ponere; q. one put or placed; sc. to see, to mark, what is done. And thus, to contest is,

To call or take to witness, to bring forward or produce witnesses on each side; to try by witnesses on each side; and then simply to contend, to dispute, to debate, to litigate.

Contestation is used by Barrow simply for;—proof by witnesses, testimony.

The protector, whether thinking to speed better by submission than by contesting, or perhaps finding himself not altogether innocent, subscribed an acknowledgment with his own hand.

Stow. Edward VI. Anno 1550.

Though this of old no less contest did move,
Than when for Homer's birth, seven cities strove.

Denham. Cooper's Hill.

In brief, there is no act in all the errand of God's ministers to mankind, wherein passes more lover-like contestation between Christ and the soul of a regenerate man lapsing than before, and in, and after the sentence of excommunication.

Milton. Of Reformation in England.

In confidence whereof, the said Jesus bearing himself bold; first fell into contestation, and afterward into an open brawle with his brother in the very temple; and therein provoked him so far that his brother slew him on the place.

Usher. Annals. Anno Mundi 3602.

——— Inexplicable
Thy justice seems; yet to say truth, too late,
I thus contest; then should have been refus'd
These terms whatever, when they were propos'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 756.

And the more contestingly they set their reason to explain them, the more intricate they, perhaps, will find them at that conjuncture.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 19. sec. 8.

And therefore he that will look into the history of England, will find, the prerogative was always largest in the hands of our wisest and best princes; because the people observing the whole tendency of their actions to be the publick good, contested not what was done without law to that end.

Locke. Of Civil Government, ch. xiv.

Every man, who is read in church history, knows that belief was drawn up after a long contestation with Arius, concerning the divinity of our blessed Saviour, and his being one substance with the Father. Dryden. Preface to Religio Laici.

We as well are baptised into the name of the Holy Spirit as of the Father and Son: wherein is signified and by a solemn contestation ratified, on the part of God, that those three joyned and confederated (as it were) are conspiringly propitious and favourable to us.

Barrow. On the Divinity of the Holy Ghost. Sermon 34. vol. ii.

The excellence of Christian morality will not be contested by fair and candid adversaries; and the few objections which may be made to it are grounded on passages not rightly understood, nor justly interpreted.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

And whenever the patrons of liberty shall give this advantage to the enemies of it, as much of that popularity which the first loose, the other will gain; and so, the contest becoming more equal, force alone must decide. CONTEST. — CONTEX.

Warburton. Works. Sermon 19

——— Modest sense
Of my unequal worth compell'd some doubting,
But now 'tis truth contestless.

Aaron Hill.

CONTE'X, v. Co'NTEXT, v. Co'NTEXT, adj. Co'NTEXT, n. CONTE'XTURAL, CONTE'XTURE. Fr. contexte; It. contesto; Sp. contexto; Lat. contextum, past participle of contex-ere, to enfold, enwrap, or weave together; con, and tex-ere, q. tegs-ere, from tegere, to cover. Invicem tegimus tramam et stramen. Cæsar Scaliger.

Fr. contexte, is well explained by Cotgrave. A whole web, composition, work, or an interlacing, joyning or weaving together; also the form or stile of a process, book, or discourse.

If the subject be history, or contexted fable, then I hold it better put in prose, or blanks: for ordinary discourse, never shows so well in meter, as in the straine that it may seem to be spoken in. Feltham. Resolve 71.

If there be not then, what matters it, what in other places it signify, whensoever the adjuncts or context so determine it, unless it do (or can be pretended to do) so here?

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. fol. 182.

But this sense, though it fitly serves to difference our Christian sacrafice from the old sacrafices of the Jews and Gentiles, and the thing itself be most true; yet I cannot see how it can agree with the context of our prophet.

Mede. Works, book ii. ch. iii.

In a contexture where one part does not always depend upon another, where things of differing natures intervene and interrupt the first intentions, there it is not always very probable to expound Scripture, and take its meaning by its proportion to the neighbouring words.

Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 4.

That understanding, which is peculiar to man, is the understanding not only his will, but the framing his conceptions and thoughts, by the sequel and contexture of the names of things into affirmations, negations, and other forms of speech.

Hobbs. Leviathan, part i. ch. ii. fol. 103.

Yet it is evident, that either by the plastic principle alone, or that and heat together, or by some other cause capable to contex the matter, it is yet possible, that the matter may be anew contriued into such bodies. Boyle. The Sceptical Chymist.

We somewhat wondered to see, how soon, and how much putrefaction was induced into these loosely contexed bodies by an over-hasty thawing.

Id. Experimental History of Cold, Tit. 6.

Its humours, and its inward tunicks, are indeed tender, proportionate to their tender, curious uses: but the coats, without, are context and callous, firm and strong.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. iii.

To this I answer plainly according to all the light that the contexts afford in this matter; to eat Christ's flesh and to drinke his blood (as our Saviour speaks of it in this chapter) is no more than to come to him, or to believe in him: for, by both these phrases, this term of eating and drinking Christ's flesh and blood is expounded in this very chapter.

Sharp. Works. Sermon 15. vol. vii.

God Almighty, in the fabric of the universe, first contemplated himself, and reflected on his own excellencies; from which he drew and constituted those first forms which are called ideas; so that every species which was afterwards expressed, was produced from that first idea, forming that wonderful contexture of all created beings. Dryden. A Parallel of Poetry and Painting.

The sense is fine, and easily apprehended by the context: the words are obscure to a fault and the transition too sudden and violent. Hart. Notes upon the sixth Thebaid of Statius.

CONTEX. — CONTI-NENT.

Collateral events are so artfully woven into the contexture of his [Knolles] principal story, that they cannot be disjoined without leaving it lacerated and broken.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 122.

CONTIGNATION, Lat. contignatio, trabium tignorumque textura : tignum a tegendo.

First, that where more of these orders than one, shall be set in several stories or contignations, there must be an exquisite care to place the columnes precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for the beauty as strength of the fabrick.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 26.

If their desires cannot be bounded, yet their motions must; when they have the full sight of heaven above them they cannot climb up into it, they cannot possibly see that whole glorious contignation; and when the whole earth lies open before them, they can measure but some small peeces of it.

Hall. The Free Prisoner, vol. iii. fol. 489.

CONTI'GUOUS, adj. CONTI'GUOUSLY, CONTI'GUOUSNESS, CONTIGU'ATE, CONTIGU'ITY. Fr. contigu; Lat. contiguus, from contingere; con, and tangere, to touch. Contiguum est, quod terminum habet proprium, sed inter quem et alienum nihil intermedium sit. Hic enim vis est verbi tangere. Vossius.

Touching one another, close together, neighbouring, bordering or adjoining.

The favours of our benificent Saviour were at the least contiguous. No sooner hath hee raised the centurion's servant from his bed, then hee raises the widowe's son from his beere.

Hall. Cont. The Widowe's Sonne Raised, vol. iii. fol. 60.

The suspicious houses, as if afraid to be infected with more misery than they have already, by contiguousness to others, keep off at a distance, having many waste places betwixt them.

Fuller. Holy War, p. 276.

The earth also by being contiguate, and mixt with waters (participating the same divine virtue) brought forth the herb that seedeth seed, &c. Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. i. sec. 7.

Neither is it possible that it should be so, considering that the two extremities are contiguate, yea and continuate.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 817.

Concordant hereto is the assertion of Doctor Ridley, physitian unto the Emperour of Russia, in his tract of Magnetical bodies, defining magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity; an union of one magnetical body with another, and no violent haling of the weak into the stronger. Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch iii.

Thus disembroil'd, they take their proper place
The next of kin contiguously embrace:
And foes are sundered by a larger space.

Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book I.

To me there appear to be only three principles of connection among ideas, namely resemblance, contiguity in time or place, and cause or effect.

Hume. Essays. Of the Association of Ideas, sec. 3.

——— Th' Herefordian plant
Caresses freely the contiguous peach,
Hazel, and weight-resisting palm, and likes
T'approach the quince, and the elder's pithy stem.

J. Philips. Cider, book i.

Does it [matter] always act by being really and substantially present to the thing acted on? And how can it be really and substantially present to any thing, but by the contiguity of its parts. Law. Enquiry, p. 108.

But the fancy is determined by habit to pass from the idea of fire to that of melted lead, on account of our having always perceived them contiguous and successive: and this is the whole matter. Beattie. Essay on Truth, part ii. ch. ii. sec. 3.

CO'NTINENT, adj. CO'NTINENT, n. CO'NTINENTAL, CO'NTINENTLY, CO'NTINENCE, CO'NTINENCY. Fr. continent; It. and Sp. continente; Lat. continens, present participle of contin-ere; con, and ten-ere, to hold. See CONTAIN.

Holding or keeping within, comprehending or comprising; keeping together, connecting: met. keeping or holding, sc. the passions within; within due bounds, in subjection, in subservience; temperate, moderate, chastened, restrained, forbearing. CO NE

Also thei sain good is to saue
With penance, and with abstinence,
Of chastitee the continence.

Gower. Conf. Am. Prologue, fol. 4.

For it bihoueth a bisschop to be without crime &c. beynge prudent, sobre, iust, hooli contyment.

Wiclif. Tyte, ch. i.

And for this cause as a godly continent prince, cleane and fautlesse of hym selfe, sent out of heauen into thys vicious worlde, for the amendement of men's maners, he caused the byshop of London to putte her [Jane Shore] to open penaunce, goyng before a crosse one Sondaye at procession with a taper in her hand.

Hall. Edward V. fol. 16.

The variable humours of all sortes of people [in France] might haue had very ample and manifold occasions of good and honest employment abroad in that large and fruitful continent of the West Indies.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Epist. Ded. vol. ii.

And then cõtinently folowing, to thẽtent that we should se that it is not with oute necessitye, that the pauyce (i. e. the shield) of God should compasse vs about vpon euerye syde, he sheweth, &c. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 1180.

But the fruit of the spyrit is charite, ioie, pees, pacience, long abidyng, benygnyte, goodnesse, myldnesse, feith, temperaunce, contynence, chastite. Wiclif. Galathies, ch. v.

But nowe Christen men be as euill or woorse then heretikes or Gentiles, yea & greater continencie is found among thẽ than among Christen men. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 755.

Only I thinke it worth the noting, the continencie of them both: for the man would neuer shift himselfe, except he had first caused the woman to depart out of his cabin, and they both were most shamefast.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Frobisher, vol. iii. fol. 69.

And some also thinke it was called Anglia of Angulus, which is in English a corner, for that it is but a corner in respect of the mayne and continent land of the whole world.

Grafton. Briteyn, part iv.

——— In particular then
I told our pylot, that past other men
He most must beare firme spirits; since he swaid
The continent that all our spirits conuaid
In his whole guide of her.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xii. fol. 186.

He [Xerxes] commanded a passage for gallies to be cut behind mount Athos, making the same (with the half island or headland, where it stood) to be an entire island, sundering thereby from the continent of Thrace, five cities, besides the mountain and the Chersonesus or neck of land itself.

Ralegh. History of the World, book iii. ch. v. sec. 2.

Againe; He that cannot otherwise liue continently, let him marrie.

Fox. Martyrs. Marage of Preests defended, fol. 159.

A rare example, that lust, fired by youth, power and opportunity, and enflamed by beauty, should be abated into continence, by only meeting with a native modesty.

Feltham. Resolve 16.

The valorous Persian, who not once but gaz'd
On faire Panthea's face to ease his toyls;
His glory, by that continency, rais'd
More than by Babylon's and Lydia's spoyls.

Stirling. A Parænesis to Prince Henry.

Tyrannic force is that which least you fear;
The sound is frightful in a Christian's ear:
Avert it, heaven! nor let that plague be sent
To us from the dispeopled continent.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Those [horned cattle] which may be supposed to have been purely British, are far inferior in size to those on the northern part of the European continent.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Ox.

No continental power was willing to loose any of its continental objects for the increase of the naval power of Great Britain; and Great Britain would not give up any of the objects she sought for as the means of an increase to her naval power to further their aggrandizement. Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

As then the church had also a great number of persons of both sexes, who consecrated themselves to God by a perfect continence, nothing was more reasonable than to choose its principal ministers out of this upper part of the flock.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

When a young fellow, just come from the play of Cleomenes, told Mr. Dryden, in raillery against the continency of his principal character, "If I had been alone with a lady, I should not have passed my time like your Spartan:" "That may be," answered the bard with a very grave face; "but give me leave to tell you, sir, you are no hero."

Cambridge. The Scribleriad, book vi.

CONTI'NGENT, adj. Co'NTINGENT, n. CONTI'NGENTLY, CONTI'NGENCE, CONTI'NGENCY. Fr. contingent; It. and Sp. contingente; Lat. contingens, present participle of conting-ere; con, and tangere, to touch. See CONTACT. Gr. θιγ-ειν, θιγγαν-ειν, to touch.

Touching upon, reaching or adjoining to, falling together with, happening in connection with, incidental, casual, fortuitous, falling to the lot, or share of.

God forbid that nise vnthrifti thought shoulde come in thy mynde thy wittes to trouble, sithen euery thynge in commynge is contingent. Chaucer. The Testament of Love, book i.

We see, indeed many things to be, and to come to pass, which seem to be contingent, or without any end at all.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iii. ch. ii.

Perhaps the beauty of the world requireth, (though we know it not) that some agents should work without deliberation (which his lordship calls necessary agents) and some agents with deliberation, (and those both he and I call free agents,) and that some agents should work, and we not know how (and their effect we call contingents.) Hobbs. Of Liberty and Necessity, fol. 479.

And first, the being of prophesies, supposes the non-being of contingents. That is to say, that albeit there are many things, which seem unto us to be contingents, yet were they so indeed, there could have been no prophecy; but only predictions, which were contingently true or false.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iv. ch. vi.

Presuming perhaps upon like kindness, as we read of 'twixt the Trojans and Romans, in their wars with Antiochus (which was loving respect through contingence of blood) upon like cause remembered to them by tradition.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 1.

What is therefore delivered in favour thereof, by authors ancient or modern, must have its root in tradition, imposture, far derived similitude, or casual and rare contingency.

Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. vi.

It is certain he must not mean that it is in his own nature venial, but damnable as any other; but it is venial, that is, prepared for pardon upon other contingencies and causes, of which I shall afterwards account.

Taylor. On Repentance, ch. iii. sec. 3.

Yet it would puzzle the greatest philosopher that ever was, to give any tolerable account, how any knowledge whatsoever can certainly and infallibly foresee an event through uncertain and contingent causes. Tillotson. Sermon 48.

Hypothetical necessity is that, which the supposition or hypothesis of God's foresight and pre-ordination lays upon future contingents. Clark. Mr. Leibnitz's Fifth Paper.

For as Aristotle says, we are not to expect demonstrations in ethicks, in politicks, nor to build certain rules upon the contingency of human actions. South. Sermon 1. vol. i.

No theatrick audience in Athens would bear what has been borne, in the midst of the real tragedy of this triumphal day; a principal actor weighing, as it were in scales hung up in a shop of horrours,—so much actual crime against so much contingent advantage, and after putting in and out weights, declaring that the balance was on the side of the advantages.

Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Mr. Hume allows, that, on the principles of those who deny liberty and contingence, it is impossible for natural reason to vindicate the divine character.

Beattie. Essays. On Truth, part ii. ch. ii. sec. 3.

Long may the beauteous fabric rise,
Unite all hearts and charm all eyes,
Above contingency and time,
Stable as earth, as heaven sublime.

Blacklock. To Doctor Downman.

CONTI'NUE, v. CONTI'NUER, CONTI'NUATE, v. CONTI'NUATE, adj. CONTI'NUATENESS, CONTI'NUATELY, CONTI'NUAL, CONTI'NUALLY, CONTI'NUALNESS, CONTI'NUANCE, CONTINUA'TION, CONTI'NUATIVE, CONTINUA'TOR, CONTI'NUEDLY, CONTINU'ITY, CONTI'NUOUS, CONTI'NUOUSLY. Fr. continuer; Sp. continuar; It. continuare; Lat. continuare. Continuus, from continere. (See to CONTAIN.) Continuum, est, quod communi termino continetur. Vossius.

To keep or hold together; sc. without stop or break, to prolong, to draw out in length; to keep with, to remain, to be permanent, incessant or without ceasing, to persevere, to perpetuate; also, to last, to endure, to tarry, to loiter, to delay.

But as men seyne, that frele is youth,
With leiser and continuance
This mayde fell vpon a chance,
That loue hath made hym a quarele
Ageyne hir youth freshe and frele.

Gower. Conf. Am., book viii. fol. 179.

And thei contynueden with grete voicis axinge that he schulde be crucified. Wiclif. Luk, ch. xxiii.

What? do they hope that beauties glasse will still continue bright?
Nay, when the day is gone and past
by course appeeres the night.

Turbervile. Of the diuers and contrarie passions, &c.

He imagined in hymselfe that he now obteynyng the crowne of the realme, yf he wer therin a long cōtinuer, woulde remoue the great beame that then greued his eyes and pricked hys conscience.

Hall. Henry IV. The fifth Yere.

He sayth that the sayd vii. slepers were closed in that caue, the first yere of Decius, and so sleped contynuyngly to the laste tyme or yeres of Theodocius the yonger, then emperour.

Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 214.

I seie treuthe in Crist Iesus I lie not, for my conscience berith witnessyng to me in the Hooly Goost, for great heuynesse is to me and contynuel sorowe to myn herte. Wiclif. Romaynes, ch. ix.

I saye the treuth in Christ, & lye not, in that where of my conscyence beareth me wytness in the Holy Ghoste, that I haue greate heuynes & continual sorow in my hearte. Bible, 1551.

For lo hereby all men and women may, if they will, be sufficiently touchte to know and to kepe the commaundementis of God, and to hate and to flie continewally all occasion of synne.

State Trials. Trial of Master William Thorpe.

Lo thus are al my joyes quite gone,
And I am brought from happinesse
Continually to waile and mone;
Lo, such is fortune's stableness.

Uncertaine Auctors. The Louer telleth his diuers ioyes, &c.

Continuance, is a stedfast and constaunt abiding in a purposed and well aduised matter, not yeelding to any man in quarell of the right. Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorike, p. 36.

CONTINUE.

They themselues, or some other perhaps to be appointed in this behalfe shall vpon the first day of the moneth of May next to come, with the continuation of the dayes following, competently satisfie, and performe conuenient recompence vnto the saide common society.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Henry IV. Pruss. Ambass. vol. i. fol. 165.

Who can thinke y^t^ Christ doth here condẽne long prayers or many wordes, or the repetition of godly praiers (himself continuing in prayers a whole night in the mountaine, & oftentimes repeating one & the same prayer, not long before he suffered his passion, Matt. xxvi. and willing vs to pray continually, & not to be weary.) Whitgift. Defence, fol. 805.

Whom Matthew Paris his continuer, for this service stiles, the Zelots of English Republicke.

Prynne. The Treachery, &c. of Papists, part i. p. 20.

Whose fixd and flying parts are so co-joyned, whose sulpher and continuating principle is so united unto the salt, that some may be hoped to remain to hinder fragility after vitrification.

Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. v.

And thus they are effected so long as this vapour lasteth; but by and by as pleasant and merry as ever they were in their lives, they sing, discourse, and laugh in any good company, upon all occasions, and so by fits it takes them now and then, except the maladie be inveterate, and then 'tis more frequent, vehement, and continuate. Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 203.

Now this swiftness of motion will cause so great a difference betwixt them. that one of these little streams may spend more water in the fall, than a stream six times bigger in the ascent, though we should suppose both of them to be continuate.

Wilkins. Dædalus, vol. ii. p. 244.

The water ascends gently, and by intermissions, but it falls continuately, and with force.

Wilkins. Mechanical Motions, vol. ii. book i. ch. xv.

Sometimes leaping with great jumps hither and thither, before they [the hares] betake themselves to their rest, that so the continuateness of the scent may not lead doggs to their form.

Digby. On Bodies, ch. xxxvi.

Besides another motive—power doth 'rise
Out of the heart, from whose pure blood doth spring
The vital spirits; which, born in arteries,
Continual motion to all parts do bring.

Davies. Immortality of the Soul, sec. 22.

Whil'st in his hand the bolts of death he beares,
Still watching soules the crafty hunter lyes
With inward fancies, and with outward feares,
Whom he may tempt, continually he tryes.

Stirling. Dooms-day. The second Houre.

So then though sleep partake not of our devotion, yet this hinders not the continualness of it.

Hale. Remains, part i. p. 151.

Have not I lands of faire inheritance,
Deriv'd by right of long continuance,
To first-born males, so list the law to grace
Nature's first fruits in an eternal race?

Hall. Satire 2. book ii.

Yet, though absence for a space
Sharpen the keen appetite,
Long continuance doth quite
All love's characters efface.

Carew. Separation of Lovers.

And it is no wonder, if the continuation and natural composure of the spirits be rest and ease to the soul, that a violent disjoyning and bruising of them, and baring the soul of them, as I may speak, should cause a very harsh and torturous sense in the centre of perception.

More. Immortality of the Soul, book ii. ch. x.

He went beyond the sea again, but upon what account I know not, though I am apt to think not upon any design of turning Mahometan, as N. Saunders or rather his continuator Rishton, is pleased to tell us. Wood. Athenæ Oxon., vol. i. fol. 216.

Thus you see continuedly, that the property of the number sets off the nature of the work of every day, according to those mysteries that the Pythagoreans have observed in them.

More. Philosophick Cabbala, fol. 85.

But in all there is a deformity, not only in the motion of the fibres, but also of the principles whereof they consist. Either by a solution of their continuity, as in burning, cutting, contusions; or by any great tendency to that solution, as in convulsions, or straines. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book ii. ch. ii.

I will not serve myself here with the ingenious conceit of a great personage, who holds that the continuity of bodies results from some small hooks or clasps, which keep them together, and are different in bodies of a differing nature.

Digby. Of the Powder of Sympathy, part ii. p. 174.

That which restores flesh that was lost, consolidates dissolved continuaties, incorporates the newly received nourishment, and joins it continuously with the preexistent parts of flesh and bone.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 167.

The same dull sights in the same landscape mixt.
Scenes of still life, and points for ever fix'd
A tedious pleasure in the mind bestow,
And pall the sense with one continued show.

Addison. Epilogue to Lansdown's British Enchanters.

Wherefore, it was to be thought, seeing Almighty God had suffered some of them to suffer martyrdome by fire, by bloudy persecution, and the tyranny of the pope's laws, and torments for professing the truth of God's word, that now the body of that noble prince, the queen's father, because he was the beginner of all this, and the continuer of it twenty-five years, as the proceeding of that parliament seemed to pronounce, should be taken up at Windsor, and burnt as Wickliff's was.

Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Ponet against Martin. Anno 1554.

After this he sends prophets in a continual succession for several ages, who do more clearly discover God's will to them; who call upon them to holiness and virtue; and who speak in very plain terms of that great salvation, which God should one day manifest to the world. Sharp. Works. Sermon 11. vol. i.

But, alas! the honey-moon of a new ministry is always of a short continuance in England.

Hoadley. Works. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 3.

The great wisdom of the divine Creator appears, in that there is pleasure annexed to those actions, that are necessary for the support and preservation of the individuum, and the continuation and propagation of the species; and not only so, but pain to the neglect or forbearance of them. Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

Fire will live in it [the vapour of the grotto dei Cani] no longer than in water, because it wraps itself in the same manner about the flame, and by its continuity hinders any quantity of air and nitre from coming to its succour. Addison. Italy.

O memory! thou soul of joy and pain!
Thou actor of our passions o'er again!
Why dost thou aggravate the wretch's woe?
Why add continuous smart to every blow?

Savage. The Bastard.

Thus then, from the time of Adam to this present hour, first by the prophets, and afterwards by the Son of God himself, hath this gracious scheme of providence been opening more and more; and we have reason to believe from prophecy, will continue to spread wider and wider, till it hath made its progress over the face of the earth. Gilpin. Sermon 1 vol. i.

There are others so continually in the agitation of gross and merely sensual pleasures, or so occupied in the low drudgery of avarice, or so heated in the chace of honours and distinction, that their minds, which had been used continually to the storms of those violent and tempestuous passions, can hardly be put in motion by the delicate and refined play of the imagination.

Burke. On Taste. Introduction.

Contract your sails; life nothing can bestow
But long continuance, but continued woe;
The wretched privilege daily to deplore
The fun'rals of our friends who go before.

Jenyns. Immortality of the Soul, book i.

Continuatives, on the contrary by a more intimate connection, consolidate sentences into one continuous whole, and are therefore applicable only to subjects, which have an essential coincidence.

Harris. Hermes, book ii.

All criticks would agree, that a Freinshemius would have been thought to have managed the supplementary business of a continuator most unskilfully, and to have supplied the hiatus most improbably, if he had not filled up the gaping space, in a manner somewhat similar (though better executed) to what I have imagined. Burke. Letter on a Regicide Peace.

The fibres, matchless by expressive line,
Arachne's cable or etherial twine,
Continuous, with direct ascension rise,
And lift the trunk.
Brookes. Universal Beauty, book iii.

CONTINUANCE is used in Common Law, in the same sense as Prorogation in Civil Law: thus Continuance till the next Assizes, is a postponement of the Trial till that time.

CONTORNIATED, It. contorniato, medals round which a hollow circle is worked; they are thin, in faint relief, and of inferior workmanship. The obverse bears the head of an Emperor or Empress, a distinguished author, (Apollonius Tyaneus and Apuleius being the latest,) an actor, or an athlete in professional attitude; the reverse is stamped with chariots, masks, or other objects appertaining to the public games. They are generally between two or three inches in diameter. Pinkerton, with much reason has supposed that they were used as tickets of admission to the shows of the Circus. Fosbrooke (Enc. of Ant. 885,) inclines to a belief, that they were presents from the Emperors to the Aurigæ of the several factions.

CONTO'RT, v. } Fr. contorsion; Lat. contort-um,
CONTO'RTION. } past participle of contorquere; con, and torquere, to wring.

To wring, wreathe, wrest; to draw or pull awry.

Then came the Furies with their bosoms bare,
Save somewhat cover'd with their snaky haire
In wreathes contorted, mumbling hellish charms,
Up to the elbows naked were their arms.
Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

HARP. Fling them away, I'll take thee else, and hang thee
In a contorted chain of isicles,
In the frigid zone: down with them!
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, act v. sc. 1.

What meanders and contortions of vessels in the organs of separation. Derham. Physico-Theology, book v. ch. v.

The same thing therefore happens here as in strong and healthy bodys, which are debar'd their natural exercise, and confin'd in a narrow space. They are forc'd to use odd gestures and contortions. Shaftsbury. Estay on the Freedom of Wit and Humour, part i. sec. 4.

Some with erect pagodas vie,
Some nod, like Pisa's tow'r, awry,
Medusa's snakes, with Pallas' crest
Convolv'd, contorted, and compress'd.
Whitehead. Variety

When once untun'd the ears contorted cell,
The silver cords unbrace the sounding shell;
Thy sick'ning soul no more a joy shall find,
Music no more shall stay thy lab'ring mind.
Cotton. An allusion to Horace. Ode 16. book ii.

Perhaps now and then a merry being may place himself in such a situation as to enjoy at once all the varieties of an epidemical disease, or amuse his leisure with the tossings and contortions of every possible pain exhibited together.
Johnson. Review of a Free Enquiry, &c.

CO'NTRABAND, n. } It. contrabando; Fr. contre-
CO'NTRABAND, adj. } bande; contre le défense, le ban. Against ban, q. v. Merchandise de contraband; merchandise that is forbidden, (by proclamation, &c.) Cotgrave.

And concerning pitch and tar, and hemp and flax, to be contraband goods during the war with Spain, the secretary held it reasonable, but I differ'd from him therein.
Whitelock. Memoirs. Anno 1656.

To say nothing of many false helps, and contraband wares of beauty, which are daily vended in this great mart, there is not a maiden gentlewoman, of a good family in any county of South Britain, who has not heard of the virtues of May dew, or is unfurnished with some receipt or other in favour of her complexion.
Spectator, No. 33.

We both are to make use of the articles between France and this state for contraband goods till such time as we can agree of one [treaty] between ourselves.
Sir William Temple. Letter from my Lord Ambassadour Coventry.

What certainly can be expected, when every nation is at liberty to change its usages, to modify its conventions, to enlarge the list of articles esteemed contraband of war, till by prohibiting a commerce in corn and Peruvian bark, it suffers millions of innocent persons to perish by famine or by pestilence.
Watson. Anecdotes, vol. ii. p. 382.

They fell so indiscriminately on all sorts of contraband or supposed contraband, that some of the most valuable branches of trade were driven violently from our ports; which caused an universal consternation throughout the colonies.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

CONTRA'CT, v.
CONTRA'CT, adj.
CO'NTRACT, n.
CONTRA'CTATION,
CONTRA'CTEDLY,
CONTRA'CTEDNESS,
CONTRA'CTIBLE,
CONTRA'CTILE,
CONTRA'CTION,
CONTRA'CTIVE, CONTRA'CTOR.

Lat. contrah-ere, contractum, to draw together; con, and trahere, formed of trans, and vehere, q. traveh-ere, to carry over.

To draw or bring together; to draw into a narrower space or compass; to narrow, to straiten, to confine.

To draw or bring to itself; and thus, to get, to obtain.

To draw or bring together, to come together, to meet together; sc. drawn by some common motive; and thus, to agree, to agree upon the terms of a compact or bargain, as of sale, of marriage; and thus, to bargain, to affiance, to betroth.

Of thilke Adam toke we thilke sinne original; from him fleshly discended be we all and engendred of vile and corrupt mater: and when the soule is put in our bodies, right anon is contract original sinne. Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Therefore as we haue entred into amitie, and most holy league with the most excellent kings and princes our confederats, shewing their deuotion, and obedience or seruices towards our stately porch (as namely the French king, the Venetians, the king of Polonia and others) so also we haue contracted an inviolable amitie, peace and league with the aforesaid queene.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Turkey Priuileges, vol. ii. part i. fol. 143.

In contracts between manne and man it is communely called credence. Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, p. 172.

In euery ship euery man's name is taken, and if he haue any marke in the face, or hand, or arme, it is written by a notarie (as well as his name) appertaining to the contractation house, appointed for these causes.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Orders of the Contract House, vol. iii. fol. 862.

May it seem good vnto your discretion, as it seemeth expedient vnto us, that some messengers of yours sufficiently authorised to parle, agree and conclude with our deputy, about the mutual contraction of a perpetuall league and confirmation of friendship, may with all conuenient speede be sent vnto our presence.
Id. Ib. Henry IV. Prussian Ambassadour, vol. i. fol. 180.

Item, yf durynge this amitie, and truce, any of the subiectes of either prince do presume or attempt to aide, helpe, mainteine or serue ani other prince againste any of the saide contractours.
Hall. Richard III. The third Yere.

Yet if affliction once her wars begin,
And threat the feebler sense with sword and fire,
The mind contracts herself; and shrinketh in,
And to herself she gladly doth retire.
Davies. Of the Soul of Man.

The value of all things contracted for, is measured by the appetite of the contractors: and therefore the just value is that which they be contented to give.
Hobbs. Leviathan, part i. ch. xv. fol. 161.

When a man transferreth his right upon consideration of reciprocal benefit, this is not free gift, but mutual donation, and is called contract. Id. De Corpore Politico, part i. ch. ii. fol. 39.

CON-TRACT.

——————— Jupiter, with a contracted brow
Thus answer'd Mars: Thou many minds, inconstant changling thou;
Sit not complaining thus by me; whom most of all the Gods
(Inhabiting the starrie hill) I hate.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book v. fol. 81.

Let this sad interim as the ocean be
Which parts the shore, where two contracted-new
Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more bless'd may be the view.
Shakspeare. Sonnet 56.

For such as think that the sense is deceived, for they see contrary events and passions do proceed from the same objects, they pacifie again, and salve this objection, by teaching, that whereas all things be mingled and confounded together, yet nevertheless this is more sortable and fitting to one, and that to another; whereby there is not the contractation and apprehension of one and the same quality. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 909.

Which membranes are muscular, compounded of straight and circular fibres, for the more effectual contraction of the wind-pipe in any strong or violent expiration or coughing.
Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

——————— Unarm'd, they might
Have easy, as spirits, evaded swift
By quick contraction or remove.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 597.

For although the princes be named, as chiefe contractors in euery treatie and amitie concluded, yet the countries are bounden, and the subiectes shall make recompence, if anye thing be altred wrongfully out of his course.
Grafton. Edward IV. The ninth Yere.

——————— And as a goose
In death contracts his talons close,
So did the knight, and with one claw,
The tricker of his pistol draw.
Butler. Hudibras, part i. can. 3.

Many persons, who were persuaded that the law canonical had no longer place in this realm, had contracted marriage within the degrees of consanguinity and affinity, prohibited by law.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1554.

A pillar of state; pillar is to be pronounced contractedly; as of one syllable, or two short ones.
Bishop Newton. Note on Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 302.

The third argument for brevity, or contractedness of speech in prayer, shall be taken from the very nature and condition of the person who prays; which makes it impossible for him to keep up the same fervour and attention in a long prayer, that he may in a short. South. Sermon 3 and 4. vol. ii. p. 143.

This is but a contraction of the king's mandate to the archbishop. The whole may be found among the collection of records in the History of the Reformation by Bishop Burnett.
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Anno 1543.

The heart, as said, from its contractive cave
On the left side, ejects the bounding wave;
Exploded thus, as splitting channels lead,
Upward it springs, or downward is convey'd.
Blackmore. The Creation, book vi.

The poet's fancy can create,
Contract, enlarge, annihilate,
Bring past and present close together
In spite of distance, seas, or weather.
Lloyd. An Epistle to Mr. Garrick.

They [the house of peers] debated, "whether there were an original contract between king and people?" and the affirmative was carried fifty-three against forty-six; a proof that the tories were already losing ground. The next question was, "Whether King James had broken that original contract?" and, after a slight opposition, the affirmative prevailed.
Hume. History of England. King James. Anno 1669.

And breathing lungs imbibe th' ethereal mass;
Whence, their licentious ducts dilation claim,
And open obvious to the welcome stream,
Which silent, through the heart's contractile force,
Expulsive springs its recontinual course.
Brookes. Universal Beauty, book iv. l. 142.

——————— Thy revolt,
The stern contraction of thy sullen brow,
And this disguise, apostate! speak thee bent
On fatal errand.
Smollett. The Regicide, act i. sc. 7.

Gen'rals, and admirals, and Jews,
Contractors, printers, men of news;
All thrive by war, and line their pockets,
And leave the works of peace to blockheads.
Warton. For the Year 1771.

CONTRADI'CT, v.
CONTRADI'CTER,
CONTRADI'CTION,
CONTRADI'CTIONAL,
CONTRADI'CTIOUS,
CONTRADI'CTIOUSNESS,
CONTRADI'CTIVE,
CONTRADI'CTORY, adj.
CONTRADI'CTORY. n.
CONTRADI'CTORILY,
CONTRADI'CTORINESS,
CONTRADI'CTORIOUS,
CONTRADI'CTORIOUSLY.

Lat. contradicere, dictum, (contrà, and dicere.) Contrà pro contera, ut suprà pro supera, intrà pro intera.

Dr. Butler says, "The adjective itself (conterus) is derived from con; as in order to have opposition there must be a comparison or competition with something; possibly the final syllables of those adjectives in terus, may be derived from tero.

To say or speak the contrary, to affirm or assert in opposition, &c. to what another has said, to deny, to gainsay, to oppose.

But if there be any Englishman found, who shall rashly contradict or contemne the composition of the foresayd ambassadours; then the sayd ambassadours are to bring the forenamed Prussian plaintifes before the presence of the king's maiestie.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Richard II., vol. i. fol. 162.

The occasion of this errour riseth, for not knowing what is contradiction. Contradiction therefore, is a repugnauncie of one and the same not substaunce onely, nor yet name onely, but of the substaunce, and name both together.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, p. 82.

Hath maister Masker cast me downe so depe with prouing me that some merueyled not, where I sayd many did? Be these two propositiõs so sore repugnant and so playn contradictory.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 1109.

But who, alas, can contradict the doome
Of wilful fate when time prefix'd is come?
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 859.

——————— Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love, else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.
Shakspeare. The Rape of Lucrece.

He commanded them all in publike, to renew the said sentence against all contradictors of the sayd charter, so that if he himselfe, through any conceived rancour, had not peradventure observed it, he might more grievously relapse into the sad denounced sentence.
Prynne. The Soveraigne Power of Parliaments, p. 36.

That which taketh away the reputation of wisdom, in him that formeth a religion, or addeth to it, when it is already formed, is the enjoining of a belief of contradictories: for both parts of a contradiction cannot possibly be true: and therefore to enjoin the belief of them, is an argument of ignorance.
Hobbs. Leviathan, part i. ch. xii.

We have tryed already, and miserably felt what ambition, worldly glory and immoderate wealth can do, what the boisterous and contradictional hand of a temporal, earthly, and corporeal spirituality can avail to the edifying of Christ's holy church.
Milton. Of Reformation, book ii. fol. 28.

Certainly, a lewd conversation is altogether as contradictious to holy obedience, as a damnable heresie to necessary truth.
Chillingworth. Rel. of Prot. Church, ch. iv. part i.

All which is no more, than is generally acknowledged by theologers, when they affirm that God Almighty himself cannot do things contradictious; there being no other reason for this assertion, but only this, because contradictiousness is repugnant to conception. Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 719.

It is not possible to perform a worship without some natural or instituted ceremony, and while they are not contradictive to the canon, I cannot think, God will be angry with me for obeying them. Feltham. Resolve 73.

Beza would seem to shun the contradictory, by telling us that the Lord spake it not in person as he did the former precept. Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

And what if they in their contradictory opinions pretend both to relie upon the truth of God, doth this make their contradictions ever a whit the more repugnant. Chillingworth. Rel. of Prot. Church, ch. iv. part i.

Moreover, such as have naturally discoursed hereon, have so diversly, contrarily, or contradictorily delivered themselves, that no affirmative from thence can reasonably be deduced. Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xii.

All the natural impression or light that in this behalf a rational creature hath, is, that two contradictories cannot be true at once; and therefore I think all principles that are not thought fit to be proved in any natural science, (if they be truly so) may easily be resolved into this one, a thing cannot at once be and not be. Hammond. Works. Of the reasonableness of the Christian Religion.

This is therefore a contradictorious humour in you to decry the parliament in 1649, that you may extoll the parliament in 1641. State Tricls. Trial of Lieut. Col. John Lilburne.

One soul in both doth thus philosophize,
Concludes at once contradictoriously
To her own self.
More. On the Soul, part iii. st. 14. p. 38.

We must ask them, Whether natural religion speaks so plainly in any one point of religion, but that some perverse man or other has contradicted it? Atterbury. Sermon 2. vol. iii.

All the injuries, reproaches, false accusations, all the cruelties, indignities, and violence, which were offered him, from the time of his publick appearance to his expiring upon the cross, being undergone by him, by the malice of unreasonable men, may be called the contradiction of sinners: for the sense of this word extends as well to actions as words. Stillingfleet. Sermon 6. vol. i.

What is the result of these doctrines, but the necessary introducing of Atheism, and the banishing religion from among men. It being upon these principles, not only a needless, impertinent, but an absurd contradictious thing. Sharp. Works. Sermon 1. vol. ii.

Whosoever in any case acts contradictorily to the person he sustains, or unsuitably to the profession he makes, doth act absurdly and ridiculously; for he destroys the propriety, and confounds the relations of things. Id. Ib. Sermon 9. vol. vi.

(The two contradictories of acting and not acting, being always necessarily before him) [a free agent] he must of necessity, and essentially to his being a free agent, perpetually will one of these two things, either to act or to forbear acting. Clark. On the Attributes, p. 101.

Or since the pulpit is a sacred place,
Where none dare contradict you to your face,
Will you presume to tell a thousand lies?
If so, we may forgive, but must despise.
Dodsley. The Art of Preaching.

We state our experience, and then we come to a manly resolution of acting in contradiction to it. Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

CONTRADISTI'NGUISH, v. Lat. contrà, and CONTRADISTI'NCT, adj. distinguere, distinctum.
CONTRADISTI'NCTION,
CONTRADISTI'NCTIVE.

Vossius is in doubt whether from dis, and tingere, or from stinguere or stingere; Gr. στιζ-ειν, pungere, (vel notas pungendo infigere.) If from the latter, distinguere will signify dispungere, Gr. διαστιζειν, and the Gr. στιγμὴ, he adds, is by Grammarians rendered distinctio; but if from tingere, it will mean coloribus separare, or more fully, ita diversis coloribus tinguere, ut colores tamen separentur, non confundantur. Valcknaer, apparently with good reason, decides for the former. See στιζω, in Lennep.

To fix a mark or note, marks or notes, so that the difference or opposition of qualities may be evident; to show or declare the notes or marks of opposite qualities; to show or declare the opposite qualities themselves.

Calvin himself, and Chamier, and Moulin, (and who not?) do every where contra-distinguish their pastors to their ruling elders. Mall. Episcopacy by Divine Right, vol. iii. part iii. sec. 2.

And further, he, in his speech, useth it as a contra-distinct term to house or family, of which he had said before into what house ye enter; so now into what city. Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. part iv. fol. 81.

If the wisdom of this world, and of the princes of this world, be to be understood of the wisdom and learning of the world in general, as contra-distinguished to the doctrine of the gospel, then the words are added, to shew what folly it is for them to glory as they do in their teachers. Locke. Works. 1 Corinthians. Notes.

Our author himself has said enough in his advice to an author, particularly where he treats of the simple style in contra-distinction to the learned, the formal, and methodick. Shaftsbury. Miscellaneous Reflections, misc. 1. ch. iii.

In the former part of the verse, he speaks of the law being dead; and here, of its being revived again with a new spirit, in contra-distinction to the oldness of the latter. Warburton. Occasional Reflections, part i. Postcript.

This diversity between the contradistinctive pronouns, and the enclitic, is not unknown even to the English tongue. Harris. Hermes, book i. ch. v.

CONTRAHENTS, n. contrahens, present participle of contrahere. See CONTRACT, above.

For the resistance whereof the king's highness was compelled after the universal peace, by the great study, labour, and travel of his grace conduced, and the same by some of the contrahents newly violate and infringed; in shewing the form of the treatise thereupon made, again to take armour. Burnett. Records. Act 26. Anno Regni 21. Henry VIII.

And specially now of late upon the treatise concluded at London, betwixt the king's highness the emperour, and the French king, as princes contrahents. Strype. Memorials. Instructions from the King for Mr. Pace.

The mentioning of a seal here, implies a bill of contract; for bills of contract had their seals appendant to them; each side whereof had his motto, the one suiting with the one party contrahent, the other with the other. Mede. Works. Discourse 22. book i.

CONTRAI'NDICATE, v. Contrà, indicare, (in, and dicare.) Indicare, quasi dicendo significare, vel denunciare; to signify, declare or denote by speech. And, generally,
CONTRAI'NDICANT,
CONTRAINDICA'TION.

To signify or designate, to point out, to give, show, or be a sign, note, mark, or token, contrary to, forbidding or prohibiting, sc. in diseases, some usual or peculiar manner of treatment.

Vomits have their use in this malady; but the age and sex of the patient, or other urgent or contraindicating symptoms must be observed. Harvey. On Consumptions.

I endeavour to give the most simple idea of the distemper, and the proper diet, abstracting from the complications of the first, or the contraindications to the second. Arbuthnot. On Aliments.

Throughout it was full of contraindicants. Burke.

CONTRANATURAL, Lat. contrà, and natura, from natus, past participle of nascor. See CONNATE.

'Tis the perfection of every being to act according to the principle of its own nature; and it is the nature of an arbitrarious principle to act or not, to do or undo, upon no account but its own will and pleasure; to be determined and tied up, either by itself, or from abroad, is violent and contranatural. Bishop Rust. Discourse on Truth, sec. 6.

CONTRA-POSITION — CON-TRARY

CONTRAPOSITION, Lat. contrà, and positio, from ponere, positum, to put or place.

Putting or placing against, in opposition, or contrary to.

A conuersion by contraposition is, whē the former part of the sentēce, is turned into the last rehearsed part, and the last rehearsed part, turned into the former part of the sentēce, both the propositions being uniuersall, and affirmatiue, sauing that in the second propositiō, there be certaine negatiues enterlaced.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, p. 21.

CONTRAPUNTIST, one skilled in counter-point, which Cotgrave calls, A ground or plain song in musick.

Counterpoint is certainly so much an art, that to be what they call, a learned contrapuntist, is with harmonists a title of no small excellence. Mason. On Church Musick, p. 209.

CONTRAREGULARITY, Lat. contrà, and regula, a rule, from regere, to rule.

Opposition or contrariety to rule or order.

It is not only its not promoting, but its opposing, or at least its natural aptness to oppose the greatest and best ends; so that it is not so properly an irregularity as a contraregularity.
Norris.

CONTRA-REMONSTRANT, Lat. contrà, re, and monstrans, present participle of monstrare, (from monere,) to show. "Fr. remonstrer; to warn, admonish; advertise, advise; to show unto or set before the eyes; also, to check, chide, rebuke, reprove." Cotgrave.

One who remonstrates, in opposition or answer to a remonstrant.

As for their plea, that they came to defend their opinion no otherwise then the contra-remonstrants did for theirs, it was replyed, first that they did the synod wrong to make this distinction of contra-remonstrants and remonstrants: for in the synod there was no contra-remonstrant, and no man was call'd thither under that name, whereas they in their letters came under the name of remonstrants. Hale. Letters, part i. p. 28.

CONTRA-ROTATION, Lat. contrà, and rota, a wheel; which Vossius thinks is from 'ῥοθεῖν, cum impetu ferri, to be forced or carried along, to be whirled around.

Some have thought, that, by the contrariety of the strophé and antistrophé, they intended to represent the contrarotation of the primum mobile, in respect of the secunda mobilia; and that, by their standing still at the epode, they meant to signify the stability of the earth.
Congreve. A Discourse on the Pindaric Ode.

CO'NTRARY, v.
Co'NTRARY, n.
Co'NTRARY, adj.
CONTRA'RIANT, adj.
Co'NTRARIES,
CONTRARI'ETY,
CONTRA'RILY,
CONTRA'RIOUS.
CONTRA'RIOUSLY,
CONTRA'RIOUSTIE,
CONTRA'RIWISE, adv.
Co'NTRARY-MINDED.

For Contrà, see CONTRADICT, above.

"Fr. contrairer; to cross, thwart, impugne, resist, withstand, strive, or be against." Cotgrave.

To oppose, or be adverse to.

——— Ich took ful good hede
How þow contrariedest cleregie.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 234.

Gladly, sire hoste, quad he, I wol obey
Unto your will; now harkeneth what I say;
I wol you not contrarien in no wise,
As fer as that my wittes may suffice.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Prologue, v. 11017.

In all the court ne was ther wif ne maide,
Ne widewe, that contraried that he saide,
But said, he was worthy to han his lif.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6626.

——— Whether he or thou
May with his hundred, as I spake of now,
Sle his contrary, or out of listes drive,
Him shall I yeven Emelie to wive,
To whom that fortune yeveth so fayr a grace.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1861.

Is not euery thing good that is contrariant, and distroieng yuel.
Id. The Testament of Loue, book ii.

The children of Mercury and Venus
Ben in hir werking ful contrarious.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v 6280.

This eyre by his heate contrarieth water that is cold, but thilke contrariouslye is oned by moisture, for both be they moist.
Id. The Testament of Loue, book ii.

But forsoothe in kindly law nothing is commended, but soche as Goddes wil hath confirmed, ne nothinge denied but contrarioustie of Goddes will in heuen. Id. Ib. book iii.

Behold the people of Israel,
For euer, while thei didden well,
Fortune was them debonaire:
And when thei didden the contraire
Fortune was contrariende.
Gower. Conf. Am. Prologue, fol. 4.

There are infinite other thynges wherein hee contrarieth Christ, insomuch that if it be deligētly examined, I think there is no word that Christ spake, but the other hath taught or made a law agaynst it. Frith. Workes, fol. 106.

Then, vaunting in my witte, I gan call to my mynde
What rewles of wisdom I hadde taught, that elders could not find.
And as by contraries to treye most things we use,
Mens follies and their errors eke I gan them all peruse.
Surrey. Ecclesiastes, ch. i.

And he sygh hem travelinge in rowinge for the wynd was contrarie to hem, and aboute the fourthe waking of the night on the see come to hem and wolde passe hem.
Wiclif. Mark, ch. vi.

And he sawe them troubled in rowing, for the wynde was contrary unto theym. And about the fourth quarter of y^e^ night, he came vnto them walkyng vpon the sea and woulde haue passed by thē. Bible, 1551.

Ye would haue riches, I thinke, at God's hand who giveth all riches, and yet ye take the way cleane contrarie to riches.
Sir John Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition, book iii.

For euery persone considered his owne parte, that either with holdynge with the one side, or being contrariant to the other, or medeling with no part he should incurre indignacion or displeasure. Hall. Henry VI. The thirty-third Yere.

For Christ did set these contraryes one against an other to declare ech other. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 471.

This is a streight argument, my lord, if it were as you say: but bycause you show not wherein the councel of Nice ordained the contrary, I can say no more, but deny the same, until the time that you show the place of this contrariety, which I know you shal never.
Strype. Memorials. Pole, Answer to the Bishop of Durham.

There is nothing that man can easelyer do, than speake: and contrarilye, there is no thing so harde as to perfourme what is spokē. Udall. Mark, ch. ii.

Thus break vp that iorney, wherby the Duke of Bretayne coude haue no comforte of the Englysshemen, whiche was ryght contraryous to hym. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 356.

But, in short processe after, he demeanyd hym so ille and so cōtraryouslye vnto the weale & good ordre of y^e^ cytie that he was dyschargyd of his aldermanshyp.
Fabyan. Anno 1241. vol. ii.

There is no power giuen by any example, either by Christ or by his apostle, to excommunicate any subiect, specially for denying of any temporalties, but rather contrariwise.
State Trials. The Conclusions of John Wiclif.

'Twere vaine he thought to ask me of my sire,
(Zerbin a Christen, I a Sarazine)
Our country law contrari'd that desire,
To which our loves so wholly did incline.
Harrington. Orlando, book xiii. st. 9.

How often do we see men pleased with contraries? As if they parted the fights and frayes of nature: every one maintaining the faction which he liketh. Feltham. Resolve 59.

But if the body's death the soul should kill,
Then death must needs against her nature be;
And were it so, all souls would fly it still,
For nature hates and shuns her contrary.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, sec. 30.

——— But I in none of these
Find place or refuge; and the more I see
Pleasures about me, so much more I feel
Torment within me, as from the hateful siege
Of contraries.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ix. l. 122.

And indeed if man would consider things upon their true grounds, the church of Rome should be more reproved upon doctrines that infer ill life, then upon such as are contrariant to faith. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 20.

I am sure, there is no more contrariety to any of the Divine attributes in this supposition, then there is in that, which makes God to have sent a pure spirit, which he had just made, into such a body. Glanville. Preexistence of Souls, ch. v.

When every man wept and cried out for sorrow, which could not help, and that all the world was so troubled that there was no order taken for any thing; he contrarily went alone up and down the city very modestly, with a bold constant countenance, speaking courteously to every one, and did appease their womanish cries and lamentations.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch. Fabius, fol. 158.

God of our fathers, what is man!
That thou towards him with hand so various,
Or might I say contrarious,
Temp'rest thy providence through his short course.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, p. 99.

——— Many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously,
As many arrowes loosed seuerall wayes
Come to one marke.
Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 72.

So the African bishops with much Christian modesty, in the counsell of Carthage: It remains, say they, that every man speake what he thinks of this matter, judging no man, nor removing any man from our communion that is contrary-minded.
Hall. The Peace Maker, vol. iii. sec. 12.

It were a strange thing, if that [learning] which accustometh the minde to a perpetuall agitation, should be the patronesse to slothfulnesse: whereas contrariwise it may be truly affirmed, that no kinde of men love businesse for itselfe, but those that are learned. Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, book i. ch. ii.

There was little else to enable a man to answer them [the speculative objections against religion] but a willingness of mind to have them answered, and that we have no interest and inclination to the contrary. Tillotson. Sermon 28.

It is true, it is the men's weakness and infirmity that they live in a course of sin, contrary to all their sentiments and all their serious purposes. Sharp. Works. Sermon 6. vol. vi.

And yet oftener, if I please, can I with these two contrariant liquors recall and disperse the colour.
Boyle. Experimental History of Colour.

If therefore the raising the denomination did in reality bring silver into the realm, it cannot be thought that they would at any time sink the denomination, which by the rule of contraries should be at least suspected to drive, or keep it out.
Locke. Works. Further Considerations concerning raising the value of Money.

Much less, among so many variations,
Of different maladies and complications,
Make all the contrarieties in nature
Submit themselves t'an equal moderator.
Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

The bones being about 300, are form'd of various sizes and shapes, so situate and connected, as to be subservient to many hundred intentions and uses, and many of them conspire to one and the same action, and all this contrarily to the laws of specifick gravity, in whatever posture the body be form'd.
Ray. On the Creation, part i.

Mark when the different notes agree
In friendly contrariety,
How passion's well accorded strife
Gives all the harmony of life.
*Johnson. To Miss * * * * on her playing on the Harpsichord, &c.*

Why the dedications are to Winter and the other seasons, contrarily to custom, left out in the collected works, the reader may inquire. Id. Life of Thomson.

Till it be allowed there was design in our production, it can never be shown that one appetite is righter than another, though they be contrarious and inconsistent.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book i. sec. 4.

CO'NTRAST, v. } Fr. contraster; It. contrastare;
Co'NTRAST, n. } Sp. contrastar. Either from the French contr'estre, or the Latin contrà, and stare. Junius. Cotgrave has both contraster, and contr'estre, with little variation in the explanation: the former,—to strive, withstand, contend against; the latter,—to withstand, resist, contend with; to repugne. In English, to contrast, is,

To put or place in opposition; so that the dissimilarity or unlikeness may be the more clearly or distinctly seen.

Du Fresnoy tells us, "That the figures of the groups must not be all on a side, that is with their face and bodies all turned the same way; but must contrast each other by their several positions." Dryden. A Parallel of Poetry and Painting.

This mixture of so various, and seemingly opposite qualities, which constituted the foregoing contrast, did not proceed from any variation in his temper; but wholly in that of those among whom he conversed. Law. Theory of Religion, p. 300.

Should we the portrait with the sex compare,
'Twould add new honours to the northern fair;
Their merit, by the foil, conspicuous made,
And they seen brighter from contrasting shade.
Cunningham. A Prologue to Rule a Wife.

Mr. Collins; a writer, whose dexterity in the arts of controversy was so remarkably contrasted by his abilities in reasoning and literature, as to be ever putting one in mind of what travellers tell us of the genius of the proper Indians, who although the veriest bunglers in all the fine arts of manual operation, yet excell every body in slight of hand and the delusive feats of activity.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book vi. sec. 6.

Contrast to figure, motion, life and light,
There may'st thou vent thy spite;
For ever cursing, and for ever curs'd,
Of all th' infernal crew the worst.
Smart. On Ill Nature, ode 6.

CONTRAVALLATION, Lat. contrà, and vallum, i. e. a fortification, composed ex vallis, of stakes. See CIRCUMVALLATION.

It is reported concerning the late Czar of Moscovy, that when he first acquainted himself with mathematical learning, he practised all the rules of circumvallation and contravallation, at the siege of a town in Livonia; and by the length of those formalities he lost the opportunity of taking the town.
Watts. Logic, part ii. ch. ii.

The line of Circumvallation is a parapet and trench thrown up round a town, to protect the besiegers from an enemy who might attempt to relieve the place besieged. The besiegers are encamped between the town and this line, and its defences are turned towards the open country. The line of CONTRAVALLATION is a similar line in front of the besiegers, to protect them

CONTRAVALLATION. from any sallies of the garrison; so that the army engaged in the siege is encamped between the lines of Circumvallation and Contravallation.

CONTRIBUTE.

CONTRAVE'NE, v. CONTRAVE'NER, CONTRAVE'NING, n. CONTRAVE'NTION. Fr. contrevenir; Lat. contravenire; contrà, and venire; to come against, contrary or in opposition to.

To oppose, to hinder, to obstruct.

With certification of those that contravened, that they should be called and severely punished as seditious persons and wilful contemners of his majestie's most just and lawful government.

Spotiswood. Church of Scotland. Anno 1605. book vi.

The course of all his majesty's life and reign hath manifested how unwilling he hath ever been to use the severity of the laws against those who have said and heard mass, and otherwise contravened the acts of parliament made against idolatrous papistry, and practisers thereof within this kingdom.

State Trials. Proceedings against John Ogilvie.

If the consequential impugning of the authority of the estates of parliament by contravening of its acts of parliament, should fall under the compass of the said act 1584, treason should be too frequent, in regard the contravener of any act of parliament does in consequence impugn the authority of the estates.

Id. Trial of Sir Robert Spotiswood.

The contravening of an act of parliament, or the accepting of an office not conform to an act of parliament, is not a direct impugning of the authority of the estates of parliament, but a null act. Id. Ib.

My argument is, that [to kill one's self] is plainly repugnant to the will of God, and the schemes of his Providence; it is to contravene, to thwart, and overthrow, what in us lies, his manifest purposes; and as such it cannot but be highly affronting to him.

Hoadley. Letters signed Britannicus, &c. let. 94.

Laws that place the subjects in such a state, contravene the first principles of the compact of authority: they exact obedience, and yield no protection.

Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

CONTRAVERSION, Lat. contrà, and vertere, versum, to turn.

A turning in opposition or contrariety to another turn.

The second stanza was called the antistrophé, from the contraversion of the chorus; the singers, in performing that, turning from the left hand to the right contrary always to their motion in the strophé. Congreve. Discourse on the Pindaric Ode.

CONTRATENOR, Fr. contreteneur. The tenor in singing is so called, says Minshew, in all other languages a tenendâ cantilend. See COUNTER-TENOR.

In his [Dr. Croft's] time there was a very fine contratenor in the Royal Chapel, called Elford, to whom, in the preface to his anthems, he gives great, and I suppose deserved applause, and for whose voice he purposely set several solos.

Mason. On Church Musick, p. 136.

CONTREMBLING, con, and trembling, from the Lat. tremere, to quake, shake or shiver.

And from all grounds the soyle contrembling shook, than lofty ayre,
Than winds layd down their noyse, and calme sea surges setled faire. Phaer. Æneidos, book x. p. 227.

CONTRI'BUTE, CONTRIBU'TION, CONTRI'BUTIVE, CONTRI'BUTOR, CONTRI'BUTORY, CONTRI'BUTARY, n. CONTRI'BUTARY. Lat. contribuere, utum, to give or pay together; (it imports, says Minshew, a pluralitie of givers or gifts,) con, and tribuere, from tribus; and tribus, so called, says Varro, because the Roman land was at first divided into three parts, (in partes tres, a quo tribus appellatur.) Tributum, he adds, so called a tribubus, because this money, required from the people, was exacted through the tribes (tributim) in proportion to the value of the estate of each; (proportione censûs.)

CONTRIBUTE

To give or pay a portion towards one whole; to give or bestow or supply a share or part; to have or bear a part, portion or share, towards some common purpose, design, or effect.

Item, That it may please the king's majesty, for the defence of the league, and cause of religion, to contribute and put in, and under sureties deposit, with the said princes, 100,000 crownes.

Strype. Memorials. The Proposals of the Duke of Saxony, and Landgrave of Hesse.

Seeing no notable taxe, or contribution publike is historically mentioned to haue been for the charges leuied.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. King Edgar, vol. i. fol. 7.

And furthere, ouere and aboue thys that they haue in the countrey: I vnderstande that certayn barbarous or estrangers, be contrybutours vnto the Syracusians.

Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 153.

This woman besyde her variable garments, hath also taken vpon her (for to set furth her pryde, dignitie, and estimacion withall) to rule ouer all Christien kynges and princes, whiche she hath brought vnder her, and made subject and contributorye vnto her with falsehede and lyes, vtterly against the doctrine of the holy gospell. Udall. Reuelacion, ch. xvi.

So plain it is, That as there is no art, no science, but what is capable of improvement; so there is no evident truth, howsoever mean and useless it may seem to be, but may thereunto contribute. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, ch. vi.

For such vast room in nature unpossest
By living soule, desert and desolate,
Onely to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimps of light, convey'd so farr
Down to this habitable, which returnes
Light back to them, is obvious to dispute.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 155.

Hence it was, that the noble Valerius Publicola was buried by a contribution of money gathered for him.

Holland. Ammianus, fol. 11.

The same phrases he used to his patients; and seeing conceit is very contributive to the well working of physick, their fancy, or faith natural, was much advanced by his elevated expressions.

Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

He himself ordained, that those houses which had paid tribute before unto the King of Creta, should now yearly thenceforth become contributaries towards the charges of a solemn sacrifice, which should be done in the honour of him.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 9. Theseus.

So will it fully convince all foreign princes, that the advise or intention of your majesty were no way contributory to this prodigious violence, whatever inflam'd your ministers and officers to promote it. Milton. Cromwell to Lewis King of France.

And thus we are engaged in the objects of geometry and arithmetick, yea the whole mathematicks, must be contributary, and to them all nature pays a subsidy.

Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatising, ch. xxii.

Quoth she, I grant it is in vain
For one that's basted to feel pain,
Because the pangs his bones endure,
Contribute nothing to the cure.

Butler. Hudibras, part ii. can. 1.

We are here so many brethren met together to rejoice and do good: and to do good not only by increasing our friendship and mutual correspondence, but by joining together in a cheerful contribution to those our countrymen that need our charity.

Sharp. Works. Sermon 3. vol. i.

Art thou a true lover of thy country? zealous for its religious and civil interests? and a cheerful contributer to all those public expenses which have been thought necessary to secure them, against the attempts of the common enemy and oppressor?

Atterbury. Sermon 7. vol. ii.

To assess every one of them to be contributories according to their goods and lands, towards the building of two fortresses.

Strype Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1551.

They put all that was bought of one kind, as plantains, or cocoa-nuts, together, and when we had agreed for the heap, they divided the money that was paid for it, among those of whose separate property it consisted, in a proportion corresponding with their contributions.

Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. book ii. ch. xiii.

Let therefore the next friendly contributor, whosoever he be, observe the cautions of Swift, and write secretly in his own chamber, without communicating his design to his nearest friend, for the nearest friend will be pleased with an opportunity of laughing.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 56.

CONTRI'STATE, v. } Lat. contristare, atum; con,
CONTRISTA'TION. } and tristis, which Vossius has no doubt is from Gr. τρόστης, which Hesychius explains δείλος, i. e. timidus, from τρέ-ειν, tremere, to tremble. "Fr. contrister; to grieve, sadden, afflict, make sorrowful." Cotgrave.

But blacknesse, and darknesse, are indeed but privations; and therefore have little or no activity. Somewhat they doe contristate, but very little.

Bacon. Natural History, Cent. 9. sec. 873.

Incense, and odorous smells (such as were at sacrifices) were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion: which they may do by a kind of sadness and contristation of spirits: and partly also by heating, and exalting them.

Id. Ib. Cent. 10. sec. 932.

CONTRITE, } Fr. contrit; It. and Sp. contrito;
CONTRI'TION. } Lat. conterere, tritum; con, and terere, to bruise, or crush. (See ATTRITION, from which Contrition is distinguished by School Divines.) Gr. τέρ-ειν, perforare. Vossius. From τέρ-ειν, comes τρίβ-ειν, and the compound συντρίβειν, conterere. Συντρίβεσθαι, conteri, is used met. by Plutarch Περὶ τοῦ ἀκούειν; and rendered—to be crushed by Holland. But it is more particularly and most emphatically so used in the Holy Scriptures.—Συντετριμμένην τὴν καρδίαν, the broken-hearted. Vulgate, Contritos corde. Luke, iv. 8. And also by the Septuagint Translators.

Bruised, crushed, broken, broken-hearted, broken or subdued in spirit: sc. oppressed or overpowered by a sense of sin or guilt; and thus, penitent or repentant.

Ac free wil & free wit. folwep a man evere
To repenten and ryse. and rowen out of synne
To contrition to confession. till he come to hus ende.

Piers Ploukman, p. 168.

In this penance or contrition man shal understond foure thingis; that is to say, what is contrition; and which ben the causes that moven a man to contrition; and how he shuld be contrite; and what contrition availeth to the soule. Then is it thus, that contrition is the veray sorwe that a man receiveth in his herte for his sinnes, with sad purpos to shriven him, and to do penance, and never more done sinne.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And with that worde I gan downe fall
On knees with good deuocion
And with full great contricion
I said than.

Gower. Conf. Am., book i. fol. 9.

He sente me to preche to pore men, to heele contryt men in herte. Wiclif. Luc, ch. iv.

More shall thy peanytent sighes his endles mercy please
Then their importune suits, which dreame, that words God's wrath appease;
For hart contrite of fault, is gladsome recompence;
And praier fruiet of faith, wherby God doth with synne dispense.

Surrey. Ecclesiastes, ch. v.

As for the sacrament of penaunce, I beleue that it is needfull to all them that shall be saued, to forsake theyr sinne, and to do penaunce for it wyth true contricion to God, confession of their fautes, and dewe satisfactyon in Christe, lyke as God's laws limiteth and teacheth, else can they haue no saluation.

State Trials. Trial of Sir John Oldcastle.

He that is attrite leaves his sin; but he that is contrite obeys God, and pursues the interests and acquists of vertue: so that contrition is not only a sorrow for having offended God, whom the penitent loves; that is but one act or effect of contrition; but contrition loves God and hates sin, it leaves this, and adheres to him, abstains from evil and does good; dies to sin and lives to righteousness, and is a state of pardon and acceptable services. CONTRITE. — CONTRIVE.

Taylor. On Repentance, ch. x. sec. 3.

First that we be heartily sensible of our sins past, and sorry for them, and angry at ourselves for having committed them. And this is that which in common speech we call contrition.

Sharp. Works. Discourse 6. vol. v.

The prophets exhorted sinners in general to return to God, and declared that a broken and contrite heart God would not reject nor despise, even where no sacrifices had been appointed, or would be accepted by him. But that repentance shall open a way for us to eternal life, is clearly taught only in the gospel.

Jortin. Discourse concerning the Christian Religion.

If the sorrow arise merely from the fear of punishment, it is called in the language of the schools attrition, and is deemed the lowest and least honourable species of repentance; if from a desire to please God, and a tender sense of having offended so good a father, it is stiled contrition, and is of a more generous and noble kind. Bishop Horne. Works. Discourse 15.

CONTRIVE, Lat. conterere, contrivi; totum hunc contrivi diem. Ter. Hec. 5. 3. 17.

To wear, to while away, to spend.

Not that sage Pylian sire, which did surviue,
Three ages, such as mortall men contriue,
By whose advise old Priam's cittie fell,
With these in praise of policies mote striue.

Spenser. Facrie Queene, book ii. can. 9.

TRANIO. Sir, I shal not be slacke, in signe whereof,
Please ye we may contrive this afternoone,
And quaffe carowses to our mistresse health.

Shakspeare. Taming the Shrew, fol. 212.

In travelyng countryes, we three have contrived,
Full many a yeare.

Edwards. Damon and Pithias.

CONTRI'VE, v. } Written controve, by Brunne,
CONTRI'VER, } Chaucer, and Gower. "Fr. con-
CONTRI'VEMENT, } trouver; to fain, forge, devise,
CONTRI'VANCE, } invent, imagine out of his own
CONTRI'VABLE, } brain." Cotgrave. Con, and trou-
CONTRI'VING. } ver; It. trovare, to find, from the Ger. treffen, invenire. Wachter, and Skinner.

Þe kyng controued þer ouer, a brigge for to make.

R. Brunne, p. 240.

Here now a contreuore, þorgh Roberde's avis
Abouen þer armore did serkis & surplis.

Id. p. 334

Of þat fals controueyng gaf þei jugement,
Depriued þei our kyng of alle þe tenement
Of londes of Gascoyn. Id. p. 255.

Of alle kyne craftes. ich contreevede here tooles.

Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 189.

For I dare saine, that reason demeth
It is not al soth thing that semeth
And it is sin to controue
Thing that is to reproue.

Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 151.

For of his owne controunyge
He find magik, and taught it forth.

Gower. Conf. Am., book vi. fol. 140.

And this was afterwarde well proued
In him, whiche hath the death controued
Of that his brother was slayne.

Id. Ib. book ii. fol. 37.

——— Do not falter
In your discovery, but as you covet
A liberal grace, and pardon for your follies,
So labour to deserve it, by laying open
All plots, all persons, that contrive against it.

Ford. Perkin Warbeck, act i. sc. 3.

CONTRIVE. — CONTROL.

The other statue of the king being thrown from the place where it stood, fell upon its feet, which was then taken by many as a presage that his glorious memory, fame, and posterity, should recover and continue, maugre all the designs and contrivements of his and their implacable enemies.

Baker. Charles II. Anno 1650.

The story of the world and of the creation of it, what a glorious contrivement was it, taken simply alone in itself; and how wonderfully did these visible things shew forth the invisible things of God. Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part iii. fol. 83.

To this I shall briefly say, that it is an old guise of the Devil, to impute the cause of God's people's sufferings, to be contrivements against the state, when in truth it is their religion and conscience they are persecuted for.

State Trials, 1651. Trial of Christian Love.

They are the Autumn fruits, that we must thrive and live by; the sage sayings, the rare examples, the noble enterprises, the handsome contrivances, the success of good and bad actions, the elevations of the Deity, the motives and incitements to vertue, and the like; are those that must build us up to the gallantry and perfection of man. Feltham. Resolve 27.

These things considered together, it will hence appear, how a perpetual motion may seem easily contrivable.

Wilkins. Dædalus, vol. ii. p. 241.

Ineffable, all pow'rfull God, all free,
Thou only liv'st, and each thing lives by thee;
No joy, no, nor perfection to thee came
By the contriving of this world's great frame.

Drummond. Hymn. Flowers of Sion.

This deliberate walking in the wayes, and with the companions and contrivers of ungodliness, this partaking and prosecuting of the counsels; the enjoying this familiarity with sin proves a strong engagement to continue and preserve, and delight in its acquaintance. Hammond. Works. Sermon 17. vol. iv.

I come now to the second part of the words, In wisdom has thou made them all; in discoursing whereof, I shall endeavour to make out in particulars what the Psalmist here asserts in general, concerning the works of God, that they are all very wisely contriv'd, and adapted to ends both particular and general.

Ray. On the Creation, part i.

How much he labours, and how much in vain,
The earth's attractive vigour to explain!
This bold contriver thus his thoughts conveys.

Blackmore. Creation, book i.

I have in my survey of the heavens shewed what admirable contrivances the infinitely wise Creator hath for the affording this noble, glorious, and comfortable benefit [of light] to other globes, as well as ours; the provision he hath made by moons, as well as by the sun, for the communication of it.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book i. ch. iv.

He that would have his window open, must hold it with his hand, unless what may be sometimes found among good contrivers, there be a nail which he may stick into a hole, to keep it from falling. Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

The machine which we are inspecting, demonstrates, by its construction, contrivance and design. Contrivance must have had a contriver; design, a designer; whether the machine immediately proceeded from another machine or not.

Paley. Natural Theology, ch. ii.

CONTRO'L, v. CONTRO'L, n. CONTRO'LLER, CONTRO'LLING, n. CONTRO'LMENT. See COMPTROL. Cotgrave says, Controlle or countre-rolle. A controlement or contra-rolement; a copy of a role of accounts. A controlleur; properly an Officer that takes notes, or keeps a role, of another Officer's accounts, thereby to discover if he do amiss. And thus, to control, or comptrol, is,

To observe or overlook, to superintend; and further, to check, to regulate, to restrain. See COUNTER-ROLLMENT.

Selde falleþ þe servant. so deepe in arrirages
As doþ þe reyve oþr þe conterroler. þat rekene mot and a counte
Of al þat þei haven hadd.

Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 199.

This work diuised is
For such as do amis
And specially to controule
Suche as haue cure of soule.

Skelton. Ware the Hawke.

But my sillogisme is thys. Euerye Christen man refusing to heare, beleue, & obay the church, is to bee taken as an heretike and an heathē. But so it is that Tyndall being a Christen man, and taking vpon him the vnderstanding of Scripture, to controule and condempne the churche, refuseth to here, beleue, and obay the church: ergo Tyndall is to bee taken as an heathen man & an heretyke. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 504.

But fayne would I know of them all, who hath deposed any king syth Christe's passion, sauing they onelye? who will bee kinge's felowes, yea and cōtroulers, sauing they only?

Barnes. Workes, fol. 186.

Auarice and lecherie, whiche vices being refrayned by a noble man, that lyueth at libertie, and without controlement, procureth vnto hym, beside the fauour of God, immortal glorye.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book iii.

Also it was ordayned that no knight or squyer of Fraunce shuld go by night tyme without torch or torches, and that the Englyshmen shulde go at their pleasure without any cōtrolement.

Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 184.

Perhaps thy fortune doth controll the winde,
Doth loose or binde their blasts in secret caue,
The sea (pardie) cruell and deafe by kinde,
Will heare thy call, and still her raging waue.

Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book ii. st. 76.

Noble, ignoble, fate controuls; once borne, the best must dye.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book vi. fol. 94.

That which is held, not onely by the multitude, but by the learned, passing smoothly for the most part without any checke or controle. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 1.

For some, and those the acutest of them, have left unto us many things of falsity, controulable, not only by critical and collective reason, but common and countrey observation.

Sir Thomas Brown, book i. ch. vi.

Shall the controller of proud Nemesis
In lawelesse rage upbraid each other's vice,
While no man seeketh to reflect the wrong,
And curb the raunge of his misruly tongue?

Hall. Satire 1. book vi.

The savage, though she saw her plea control'd
Yet would not wholly seem to quit her hold,
But offer'd fairly to compound the strife,
And judge conversion by the convert's life.

Dryden. The Hind and Panther.

Such a strange, sacred, and inviolable majesty has God imprinted upon this faculty; not, indeed, as upon an absolute independent sovereign; but yet with so great a communication of something next to sovereignty, that while it keeps within its proper compass, it is controllable by no mortal power upon earth.

South. Sermons, vol. ii. p. 442.

If poverty be my upbraided crime,
And you believe in heaven, there was a time
When he, the great controller of our fate,
Deign'd to be man, and liv'd in low estate:
Which he, who had the world at his dispose,
If poverty were vice, would never choose.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

If the seeds of piety and virtue be but carefully sown at first, very much may be done by this means, even in the most depraved natures, towards the altering and changing of them; however, to the checking and controulling of our vicious inclinations.

Tillotson. Sermon 28.

It is to suppose custom instantaneously controllable by reason, and to endeavour to communicate, by precept, that which only time and habit can bestow. Johnson. The Rambler, No. 159.

Happy the bard (though few such bards we find)
Who, 'bove controlment, dares to speak his mind;
Dares unabash'd in every place appear,
And nothing fears, but what he ought to fear.

Churchill. Independence.

CO'NTROVERSE, v.
CO'NTROVERSE, n.
CONTROVE'RSAL,
CONTROVE'RSIAL,
CONTROVE'RSIALIST,
CONTROVE'RSION,
CONTROVE'RSER,
CONTROVE'RSOR,
CO'NTROVERSY,
CO'NTROVERSY-WRITER,
CO'NTROVERT, v.
CONTROVE'RTER,
CONTROVE'RTIBLE,
CONTROVE'RTIST.

Lat. controversus; (controvertor parùm Latinum est. Vossius.) Contrà, and vertere, versum, to turn.

To turn against, sc. in dispute or debate, in strife, in litigation; and thus, to dispute or debate, to strive, to litigate.

About y^e^ the feest of Mary Magdaleyne, in y^e^ moneth of Julii, cõtrauersy and varyaũce began to aryse amonge y^e^ personys assygned for the iii. astatys.

Fabyan. King John. The seventh Yere.

For which cause he desired no innovation should be made on things had been so long in controversy by handstrokes, but rather by commissioners' talk.

Burnett. Records. King Edward's Journal.

Neither wish wee that men should do any thing which in their hearts they are persuaded they ought not to doe; but this perswasion ought (we say) to be fully settled in their hearts, that in litidious [litigious] and controuersed causes of such quality, the will of God is to haue them to doe whatsoeuer the sentence of judiciall and finall decision shall determine, yea, though it seem, in the private opinion, to swarue vtterly from that which is right.

Hooker. Preface, fol. 28.

What hope have we to know ourselves, when we Know not the least things, which for our use be?
We see in authors, too stiff to recant,
An hundred controverses of an ant.

Donne. Funeral Elegies. Of the Progress of the Soul.

The Temple of Janus, with his two controversal faces, might now not unsignificantly be set open.

Milton. Liberty of Unlicensed Printing.

And these in these things I understand for the doctrine of our church: which are so well vindicated by men so infinitely above my abilities as in my reason I am so well satisfied, as I desire not to be further controversial.

Feltham. On the Low Countries, part ii. fol. 85.

Yet they who were trusted during the interreign did, by their mediation work them to a compromise, and to remit the decision of the controversion to King Edward I. of England, a prince of long experience, and much respected in that time.

Spotiswood. Church of Scotland, book ii. Anno 1279.

In which place (boulted before to the bran by many controverters) mine adversarie hath learned of his Bellarmine, to triumph above measure.

Hall. The Honour of the Maried Clergie, vol. i. fol. 693.

Sine Dei gratia, Nulla possunt esse liberi arbitrii bona merita, saith the controversor.

Mountague. Appeale to Cæsar, p. 91.

Whom do we count a good man? whom but he
Who keeps the laws and statutes of the senate,
Who judges in great suits and controversies,
Whose witness and opinion wins the cause.

Milton. Horace. Ep. l. 16. 40.

And the signs of two opinions contradictory one to another, namely affirmation and negation of the same thing, is called controversy: but both affirmations, or both negations, consent in opinion. Hobbs. Human Nature, ch. xiii.

But whichsoever of these two sisters have prerogative of primogeniture (a matter too much controverted betwixt them) none can give them less attribute, than to be two radiant eyes fixed in this island, as the beauteous face of the earth's body.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 12.

——— Or in divinity
As controverters in vouch'd texts leave out
Shrew'd words, which might against them clear the doubt.

Donne. Satire 2.

Some controverters in divinity are like swaggerers in the taverne, that catch that which stands next them; the candlesticke, or pots; turne every thing into a weapon: oft times they fight blind-folde; and both beate the ayre.

Ben Jonson. Discoveries, fol. 104.

All which, notwithstanding, upon a strict enquiry, we find them matter controvertible, and with much more reason denied then is as yet affirmed. Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. i.

Polemical or controversial divinity is theologia armata, or that part of divinity, which instructs and furnisheth a man with necessary weapons to defend the truth against its enemies.

Bishop Bull. Sermon 6. vol. i. p. 150.

And made the stoutest yield to mercy
When he engag'd in controversy:
Not by the force of carnal reason,
But indefatigable teasing;
With vollies of eternal babble,
And clamour more unanswerable.

Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 2.

This was the great proposition that was then controverted concerning Jesus of Nazareth, whether he was the Messiah or no; and the assent to that, was that which distinguished believers from unbelievers.

Locke. Works. The Reasonableness of Christianity, vol. ii. fol. 480.

From Mandeville you take your morals:
Your faith from controversial quarrels;
But ever lean to those who scribble
Their crudities against the Bible.

Cambridge. A Dialogue between a Member of Parliament and his Servant.

When the incomparable Stillingfleet undertook to expose the enormity of the court of Rome, in turning the dispensation of the word into a lucrative trade, he prosecuted the controversy with so much vigour of style and sentiment as to be reviled by those who found themselves affected by it, with the names of buffoon and comedian.

Warburton. On Bolingbroke's Philosophy. Apology for the two first Letters.

What an Aceldama, what a field of blood Sicily has been in ancient times, whilst the mode of its government was controverted between the republican and tyrannical parties, and the possession struggled for by the natives, the Greeks, the Carthaginians, and the Romans, your lordship will easily recollect.

Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

Almost every new acquired territory is in some degree controvertible, and till the controversy is decided, a term very difficult to be fixed, all that can be had is real possession and actual dominion. Johnson. Falkland's Islands.

What right hath a modern controvertist to require more from a Jew than Justin Martyr required from Trypho?

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

CONTRUSION, contrudere, usum; (con, and trudere,) to thrust, or squeeze together.

The doctor tells us that the cause of the incolumity of the tadpole is, that the pressure or contrusion of the particles of the water against one another is hindered or frustrated by the principium hylarchicum.

Boyle. An Hydrostatical Discourse, &c.

CO'NTUMACY, n.
CONTUMA'CIOUS,
CONTUMA'CIOUSLY,
CONTUMA'CIOUSNESS.

Fr. contumace; It. and Sp. contumacia; Lat. contumacia; so called, a contemnere, quod est super alios aspernari; or rather a tumore. Vossius.

The French have the verb, contumacer; thus fully explained by Cotgrave: "To deal stubbornly, be perverse, follow his own will; disobey or rebel against his superiors; to make a contempt."

Ne in enquestes to come. ne contumax þaugh he worthe.

Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 219.

It is affirmyd of some auctours, that the Frenshe kyng made his warre vpon Kynge John, by excytynge of the pope for his contumacy agayne the churche. Fabyan. Anno 1207.

CONTUMACY. — CONTUMELY.

But the more, sir, that ye besy you for to drawe hym toward you, the more contumax he is made and the ferder from you.
State Trials. Trial of William Thorpe.

As if he had most contumaciously contemned quietnesse, by their relations they incensed the pope, (too proclive of himselfe to set forth his owne greatnesse) to put on him a farre more indignous wrong and contumely then interdiction, by absoluing all kings and people, poore and rich, hauing dependance on him, from all fealty and subjection to him.
Speed, book ix. ch. viii. sec. 44.

Even pardon of sin, and eternal salvation, may be the return of the brethren's prayers, 1 John, v. 16. for him that sinneth not unto death, i. e. who although he hath fallen into God's displeasure for his sin, quench'd that grace in him, which was necessary to bring him back to life, hath yet in case of fraternal correption behaved himself meekly, not contumaciously against it.
Hammond. Works. On Fraternal Admonition or Correption, vol. i. fol. 293.

Being often commanded to swear, and still refusing, the bishop commanded him [Pykas] to be committed to Lolland's tower, and to be thrust into the stocks, for his manifest and manifold contumacy. Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Anno 1527.

Now these courts being thus established in the church, when any offender is presented into any of them, he is cited to appear there, which if he neglect or refuse to do, he is pronounced contumacious, one that refuseth or contemneth the power that Christ hath given to his church, which for many reasons was always judged one of the greatest sins that a Christian can be guilty of; and therefore is proceeded against accordingly.
Beveridge. Sermon 4.

It embraces a variety of the sublimest subjects and sentiments, it displays the truth and justice of God, his paternal love, and his unfailing tenderness to his chosen people; and on the other hand, their ungrateful and contumacious spirit.
Lowth. Lecture 28. vol. iii.

If he thought himself aggrieved, (though he had two years given him for that purpose,) [making his appeal] I would have him sent in chains to my prætorian prefects; for only to remand him back to a punishment which he has contumaciously eluded will by no means be a sufficient chastisement
Melmoth. Trajan to Pliny. Letter 45. book 10.

CO'NTUMELY, n. / CONTUME'LIOUS, / CONTUME'LIOUSLY, / CONTUME'LIOUSNESS. } Fr. contumelie; It. contumelia; Lat. contumelia, either a contemnendo, quasi contemnelia; or from contumeo; est enim injuria profecta ab animo, qui fastu tumeat, ac turgeat. Vossius. Seneca countenances the former. Qui contumeliâ afficitur, contemtum se judicat. De Tranq. Vit. c. 10.

Scorn, disdain, disgrace, despight, reproach; contemptuous neglect.

Augustine sayth, Our holy mother the churche throughout all the world scattered far and long, in her trew head Christ Jesus taught, hath learned not to feare the contumelyes of the crosse nor yet the death: but more and more is shee strengthened not in resistyng but in sufferyng.
Barnes. Workes, fol. 360.

The patrones and others, that have the rule and governaunce of the said galeys, so inhumanely and ungodly demeaned theymselff, by excessive demaundes, with exclamations and other contumelious words, that the king, being otherwise purveyed, thought more expedient to forbere the use of theym, than to be in their daungiers.
Strype. Memorials. Instructions by the King for Mr. Pace.

For you were sumtyme heathens, after the corporall distinction of kynred, whome the nacyon of the Jewes, bragging of their carnal circumcision that is done with handes, name contumeliously vncircumcised. Udall. Ephesians, ch. ii.

I number these as being of the chore
Of contumelie, and urge a good man more
Then sword, or fire, or what is of the race
To carry noble danger in the face.
Ben Jonson. Under-woods, fol. 204.

They sent him also many other contumelious messages and petitions, after his coming to York.
Hobbs. Behemoth, part ii.

Past measure contumeliously, this crew
Fare through thy house.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book i. fol. 9.

These, contrary to trust, were abused and defloured, the mother Boduo turned out of all, and against all manly ciuility, or womanhood respect, contumeliously and despitefully whipped.
Speed. Bodvo, book v. ch. vi. sec. 13.

In the secondary notion, to scoff, is by way of argument to oppose any truth contumeliously or bitterly.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 16. vol. iv.

If as I did not make my evidence good, so he did not evince it bad, (which yet certainly he hath not) there could yet be no place for his contumelies, according to his own grounds of the dueness of them, nor consequently for retortion of the charge of contumeliousness on me.
Id. Ib. Of Contumelies, ch. i. sec. 1.

The apostles were pinched with all kinds of want, harrassed with all sorts of toil, exposed to all manner of hazards, persecuted with all variety of contumelies, and pains that can be imagined. Barrow. Sermon 8. vol. iii.

But there are some expositors who understand the word βλασφημοι here in a milder sense, and with reference to men, as it denotes such as by contumelious speeches, maliciously injure the fame and reputation of others, especially their superiors, and those that are in authority over them.
Bishop Bull. Sermon 15.

Nothing aggravates tyranny so much as contumely. Quicquid superbia in contumeliis was charged by a great man of antiquity, as a principal head of offence against the governour general of that day. Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

Yet oft his courtesies are smoother wrongs;
Pride brandishes the favours he confers,
And contumelious his humanity.
Young. The Complaint. Night 3.

CONTU'ND, v. / CONTU'SE, v. / CONTU'SION. } Fr. contundre; Lat. contundere, tusum; (con, and tundere, to beat or bruise.)

To beat or bruise together, to pound or bray together.

His muscles were so extended and contunded, that he was not corpus mobile.
Gayton. Notes on Don Quixote, vol. iii. p. 2.

It is reported that—Of the roots, barks, and seeds, (of forraine herbs,) contused together, and mingled with other earth, and well watred with warm water, there came forth herbs much like the other. Bacon. Natural History, sec. 574.

If they bee stamped and spread upon a linnen rag and so applied, they will heal the eares if they be hurt by any bruise or contusion. Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 370.

And it is agreeable to what has been formerly shewn, to conceive that in congelation there seems to happen an almost innumerable multitude of little contusions, made by the fluid parts hardened and expanded by frost.
Boyle. Experimental History of Cold, Tit. 21.

Then each might show, to his admiring friends,
In honourable bumps his rich amends,
And carry, in contusions of his skull
A satisfactory receipt in full.
Cowper. Conversation.

CONTURBATION, con, and turba; Gr. τύρβη. See to DISTURB.

Instead of naming dolour and fear directly, [they] come in with (I wot not what) pretty devised termes of morsures, contractions, or conturbations. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 62.

CONVALE'SCE, / CONVALE'SCENCE, / CONVALE'SCENT. } Lat. convalescere; con, and valescere, to become whole, or in health; from val-ere; Gr. ὄυλ-ειν, from Ionic ὄυλ-ος, for ὅλ-ος, entire, sound, whole.

To grow or become whole, or healthy, in a sound state or condition.

The king being advertised, rid post from Stirlin to Jedburgh, where he found the queen somewhat convalesced, but she would scarce speak to him, and hardly give him presence or a good word. Knox. History of Reformation, book v. Anno 1566.

She [the queen] was within little more than one month of her time; and being in a place out of the reach of any alarm, she recover'd her spirits to a reasonable convalescence.
Clarendon. History of the Civil Wars, vol. ii. part ii. book viii.

——————— Him with stately grace
She raises, then addresses; "Glad I see
Thy convalescence; to impart my help
Became a duty?"
Glover. The Athenaid, book xvi.

——————— Sandauce they approach,
Sandauce late in convalescent charms
Fresh as a May-blown rose, by pallid fear
Now languid as a lilly beat with rain.
Id. Ib. book xxv.

CONVALLARIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia, natural order Asparagi. Generic character: corolla six-cleft, berry spotted, three-celled, superior.

There are twelve species of this beautiful genus, natives of Europe and North America. C. maialis, the Lilly of the Valley, growing in woods; C. verticillata, C. polygonatum, C. catifolia, and C. multiflora, the Solomon's Seal are natives of England

CONUCO, the Indian name in Caracas, for the piece of ground which in the villages of the Missions is set apart for a common garden, at which all the grown up young men and women are obliged to work for one hour in the morning and one in the evening. The profits of the Conuco go to the support of the church or chapel, and to the village fund. Near the coast these Conucos are usually plantations either of indigo or of sugar.

CONVE'NE, v.
CONVE'NER,
CONVE'NABLE,
CONVE'NIENT,
CONVE'NIENTLY,
CONVE'NIENTNESS,
CONVE'NIENCE,
CONVE'NIENCY,
CONVE'NING, n.
CONVE'NT, v.
CO'NVENT, n.
CONVE'NTICLE, v.
CONVE'NTICLE, n.
CONVE'NTICLER,
CONVE'NTION,
CONVE'NTIONAL,
CONVE'NTIONARY, adj.
CONVE'NTIONIST,
CONVE'NTUAL, adj.
CONVE'NTUAL, n.
CO'NVENT-SEAL.

Lat. conven-ire, to come together; (con, and ven-ire.) Fr. convenir.

To come and meet, or cause to come and meet, together; to assemble, to unite or associate, to call or summons together, to convoke.

The Fr. convenir is also equivalent to the English, —to be convenient or becoming. (See BECOME.)

Coming together, sc. to the same place, with the same design, at the same time; concurring, agreeing, fitting, suiting, being decent or appropriate to.

To convent, formed upon the past participle, is not uncommon in our old writers.

A convent is applied to an assembly of religious persons, monks or nuns. Fr. convent de Moynes; It. convento di Monachi; Sp. convento de Monges. A conventicle; Fr. conventicle; It. and Sp. conventiculo, to a minor assembly of religious persons separating themselves from the parent assembly:—formerly not so restricted. See the Examples from Hall and Hacluyt.

Nowe let us come to more particular thynges. Regard as now, what thinge is most conuenable for my sonne whiche as a yong colte would go play in the grene meadowes. CONVENE Golden Boke, E. 10.

So that atwene hym and theym were foughten many and sundry bataylles, whereof nouther of place, nor of tyme is lafte any conuenyent memory, nor yet of the names of the saide two sonnes. Fabyan, vol. i. ch. cvii.

Whiche thynge the Archbishoppe of Yorke, whome they all agreed also to be thereto moste conuenyente, took vppon hym to moue her, and therein to dooe hys vttermoste deuowre.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 45.

The Kerlis and the Lappians are not to be trusted, for they will steale as well as the Russes, if they may conueniently come by any thing.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Stephen Burrough, vol. i. fol. 295.

But more to the conueniency of tyme and agreement of other cronyclers, accordynge to the sayinge of the forenamed olde auctour, he reygned by the terme of xlix. yeres.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. xxi.

Vnto the right hand, and the left hand they extend thẽselues as farre as they will, according to the conueniencie of places, so that they place not their houses directly opposite against the court.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i. fol. 109.

The mandate of the Archbishop William Courtney (sent abroad for the conuenting together of this councell) here followeth vnder written, truely copied out of his owne registers.
State Trials. The Conclusion of John Wickliffe.

I will in thys poynt of conuenting ex officio, no farther speake at thys time then concerning the cryme of heresie.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 907.

Then the abbot and all the conuent toke his counsayle, though he ment well, in grete dyspyte and dyspleasure, sayenge, Syr Symon, wyll ye depose your chyrche fro our sygnory?
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. lv.

All streytes passages & by pathes were kept & searched, so that no man vnhapprehended coulde passe to the sea coaste, nor make any conuenticle or assemble without he were espyed and taken. Hall. Henry VII. The eighth Yere.

No it was for her sake I first tooke armes, and for her sake I will handle them so long as I shall be able to vse them: not regarding how some men in priuate conuenticles doe measure men's estimations by their own humors; nor how euery popular person doeth giue sentence on euery man's actions by the worst accidents.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Portugal Voyage, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 154.

After his arriuall in Fraunce, he came to the Duke of Burgoyne, his especiall frende, gratifynge and thankynge him for his libertie and deliueraunce, and accordyng to his promes and conuention, maried the faire lady in the toune of Sainct Omers.
Hall. Henry VI. The eighteenth Yere.

And some questiõ hath arise in the order of Saint Francise, betweene the obseruaũtes and y^e conventualles.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 875.

Also, that there be assigned a book and a register that may copy out into that book all such writings, word by word, as shall pass under the convent-seal of this house.
Burnett. Records. General Injunctions on the King's Highnesses behalf in all Monasteries, &c.

Jan. 19. The king was brought from Windsor to Saint James's House, and all things were prepared for his fatal tragedy, in which the commons proceeded, notwithstanding the dissent of the house of lords, and the remonstrance of the parliament of Scotland, now convened against it.
Baker. Charles I. Anno 1648.

And indeed I doe reverence the convenors for their places, worth, and learning.
Mountague. Appeale to Cæsar, p. 69.

He is so meeke, wise, and merciable,
And with his word his worke is conuenable.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. September.

CONVENE

For though mind be the heaven, where love doth sit,
Beauty a convenient type may be to figure it.
Donne. Vindication to his Book.

If by my honour'd brother's hand, be Alexander slaine,
The Troians then, shall his forc't queene, with all her wealth restore,
And pay convenient fine to us, and ours for euermore.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book iii. fol. 43.

He that devises not how to cast off the burthen of his sin, though it pains him, but how to carry it more handsomely and conveniently, by qualifications, distinctions, and the like, he is perhaps heavy laden, for he feels his shoulders pincht; but he is not wearie of carrying. Mede. Works. Discourse 31. book i.

So these delighting more in their dishes, than mistrusting their enimies, remembered to take the vse of any pleasure that the conuenientnesse of this present time might proffer.
Holinshed. Henry II. Anno 1175.

Jointure, portion, gold, estate,
Houses, houshold-stuff, or land
(The low conveniencies of fate)
Are Greek no lovers understand.
Cowley. Discretion.

In Wells (with the assistance of Dean Woolman) he built a stately covered crosse in the market-place, for the glory of God, and conveniency of the poor people, to secure them from the weather. Fuller. Worthies. London.

By secret messengers I did conuent,
The English chiefetaines all, whom I did find
In heart so well inclin'd, that all were bent
With readie hands to strengthen my intent.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 620.

Whereupon in the bill newly passed this session, for a trienniall parliament, for time to come, there is a speciall provision made how the parliament shall be summoned and convented by the lords, commons, and great officers of the realme, themselves, without the king's concurrent assent, (though by his writ and in his name) in case of his neglect or wilfull refusal to summon one within that time.
Prynne. Treachery of Papists, part i. p. 12.

The fond schismatick and heretick fry
Flatter their conventincling cells in vain,
As if the sneaking arms of privacy
The great and catholick spirit could contain.
Beaumont. Psyche, can. 16. st. 80.

Oftentimes, the threatning the church with schism, or a heresy, was a design to get a bishoprick: and Socrates reports of Asterius, that he did frequent the conventicles of the Arians; Nam episcopatum aliquem ambiebat.
Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 12.

To win the love of the people yet more, he set himself to the making of good laws, in a grand convention of his nobles which he held at Oxford. Baker. Chronicle. Canutus.

The ordinary covenants of the most conventionary tenants are, to pay due capon and due harvest journeys. Carew. Survey.

By the procurement of Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, licence was granted to the conventuall churches in England to celebrate diuine seruice once euery week.
Stow. King John. Anno 1209.

And they wisely resolved, upon this, that all religion was, like theirs, a convenient trick and pretence only; invented by cunning men to keep silly people in awe, to make princes reign safely, and the priesthood live easily.
Atterbury. Sermon 5. vol. i.

Now all the objects in the world, that can be supposed to recommend themselves to our desires or pursuits, as the things that will make us happy (how many and various soever the particulars be, yet) we shall find, that they may conveniently enough be reduced to two heads; the things of the earth, and the things above. Sharp. Works. Sermon 12. vol. vi.

For he that strains too far a vow,
Will break it, like an o'er-bent bow;
And he that made, and forc'd it, broke it,
Not he that for convenience took it.
Butler. Hudibras, part ii. can. 2.

Speech itself is one of the peculiar excellencies of human nature; and the great conveniency of civil society. CON
Stillingfleet. Sermon 12. vol. iii.

[The lord chancellor] left the rest of this bloody work to Bishop Bonner; and those six before mentioned he began with: who having been convented before him but the day before, were condemned this very next day.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary. Anno 1554.

This being resolved upon, he thought good to make one work of it, and to have all convents and religious societies besides visited also. Id. Ib. Henry VIII. Anno 1535.

That you would employ the utmost of this your power and interest, both with the king and parliament, to suppress, utterly to suppress and extinguish those private, blind, conventicling schools or academies of grammar and philosophy, set up and taught secretly by fanaticks, here and there, all the kingdom over.
South. Sermon 1. vol. v. p. 41.

——— The heaven their priesthood paints
A conventicle of gloomy sullen saints;
A heaven-like Bedlam, slovenly and sad,
Fore-doom'd for souls, with false religion, mad.
Dryden. The Medal.

Some of them were taken, and brought to Edinburg and pressed to name as many as they knew of their fellow conventiclers: but they refused to do it.
Burnett. Own Times. Charles II. Anno 1670.

In this case the generality of mankind would leave the school-doctors to dispute, whether being a factitious body (as made by the chymist's art) it have the substantial form of gold, and would upon the account of the convention of the freshly mentioned accidents, let it pass current amongst them.
Boyle. An Excursion about the relative Nature of Physical Qualities.

[Theodosius] was so far concealed in a long beard, a shaved head, and a religious habit, that it was impossible to discover the man of the world in the venerable conventual.
Spectator, No. 165.

But Cato and Caninius absolutely refused to suffer any decree to pass, till a general assembly of the people should be convened.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Publius Lentulus, book i. let. 16.

The synod which was assembled to examine the affair of Paul of Samosata, consisted of all the bishops, presbyters, and deacons, who could conveniently meet together. None were excluded. Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

Free from the proud, the pompous, and the vain,
Thy rural villa lifts its modest head
Where fair convenience reigns in fashion's stead.
Smart. To my worthy friend Mr. T. B.

Hence to some convent's gloomy aisles,
Where cheerful day-light never smiles:
Tyrant! from Albion haste, to slavish Rome.
Warton. Ode to Superstition.

He might have understood, that the first Christians under the habitual guidance of the Holy Spirit, could never have recourse to nocturnal or clandestine conventicles, till driven to them by the violence of persecution.
Warburton. Works. Preface to the edition of 1758.

The violence of the conventiclers was sounded high, in order to palliate the severities exercised in the government of that kingdom.
Bolingbroke. Works. A Dissertation upon Parties.

On the first news of this attempt on their liberty, a convention, composed of deputies from the several states of Greece was immediately held at the isthmus of Corinth to consult on proper measures for the public safety.
Glover. Leonidas. Preface.

Poetry and elocution of every sort make use of signs, but those signs are arbitrary and conventional.
Sir Joshua Reynolds. The tenth Discourse.

It must needs be a hostile kind of a world when the buyer (if it be but a sorry post chaise) cannot go forth with the seller thereof into the street, to terminate the difference betwixt them, but he instantly falls into the same frame of mind, and views his conventionist with the same sort of eye, as if he was going along with him to Hyde Park Corner to fight a duel.
Sterne. Sentimental Journey. The Monk.

CONVENTION is the name given to the meeting of the English Lords and Commons, without the assent or summons of the King. Such was the Convention Parliament which met before the Restoration of Charles II.; the Lords by their own authority, the Commons by virtue of writs issued in the name of the Keepers of the Liberty of England, by authority of Parliament. This Parliament sat till the November after the King's return, and passed an Act (12 Car. II. 1) declaring itself valid, which was confirmed by a similar Act in the following Parliament. (13 Car. II. 7. 14.)

So also in 1688, the Lords and Commons met in Convention, on the summons of the Prince of Orange. They declared that James II. had abdicated his Kingdom, that the Crown was vacant, and that it devolved upon King William and Queen Mary. By statute I, William and Mary, 1, this Convention was declared to be the two Houses of Parliament.

The word CONVENTICULUM was known to the primitive Church to designate a House of prayer: conventicula ubi summus oratur Deus. Arnob. iv. See also Lactant. v. 11; Orosius, vii. 12. In aftertimes it denoted a secret assembly of part of the Monks of a Convent, to make a party in the election of an Abbot or Superior. The term Conventicle is said to have been first applied, in England, to the Schools of Wickliffe; but in the reign of Charles II. it was given to the meetings for religious worship of Protestant Dissenters from the Church of England, which were not at that time sanctioned by law. By the statutes 16 Car. II. c. 4, (which was in force only for three years,) and 22 Car. II. c. 1, (commonly called the Conventicle Act,) various severe penalties were enacted against persons who were either present at a Conventicle, (whether as preachers or hearers,) or who suffered meetings to be held in their houses. Any person above sixteen years of age, a subject of the kingdom, present at any Conventicle where five or more were assembled, forfeited 5*s.* for the first offence, and 10*s.* for the second. Every preacher in such Conventicle forfeited £20. Any person allowing a Conventicle in his house, forfeited £20. Justices of Peace had power to enter and search houses. The severity of this last mentioned statute, however, was much mitigated by the Act of Toleration, (1 William and Mary, c. 18;) and in the year 1812 the Conventicle Act was repealed by the statute 52 George III. c. 155. sec. 1.

CONVE'RGE, v.
CONVE'RGENCY,
CONVE'RGENT,
CONVE'RGING, adj.

Con, and vergere, (from vertere, Vossius,) to turn. To turn together, sc. to the same point; to bear or direct the course to the same point

> Oft in this season, silent from the north
> A blaze of meteors shoots: ensweeping first
> The lower skies, they all at once converge
> High to the crown of heaven.
> Thomson. Autumn.

And by how much the greater is the convergency, or divergency of the rays falling on the pupil, by so much the farther will the point of their reunion be from the retina, either before or behind it.
Bishop Berkeley. A new Theory of Vision, ess. 35.

As birds and fishes are in divers things conformable, so in some sort they are in their eye; to enable it to correspond to all the convergencies and divergencies of the rays, which the variation of each of the mediums may produce.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. ii. note 28.

It was fit that the chrystalline humour of fishes should be very globous, that by the help of their figure, the beams, already refracted by the water, should be yet so much refracted and made convergent, as to paint the images so near as upon the bottom of the eye. Boyle. About the final Causes of Natural Things.

CONVERGE. — CONVERSE.

[These] to mention now no other adjuvant causes, concur to take in as many rays of light, as conveniently can be let in, and made convergent.
Id. The second Part of the Christian Virtuoso.

Reason would make one think, that object should appear, at yet a greater distance, which is seen by converging rays.
Bishop Berkeley. A new Theory of Vision, ess. 29.

> ——— Colours mingle, features join,
> And lines converge: the fainter parts retire;
> The fairer eminent in light advance;
> And every image on its neighbour smiles.
> Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, book iii.

CONVE'RSE, v.
CO'NVERSE, n.
CONVE'RSIVE,
CONVE'RSABLE,
CONVE'RSANT,
CONVERSA'TION,
CONVERSA'TIONED, adj.
CONVE'RSATIVE.

Fr. converser; It. conversare; Sp. conversar; Lat. conversari; (cum aliquo vivere aut versari;) con, and versari, formed from versum, past participle of vertere, to turn.

To turn with, be with, employed or engaged with, to have intercourse or familiarity with, to be familiar or well acquainted with.

To have or hold intercourse or interchange of ideas; and thus, to talk, to discourse together.

If so be that he falle into thy compaignie peradventure withouten thin assent, enquere then as subtilly as thou maist, of his conversation, and of his lif beforne.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Your subiects by our realms may peaceably & securely trauel, & according to their wonted maner, they may friendly cõuerse & exercise mutual traffick together.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Henry IV. Prussian Ambas. vol. i. fol. 159.

But that the said English merchants should bee altogether excluded from all traffike and mutuall conuersation among them, by denouncing and inflicting grieuous penalties of money as well vpon cities as other places. Id. Ib., vol. i. fol. 174.

For in this city, which sometime was the most renowned & glorious city of the Gentiles, & chief of the kingdom of the Persians, shal antichrist be born: & in the cities Bethsaida & Corozaim, must he be brought up & be conversaunt.
Strype. Memorials. A Popish Discourse of Antichrist.

For ghe han herd my conuersacioun sumtyme in the iewerie that I pursuide passyngli the chirche of God and faught aghen it.
Wiclif. Galathies, ch. i.

For ye haue hearde my conuersacion in tyme past, in the Jewes wayes, how that beyond measure I persecuted the congregacyon of God and spoyled it. Bible, 1551.

KENT. I do professe to be no less then I seeme; to serue him truly that will put me in trust, to loue him that is honest, to conuerse with him that is wise and saies little.
Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 287.

> While others are not hind'red from their ends,
> Delighting to conuerse with books or friends,
> And liuing thus retir'd, obtain th' pow'r
> To reigne as kings, of euery sliding houre.
> Beaumont. Of True Liberty.

> How have I then with whom to hold converse
> Save with the creatures which I made, and those
> To me inferiour, infinite descents
> Beneath what other creatures are to thee.
> Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 408.

CONVERSE.

——————————— For with thee
Certain my resolution is to die;
How can I live without thee, how forgoe
Thy sweet converse and love so dearly joyn'd,
To live again in these wilde woods forlorn?
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ix. l. 909.

——————— Who is he (but Ajax) that can vant
The fitting my brest with his armes? and he is conversant
Amongst the first in use of his, and rampiers of the foe
(Slaine near Patroclus) builds to him.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xviii. fol. 257.

This Paul, I say, shall be your example, who after all these things found it [fear] yet a convenient motive, and received great encouragement and eagerness to proceed in his most blessed conversation, even from this fear, lest whilst he preached to others, himself should become a cast-away.
Chillingworth. Sermon 6.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
That his apparent open guilt omitted,
I meane, his conuersation with Shore's wife,
He liu'd from all attainder of suspects.
Shakspeare. Richard III., fol. 190.

FRED. Tell her this,
Till she be better conversation'd
And leave her walking by herself, and whining
To her old melancholy lute, I'le keep
As far from her as the gallows.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Captain, act i. sc. 1.

But finding him (as it should seem) by nature little studious and contemplative, she [his mother] chose rather to endue him with conversative qualities and ornaments of youth, as dancing, fencing and the like. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 209.

Prayer is the wing of our souls, whereby we raise up ourselves above this lower world to the God above, and with whom while we therein converse, we become more and more transformed to his nature. Sharp. Works. Sermon 2. vol. iv.

Such was the sweet converse 'twixt her and you,
As that she holds with her associates now.
Waller. Upon the Death of my Lady Rich.

Your intervals of time to spend
With so conversable a friend,
It would not signify a pin,
Whatever climate you were in.
Swift. The Dean's reason for not Building at Drapier's Hill.

What I pretend by this dedication, is an honour which I do myself to posterity by acquainting them, that I have been conversant with the first persons of the age in which I lived; and thereby perpetuate my prose, when my verses may possibly be forgotten, or obscured by the fame of future poets.
Dryden. Dedication to King Arthur.

So wise and usefull was the conversation of him [Haddon] and his fellow, [Martyr,] the king's professor of Oxford, that a man in those days of great fame and learning, and virtue, who was acquainted with them both, called them, "That golden couple of fathers." Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1550.

There oft thou listen'st to the wild uproar
Of fleets encount'ring, that in whispers low
Ascends the rocky summit, where thou dwell'st;
Remote from man, conversing with the spheres.
Warton. Pleasures of Melancholy.

But when the sun deserts the skies,
And the dull winter evenings rise,
Then for the husband's social pow'r
To form the calm, conversive hour.
Cotton. Vision 7. Marriage.

But conversation, choose what theme you may,
And chiefly when religion leads the way,
Should flow, like waters after summer show'rs,
Not as if rais'd by mere mechanic pow'rs.
Cowper. Conversation.

It would never be imagined that a point of morals or philosophy could be regularly treated in what is called a conversation-piece; or that any thing so unlike the commerce of our world could have taken place between men, that had any use or knowledge of it.
Hurd. Works. On the Uses of Foreign Travel. Dialogue 7.

CONVE'RT, v.
CO'NVERT, n.
CO'NVERT, adj.
CONVE'RTER,
CONVE'RTIBLE,
CONVERTIBI'LITY,
CONVE'RTIBLY,
CO'NVERTITE, n.
CO'NVERSE,
CONVE'RSELY,
CONVE'RSIBLE,
CONVE'RSION.

Fr. and Sp. convertir; It. convertire; Lat. convertere; con, and vertere, to turn.

To turn together, to turn to or towards another, to turn and transform to some common use; to turn or change to some way of acting or thinking.

B. Jonson uses it as equivalent to translate, q. to turn from one language to another.

CO VE

And for this miracle, in conclusion,
And by Custance's mediation,
The king and many other in that place,
Converted was, thanked be Criste's grace.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5166.

——————— [Constance] was so full of faith,
That the greatest of Barbarie
Of hem, whiche vse marchandie
She hath conuerted, as thei come
To hir vpon a tyme in Rome.
Gower. Conf. Am., book ii. fol. 31.

Therefore be ye repentaunt and be ghe conuertid, that ghour synnes be don awei. Wiclif. Dedis of Apostlis, ch. iii.

——— That pleasaunt taste of ioy
That he endured had in Troy,
From sweetes to sower did conuart
When Cresida did thence depart.
Turbervile. The Louer in vtter Dispaire, &c.

Where he alone in desert groues doth worldly cares forsake
Nor praise of people seekes, but leading life as he best can,
He yet remaynes, wyth name conuerted Virbius, twise a man.
Phaer. Æneidos, book vii.

But lette our couetous conuerters choppe and chaunge bread and wyne till we there feele, see, & taste neither bread nor wine, and then will we belieue them, so they bryng for them the word of God. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 474.

Also by reason of the affinitie, whiche it hath with mylke, it is conuertible into blonde and flesh.
Sir Thomas Elyot. The Castel of Helth, book ii.

And after they were brought on their waye by the congregacyon, they passed ouer Phenices and Samaria, declaringe y^e conuersyon of the Gentyls, and they broughte greate ioye unto all the brethern.
Bible, 1551. Acts, ch. xv.

Conversion is the changing or altering of words in a proposition, when the former part (whereof any thing is rehearsed) and the hinder parte (which is rehearsed of the former) are chaunged, the one into the other's place.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 21.

As for abroad, the world can testifie that foure Englishmen haue conuerted to Christianitie, eight nations of Europe.
Camden. Remains. Inhabitants, p. 13.

Wonder not then, what God for you saw good
If I refuse not, but convert as you,
To proper substance.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book v. l. 492.

Which story [Berenice] then presently celebrated by Callimachus, in a most elegant poeme, Catullus more elegantly converted.
Ben Jonson. The Masque of Queenes, fol. 175.

The chaste shall follow the lamb, and the virgins sing there where the mother of God shall reign; and the zealous converters of souls, and labourers in God's vine-yard, shall worship eternally.
Taylor. Sermon 1. part ii.

Nor would I be a convertite so cold,
As not to tell it; if this be too bold,
Pardons are in this market cheaply sold.
Donne. A Letter to the Lady Carey, &c.

PAND. It was my breath that blew this tempest vp,
Vpon your stubbourne vsage of the pope:
But since you are a gentle conuertite,
My tongue shall hush againe this storme of warre.
Shakspeare. King John, fol. 18.

——————— He oft
Frequented thir assemblies, wherso met,
Triumphs of festivals; and to them preach'd
Conversion and repentance, as to souls
In prison, under judgments imminent.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 724.

But now, happy it is with some, whose lot it is, that their conversion-work begins with Christ.
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. part iv. fol. 80.

So that this convertible retrogradous sorites may shut up all.
Hammond. Sermon 7. vol. iv.

The rest, too solid to receive a bent,
Converts to bones; and what was once a vein,
Its former name and nature did retain.
Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses.

Of what other use his mentioning this of Titus here can be, but to shew to the Galatians that what he preach'd contain'd nothing of circumcising the convert Gentiles, it is hard to find.
Locke. Works. Galatians, ch. ii. note 2.

As he is no wise man that doth not fear God, so neither can he be said to fear God that doth not keep his commandments, fearing God and keeping his commandments being indeed equivalent and convertible terms. Bishop Beveridge. Sermon 99.

So that you may rest upon this as a proposition of an eternal, unfailing faith, that there neither is, nor ever was any person remarkably ungrateful, who was not also unsufferably proud; nor convertibly, any one proud, who was not equally ungrateful.
South. Sermons, vol. i. p. 479.

Hence the distance of meridians at two places, measured upon the equator, or the difference of longitude, being known, it is easy to compute how much the hours at one place precede the same hours at the other, by allowing four minutes of time for each degree of that distance; and conversely, the difference of time being given, the difference of longitude is computed by allowing one degree for each four minutes of time, and proportionably in greater or lesser differences.
Maclaurin. Sir Isaac Newton. Philosophical Dis. book iii. ch. i.

"Now, whether I should beforehand, Swear he robb'd me?" "I understand."
"Or bring my action of conversion
And trover for my goods?"
Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 3.

——————— If he were here,
His presence would convert this range of oaks
To stately columns; those gay liv'ried flow'rs
To troops of gallant ladies; and yon deer,
That jut their antlers forth in sportive fray,
To armed knights at joust or tournament.
Mason. Elfrida.

For want of this previous culture, it hath happened, that when, by the unwearied labour of the missionary, numbers of these savages have been baptized into the faith, such converts have never long preserved, nor were they able to propagate among their tribes, the Christianity they had been taught; but successive missions have found, the work was ever to begin anew.
Warburton. Works. Sermon 20. vol. x.

For never yet might any monarch dare,
Who liv'd to truth, and breath'd a Christian air,
Pretend that Christ (who came, we all agree,
To bless his people, and to set them free)
To make a convert ever one law gave,
By which converters made him first a slave.
Churchill. Gotham, book i.

So that the law, and the opinion of the judge, are not always convertible terms, or one and the same thing; since it sometimes may happen that the judge may mistake the law.
Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. i. p. 71.

By the ancient usages which prevailed in that kingdom, the general circulation of property, and in particular the mutual convertibility of land into money, and of money into land had always been a matter of difficulty.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Saint Paul was called miraculously; and by the glorious manifestation of Christ himself, and he was instructed by the same Divine master; such will perhaps be the conversion and illumination of the Jews.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. ii. p. 14.

It is not true (says he,) but the converse of the proposition is true in the utmost latitude, viz. that they met with molestation from the civil power, because their assemblies were nocturnal.
Warburton. Preface to Edition of 1758.

CO'NVEX, adj. Co'NVEX, n. CONVE'XED, adj. CONVE'XEDLY, CONVE'XITY, CONVE'XLY, CONVE'XO-CONCAVE. Fr. convex; It. and Sp. convexo; Lat. convexus; con, and vehere, to carry. Convexum est id quod supra concavum convehitur. See CONCAVE.

The exterior of a bowl is the convex or outbowed side; the interior is the concave.

The convex or out-bowed side of a vessell will hold nothing; it must be the hollow and depressed part that is capable of any liquor. Hall. An Holy Panegyricke.

And only looking on the moon, might occasion, as it were by a proportion converse, the thought of a burning concave. The moon being a convex, by which the sun-beams are scattered, and the nocturnal air, thereby rendered the more cool.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book ii. ch. vi.

Notwithstanding, to speak strictly, in their natural figure they [dolphins] are straight, nor have their spine convexed, or more considerably embowed then sharks, porposes, whales, and other cetaceous animals. Sir Thomas Brown, book v. ch. ii.

For though they be drawn repandous, or convexedly crooked in one piece, yet the dolphin that carrieth Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed in another. Id. Ib.

Let it be inquired what is the terme of levitie, for sure their meaning (who made the centre of the earth, the centre of gravitie) is not that the ultimate convexity of heaven should be the stint and limits of levitie.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, book v.

So to the convex-glass embody'd run,
Drawn to a point, the glories of the sun;
At once the gathering beams intensely glow,
And through the strengthen'd circle fiercely flow.
Pitt. On the King's Return.

She found the polish'd glass, whose small convex
Enlarges to ten millions of degrees
The mite, invisible else, of Nature's hand
Least animal. J. Philips. Cider, book i.

Who would part with these solid and substantial blessings for the little fantastical pleasantness of a smooth uniform convexity and rotundity of a globe. Bentley. Sermon 8.

These are the phenomena of thick convexo-concave plates of glass which are every where of the same thickness. Newton.

Oh, no. To distant climes, a dreary scene,
Where half the convex world intrudes between,
Through torrid tracts with fainting steps they go,
Where wild Altama murmurs to their woe.
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

The bill [of the crow] is strong and thick; and the upper mandible convex. Pennant. Zoology. The Crow.

For this daring assertion he made way by the intermediate paragraphs; in which he observes, that the convexity of a semi-ellipsis may be increased at will to any degree that strength may require; which is, that an elliptical arch may be made less elliptical, to be made less weak.
Johnson. Plans for Blackfriars Bridge. Letter 3.

Buckler fleshy above, formed convexly; flat beneath.
Pennant. Zoology. The Slug.

CONVE'Y, v. CONVE'YANCE, CONVE'YANCER, CONVE'YER. Lat. convehere, (comportari vehiculis, Gesner,) con, and vehere, to carry.

To carry; to remove by carriage, to transmit or transfer by carriage; and, generally, to bring or bear, to import, export, or transport; to introduce or import, to conduce or conduct; and also applied to secret or private removal of any thing; and thus, to thieve, to steal; to remove by sleight of hand; to play any juggling trick.

CONVEY.

And trewely, as to my jugement,
Me thinketh it a thing impertinent,
Save that he wol conveyen his nature.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale. Prologue, v. 7931.

——— And tho began to blowe
Wynde meuable fro the londe
And thus the mighty God's honde
Hir hath conueighed, and defended.
Gower. Conf. Am., book ii. fol. 34.

And albeit, I do herein take vpon me no more, but to be as a poore meane man, or a simple person, whose charge were to bee a lodesman, to conveigh some noble princes, into a straunge lande, where she was neuer before, leauinge the entertayning, the enriching, and decking of hir, to such as were of substance, and furniture according.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike. The Epistle, A. 3.

This yere the citizens of Lõdon leuied in the citee two fiftenes, for the conueighaunce of more water to the citee.
Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1547.

So that it is no new inuention that they now do, but euen an olde practice though they haue done theyr bõsie care to hide the sciẽce, that their conueyaunce should not be espyed.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 363.

Which thing hys deuice and conueiance wel declareth, although he forbere expressely to saye so farre.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 307.

What say ye of this crafty cõueyer? would he spare, suppose ye to alleage & to wrest other doctours pestilently, which feareth not for to iugle wyth y^e^ Holy Scripture of God.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 128.

Mark this conueiance for your learning. If this were not knauerye, where shal we find knauerye. Yet was this gentleman conueyer admytted a saynt, because he builded a college at Rippon.
Bale. Votaries, part i. p. 54.

Shouldst thou but dreame, what marriage were,
Thou would'st not liue a maid:
One hearte of two, two soules to one
By wedlock is conuaid.
Warner. Albion's England, book v. ch. xxiv.

The godly ill, the wicked good may have,
And both may be whilst here, pleas'd or annoy'd:
But as they are, all make what they receive,
Not reale of itselfe but as imploy'd;
Those temporal treasures monuments do leave,
As by a blessing, or a curse convoyd.
Stirling. Dooms-day. The first Houre.

I had the grace to vse my tearmes, and place them fit,
My roling rhetoricke stood my clients oft instead:
No fine conueyance past the compasse of my head.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 130.

And all this peace and glory shall arise from the subversion of Rome and Antichrist, and his adherents, so evidently described in the 14th, and 18th, and the 19th of the Revelation, that the very Jesuites themselues Ribera and Vegas cannot possibly devise any jugling conveyance how to shift it off.
Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 475.

That all sheriffs, justices of the peace, &c. within one hundred and fifty miles of York, make stay of all arms and ammunition carrying to York, and apprehend the conveyers.
Whitelock. Memoirs. Charles I. Anno 1642.

Had it been so, we should naturally have betaken ourselves to prayer, and breathed out our desires in that form, wherein they are most properly conveyed. Atterbury. Sermon I. vol. i.

For, what is become of that tradition? if it be lost, then it follows that tradition is no infallible way of conveyance; and therefore we have no reason to adhear to a written word.
Stillingfleet. Sermon 2. vol. iv.

Honest Coupler the conveniencer [conveyancer] says he can distinguish upon sight of the parties, before they have opened any point of their business, which of the two has the daughter to sell.
Tatler, No. 199.

But that which Mr. Locke, according to his usual modesty, would not determine, was whether "Rest be any more a privation than motion:" in those organs of the body which are the immediate conveyers of all our ideas.
Law. Enquiry. Of Space, ch. i.

While evening, veil'd in shadows brown, CON
Puts her matron-mantle on,
And mists in spreading streams convey CO
More fresh the fumes of new-shorn hay; VICI
Then Goddess, guide my pilgrim feet.
Warton. On the Approach of Summer. Ode 11.

Proverbial speeches; before the general use of recording abstract names and things by writing, being the best and safest conveyance of the memory of events to posterity.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book vi. sec. 5.

CONVEYANCE, in Law, a deed or instrument by which lands, &c. are made over by one person to another. All deeds by which lands may be Conveyed or charged derive their effect either from the Common Law, or from the Statute of Uses. Of those which derive their effect from the Common Law, some may be called original or primary, which are those by means whereof the estate is originally created; others are derivative or secondary, whereby an estate already created is enlarged, transferred, or extinguished; there is a third class also, which are used not to Convey but to charge or incumber lands, and to discharge them again. The original Conveyances, deriving their effect from the Common Law, are a feoffment, a gift, a grant, a lease, an exchange, a partition. The derivative Conveyances are a release, a confirmation, a surrender, an assignment, a defeazance. Deeds which operate to charge or discharge lands, are a bond, a recognizance, a defeazance or a bond. A Conveyance cannot be fraudulent in part, and good as to the rest; for if void in part it is void entirely, as it cannot be divided. Every person, unless labouring under legal incapacity, who has a present estate or interest in lands, in remainder or reversion, may Convey it away by grant; because estates in remainder or reversion consist in right only; but a bare right or possibility cannot be granted. Persons attainted of treason, felony, and præmunire, are incapable of Conveying from the time of the offence committed, provided attainder follow. Corporations, religious, or others, may purchase lands; but unless they have a licence to hold in mortmain they cannot retain such purchase. Idiots and persons of non sane memory, infants and persons under duress, are not totally disabled to purchase or Convey, but only sub modo; their purchases or Conveyances being voidable not void. A femme coverte may purchase an estate without the consent of her husband, and the Conveyance is good, but under certain circumstances may be avoided. A purchase made by an alien born, unless it be a lease of a house for convenience of merchandise, is immediately forfeited to the King. Papists and persons professing the Popish religion, and neglecting to take the oath prescribed by the 18th George III. c. 60, within the time limited for that purpose, are by statute 11 and 12 William III. c. 4, disabled from purchasing any lands, rents, or hereditaments; and all estates made to their use or in trust for them are void.

A CONVEYANCER, in Law, is a person employed to draw or prepare Conveyances and deeds, in expectation of fee or reward. They may be either called to the bar or not; by the 55th George III. c. 184, they are required to take out an annual certificate.

CO'NVICIATE, CO'NVICIOUS. } Fr. convicieux; Lat. convicior, atum; (a voce est. Vossius.)

"Convicium seems to be the clamour of many, or of one repeated, as if it were convocium." Gesner.

To clamour, to raise a clamour or outcry; to rail, to revile, to reproach.

I recollected myself and humbly desired of the Lords two things: "One, that they would expect proof, before they gave up their belief to these loud, but loose assertions; especially since it is an easy thing for men so resolved, to conviciate, instead of accusing."
State Trials. Trial of Archbishop Laud.

The queene's majesty commaundeth all maner her subjects to forbeare all vaine contentious disputations in matters of religion, and not to use in despite or rebuke of any person these convicious words, papist, or papistical, heretike, scismatike, or sacramentarie, or any such like words of reproche.
Queen Elizabeth. Injunctions, &c. Anno 1559.

CONVICINITY, Lat. con, and vicinus, from vicus, which Vossius believes is from the Gr. οἶκ-ος, a house, home or dwelling-place.

The nearness or neighbourhood.

The bishop having first stated the convicinity and contiguity of the two parishes. Warton. History of Keddington, p. 18.

CONVI'CT, v. CONVI'CT, adj. CONVI'CT, n. CONVI'CTION, CONVI'CTIVE, CONVI'CTIVELY. Lat. convincere, -ctum. (See CONVINCE.) Con, and vinc-ere, which Vossius thinks may be formed from νίκ-ειν, by a transposition of the two first letters, and prefixing v.

To subdue, to overpower, to conquer, literally, and also metaphorically, sc. in argument, and thus, to confute or refute;—also, upon trial, and thus, to prove or find guilty, to adjudge or sentence to be guilty.

At this sayde courte these judgys punysshed sore baylyes and other offycers that before hym were convycte for dyuerse trespacys, and specyallye for takynge of merceamentys otherwise then the lawe them commaundyde. Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1258.

Because that of nature we are euil, therefore we both thinke and do euil and are vnder vengeaūce vnder the law, conuict to eternal damnation by the law, and are contrary to the will of God in all our will, and in all thynges consent to the will of the fende.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 380.

Craving neither gold nor silver, which long agoe we might not haue, nor so much as once see; so denied it was us, as if we had been convicted to have undertaken so many toilefull paines and perels even against the state and commonweale.
Holland. Ammianus. Constantius and Julianus, fol. 91.

Laws were also given for regulating the courts of justice. No man was to be judged convict of any offence, small or great, not of murther, nor of idolatry itself, without two or three witnesses of the fact. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iv. ch. viii.

Attendance none shall need, nor train, where none
Are to behold the judgment, but the judg'd,
Those two; the third best absent is condemned,
Convict by flight, and rebel to all law:
Conviction to the serpent none belongs.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book 10. l. 83.

I answer: yet might it be great wisdom to forsake a church not acknowledged to want nothing necessary to salvation, but accused and convicted of many damnable errors; certainly damnable to them, who were convicted of them, had they still persisted in them after their conviction; though perhaps pardonable (which is all that is acknowledged) to such as ignorantly continued in them.
Chillingworth. Rel. of Prot. Church, ch. vi. part i.

And thus we should be disfurnish't of the best and most convictive argument, that we have, to prove that a principle of exactest wisdom hath made and ordered all things.
Glanville. Preexistence of Souls. The fifth Pillar.

When I speak of demonstrating there is a God, I would not be suspected of so much vanity and ostentation, as to be thought I mean to bring no arguments but such as are so convictive that a man's understanding shall be forced to confesse that it is impossible to be otherwise then I have concluded.
H. More. An Antidote against Atheism, ch. ii. fol. 10.

The truth of the gospel had clearly shined in the simplicity thereof, and so convictively against all the follies and impostures of the former ages. H. More. Expos. Seven Ch. p. 141.

Can any thing be said in excuse for such a wretch, as being convicted of grievous crimes, and thereupon justly sentenced to suffer death for them, yet through the powerful intercession of the prince with his father, hath not only a pardon offered him, but preferment and honour, and the favour of his sovereign; doth yet, nevertheless, stand out against these overtures, and despiseth these undeserued bounties, and chuseth rather to die miserably, than to live happily. Sharp. Works. Sermon 5. vol. ii.

Much she reproach'd, and many things she said,
To cure the madness of th' unhappy maid
In vain: for Myrrha stood convict of ill;
Her reason vanquish'd, but unchang'd her will.
Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses. Cinyras and Myrrha, book 10.

Its garrison [being] in great measure unarmed, it was impossible that it could have opposed our force, or that its half-starved inhabitants, most of whom are convicts banished thither from other parts, could have had any other thoughts than that of submitting. Anson. Voyage round the World, book ii. ch. xiv.

And, when a friend in kindness tries
To show you where your error lies,
Conviction does but more incense,
Perverseness is your whole defence.
Swift. To Stella, 1720.

These sort of things are indeed very difficult to express, and not easie to be conceived but by very attentive minds: but to such as can and will attend, nothing (I think) is more demonstrably convictive. Clarke. On the Attributes, p. 466.

When he had seen him led back to his dungeon, and afterwards heard the convict-bell tolling the hour of his execution, if he has had any feeling about him, he must have been struck with all this dismal solemnity. Gilpin. Sermon 10. vol. i.

It is a light shining out of a dark place, until the day-dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts; that is, till a long series of events (yet in the womb of time) shall arise, to give testimony, by degrees, till the whole evidence concludes in one unclouded blaze of conviction.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, book ix. ch. vi.

But if the jury find him [the prisoner] guilty, he is then said to be convicted of the crime whereof he is indicted. Which conviction may accrue two ways: either by his confessing the offence and pleading guilty; or by his being found so by the verdict of his country. Blackstone. Commentaries, book iv. ch. xxvii.

CONVICT, in Common Law, one who is found guilty of an Offence by verdict of a Jury. Conviction of Felony and other crimes disqualifies a man from being a juror, witness, &c.

CONVI'NCE, v. CONVI'NCEMENT, CONVI'NCER, CONVI'NCIBLE, CONVI'NCINGLY. Lat. convincere. See CONVICT, above. Used as to convict is; and by Shakspeare, simply, to prove.

Whom he no sooner sawe
(I meane the Thracian prince)
But streight therewith his fancies fume
All reason did conuince.
Gascoigne. The Fable of Philomela.

With a texte of Holy Scripture rightly alleged, he conuinced the texte of Scripture whiche Satan had falsely cyted, as if one shoulde have dryeuen out one nayle with another in a bourde.
Udall. Luke, ch. iii.

A man may easily promise convincing, infallible demonstrations, but where it comes to tryall, it is not so easy a matter to make them appear so to be. Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 500.

You wonder how they that have seen the king set upon his throne, at a session of parliament (sub aureo et serico Cœlo, under a golden and silken heaven) under a canopy of state, should so much as make a question whether the majesty resided in him, or in the parliament? They are certainly hard of belief, whom so lucid an argument, coming down from heaven, cannot convince.
Milton. Defence of the People of England, &c.

CONVINCE. — CONVIVE.

Others, which is their courtesy, confess that wit and parts may do much to make that seem true, which is not, (as was objected to Socrates by them who could not resist his efficacy, that he ever made the worst cause seem the better,) and thus thinking themselves discharg'd of the difficulty, love not to wade further into the fear of a convincement.

Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

For the Divine light now was only a convincer of his miscarriages, but administered nothing of the divine love and power, as it does to them that are obedient and sincere followers of its precepts, and therefore Adam could no more endure the presence of it then sore eyes the sun or candle light.

More. Moral Cabbala, fol. 172.

Upon what uncertainties, and also convincible falsities they often erected such emblems, we have elsewhere delivered.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. ix.

But of this I have spoke so fully and convincingly in the second book of my Antidote, that it will be but a needless repetition to proceed any further on this subject.

More. Immortality of the Soul, book i. ch. xii. fol. 48.

They doubted the truth of his resurrection; and therefore he stayed to give them such convincing proofs, and assurances of it, as might enable them to convince others, and become authentic witnesses of that great matter of fact, upon which, as upon a chief corner stone, the whole frame of his religion is to be founded.

Atterbury. Sermon 7. vol. iii.

All they [wise men] desire to see the several parts of it so far cleared up, and made consistent with each other, and, upon the whole, to discover such evident marks of a superior wisdom, power, and goodness in the frame and texture of it, as may convince them that it is truly divine, and worthy of the Supreme mind, to whom we ascribe it.

Hurd. Works. Sermon 2. vol. vi.

CONVI'VE, v. Co'NVIVE, n. CONVI'VAL, CONVI'VIAL, CONVIVIA'LITY.

"This word," says Steevens, "is not peculiar to Shakspeare. I find it several times used in the History of Helyas Knight of the Swanne, b. l. no date."

Lat. convivere; simul vivere, et cibum una capere. Gesner. (Con, and vivere, to live.) Bene majores accubationem epularem amicorum, quia vitæ conjunctionem haberet, convivium nominarent; melius, &c. Cicero, De Senect. See the Quotation from Denham.

To live together, to feed, to feast together; to provide or partake of a festal, social meal, or compotation, q. v.

A feast, which though with pleasures complement
The ravish'd convives tongues it courted; yet
Unto the palates of their souls it sent
More courteous salutes.

Beaumont. Psyche, can. 10. st. 211.

AGA. First all your peers of Greece go to my tent,
There in full convive you.

Shakspeare. Troylus and Cressida, fol. 99.

And though this may only seem an adventure of northern stomachs, yet as Herodotus tells us, in the hotter clime of Persia, the same was a convival dish, [horse flesh] and solemnly eaten at the feasts of their nativities.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xxv.

When Quæstor, to the Gods, in public calls
I was the first who set up festivals.
Not with high tastes our appetites did force,
But fill'd with conversation and discourse;
Which feasts convivial meetings we did name.

Denham. Of Old Age. The third Part.

While in smooth dance the light-wing'd Hours
Led round his lyre its patron powers,
Kind laughter and convivial joy.

Akenside. Ode 13. book i.

These extemporaneous entertainments were often productive of greater conviviality than more formal and premeditated invitations.

Malone. Life of Sir Joshua Reynolds, li.

CONVO'KE, v. Co'NVOCATE, v. CONVOCA'TION.

Lat. convocare, to call together; (con, and vocare, to call; of unsettled Etymology.)

To call, to summon together; to convene or assemble by calling.

But euen as this primacy, for an order of synods & councils among us, was by man deuised; so was the primacy of Rome by a man ordered & invented at such time as a councel general of al Christian nations was first convocate and assembled.

Strype. Memorials. Starky to Pole.

At the lawfull denouncement and request of our universall clergy in the seyd conuocation, we proceded against him according to the lawe (God to witnes) with all the fauer possible.

State Trials. Trial of Sir John Oldcastle.

And it will not be sufficient to say they were not lawful councils: for they were convened by that authority, which all the world knows did at that time convocate councils.

Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 6.

Returning the first of Queen Elizabeth, he [Alexander Nowell] was made dean of St. Paul's;, and for his meek spirit and deep learning, prudence and piety, the then parliament and conuocation both chose, enjoyned, and trusted him, to be the man to make a catechisme for public use, such a one as shoulde stand as a rule of faith and manners to their posterity.

Fuller. Worthies. Lancashire.

And yet is there no law to condemn vs, (as far as I know,) and so one of the conuocation-house saide this week to Doctour Weston.

Fox. Martyrs. Hooper's Letters to the Bishop of St. David's.

At this time, the cardinal by his power legatine, dissolved his convocation at Pauls, convoked by the Archbishop of Canterbury, calling him and all the clergy to the convocation at Westminster.

Baker. Henry VIII. Anno 1523.

For extraordinary occasions they are convoked by a council called the the Gecommitteer de Readen, or the commissioned counsellors, who are properly a council of state of the provinces, composed of several deputies.

Sir William Temple. On the United Provinces, ch. ii.

——— The hall scarce kept awake
The convocation gap'd, but could not speak.

Pope. The Dunciad, book iv. l. 610.

CONVOCATION, an Assembly of the Clergy of the Church of England, by their Representatives, for the purpose of consulting on Ecclesiastical matters. It is composed of an Upper and Lower House. In the Upper House sit the Archbishops and Bishops, and in the Lower House, the inferior Clergy, who are represented by their Proctors, in all one hundred and forty-four Members. Each House chooses its Prolocutor or Speaker, and that of the Lower House is presented to the Archbishops and Bishops of the Upper House: his duty is to take care that the Members attend, to collect their debates and votes, and to carry them to the Upper House.

Formerly the Lower House of Convocation was convened by two distinct writs. The first was the Parliamentary or King's writ, directed to the Bishops of every Diocese, and summoning them to Parliament; which writ contained a clause, requiring that each Chapter should send one of their body, and the Clergy of each Diocese two Proctors, to represent them in Parliament. Hence some writers have imagined that both the Clergy and the Laity sat together in Parliament until the reign of Henry VIII., when the former fell under a præmunire by submitting to Cardinal Wolsey's Legatine power, and forfeited their seats.

Consti tion-

It is clear that the Lower House of Convocation apprehended that they had a right to seats in Parliament, and therefore they petitioned the Upper House to intercede with King Edward VI. and the Protector for the restoration of that right. A similar application was made toward the close of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and again in that of James I., but without success. The second writ, by which the Clergy were assembled together, was called the Provincial writ. By the first writ they were merely a State Convention, (the duty of which was to consult concerning their Civil rights, and to grant a portion of their estates towards the support of the Government,) and not an Ecclesiastical Synod. The Clergy, however, not considering themselves obliged to obey this lay summons, Archbishop Winchelsea prevailed with Edward II. to discharge them from it; and from that time, when the King issued his Parliamentary writ to the Bishops, he sent another to the Archbishops, to summon all their Provincial Bishops to the Convocation. This second writ was designed to secure their obedience to the former, and to make the Assembly more Canonical, as meeting by virtue of a summons from the Archbishops.

The two Houses are composed of a Convocation from each Province, distinct and independent on each other, (Christian's Note on Blackstone, i. 280.) All Deans and Archdeacons are Members of the Convocation of their Province. The Precentor of St. David's, which Chapter has no Dean, supplies the place of that officer: each Chapter sends one Proctor or Representative, and the Parochial Clergy in each Diocese of Canterbury two Proctors; but, on account of the small number of Dioceses in the Province of York, each Archdeaconry elects two Proctors. In York, the Convocation consists of only one House; but in Canterbury there are two Houses, of which the twenty-two Bishops form the Upper House. (Blackstone's Comm. i. p. 279.) By the Statute 8 Henry VI. c. 1, the Clergy, in their attendance on the Convocation, have the same privilege in freedom from arrest, as is enjoyed by the Members of the House of Commons, in their attendance on Parliament.

The Clergy, when assembled in Convocation, had the power of giving away their own money, and taxing themselves. This power they continued to exercise from the Reformation until the Act 13 Car. II. c. 4, was passed, when they gave their last subsidy: it being then judged more advantageous to continue the taxing of them by a land and poll-tax, in the same manner as had been practised in the time of the Long Parliament, during the Civil Wars. And in the year 1664, by a private agreement between Archbishop Sheldon and the Lord Chancellor Clarendon, and others of the King's Ministers, it was concluded that the Clergy should silently wave the privilege of taxing their own body, and permit themselves to be included in the money-bills prepared by the House of Commons, in consideration of their being in future allowed to vote as freeholders, in the election of Knights of the Shire, or County Members, which privilege they had not before enjoyed.

The power of Convocation is limited both by Common and Statute Law. A Convocation may make Canons or Constitutions, which shall be obligatory on the Clergy, because these are present either by representation or in person; but such Canons do not bind the Laity without an Act of Parliament. And by the Act of 25 Henry VIII. c. 19, (which has been determined to be declaratory of the old Common Law of England) the Convocation cannot make any Canons, Constitutions, or Ordinances, without the King's License: nor, when permitted to make any, can they put them into execution, but under the following restrictions; viz. 1. such Canons must not be contrariant or repugnant to the King's Prerogative Royal; 2. they must not contradict any statute or the Common Law; and 3. they must not alter any known custom of the Realm.

The Convocation has the power of examining and censuring all heretical and schismatical books and persons, &c.: but an Appeal lies from it to the King in Chancery, or to his delegates. Although the Convocation continues to meet on the second day of every session of Parliament, yet this Assembly, for upwards of a century, has not been permitted to transact any business, in consequence of the unhappy disputes which were carried on at one time with great acrimony, between the High and Low Church parties.

These disputes commenced not many years after the Revolution of 1688. In 1697 appeared an anonymous Pamphlet, entitled A Letter to a Convocation man, concerning the Rights, Powers, and Privileges of that Body; to which Dr. (afterwards Archbishop) Wake in the same year published a reply, in The Authority of Christian Princes over their Ecclesiastical Synods asserted, with particular respect to the Convocations of the Clergy of the Realm and Church of England. This being attacked, Dr. Wake vindicated himself in An Appeal to all true Members of the Church of England, 1698, 8vo. In 1700 the celebrated Dr. Atterbury entered into this dispute with great vigour and resolution, and published The Rights, Powers, and Privileges of an English Convocation stated and defended, in reply to Dr. Wake's book. The controversy now grew warm, and several eminent writers engaged in it: but the most considerable and decisive answer to Atterbury was Dr. Wake's large work, entitled The State of the Church and Clergy of England in their Councils, Synods, Convocations, and other public Assemblies, historically deduced from the Conversion of the Saxons to the present time, 1703, in folio. This elaborate Treatise was esteemed not only a full and sufficient answer to Atterbury, but decisive with regard to the controversy in general. (Biographia Britannica, art. Wake and Atterbury; Atterbury's Life in vol. v. of his Correspondence by Nichols.)

Towards the close of the reign of Queen Anne, the attention of the Convocation was, by a Royal license, directed to investigate the excessive growth of infidelity and heresy, as well as of other abuses; in order that necessary measures might be taken for a reformation. The Prolocutor of the Lower House, Dr. Atterbury, undertook to draw up an account to be delivered to the Queen, which he did, with severe reflections on the Administration. The House of Bishops ordered another representation to be drawn in more general and modest terms. But neither the one nor the other met with the approbation of both parties. In the same year (1714) the revival of Arian tenets was attempted by Mr. Whiston, for which he was expelled from the University of Cambridge. His vindication he dedicated to the Convocation itself. A censure was passed, but remained unnoticed by the Queen. In the same year, the Lower House of Convocation complained of the publication of Dr. Samuel Clarke's Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity; an extract from which was subsequently laid before the Bishops by that House. Dr. Clarke addressed to them, first, an exculpatory paper, and secondly, an explanation; which being accepted by the Bishops, no further proceedings were had in the Upper House. But the Lower House not being satisfied with it, passed a Resolution, that the paper subscribed by Dr. Clarke, and communicated to them by the Bishops, did not contain any recantation of the heretical assertions, and offensive passages complained of in their representation, and afterwards produced in their extract; and that it did give such satisfaction for the great scandal occasioned thereby, as ought to put a stop to any further examination and censure thereof. Here the affair terminated. (For a full and authentic account of which see An Apology for Dr. Clarke, containing an account of late Proceedings in Convocation, upon his Writings concerning the Trinity, London, 1714, 8vo.)

CONVOCATION. — CONVOLVE.

The contentions, between the two factions, in the Convocation were renewed in the reign of George I. Shortly after the suppression of the rebellion of 1715, a very violent literary controversy took place, which has been distinguished by the name of the "Bangorian Controversy," as it originated in two publications by Dr. Hoadley, who had then recently been advanced to the Bishopric of Bangor. The first of these Pamphlets was entitled A Preservative against the Principles and Practices of the Non-jurors; which, shortly after, was followed by a Sermon on The Nature of the Kingdom of Christ, which he had preached before the King. Dr. Snape, Master of Eton College, replied to the Sermon, and the Convocation appointed a Committee to examine the Bishop's two performances. The representation of this Committee conveyed a severe censure on the opinions of Dr. Hoadley; and, as before, the disputes in Convocation became very violent. Government soon stopped the proceedings by a prorogation, which, however, did not put an end to the controversy. Drs. Snape and Sherlock were removed from the office of King's Chaplains; and since the year 1717 the Convocation has not been permitted to transact business. (Smollet's History of England, book ii. ch. ii.; Brewster's Secular Essay, p. 56—59.) It has continued to be regularly summoned to meet, but is as regularly adjourned on the day of meeting. (For other particulars relative to this Assembly, see Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, title Convocation.)

CO'NVOLVE, n. / CONVOLU'TED, / CONVOLU'TION. } Lat. convolvere, to roll together; con, and volvere, to roll; which Tooke thinks is from the A. S. wealow-ian.

To roll, enfold, or entwine together; to join or unite by rolling together.

Each of these least, and almost invisible glands, consisteth of the same sort of convolved fibers of vessels. Their convolution being contrived, for the better separation of the several parts of the blood. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book i. ch. v.

——— Then Satan first knew pain
And writh'd him to and fro convolv'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 328.

——— He wreath'd him to and fro
Convolv'd, yet thus distress'd, intrepid bore
His hilts aloft, and guarded well his head.
Somervile. Hobbinol.

From which, by numerous convolutions wound
Wrapt with th' attending nerve, and twisted round
The complicated knots and kernels rise,
Of various figures, and of various size.
Blackmore. The Creation, book vi.

The frantic crowd as if with wine possest,
And the strong spirit of the flaming grape,
To and fro reel, and stagger to and fro,
In dithyrambic measures, wild convolv'd.
Thomson. Coresus and Callirhoe.

Beaks recurved and convoluted like a ram's horn.
Pennant. British Zoology. Chama.

To these adverse, the lunar sects dissent,
With convolution of opposed bent,
From west to east by equal influence tend
And towards the moon's attractive crescence bend.
Brookes. Universal Beauty, book iii. l. 320.

CONVOLVOLUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Convolvoli. Generic character: corolla bell-shaped, folded; stigmas two; capsule two or three-celled, two-seeded.

Of this beautiful genus two hundred and thirty species have been described. They are widely disseminated, extending from Siberia to the southern part of America. C. sepium, arvensis, and soldanella, are natives of England; the species so generally cultivated in gardens by the name of C. minor, is C. tricolor, native of Barbary, and that called C. major, is C. purpureus, a native of America.

C. scammonia, native of the Levant, produces the drug called Scammony; and C. jalapa, native of America, the Jalap.

CONVO'Y, v. / CO'NVOY, n. } Fr. convoyer, is merely to convey. As now used

CONVO'YING, n. / CO'NVOY-SHIPS. } To accompany in the convey-ance; as a guide, protection or defence; and thus, to conduct, to protect, to guard, to defend.

It was concluded, perceiuing the weknesse of their shippes and the danger of the Englishmen, that they would send their shippes emptie with souldiers to conuey them, either to Siuill or Lisbon, where they could first arriue, with aduice vnto his maiestie of all that had past, and that he would giue order to fetch the siluer with good and safe conuoy.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Spanish prizes taken, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 181.

Whilst angels him convoy, and saints attend
(The heavens as smoke all fled before his face)
Christ through the clouds with glory doth descend
With maiestie and terrour, power and grace.
Stirling. Dooms-day. The third Houre.

They requested Queen Elizabeth, that if the Duke of Anjou should resolve to take his journey by sea into Poland, he might have her promise for his safe passage through the British seas. Which she not onely willingly granted, but also offered her fleet to convoy him. Camden. Elizabeth. Anno 1573.

I shall likewise assay those wily arbitresses [i. e. the affections and desires] who in most men have, as was heard, the sole ushering of truth and falsehood between the sense and the soul, with what loyalty they will use me in convoying this truth of my understanding. Milton. Reason of Church Government.

The Milecians had a fleet, which upon covenant the people of Rome were to make use of upon any occasion at sea. Verres demanded of them one of those ships to attend him as a convoy to Myndus. Usher. Annals. Anno Mundi 3925.

LAER. My necessaries are imbark't; farewell:
And sister, as the winds giue benefit,
And conuoy is assistant; doe not sleepe,
But let me heare from you.
Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 155.

Therefore, when any favour'd of high Jove
Chances to pass through this advent'rous glade
Swift as the sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n, to give him safe convoy.
Milton. Comus, l. 81.

I aim at the convoying of you up to your Eton.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 453.

VOY. — IN-SE.

I found here [at Bahia] above thirty great ships from Europe, with two of the king of Portugal's ships of war for their convoy.
Dampier. Voyage. To New Holland, Anno 1699.

But now, had not God set a very peculiar value upon the service paid him in his temple, surely he would not have thus (as it were) made himself his people's convoy, and exerted a supernatural work to secure them in their passage to it.
South. Sermon 8. vol. i.

Thus as convoy-ships either accompany or should accompany their merchants till they may prosecute the rest of their voyage without danger, so Philostratus has brought me thus far on my way, and I can now sail on without him.
Dryden. A Parallel of Poetry and Painting.

But if you are more inclined to defer your voyage till your recovery shall be more confirmed, let me entreat you to be very careful in choosing a safe ship; and that you would neither sail at an improper season nor without convoy.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Tiro, book vi. let. 17.

CONUS, in Zoology, a genus of the class Gasteropoda, order Pectinibranchia, family Convoluta. Generic character: shell turbinated or inversely conical, convolute; aperture longitudinal, narrow, without teeth, effuse at the base.

Type, C. marmoratus.

There is no genus of univalve shells which contains more beautiful or more valuable species than this. The regularity of their form, the polish of the surface, the elegance and variety of the colours and markings, altogether render them the most ornamental and valuable acquisitions to Conchological cabinets; some of them are of very high price, and of extreme rarity. Scarcely any genus is composed of a greater number of species, nearly two hundred recent ones having been described, besides many fossil. They are inhabitants of the seas of warm climates.

Lamarck, An. sans Vert. vi. 440; Sowerby, Gen. of Shells.

CONVU'LSE, CONVU'LSION, CONVU'LSIVE. } Lat. convellere, vulsum, (con, and vellere, to tear; of unsettled Etymology.)

To tear or rend. to pull or pluck together, to draw together, sharply, violently. Cotgrave calls Convulsion; a plucking up or shrinking of the sinews, as in the cramp. It is also applied to any irregular violent motion; as, to a commotion in the State.

For then, th' unmeasurable earth had not so thicke beene gnawne, (In death's convulsions) by our friends.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xix. fol. 268.

——— Those two massive pillars
With horrible convulsion to and fro,
He tugg'd, he shook, till down they came and drew
The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder
Upon the heads of all who sat beneath.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, p. 129.

Especially if a man brings himself into the case, and views himself in his own imagination as rendered scandalous by calumniators and liers; stript by thieves; ruined in his fortunes and undone by knaves; struggling to no purpose; convulsed and agonizing under the knife of some truculent ruffian.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, p. 141.

A general shout succeeds, as when on high
Exploded thunder rends the vaulted sky;
A short convulsion shakes the solid shore,
And rocks th' adjacent deep, unmov'd before.
Hughes. The Triumph of Peace.

'Tis said with ease, but, oh, how hardly try'd!
By haughty souls to human honour ty'd!
O sharp convulsive pangs of agonizing pride.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Thus when some limb convuls'd with pangs of death,
Imbibes the gangrene's pestilential breath,
Th' experienc'd artist, from the blood betrays
The latent venom, or its course delays.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, can. 2.

CON-VULSE. — CONY.

First, know my friend, I do not mean
To write a treatise on the Spleen;
Nor to prescribe when nerves convulse;
Nor mind th' alarum watch, your pulse.
Green. The Spleen.

Again when we hear the voice of this Almighty God, in storms —in thunder—in earthquakes; do we stand in awe of that being, in whose hands are all these vast convulsions of nature?
Gilpin. Sermon 26. vol. ii.

An irregular, convulsive movement may be necessary to throw off an irregular convulsive disease.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

CO'NY, n., Co'NY-BOROUGH, Co'NYCATCH, v., Co'NYCATCHER, Co'NY-SKINS. } Fr. connil; It. coniglio; Sp. coneio; Dutch, koniin; Ger. kunele; Swe. kaning; Lat. cuniculus Pliny (see the Quotation from Holland's Translation) and Varro, De R. R. think they are so called, because they are accustomed to make holes for themselves under ground; sub terra cuniculos.

Cony-catch; to catch conys—simple animals—by gins or snares; and thus, to deceive, to delude, to entrap; sc. any simpleton. A Society of Sharpers, says Archdeacon Nares, was called a warren; and hence also many of their terms were derived. See Decker's English Villainies; and D'Israeli's Curiosities of Literature, iii. 78.

The cony hath its cane,
The little bird his nest,
From heate and colde themselues to saue,
At all times as they list.
Vncertaine Auctors. That all things tom time finde ease, &c.

Nowe meaning falsely thus, he vseth yet in his speach a foolishe willinesse, as doth a conye that couereth her hed, and weneth all were well, when all her loynes be open.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 588.

Ferrets are in great account for chasing and hunting of these connies. The manner is to put them into their earths, which within the ground have many waies and holes like mines, and thereupon these creatures are called cuniculi: and when they are within, they so course the poor connies from out of their earth, that they are soon taken above ground at the mouth of their holes.
Holland. Plinie, vol. i. fol. 232.

I am the more willing to shew the originall all one: and properly signifying to shroud or hide, which may also appear by our calling in some parts of England, the places made for conies to hide, and shroud themselves in: cony-veries, or cony-buries, and in other parts of England cony-burrowes.
Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, ch. vii.

At what time began this custom I cannot tell; but I am sure it is more antient than the city of Salisbury; because there come two burgesses to parliament for a place near to it, called old Sarum, which (as I rid in sight of it) if I should tell a stranger that knew not what the word burgess meant, he would think were a couple of rabbets, the place looketh so like a coney-borough.
Hobbs. A Dialogue of the Common Laws of England.

Others there be who make their boast and report with joy unto others, how in the partition of their patrimony they have by cunning casts couny-catched their bretheren, and over-wrought them so by their cautelous circumvention, fine wit and slie policies, as that they have gone away with the better part by odds.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 149.

He drew me from my house with his coney-catching, promising me an island, which I yet hope for.
Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iii. ch. ii. book ii.

CONY. — COOK.

TATLER MARY. I would ha' the old conicatcher coozen'd of all he has, i' the young beyre's defence, by his learned counsell, Mr. Picklock.

Ben Jonson. Staple of Newes. The 4th intermeane after the 4th act.

——— All's come out, sir,
We are smoakd for being coney-catchers: my master
Is put in prison.

Massinger. The Renegado, act iv. sc. 1.

But I sought him all over Asia, following him still from one of his coney-holes to another, till coming into this country, I heard of my friend's being besieged, and so come to blow away the wretches that troubled him. Sidney. Arcadia, book iii.

——— Nor permit
The unexperienc'd younker, immature,
Alone to range the woods, or haunt the brakes
Where dodging conies sport.

Somervile. The Chase, book v.

He that cries "coney-skins or onions,"
Blames "toleration of opinions."

Hughes. Hudibras Imitated.

CONYZA, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Superflua. Generic character: receptacle naked; down simple; calyx imbricated, nearly round; florets of the ray three-cleft.

There have been ninety-one species of this genus discovered spread over both Hemispheres.

C. squarrosa, the Flea-bane, is a native of England.

COO, v. } Coo'ING. } Formed from the sound. See the Example from Pennant.

CON — COO

A word used to represent and denote the sound emitted by the Dove or Pigeon.

See!—gurgling from a top, a spring distils!
In mournful measures wind the dripping rills;
Soft coos of distant doves receiv'd around,
In soothing mixture, swell the watry sound.

Savage. The Wanderer, can. 1.

In the beginning of winter they assemble in great flocks, and leave off cooing, which they begin in March, when they pair.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Ring Dove.

Let not the coolings of the world allure thee,
Which of her lovers ever found her true?

Young. The Complaint. Night 8.

Whilst wheeling round, in airy wanton flights,
The glossy pigeons chase their sportive loves,
Or in soft cooings tell their amorous tale.

Dodsley. Agriculture, can. 1.

COOK.

COOK, v. }
COOK, n. }
COO'KERY, }
COO'KLY, }
COO'K-MAID, }
COO'K-ROOM, }
COO'K-SHOP. }

Fr. cuisinier; Sp. cozinero; It. cuoco; Lat. coquus, from coquere, of uncertain Origin. (And see COCTION.) A. S. coc; Ger. koch; Dutch, and Swe. kock. A word (says Ihre) not long heard on our shores; but introduced from abroad, (cum aliis gulæ illecebris,) with other temptations to Gluttony.

To dress or prepare by heat animal or vegetable substances for food; and, sometimes, generally, to dress or prepare.

Thenne cam contrition. þat hadde coked for hem alle
And brouht forþ a pitaunce.

Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 245.

Wo was his coke, but if his sauce were
Poinant and sharpe, and redy all his gere.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 353.

The blacke wether tho she toke,
And hewe the fleshe, as doth the cooke.

Gower. Conf. Am., book v. fol. 106.

And though that Tabaim, be taken for cookes in many places, (for the cookes did slaye the beastes themselues in those days) yet it may be taken for them that put men to execution also.

Tyndall. Workes, fol. 6.

There is a custom in this citie, that when any man is determined to banquet his friends, going about vnto certaine tauernes or cookes-houses appoynted for the same purpose, he sayth vnto euery particular hoste, you shall haue such and such of my friendes, whom you must entertaine in my name, and so much I will bestowe vpon the banquet.

Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Odoricus, vol. ii. part i. fol. 61.

FURN. Other kickshaws
Besides, there came last night from the forest of Sherwood,
The fattest stag I ever cook'd.

Massinger. A New Way to pay Old Debts, act i. sc. iii.

——— For this to me
Shall be a second marriage: send for musique,
And will the cooks to use their best of cunning
To please the palat.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Love's Cure, act i. sc. 2.

——— His friends skils did dispose
The fleaing, cutting of it up, and cookely spitted it;
Roasted, and drew it artfully.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xxiv. fol. 338.

——— Right glad, when she
By lucky search atchieves so rare a dish,
Which needs, being recking hot, no cookery.

Beaumont. Psyche, can. 9. st. 67.

The commodity of this nice cook-room the merchants having found to be so great as that in all their ships the cook-rooms are built in their fore-castles, contrary to that which has been anciently used. Ralegh. Essays.

As politick news is not the principal subject on which we treat, we are so happy as to have no occasion for that art of cookery, which our brother newsmongers so much excell in.

Tatler, No. 11.

And still its love to household cares,
By a shrill voice at noon declares,
Warning the cook-maid not to burne
That roast meat which it cannot turn.

Swift. Baucis and Philemon.

Bread-fruit is sometimes cooked in an oven of the same kind, which renders it soft, and something like a boiled potatoe.

Cook. Voyage, vol. i. ch. xvii. book i.

——— Why, his own fame undone,
He may obtain a patent for the run
Of his lord's kitchen, and have ample time
With offal fed, to court the cook in rhyme.

Churchill. Independence.

——— A member as 'tis said
His projects to his servants read,
And of a fav'rite speech a book made
With which he tired each night a cook-maid.

Cambridge. A Dialogue between a M. P. and his Servant Maid.

The man who deals so largely in the funds is a clerk of a broker in Change-alley; the lady who so carefully concealed her quality, keeps a cook's-shop behind the Exchange!

Samuel Johnson. The Adventurer, No. 84.

To tell you the truth, I am sorry, likewise upon another account: as I am affraid you will lose the little knowledge you had acquired in the art of cookery, and be absolutely at a loss how to set forth a tolerable supper.

Melmoth. Cicero. To Lucius Papirius Pætus, book xiii. let. 9.

Of Grecian COOKERY our knowledge for the most part is obtained only by incidental mention. The sausages of the Athenians, whether composed of pork or peacock, of pheasant or of rabbit, enjoyed high repute, (Aristoph. Acharn. v. 145;) and far greater varieties of fish than can be counted upon the modern Carte swelled their list of dainties. In Athenæus alone is an almost inexhaustible fund of information on these topics, widely scattered indeed, but amply repaying any one the trouble which he may expend in gathering the detached morsels together. His frequent extracts from the Γαστρονόμια of Archestratus Gelous, may be consulted with great gain by the voluptuary of the table. Not content with sailing round the world, as Athenæus has expressed it, πᾶν γαστρὸς ἕνεκα καὶ τῶν ὑπὸ τὴν γαστέρα, (iii. 31,) by which he acquired the expressive but untranslatable soubriquet of ὀψοδαίδαλος (vii. 5,) this benevolent Sage dedicated his stationary hours to the composition of the immortal Poem to which we have just alluded, and which appears to have been adopted as the Directory of all Grecian Gourmans.

COOKERY.

The bill of fare which has been preserved from the Ἰχνευτρόφος of Mnesimachus (id. ix. 15,) may be given in the words of Cumberland, who has bestowed great pains in finding corresponding English names for the catalogue of dainties. (Observer, No. 146.) Onions, olives, garlick, coleworts, gourds, beans, lettuce, knot-grass; salted tunny-fish, shad, sturgeon, soals, conger, purple-fish, and black-fish, (both whole ones;) anchovy, mackarel, fresh tunny, gudgeons, rock-fish, dog-fish tails, cramp-fish, frog-fish, perch, baccalao, sardin, sea-weed-fish, sea-urchin, surmullet, cuckow-fish, pastinaca, lamprey, barbel, grey-mullet, Lebias, Sparus, char, Ælian-fish, Thracian-fish, swallow-fish, prawns, calamary, flounder, shrimps, polypody, cuttle-fish, Orphus, lobster, crab, bleak, needle-fish, sprats, sea-scorpion and grigg—roasts without number, goose, pork, beef, lamb, mutton, goat, kid, pullet, duck, swan, partridge, bergander, and a thousand more.

The Company of Cooks at Athens was in high esteem, and its duties were connected with the National Religion, (Athen. xiv. 23.) The Poet Apion, in a passage in his Σαμόθρακες has traced the origin of Society to ἡ μαγειρική, (ibid.;) and Nicomachus, in his Ἑλλαθύτης, contends that the perfect Cook should be well acquainted with Painting, Astrology, Medicine, and Geometry, (vii. 11.) To such a pitch had they carried their art, that we are told on one occasion, (ix. 5,) of a whole pig served up, boiled on one side and roasted on the other. It was stuffed with small birds, the entrails and appurtenances of a sow, yolks of eggs, pregnant hens, and minced and spiced meats. So delicately was all this performed, that no opening could be detected in which the knife had been inserted. The Cook justly proud of his art, swore by the heroes of Marathon that he would not reveal the secret under a year; but at length the love of fame prevailed and he divulged it. The animal had been bled to death by a wound under the shoulder, whence, after a copious effusion, the master Cook extracted the entrails, washed them with wine, and hanging the animal by the feet, he crammed down the throat the stuffings already prepared. Then covering the half of the pig with a paste of barley thickened with wine and oil, he put it in a small oven, or on a heated table of brass, where it was gently roasted with all due care: when the skin was browned, he boiled the other side; and then taking away the barley paste, the pig was served up, at once boiled and roasted. Mr. D'Israeli has translated this and several other passages to the like effect in Athenæus, with much spirit and knowledge of the subject, in an entertaining Paper on Ancient Cookery and Cooks. (Curiosities of Literature, iii. 232.)

Into the mysteries of the Roman Kitchen we fortunately obtain a still closer insight than into that of Greece, by the preservation of the Treatise De obsoniis et condimentis sive de Arte Coquinariâ, which is attributed to Cælius Apicius Rhodogimus. It has been doubted to which of the three Gastrosophists who bear the name of Apicius, this work is mostly correctly to be assigned; to him who flourished before the extinction of the Republic, (Athen. iv.;) to him who built his fame in the days of Tiberius, from whom innumerable dishes derived their titles, who having spent two millions and a half in the cultivation of his taste, and finding that he had but 250,000 crowns remaining, nobly poisoned himself to avoid the slow progress of starvation, which he feared more deeply than the immediate stroke of death itself: (Dio, 57; Seneca, De Vitâ beatâ, ii. Ep. xcv.;) and who is probably the Apicius mentioned with such deserved distinction by Juvenal, (iv. 23,) Pliny, (passim,) Martial, (ii. 69. x. 73,) and Lampridius, (Heliogab. 18. 20. 24;) or lastly, as is the most common opinion, to a third who lived under Trajan, and who secured the favour of his Prince by sending him fresh oysters while on his Parthian expedition. (Athen. i.) This work was found in the island of Maguelonne, near Montpellier, and was published by Torinus in 1541. An excellent edition, of which only 120 copies were printed, was given in the year 1705 by Dr. Martin Lister, Physician to Queen Anne, who annexed his own notes to those of Humelburgius and others. Dr. Lister was unmercifully ridiculed for this publication by the witty Dr. King, in a Poem entitled The Art of Cookery, in imitation of the Art of Poetry of Horace, and in some Letters which accompanied it.

The work of Apicius is divided into Ten Books, of which the first, entitled Epimeles, treats of Gravies, Preserves, and Pickles; II. Sarcoptes, of Sausages; III. Cepuros, of Garden-stuff; IV. Pandectes, of Universal Cookery; V. Ospries, of Pottages, or as Dr. King humorously gives it of Pantagruel; VI. Aeropetes, of Birds; VII. Polyteles, of dishes of much cost and high seasoning; VIII. Tetrapus, of four-footed beasts; IX. Thalassa, of Fish; X. Halieus, of Fish Sauces. Among all these there is scarcely a receipt which the modern palate would venture to taste. One of the chief luxuries is Ficatum, the liver of a sow crammed with figs; another, dormice stuffed whole into sausage-skins; and a third, Salacacabia, which we will transcribe entire. Bruise in a mortar parsley-seed, dried penny-royal, dried mint, ginger, green coriander, stoned raisins, honey, vinegar, oil and wine; then add three crusts of Picentine bread, the flesh of a pullet, the appurtenances of a goat, Vestine cheese, pine kernels, cucumbers and dried onions minced small; pour gravy over the whole, and serve it up iced. The seasonings and sauces of most of the other dishes are such as would now be furnished rather from the gallipots of the Apothecary, than from the rich and steaming jars of the Italian warehouseman; and if the Roman tables furnished nothing more palatable than the Bill of Apicius, Catius need not have been in such haste to commit to his note-book the precepts which he had learned from the Augustan Ude. (Hor. Serm. ii. 4.)

Of British aboriginal Cookery little is known. Hares, Hens, Geese and Fish, according to Cæsar, were forbidden food; probably from motives of superstition. The Saxons made great feasts, (Gul. Malm. 9; Geoff. Mon. vi. 12,) but we have no particulars recorded of their Cookery. The Danes drank deeply, but they were by no means refined in their culinary taste. The Normans were more curious; and the Conqueror was so delicate in his table, that he once struck at his prime favourite, William Fitzosborne, Steward of his Household, because he served him with an under-roasted Crane. (Dug. Bar. i. 109.) Many great Officers held their dignities in right of the Kitchen, and we read of Dapifer, of Larderarius not unfrequently in holy Orders, of Cocus Dominicæ Coquinæ, of Magister Coquinæ, Magnus Coquus, Coquorum Præpositus, Coquus Regum, and Grans Queux.

COOKERY.

The great authority for early English Cookery is the Forme of Cury, composed about A. D. 1390, by the Master Cooks of Richard II., which was published in 1780 by that able Antiquary Mr. Pegge. It consists of 196 receipts, some of them very complicuted. The quantities of each ingredient are seldom specified, so that great reliance must have been placed upon the judgment of the individual Cook. Entire joints are seldom served, nor are animals often brought to table whole. The mortar was much used, many dishes being named from it mortrews or morterelys. Oil-olive and Lard (grees, grece, whitegreace) were employed instead of butter; wine was common; and honey, sugar, and spices were largely intermixed in most of the preparations. A Cawdel of Salmon is made of the parboiled guts of that fish, with leeks, oil, almonds, milk, spices, saffron, and salt. Tartes of Flesh are composed of boiled pork ground small, hard eggs and cheese ground also, powdered and whole spices, sugar, saffron, and salt inserted in a crust with small birds "hewed to small gobetts." The whole of this work is worth consulting, as a singular and most entertaining record of Antiquity.

The English Press gave an early attention to the science of the Kitchen. Sir Thomas Elyot printed his Cookerie in 1539. In Book ii. c. 8, of his Castel of Helth, 1541, we find the following comfortable judgment upon our national dish: "Biefe of Englande to Englysshemen whiche are in helth bringeth stronge nouryshynge, but it maketh grosse bloude and ingendreth melancoly: but beying of yonge oxen not exceedynge the age of four yeres, to them, whiche have colerike stomakes, it is more convenient than chikens and other like fyne meates." In this part of his work, the Philosophical Knight principally confines himself to the properties of food as affecting different complexions. He is marvellously hostile to Venison, "the huntynge of them (falowe dere) beynge not so pleasaunt as the huntynge of other venery or vermyne; the flesshe moche more unholsome and unpleasant than of a redde dere, ingendring melancoly, and making many fearful dreames, and disposeth the bodye to a fever, if it be moche eaten." Yet there is one redeeming clause at the end, which may save this venerable writer from the execration of the Gastrophist: "Notwithstandinge the fatte thereof (as som lerned men have supposed) is better to be digested than the leane." In 1575 we find A proper new Booke of Cookery. Declaring what maner of meates be best in season for al times of the yeere, and how they ought to be dressed and served at the Table, both for flesh dayes and fish daies. With a new addition very necessary for al them that delight in Cookery. Imprinted at London, in Fleet Streete, by William How for Abraham Veale. The following aphorisms with which this volume commences, appear to be as fully adapted to our own days as to those in which they were penned: "Brawne is best from a fortenight before Mighelmas till Lent. Beife and Bakon is good all times the yere. Mutton is good at all times, but from Easter to Midsommer it is woorst. A fat Pigge is ever in season. A Gose is woorst in Midsommer moone, and best in stubble time; but whē they be yonge Greene Geese than they be best. Veale is best in January and Februarye, and all other times good. Lambe and young Kidde is best betwene Christmast and Lent, and good from Easter to Whitsontide. Kyd is ever good. Hennes be good at all tymes, but best from November to Lent. Fat Capons be ever in season. Pecockes be ever good, but when they be young and of a good stature they be as good as Fesantes, and so be young Groucis. Sinettes bee best betwene All Halowen-day and Lent. A Mallard is good after a froste till Candelmas, so is Teale and other wyld foule that swimmeth. A Woodcocke is best from October to Lent, and so be all other byrdes, as Ousels and Thrushes, Robins and such other, Hearōs, Curlewes, Crane, Bittoure, Bustarde be at all tymes good, but best in winter. Feasant, Partriche, and Raile be ever good, but best when they be taken with a Hauke. Quayle and Larkes be ever in season. Connyes be ever good, but best from October to Lent. A gelded Deare, whether he be fallow or red, is ever in season. A Pollard is special good in Maye, at Midsummer he is a Buck, and very good tyll Holy Roode-day before Myghelmas, so likewise is a Stagge, but this is principally in May. A barren Doe is best in winter. A pricket and a sorell syster is ever in season. Chickens be ever good, and so be Pigeons if they be yonge."

The good Housewife's Jewell, wherein is to be found most excellent and rare devices for the conceiters in Cookery, found out by the practice of Thomas Dawson, though ascribed by Dr. Kitchener to 1610, was in fact printed in 1596. From this may be learned "how to boil a mugget of a sheep," and how to make martris of a capon, hen, or pullet. Yet a year earlier, 1595, appeared The Widdowe's Treasure. In 1625 (Dr. Kitchener again states 1672,) A delightful daily exercise for Ladies and Gentlemen, &c. whereto is added a Book of Cookery, by John Murrell, Professor thereof. Among other secrets the Professor teaches "how to make a pudding in a turnep." Marnette in the Perfect Cook, translated from the French in 1656, expounds fifty-five ways of dressing eggs, the last of which is "an exquisite dish of stirred eggs, called in French a la Hugenotte, or Presbyterian eggs." Sir Kenelm Digby employed his multifarious pen upon this subject in 1669; but the profound Knight is not to be compared with a professional author who succeeded him in 1675. The whole body of Cookery dissected, taught, and fully manifested, methodically, artificially, and according to the best traditions of the English, French, Italian, Dutch, &c. or a Sympathy of all Varieties in Natural Compounds in that Mystery, by William Rabisha. This volume is dedicated to the Duchesses of Richmond and Buckingham, and the Ladies Jane Lane, Mary Tufton, and Agnes Walker, "upholders and nourishers of all ingenious arts and sciences, and in particular that of the said mysterie of Cookerie." It is divided into XV. books, and the reasons which induced the author to publish it are detailed at considerable length in the Préface. First, that he was brought up in the family of an honourable Lady, who spared for no cost nor charge in his instruction; that he has served as Master Cook in many honourable families in his native country; and with Embassadours and other Nobles in certain foreign parts; and that by "traditions" and constant practical experience he has acquired an unusual store of knowledge. Secondly, that it has been the practice of all learned men to leave the fruits of their investigations for the benefit of after ages. Thirdly, that the Restoration gives hopes of a renewal of hospitality; and fourthly, that he has been much solicited by young practitioners

To many of the earlier works on Cookery is appended The Book of Service and Carving, and shewing all manner of offices in his kind unto a Prince or any other Estate, and all the Feasts in the yeere, which was first printed by Wynkyn de Worde, 1508. In this, especial directions are given to the carver for the "fair handling of his knife." Above all he "must know the fumosyties of fish, flesh, and foules, and all manner of sauces according to their apetites; these bene the fumosyties, salt, soure, resty, (rusty) fat, fryed, synowes, skin, bony, croupes, yong fethers, heades, pigion's bones, and all maner of legs of beasts and foules, ye otter syde, for these be fumosyties, lay them never to your soveraine." The following list of terms used in his art is subjoined: "Termes of a Carver. Break that Deare. Leache that Brawn. Reare that Gose. Lyfte that Swan. Sauce that Capon. Spoyle that Henne. Fursh that Chicke. Unbrace that Malard. Unlace that Cony. Dismember that Heron. Displaye that Crane. Disfigure that Pecock. Unjoint that Bittuce. Untack that Curlew. Alay that Feasant. Wing that Partrich. Wing that Quaile. Mince that Plover. Thie that Pigion. Broder that Pasty. Thie that Woodcock. Thie all maner of small birds."

"Timbre that fier. Tire that egge. Chin that Salmon. String that Lamprey. Splat that Pike. Sauce that Place. Sauce that Tench. Splay that Brem. Side that Haddock. Tusk that Barbell. Culpon that Troute. Finne that Cheuirn. Transer that Eele. Traunch that Sturgion. Undertraunch that Purpos. Tame that Crab. Barde that Lopster."

Beyond the XVIIth century it is scarcely worth while to descend. Vincent la Chapelle, Cook to the well-known Earl of Chesterfield, and afterwards to the Prince of Orange, published three goodly octavos, The Modern Cook in 1736; and Dr. Kitchener has given a list of between eighty and ninety works on Cookery, between 1701 and 1808. Mistresses Glasse and Rundell for a long period maintained high ground in this department; but the lovers of good cheer and good humour, may now, we think, derive more profit as well as more pleasure from the Apicius Redivivus of Dr. Kitchener himself, or from the pages of the Vieil Amateur, who has put together the invaluable series of L'Almanach des Gourmands.

COOKIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Aurantiaceæ. Generic character: calyx five-cleft; petals boat-shaped, hairy; anthers nearly round; berry subglobose, five-celled, cell one-seeded.

Two species, C. punctata, and C. falcata, natives of China. Decandolle. Prod.

COOL, v.
COOL, adj.
COOL, n.
CO'OLER, n.
CO'OLISH,
CO'OLY,
CO'OLY, ad.
CO'OLNESS,
CO'OL-HEADED.

A. S. cel-an, to kele or cool. (See KELE.) Ger. kul-en; Dutch kæl-en; Swed. kol-a; met. to allay, to appease, to damp, to calm, to moderate, to assuage, to temper.

A cooling card, Mr. Nares thinks, is a phrase borrowed from Primero, or some other game, in which money was staked upon a card; a card so decisive as to cool the courage of the adversary.

The wynde stode than nought amis,
But euery topsaile coole it blewe
Till Ulysses the marches knewe
Where Lichomede his reigne had.
Gower. Conf. Am., book v.

You haue youre physicions with you, that sometyme cure and heale you: no physick wil help our pain, nor no playster coole our heate. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 337.

The Yorke shire menne, beyng glad of this small victory, were well cooled and went no farther southward, but took their waie towarde Warwike. Hall. Edward IV. The eighth Yere.

His certain life that never can deceive him,
Is full of thousand sweets, and rich content:
The smooth-leav'd beeches in the field receive him
With coolest shades, till noontide's rage is spent.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 12.

——— Carry her to her chamber:
Be that her prison, till in cooler blood
I shall determine of her.
Massinger. The Roman Actor, act iv. sc. 2.

Origen speaks of that text, Many that are first, shall be last, &c. Which he applies as a cooling-card to the children of Christian parents.
Hall. Honour of the Maried Clergie, vol. i. fol. 721.

One day (quoth he) I sate (as was my trade)
Under the foote of Mole, that mountaine hore,
Keeping my sheepe amongst the cooly shade
Of the greene alders by the Mollaes shore.
Spenser. Colin Clout's come home again.

The aire (my rival aire) did coolly glide
Through every part.
P. Fletcher. Eclogue 7. The Prise.

This project [bringing the New River into the house] as I have since heard, is postponed 'till summer season; when it is thought the coolness that proceeds from fountains and cascades will be more acceptable and refreshing to people of quality.
Spectator, No. 5.

Philander was here enjoying the cool of the morning, among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air such a freshness, as is not a little agreeable in the hot part of the year. Addison. On Medals. Dialogue 3.

These mountains, [the Andes] by intercepting great part of the Eastern winds, which generally blow over the continent of South America, and by cooling that part of the air, which forces its way over their tops, and by keeping besides a large portion of the atmosphere perpetually cool, from its contiguity to the snows with which they are covered; these hills, thus spreading the influence of their frozen crests to the neighbouring coasts and seas of Peru, are doubtless the cause of the temperature and equability, which constantly prevail there.
Anson. Voyage round the World, book ii. ch. v.

In some of the mountainous parts of Scotland and Ireland, the milk is made into whey, which has done wonders in this and other cases, where coolers and restoratives are necessary.
Pennant. Zoology. The Goat.

And at length resolving to break the charm myself, and overcome their extreme diffidence, for to this I imputed their silence; I rubbed my hands, and looking as wise as possible, observed that the nights began to grow a little coolish at this time of the year. Goldsmith. Essay 1.

COOL. — COOP.

To say the truth, when the matter comes to be considered impartially and cooly, their faults, of whatever kind, will admit of much alleviation.

Hurd. Works. On the uses of Foreign Travel. Dialogue 8.

Not that I had reason to expect my solicitations would have much weight with you; but as being unwilling it should appear to those who might apply for them, that any coolness had arisen between us. Melmoth. Cicero. To Caius Antonius, book i. let. 4.

A mere cool-headed projector, without any tincture of innate enthusiasm, can never succeed in his designs, because such a one can never exhibit those surprising freaks, which a heated imagination, working on a disordered, though, for this purpose, fitly framed temper of body, so preciously produces.

Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, book ii. ch. ii.

COOM, a corruption from the Fr. ecume; soot gathered over the mouth of an oven; or the black grease with which the axle-trees of wheel-carriages are smeared.

COOMB, Fr. combe; a narrow valley or passage between two hills. Cotgrave. A. S. comb; a valley enclosed on either side with hills. Somner.

And then to Ina call'd: O if the roomes
The walkes and arbours in these fruitfull coombes,
Have famous beene through all the western planes,
In being guiltlesse of the lasting staines
Pour'd on by lust and murther; keepe them free.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. sec. 3.

COOP, v. / COOP, n. / CO'OPER, / CO'OPERAGE, / CO'OPERIE. — Probably—merely to keep. Skinner. A. S. kep-an, cep-an; Dutch, kep-en; to keep, hold or contain. Ray says, "A coop, a muck-coop, a lime-coop; a cart or wain made close with boards, to carry any thing that otherwise would fall out."

"A fish-coop is likewise a great hollow vessel made of twigs. A coop is generally used for a vessel, or place to pen up, or inclose any thing; as that wherein poultry are shut up to be fed is called a coop."

To coop, then, is to keep, hold, or contain, to confine, to shut up, inclose, or incage.

Some there are that do so needlesly pin and coop up themselves that they cannot stir, nor moderately use that lawful liberty that God hath indulged them, but presently they are entangled in sin, because of the imperious prohibitions of their own consciences. Hopkins. Sermon 26.

The water is easily cooped up in a glass or bucket, where there are boundaries to keep it in; but being let loose on a table or a floor, it flies about, and never stayes again, till it meet with some ocean, or hollow place, which may inclose, and bestow the consistency on it which it has not of itself.

Hammond. Works. Sermon 17. vol. iv.

The haberdasher heapeth wealth by hattes,
The barber liues by handling of his ball,
The couper's house is heelde by hooping fattes.

Gascoigne. The fruites of Warre.

The way to make it, is to steepe the wheat within certaine cooperie vessels made of wood, in fresh water so much as will cover it well. Holland. Plinie, vol. i. fol. 562.

He pretends by the words of consecration (which are but five) to bring down Christ's body, and soul, and Deity, and all from the right hand of God in heaven; and to coop them up in the narrow quantity of a wafer and little wine, where he is forced to lodge so long as that wafer is in being, and cannot in the least help himself or get out of it.

Sharp. Works. Sermon 11. vol. vii.

There are others, who affect a very slow time, and are in my opinion much more tuneable than the former; the cooper in particular swells his last note in a hollow voice, that is not without its harmony. Spectator, No. 251.

——— Staves that nor shrink nor swell,
The cooper's close wrought cask to chesnut owes.

Dodsley. Agriculture, can. 2.

COO'PERATE, v. / COOPERA'TION, / COO'PERATIVE, / COOPERA'TOR, / COOPERA'NT. — Fr. cooperer; Sp. cooperar; It. cooperare; Lat. cooperare; (co, and operari, to work, Ab ἔργω, quæ notat operor, sed nisi Latinum opus. Vossius.

To work or labour together with, in union or combination with; to aid or assist in; contribute exertions or endeavours for some common purpose.

To the infoūding whereof [of faith] y^e sacrament doth nothing worke, nor is no cause therof nor cooperāt therto, nor meane nor instrument therin, but only a bare signyfier & a shewer therof. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 383.

——— Bring all the pow'rs of praise
Your provinces of well-united worlds can raise.
Bring all your lutes and harps of heav'n and earth;
Whate'er cooperates to the common mirth.

Crashaw. Sacred Poems. The name above every name, the name of Jesus.

He will, I say, over and above, see the original of all his wealth, all that is worthy to be called such, either immediately or mediately from God; immediately, without any cooperation of ours, as that which is left us by inheritance from honest parents (our fortunes and our Christianity together;) mediately, as that which our lawful labour, our planting and watering, hath brought down upon us.

Hammond. Works. Sermon 5. vol. iv.

Wherein I will not deny, and who is there but must confesse, therefore did concur
Both boldness stout and fortitude, with martial discipline,
In war which are co-operant
with virtue doth combine,
according as Timotheus the Poet writeth?

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 522.

And yet these affections and passions which of necessity nature hath need of, the same hath reason made so agreeable, so obeysant, so frendly and co-operative, yea, and ready to second all good intentions and purposes ready to be executed.

Id. Ib. fol. 59.

And the success will invite perhaps many more than your own company to be co-operators with the truth, and contributors to the enlarging the pale of the Christian Church.

Boyle. Life, 109.

Yet is not there so much as intimated, that they were co-operators with their Maker, in the framing of the world, of which they are represented as spectators and applauders, but not so much as instruments.

Id. A Free Enquiry into the received Notion of Nature.

CO-OPTATION; Cockeram has co-optate, to choose. Opto is, perhaps, from the Gr. ὄπτω vel ὄπτομαι, quod est, video, considero: and thus, optare, proprie sit considerare, eligere. Vossius.

To see, look at, or consider.

I confess this is true in the first election and co-optation of a friend, to come to the true knowledge of him by queries and doubts; but when there's a perfect contract made, confirm'd by experience, and a long tract of time, distrust then is mere poison to friendship. Howell. Letter 20. book i. sec. 5.

CO-ORDA'IN, / CO-O'RDINATE, adj. / CO-O'RDINATELY, / CO-ORDINA'TION. — Lat. con, and ordinare. Ordinis nomen Græcum est. Dicebant enim militibus tribuni; Hactenus tibi licet. Hic consistes: Eo progrediere; Hâc revertere. ὅρον ἔω, inde Ordo. Scal. De Caus. c. 35. ὅρον ἔω, terminum hunc tibi do. Vossius.

To keep in the same bounds or limits, in the same class, under the same rules; to hold or cause to hold the same rank or station. Co-ordinate is opposed to sub-ordinate.

For the heir is the end of the inheritance, as well as he is the lord of it. And so must Christ be of all the creatures appointed and co-ordained with him.

Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 114.

CO-DAIN. — PARCENER.

Especially, since one of the three estates is lesser than the three estates together; who in parliament, by the fundamental constitutions of the realme, are not subordinate, but co-ordinate parts of the same great common-councell of the kingdome.
Prynne. Treachery, &c. of Papists, part i. p. 41.

And this co-ordination one with another, God might have made in all things, and none in subordination to another, especially angels, and elect men.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part ii. fol. 115.

Parlaments, which by the law of this land are his bridle; in vain lés bridle, if not also his rider: and therefore hath not only co-ordination with him, which you falsely call seditions, but hath superiority above him, and that neither against religion nor right reason. Milton. Brief Notes on Dr. Griffith's Sermon.

Now these were they who principally insisted upon the absolute co-equality and independent co-ordination, of the three hypostases or persons in the Trinity, as compared with one another.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, book i. ch. iv.

How many of these superior powers there might be, or how far their influence might reach, they know not: uncertain whether there was one Supreme Governor of the whole world or many co-ordinate powers, presiding over each country, climate, or particular place. Law. Theory, p. 83.

For they all with one consent have taught, that the divine nature and perfections do agree to the Father and Son, not collaterally or co-ordinately, but subordinately.
Nelson. Life of Bishop Bull, sec. 57.

If legislative powers are not co-ordinate, they cease, in part, to be legislative; and if they be co-ordinate, they are unaccountable; for to whom must that power account which has no superiour?—The house of commons is indeed dissoluble by the king, as the nation has of late been very clamorously told; but, while it subsists, it is co-ordinate with the other powers, and this co-ordination ceases only when the house by dissolution ceases to subsist.
Johnson. The False Alarm.

COPAIFERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx none; corolla, petals four; seed-vessel an oval legume, seed one, arillus oval.

One species, C. officinalis, a lofty tree, native of the Brazils, producing the resin called Balsam of Copaiba, or Capivi.

COPAL, the concrete juice of the Rhus Copalinum, a North American tree. It is hard, shining, transparent, odoriferous, and citron-coloured; not soluble in water, nor without some difficulty in alcohol. Diluted with oil of turpentine it forms a beautiful and durable varnish, much used by picture cleaners. It has been employed also in Medicine as a corroborative for the gums, and as a cephalic. Its specific gravity varies from 1.045 to 1.139.

COPA'RCENER, COPA'RCENARY, COPA'RTMENT, COPA'RTNER, COPA'RTNERSHIP. Coparciner is the same as copartner. Fr. personnier for pertionnier. Huet in Menage. Lat. portio, from pars, a part or share.

One who has part or share with others. A sharer. See the Example from Blackstone.

Or if combattensie not please,
The land is rich and large
And thy coperciners may liue,
And vs of death discharge.
Warner. Albion's England, book iv. ch. xxii.

This gentleman had issue two daughters, the one of them was espoused to Denne, the other married to archdeacon, or Mackodo, whose heires haue at this daie the towne betweene them in coparcenarie. Holinshed. Ireland. Anno 1234.

If one of thy copartners gin to rutle in the throte,
Take him aside, and salue him fayre,
and tell him if he please,
He shall by house, and lande of you for vse, or for his ease.
Drant. Horace. Satire 6.

Being therefore copartner with the soul in creation, redemption, sanctification, there is good reason that the body should be comely and respectfully bestowed.
Hall. Sermon preached at Exeter, vol. iii. fol. 79.

COPARCENER. — COPE.

The other laden with herrings, in copartnership with one Peter Heinberg, sail'd away for Stettin in Pomerania which is under your jurisdiction, there to unlade her freight.
Milton. Richard Cromwell to Charles Gustavus.

Now calling is the first foundation act of performance of this by God, and then first we are actually admitted into communion with Jesus, and into the right of copartnership with him of all his previledges. Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. part iv. fol. 268.

An estate held in coparcenary is where lands of inheritance descend from the ancestor to two or more persons.—And these cohairs are then called coparceners; or, for brevity, parceners only.
Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. ii. p. 287.

But with him on the Isthmian strand,
On sweet Castalia's shore
The verdant crowns, the proud reward
Of victory, his brother shar'd,
Copartner in immortal praise.
West. Odes. Antistrophe 3.

Then on one pedestal and hand in hand,
Sculptur'd in Parian stone (so gratitude
Indites) let the divine copartners rise.
Smart. The Hop Garden, book i.

The noble lord insists on very little more than on the excellence of their constitution, the hope of their dwindling into little republicks, and this close copartnership in government.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

CO-PARTMENT, see COMPART.

In a copartment, towards the head, and under the semicircle, of the letter, are his initials T. N. [Thomas Newton.]
Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. iii. p. 391.

COPE, v. COPE, n. CO'PING, n. COP. See CAP. A. S. cop; a garment that monks used. Apex, culmen, fastigium, the top, cop or head of any thing. Somner. High crowns were anciently called copitan, hats. Steevens. Copp'd hills, he also says, are hills rising to a top or head. The upper tire of Masonry, that covers a wall is still called the copping or coping.

To cap, or cover.

His cope that by clipped hym. wel clene was it folden
Of double worstede ydyght doun to the hele.
Piers Ploughman. Crede, ch. i.

þei copȝd hym as a frere.
Id. Vision, p. 36.

Ich knew such an one. nat eyhte wynter passede
Cam yn þus ȳ copede. at a court þere ich dwellede.
Id. Ib., p. 409.

Upon the cop right of his nose he hade
A wert, and theron stode a tufte of heres,
Rede as the bristles of a sowes eres.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 556.

Tho gan I on this hill to gone
And founde on the coppe a wone
That all the men that been on liue
Ne han the conning to discrieue
The beautie of that ilke place.
Id. The third Books of Fame, fol. 280.

Where was a lytle coppyd hyll, to yᵉ heyght wherof whan Gundoalde was comyn, the sayd Boson hym sodeynly threwe downe, and as he was rollyng down the hyll, with a great stoone he strake hym on the hede, by vyolence wherof he was forthwith slayne or dede. Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 123.

And thei risun up and drouen him out withouten the cytee, and ledden him to the coppe of the hil: on which her citee was bildid to cast him doun. But Jhesus passede.
Wiclif. Luke, ch. iv.

With Spanish spangs, and ruffes fet out of France,
With high copt hattes, and feathers flaunt a flaunt.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

COPE. And aboven at the cop of the hille, is the eir so cleer, that men may fynde no wynde there. Sir J. Maundevile, ch. iii.

So, with a friend withdrawne, we way-laide him,
When gloomy night, the cope of heauen did dim;
And no man knew.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xiii. fol. 203.

So numberless were those bad angels seen
Hovering on wing under the cope of hell
'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 345.

Some bending downe and coping toward the earth, others standing upright. Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 237.

——— The blind mole casts
Copp'd hills towards heaven, to tell, the earth is wrong'd
By man's oppression.
Shakspeare. Pericles, act i. sc. 1.

Where died the Danish King Hubba, whose corps being there interred vnder a great heape of copped stones, gave name to the place, and was called Hubblestone.
Speed. Elfred, book vii. ch. xxxvi. sec. 14. Anno 879.

There went first a hundred and sixty priests, all in their copes, eight bishops next, and last of all came Bonner himself, carrying the host, to thank God for reconciling them again to his church. Burnett. History of Reformation. Anno 1554.

——— Her smiles
Expansive cheer'd the undetermin'd tracts
Of all creation, from th' ethereal cope
August with moving fires, down to the shades
Infernal, and the reign of darkness drear.
Thompson. Sickness, book iv.

Cope, in the lead mines of Derbyshire, is the custom or tribute paid to the King, or Lord of the Manor, by the buyer of the ore. Sir John Pettus, in his Fodinæ Regales, derives the term (we know not why) from copia, plenty.

Cope, v. } Mid. Lat. colpus; It. colpo; Fr. coup;
Cope, n. } formerly coulp; Sp. golpe: which some derive, through the Lat. colaphus; Gr. κόλαφος, from κολάπτ-ειν, tundere, to bruise. Menage. But Wachter considers the Ger. klopfen, (litera L natura mobilis, e sede nativâ transposita,) pulsare, percutere, ferire, to be the root. In the quotation from Lord Berners's Translation of Froissart, given to illustrate the noun "Cope," it appears that the original word is coup; which Cotgrave explains,—a blow, stroake, &c.: also a Vennie in Fencing. Similar to this is the usage by Shakspeare. And thus the application of the word may have been extended generally,

To a fight, encounter, battle, contest. Junius, however, thinks it is from the A. S. ceap-an, to traffick, to exchange; and that it may have been extended to any kind of exchange; and thus, to cope with any one in fight is tb interchange blows. To cope, as now used, is equivalent to,

To contend, to encounter, to struggle, strive or contend with.

But the Scottysh king not regardyng his offres, not performyng his great crakes & boastes, beyng afraid to cope with the Englishe nacion, shamefully & sodeinly fled in the night ceason with all his powre & company.
Hall. Henry VII. The thirteenth Yere.

This course was greatly praysed, the seconde course they met without any hurte doynge. and the thyrde course their horses refused and wolde not cope.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 168.

A matche for him they seeke, but through them al is none to find,
That durst with Dares coape, nor ones his slings with fingers touche. Phaer. Æneidos, book v.

Then Sir Raynolde du Roy ran first; they came togider with good aduysemēt; howbeit, the first course they fayled, for theyr horses refused at the cope, wherwith they were sore displeased.
Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 168.

By whiche occasion, he neither would nor durst once medle or coupe with the earl's nauie.
Hall. Henry VI. The thirty-eighth Yere.

——— Who so thou be,
Lesse is thy courage than commaund,
Els would'st thou cope with me.
Warner. Albion's England, book iii. ch. xvi.

These northern lords and other that were with the queene made forwarde and entring into Saint Alban's, meant to passe through the towne, and so cope with their enemies.
Stow. Henry VI. Anno 1461.

Man. They say he yesterday cop'd Hector in the battell and stroke him downe, the disdainde & shame whereof, hath euer since kept Hector fasting and waking.
Shakspeare. Troylus and Cressida, fol. 79.

——— But Eve was Eve,
Thus far his over-match, who fell deceiv'd
And rash, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with, or his own.
Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 9.

Can such an one be a fit person to step into the throne of David to redeem Israel, and to cope with all the Roman power.
South. Sermons, vol. iii. p. 317.

In modern days the female pen
Is paramount, and copes with men.
Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

If we preserve a communication with him by prayer, for the assistance of his Holy Spirit, we are in constant danger of a relapse. Our own powers cannot cope with the subtleties of the world. Gilpin. Sermon 13. vol. i.

COPEMAN, A. S. ceapman.

For this we now say, chapman which is as much to say, as a merchant or cope-man.
Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, ch. vii.

Assure thee, Celia, he that would sell thee,
Only for hope of gaine, and that uncertaine,
He would have sold his part of paradise
For ready money, had he met a cope-man.
Ben Jonson. The Fox, act iii. sc. 7.

Was ever such a tatter'd rag of man's flesh
Patch'd up for copes-mate to my niece's daughter.
Ford. The Lady's Trial, act v. sc. 1.

Els my conclusion is,
" If not of worth, by force perforce,
To winne her from you all,
Yea though our banisht copes-mate could
His British succours call."
Warner. Albion's England.

COPENHAGEN, which the Danes call Kiobenhagen, that is Merchant's Haven, is the Capital of the Danish Monarchy, and ranks among the best built cities of Europe. It is situated on the east side of the fertile island of Zealand, about twenty miles south of the narrowest part of the Sound, which leads to the Baltic; and, like many other eminent sea-ports, its origin consisted only of a few fishermen's huts. It was granted in the latter part of the XIIth century, by the Danish Monarch, to Bishop Axel, who fortified it, and built a castle for its defence against the numerous pirates with which these seas were at that period infested. The protection to trade, which Copenhagen thus afforded, together with its advantageous situation for commerce, soon increased both its population and importance; and about the middle of the following century Copenhagen is represented as encompassed with ramparts and ditches. Soon afterwards it received the privileges of a town, and became the residence of the Court in 1443. Like many other northern towns, in the vicinity of which timber is abundant, Copenhagen, both then and in subsequent periods of its history, was chiefly composed of wood, and consequently much exposed to the ravages of fire. It is, indeed, to disasters of this kind, that a great part of its present regularity must be ascribed, particularly to those of 1728 and 1794, which reduced about 2600 private houses, besides churches and other public buildings, to ashes. The erection of wooden houses was then prohibited, and the new buildings are chiefly composed of brick or white calcareous stone; while many of the public edifices are composed either of free-stone, or Norwegian marble. Copenhagen exhibits a magnificent spectacle from the sea, and consists of three distinct parts; the Old Town, the New Town, or Frederick's Town, and Christian's Haven. The first is properly the City; and though it is still distinguished by the appellation of Old, it is the most modern of the three, having been principally raised since the destructive fires above referred to. A great part of the New Town was built by Frederick V., between 1746 and 1765; and its chief ornament is a large octagonal space, formed of palaces and other public buildings. This opens into four handsome streets, and in its centre stands a fine equestrian statue of its founder. Christian's Haven was principally built by Christian IV. on the small island of Amak, which is separated from Zealand by a channel, which forms the harbour. The entrance to this harbour is so narrow, that it is capable of admitting only one vessel at a time; but the interior is sufficiently capacious to contain 500 ships at once. Narrow as this channel was originally, it has been so far diminished by the encroachments of art, as to be crossed by two bridges, which thus unite the insulated part with the rest of the town. Copenhagen is not only the Capital of the Kingdom, but the grand emporium of its commerce, and the seat of nearly all the public buildings in the country. The four principal edifices in the octagonal space, above mentioned, which is called Frederick's Square, are the Palaces of the King, of the Crown Prince, and of the King's brother, and the Royal Marine Academy. The Bishop of Zealand has also a Palace in this Capital. Besides the Cathedral, which was destroyed by the British bombardment in 1807, there are twenty Churches, and various other places of worship. Some of the Hospitals of Copenhagen are distinguished for their architectural splendour. The Arsenal, the Exchange, and the Barracks are also worthy of attention. The principal residences of the Nobility are likewise handsome structures. The spire of Trinity Church is considered a master-piece of art, and contains the library belonging to the University; and the Royal Observatory, which is 130 feet high, and 70 in diameter, is distinguished by a spiral carriage road, composed of brick, and affording an easy ascent from the bottom to the top. The University was founded in 1479, and is well endowed; but still bears in its constitution the marks of an unlettered age. The average number of students is about 700, nearly one-fourth of whom are supported by the public funds. Copenhagen also contains a large Botanical Garden, with various Societies for the improvement of Arts and Sciences, as well as for other more restricted objects, as Scandinavian and Icelandic literature, Genealogy and Heraldry. It is about 170 miles nearly north from Hamburgh, and 315 south-west of Stockholm. Its population was computed at 71,000 in 1769; at 90,000 in 1801; and is now about 105,000. Latitude of the observatory 55° 41′ 4″ north, longitude 12° 35′ 6″ east.

COPEN-HAGEN.

COPIE.

COPIAPO, the most northerly Province of the State of Chili, separated on the north by the desert of Atacama from Peru; and from La Plata on the east, by the almost inaccessible Cordillera of the Andes; Coquimbo bounds it on the south, and the Pacific washes its eastern shores: its extent being about 100 leagues from north to south.

The climate of Copiapo is healthy, but very little or indeed no rain falls throughout its confines; heavy dews and numerous small rivers compensate, however, in a great measure for this want. Earthquakes seldom visit this Province; and no part of Chili is richer in minerals, particularly gold and copper; turquoises and other rare gems are also found in it, as well as fossil salt, sulphur, and lapis lazuli.

The chief Town is Copiapo in latitude 26° 50′ south and longitude 70° 18′ west, on a river of the same name, at whose estuary is the port of Copiapo, the best on this coast.

The City itself is twelve leagues from the Pacific, and contains about 400 families.

The chief rivers of this Province are: Copiapo, Salado, Castagno, Totoral, Quebradaponda, Chollai, and Guasco; the latter having also a port of the same name, with an increasing village in 27° 20′ south latitude.

On the southern boundary of the Province is the immense Andean Volcano del Copiapo, the height of which has not been ascertained.

CO′PIE,
Co′PIOUS,
Co′PIOUSLY,
Co′PIOUSNESS.

Lat. copis, contracted from copis; quasi cum ope. Varro and Vossius. The noun copie, adopted through the French by old writers, and among them by B. Jonson, is now obsolete.

Enough or more than enough, sufficiency, plenty, abundance, fulness, satiety.

And also the chanoyn of Robersart, who had always ben before a good Frenche man, at the renewyng of this warre he became Englysh and dyd fayth and homage to the kyng of Englande, who was right gladde of his seruice. Thus the knyghtes and squyers turned theyr copies on both parties.

Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 299.

After wee enterid the said king's londes we found all kindes of vitell plentie, and food for horse in great copie, as otherwyse in our other passages before made, store of gudlie rivers to drink.

Strype. Memorials. Richard Pace, the King's Ambassador to the Emperor.

Crying ofte that he shall not haue tyme ynough to prosecute this matier, that his audience is not receyuable of so high misteries, that he is drowned with copie of matier, and standeth in doubte where he may best begin. Udall. Mark, ch. viii.

Besides that Paul seemeth not a little to boast himselfe, if men looke on it with a carnall eye, for he saith, that he thinketh not himself inferiour vnto the hyest apostles: and sayth agayne, that if they glory to be the ministers of Christ (though he speak vnwisely) he is more copious in laboures, in stripes aboue measure.

Frith. Workes, fol. 64.

And surely of his tender fauour toward you, doth his gret goodnes prouide y^t^ such apparisions, reuelacions & miracles, should not bee to copious & comon, wherby good men seeing the thing at eye, should lese y^e^ great parte of y^t^ thei now merit by faith. Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 325.

My censurer blames me for not opening more copiously what the opinions of the Lollards and the Wicklifists were.

Burnett. Records. A Letter to Mr. Ansent.

COPIE. — COPILLI.

The Lacons could abide no length; the Sophister of Greece couldde through their copeonnes make an elephaunt of a flye, and a mountayne of a mose-hill. Coxall. Preface upon Lain.

I marle in what dull cold mooke he found this lady out? that (being a woman) she was blest with no more copie of wit, but to serve his humour thus.
Ben Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, act iii. sc. 3.

Those who have gone above me in that argument have made so copious a harvest, that the issue of my gatherings must needs have been but small, except I had with Ruth gleaned out of their sheaves. Hall. Remains, part i. p. 25.

If our barren wits were dried up, they might be copiously irrigated from these fruitful well-springs.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 383.

But I must now enter into the large field of our tongs copiousness, and perhaps long wander up and downe without finding easie way of issue, and yet leave many parts thereof unsearched.
Camden. Remains. The Excellencie of the English Tongue, p. 40.

Nature itself cannot err, and as men abound in copiousness of language; so they become more wise, or more mad than ordinary.
Hobbs. Of Man, part i. fol. 110.

The subject [doing good] is so copious, that the study of a whole life cannot exhaust it.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 3. vol. i.

And that he did publickly demonstrate the same in the anatomical theatre at Leyden, in a dog, out of whose eye being wounded the aqueous humour did so copiously flow, that the membranes appeared flaccid. Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

The diversions of the fallen angels, with the particular account of their place of habitation, are described with great pregnancy of thought, and copiousness of invention.
Spectator, No. 309.

I could account for his [Oree] improving in health as he grew older, only from his drinking less copiously of the ova in his present station as a private gentleman, than he had been accustomed to do when he was regent.
Cook. Voyage, vol. vi. book iii. ch. vii.

The sense of the laws, I am sure, is on my side, which are by no means sparing of the orator's time; it is not brevity, but copiousness, a full representation of every circumstance, which they recommend.
Melmoth. Pliny. To Cornelius Tacitus, book i. let. 20.

COPILLI, the headdress of those persons, who, in the Mexican pictures, are represented as having reached the Kingly station, and which, by a singular coincidence, strongly resembles the Imperial fillet worn on the forehead by the Peruvian Incas. Humboldt has given in his Researches, concerning the ancient inhabitants of America, a copy of a very curious Mexican Painting, which relates the genealogy of the Princes of Azcapozalco, a small district near Mexico; and Gemelli Carreri also gives figures of the Mexican Sovereigns, with their distinctive diadems, in his Giro del Mondo, as does the Abbé Clavigero, in his History of Mexico. Humboldt's Painting formed part of the collection wrested by the Mexican Government from the unfortunate Boturini, who in travelling through the country in 1736, to collect all possible information of its monuments and antiquities, was seized and sent prisoner to Spain; where, though acquitted of all suspicion, he was unable to regain his collection, which unfortunately for Science, has almost perished through negligence.

In the Codex Vaticanus is a representation of Montezuma, in his royal robes; his mantle, called Tlachquauhjo, is bordered with large pearls, his hair is turned back on the top of his head, and tied with a red riband, the warlike distinction of princes and commanders of armies; and his neck is ornamented with COR — COR a collar of jewels.

COPLAND ISLANDS, a small group lying off the east coast of Ireland, near the County of Down, on the south side of the entrance to the Bay of Belfast, and almost opposite Donaghadee. One of them contains a few cabins, principally inhabited by fishermen; and another, called Mew Island, has a light-house.

CO-PLANT, Lat. planto, of uncertain origin.

To plant with something else, at the same time, in the same place.

Now France being a pleasable and plain pervious continent, the Romans quickly found and noted themselves in every part thereof, and so co-planted their language, which in a short revolution of time came to be call'd Romand.
Howell. Letters B. book iv.

CO-PORTION, Lat. portio, from pars, a part or share. See COPARCENER.

Faire lady, let it not you seeme disgrace
To beare this burden on your daintie backe;
Myselfe will beare a part, co-portion of your packe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 2.

CO'PPER, s.
Co'PPER, adj.
Co'PPER, v.
Co'PPER-COLOURED,
Co'PPER-MINE,
Co'PPER-NOSE,
Co'PPER-PLATE,
Co'PPER-WIRE,
Co'PPERAS,
Co'PPERAS-WORK,
Co'PPERISH,
Co'PPERSMITH,
Co'PPERY.

Pr. cuyvre; It. cupro; Sp. cobre; Dutch. koper; Ger. kupfer; Lat. cuprum, i. e. æs Cyprium; Cyprian brass. Cuprum is not found in any writer earlier than Spartianus.

And making men's images of copper, he set each of them upon a saddle on horseback, and put fire within them, and placed a man with a paire of bellowes on the horse backe behinde every image. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i. fol. 58.

For lyke as to a true syluer grote a false coper grote is neuer the lesse contrary though it be quick syluered ouer, but so muche the more false in how much it is counterfeited the more lyke to the trouth, so, &c.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 220.

His sawcy coppered nose, and fierce staring eyes,
His common slanderous tales, which he did in this world devise,
Made Pluto stand in dread.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch. Marcus Cato, fol. 288.

For brass, no original, but a compound metall, is made of this stone [lapis calaminaris] and copper; and becometh more hard than copper alone, and therefore the more serviceable for many other purposes. Fuller. Worthies. Somersetshire.

Divers witnesses were produced, viva voce, who proved the death of several of the parliament party before Colchester, the shooting of poisoned bullets boiled in copperas from the town.
Whitelock. Memorials. Anno 1648.

In this fell there is a large vein of copperish sulphur.
Robinson. Natural History of Cumberland and Westm. 1709.

Within whose secret breast nice nature doth contrive
That mighty copper-mine, which not without its veins,
Of gold and silver found, it happily obtains
Of royalty the name.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 30.

Although it may be question, whether in this operation, the iron or coperose be transmuted, as may be doubted from the cognation of coperose with copper; and the quantity of iron, remaining after the conversion. Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. ii.

PER. — PER-INE IVER.

Skeakius illustrates this aphorisme, with an example of one Daniel Federer a copper-smith that was long melancholy, and in the end mad about the 27th yeare of his age, these varices or water beganne to arise in his thighes, and he was freed from his madnesse. Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 212.

And more for ranke despight, than for great paine,
Shakt his long locks, colour'd like copper-wire,
And bit his tawny beard to shew his raging ire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 4.

But as a poor pretending beau,
Because he fain would make a show,
Nor can arrive at silver lace,
Takes up with copper in the place.
Swift. To Mr. Delany.

For it may be that such a town hath no less than 500 families of copper-coloured people, besides the white.
Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1686.

Their hair is black and lank, and their skins of a dark copper-colour. Id. Ib. 1688.

Some of which I can show you, but have not yet made trial of it; which seemed to me, among others that looked upon it, to be copper-ore, and which did indeed, after fusion, yield very good copper. Boyle. Of the Unsuccessfulness of Experiments.

You shall see the particles of silver, that were roving up and down the liquor, fasten themselves in such swarms to the copper-plate, that they will appear in their native hue.
Id. Ib. The History of Fluidity, sec. 22.

About the making of which, those that kept the copperas-work at Deptford are wont, as themselves have upon the place informed me, to use good store of iron, to increase the quantity of their vitriol.
Id. Usefulness of Natural Philosophy. Appendix to Section 1. part ii.

To evade which argument some have answered, that here is meant some one particular and more notable adversary of the apostle, that continually set himself to oppose and persecute him, as Alexander the copper-smith, or the like.
Bishop Bull. Works. Sermon 5. vol. i.

It [the charr salmon] is found in Winander Mere in Westmoreland; in Llyn Cawellyn, near the foot of Snowdon; and before the discovery of the copper-mines, in those of Llynberis, but the mineral streams have entirely destroyed the fish in the last lakes.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Charr Salmon.

I also left with him the inscription plate he had before in keeping, and another small copper-plate, on which were engraved these words: Anchored here, His Britannic Majesty's Ships, Resolution and Adventure, September 1773.
Cook. Voyage, vol. iii. book i. ch. xii.

Copper is found in most parts of the globe; it is abundant in Cornwall and many other parts of England, and the ore of that county in particular is by no means inferior to the finest produced in Sweden. In parts of Ireland it is plentiful; and in Japan it is common. Its specific gravity varies from 7.788 to 8.584; it is the lightest of all metals, except iron and tin; it is easily malleable and ductile; and so tenacious, that a Copper wire measuring 0.078 in diameter is capable of supporting 302.26 lbs. avoirdupois. Mixed with tin it forms bronze, with zinc brass and pinchbeck. In ancient Chemistry it was distinguished by the sign of Venus ♀.

Copperas, a name given to Vitriol; it is green, blue, or white, as it is respectively a sulphat of iron, copper, or zinc; it is used in black dyes, in making ink, and tanning leather. Pliny (xxxiv. 30, 31,) mentions Copperas under the names Sory and Misy, so also Dioscorides, v. 117, 119.

Coppermine River, a large stream of North America falling into the Circumpolar Ocean; its source is in Lake Providence, latitude 64° 50′ north, longitude 112° 20′ west of Greenwich; it flows thence dilating continually into lagoons to Point Lake, which latter averages two miles in width; the source of another principal branch of the Coppermine River is in latitude 65° 12′ 40″ and longitude 113° 8′ 25″. The stream is about 100 yards broad to the Red Rock Lake, below which it augments, descending with a rapid current: the scenery on the adjacent shores and to the westward is very picturesque during the brief summer of these regions; but the country on the eastward is barren, and is thus characterised for many degrees in that direction. Between latitude 66° 30′ and 66° 35′ the Coppermine River breaks through a branch or continuation of the Rocky Mountains, and its course hitherto about north-northwest turns one point to the east of north; it becomes full of rapids, more contracted, and often pent between perpendicular rocky walls 150 feet high. The Copper Mountains extend from the left bank of the River in latitude 67° 15′. The ore found among the stones in the ravines has given its name to the stream, and to the mountains. No trees are found beyond latitude 67° 30′. At the mouth, latitude 67° 47′ 50″ north, longitude 115° 36′ 49″ west, and which an Island divides, the Coppermine River is nearly a mile broad, but very shallow and full of sand-bars. Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who was the first European that ever saw the Polar Sea of America, has laid down the latitude and longitude of the mouth of this River several degrees too far to the north and east. Captain Francklin found the rise of tide here only four inches; the variation of the magnetic needle was observed 46° 25′ 52″ east, and its dip 88° 5′ 7″. Richardson's River falls into the sea immediately to the west of the mouth. The whole length of the Coppermine River is about 350 miles from the head of Point Lake. White fish and a species of salmon (Poisson inconnu) are found in abundance.

COPPER-MINE RIVER. — COPPICE.

The neighbourhood of Lake Providence, the first source of the Coppermine River, was the principal scene of the sufferings of Captain Francklin and his companions, on their return overland from the shores of the Polar Sea in 1821, when they subsisted thirty-one days on the Tripe de Roche, (Lichen gyrophora.) Francklin's Voyage to the Polar Regions.

CO'PPICE, or Co'PSE, n. Co'PSE, v. Co'PSY, Co'PSE-WOOD. A little wood (says Minshew) from French couper, i. e. scindere, to cut down; because it is underwood not appointed to grow to great trees, but to be cut downe. Junius thinks, manifestly, from the Gr. κόπτειν, to cut. Κοπάδες, in Hesychius, is arbores cæduæ.

Mertilla. O that thy name were carv'd on every tree,
That as these plants still great, and greater grow,
Thy name, dear nymph, might be enlarged so,
That every grove and coppice might speak thee.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium. Nymphal 4.

By copsing the starvling in the places where they are new sown, [you may] cause them sometimes to overtake even their untouch'd contemporaries. Evelyn. Of Forest Trees, ch. iii.

Why kept he not amongst the fennes?
Or in the copses by,
Or in the woods, and braky glennes,
Where hawes and acorns lie?
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe. Eclogue 2.

But lo, from forth a copse that neighbours by,
A breeding jennet, lusty young and proud,
Adonis' trampling courser doth espy
And forth he rushes, snorts, and neighs aloud.
Shakspeare. Venus and Adonis.

COPPICE. Generally copps-wood should be cut close, and at intervals as the growth requires.

Evelyn. On Forest Trees, ch. iii. sec. 16.

COPRO-PHAGI. When the French advanced, our men fired upon them, both in front and from the coppices, with that fury, and with such success that they began to run.

Burnett. Own Times. Queen Anne, Anno 1708.

The proverb secures for the most parts of England, that an acre of coppice-wood is as good as an acre of wheat land, if not much better.

Letters from several persons to Mr. Boyle.

Try we thy candour farther: higher art
And more luxurious, haply too, more vain,
Adorns yon southern coppice.

Mason. The English Garden.

The tardy loiterers of his dwindling copse.

Dodsley. Agriculture, can. 2.

——— Let the bulky wain
Through dusty roads roll nodding; or the bark
That silently adown the cerule stream
Glides with white sails, dispense the downy freight
To copsy villages on either side,
And spiry towns.

Dyer. The Fleece, book ii.

CO'PPLED, adj. } A diminutive of Cop; the top
Co'PPLE, n. } or head.

——— So school boys do aspire,
With coppel'd hat to quelm the bee all arm'd with ire.

More. On the Soul, part i. book i. st. 25.

The Cape de la Vela lieth with a redde shewe not very high; and without this cape about a league there is a little coppled rocke. Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The first ruttier to the West Indies, vol. iii. fol. 606.

And then presently thou shalt see the Cape del Aguja: the marks thereof are these: it is a low Cape, and vpon it is a copple not very high, and there beginneth the high land of the Sierras Neuadas, or snowy mountains. Id. Ib. vol. iii. fol. 606.

COPRIS, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Coleoptera, family Coprophagi. Generic character: the last articulation of the labial palpi very distinct; thorax shorter than the elytra, broader than it is long; abdomen elevated, convex; anterior feet nearly of the same length as the others, and terminated by a tarsus.

Type, C. lunaris, Fab.

The insects of this genus live on dung. Many of them have the thorax horned, and very singularly spined. The colours are generally very rich and brilliant, though the hues are dark.

COPROPHAGI, in Zoology, (κόπρος, dung, φάγειν, to eat,) a family of insects of the order Coleoptera, consisting of the genera Ateuchus, Sisyphus, Copris, Onitis, Onthophagus, all formed from the overgrown genus Scarabæus of Linnæus.

The Naturalist who is disposed to enter with ardour into the study of the habits of animals, must necessarily be often brought into contact with objects the most repugnant to his senses. In the pursuit of Entomology, his investigations will not always be carried on amidst the sweets and freshness of flowers and verdure; he must be content at times to examine with disgusting minuteness the most repulsive and filthy objects; carcases half putrid, vegetables undergoing decomposition, or the stercoraceous covering of the farmyard. But his prejudices once overcome, and his sight and smell once familiarized to such objects, he will be amply rewarded for his discomfort by the number and interest of the species which are to be found only in such situations; and amongst these are the whole family of Coprophagi, which, as their name imports, feed on the excrements of animals.

Without any particular beauty of form or of colours, living on the most disgusting substances, and having their habitation only in the midst of their fœtid and repulsive food, several of these insects have received the homage of man, and have even been the objects of divine worship. The sacred Beetle of the Egyptians (Ateuchus sacer) is well known from the frequent occurrence of its representation in the antiquities of that country. On the columns of their temples, on the pyramids, in metal, in stone, in relief or merely engraved, it is constantly met with in connection with whatever bears the character of their ancient religion. This worship, however, like most of the circumstances connected with the idolatry of that extraordinary people, must be considered as symbolical. The appearance of this insect immediately succeeds the return of the Nile into its bed, and indicates the period of seed-time. It is extremely probable that this circumstance first gave it a character of importance to the inhabitants, and that it consequently became associated with other objects of worship, whose honours originated in similar relations to the great source of their national subsistence and wealth.

These insects are inhabitants of warm climates. Their habits are in many respects very curious and interesting. The eggs are laid in a portion of dung, which is made into a ball, and rolled with great assiduity until it becomes perfectly round. This is frequently the work of two or three individuals. A favourable situation is then sought for, in which a hole is dug in the earth, the ball of dung enclosing the egg, is carefully placed in this hole, and then covered over. On this ball of dung the larva afterwards lives.

These habits are peculiar to the Ateuchi. The other insects of this family dig holes in the earth immediately under the matters on which they live, for the reception of their young, which are thus provided with nourishment as soon as they leave the egg. Latreille, Hist. Nat. x.

COPROSMA, in Botany, a genus of the class Polygamia, order Monoecia. Generic character: hermaphrodite flower, calyx inferior, five-toothed; corolla funnel-shaped, five, six or seven-cleft; stamens five, six or seven; styles two; berry globular, two-seeded.

Two species, natives of New Zealand. Willd.

COPT, a name given to the natives of Egypt, belonging to the Jacobite or Monophysite sect, is a term of Arabian origin, and manifestly a corruption of the Greek word Αἰγύπτιος, converted by the Arabs into Kubtí or Kibtí, pronounced Gubtí or Gybtí by the Egyptians, according as the ancient or modern sound is given to the γ in the original word. It was restricted, probably from the very beginning of the Musulmán power in Egypt, to the Jacobite sect, who were not only exclusively of pure Egyptian blood, but also far more numerous than their adversaries, the Melkites; Greeks in faith as well as origin. The Jacobites, who were heretics in the estimation of the Greek Emperor, had consequently been repressed and persecuted, and were therefore willing to submit to the arms of Amrú-Ibn el-âás, the Arabian commander, who granted to them immunities not previously possessed. Their Patriarch, who had been deposed by the Emperor Heraclius, was reestablished, and their church for ever shielded from the encroachments of the Constantinopolitan See. But a military and spiritual despotism, such as that established by Mohammed, offers no real security for the peace and welfare of the subject; and the Copts soon found that their privileges would be of little avail under oppressive or fanatical Princes. Their wealth, numbers, and respectability, rapidly declined, and though rarely intermarrying with their conquerors, and preserving their features, manners, and religion, unaltered, they soon lost their language, which had resisted the influence of a Grecian Court for so many ages. Their alphabetical characters, which, with a very few exceptions, were borrowed from the Greek, and probably first introduced towards the latter end of the IIId century, had contributed to preserve their language in its original form, while a desire of instructing the people had led the Monks to compose many religious works in their vernacular tongue; but the poverty and ignorance which soon sprung up from the oppression under which they laboured, could not fail to cut them off from the use of such instructors, and accustom them to neglect a language which served only as an invidious distinction. In the Lower, or Northern Provinces, it appears to have been little, if at all, spoken so early as the Xth century, though used and studied as a learned language as late as the XVth. In the Sâìd, or Upper Egypt, less exposed to foreign influence, it prevailed for a much longer period, and the peculiar dialect of that country was generally spoken by the people in the beginning of the XVIth century; Vansleb, who was there in the latter part of the XVIIth, saw the last of the Copts to whom this language could be said to be vernacular. It is an original tongue, having no distinct affinity with any other, though many Greek words have been introduced, unaltered, by Christian writers, and several terms appear to have been anciently borrowed from the Hebrew. The Coptic version of the New Testament, is valuable on account of its antiquity, dating according to several Critics as early as the IId century, and not later than the Vth, at the lowest computation. As a relic of the ancient Egyptian, also, the Coptic language is deserving of attention, and the light which a study of the fragments written in it, will throw on the history and antiquities of ancient Egypt, has been clearly shown in M. Quatremère's able works cited below.

In person and features the Copts differ much from the other natives of Egypt, and are evidently a distinct race; an intermediate link in the chain which connects the Negro with the fairer tribes to the north and south of the Tropics; strongly resembling the Abyssinians, who, though extremely dark, are much paler than the genuine Negroes. Dark eyes, aquiline noses, and curled hair, are the usual characteristics of both nations; and the mummies which have been examined evidently point out the resemblance which the Copts bear to their ancestors. (Blumenbach, in Comment. Reg. Soc. Goettingen, xiv. 38.) Reduced by a long series of oppression and misrule to a low state of degradation, their number and national character have rapidly declined; so that, at the highest calculation, they do not now amount to more than one-fifth of the whole population, or between 400,000 and 500,000 souls. They are chiefly employed as agricultural labourers, though several in the larger cities are engaged in manufactures and commerce, or employed as clerks in the public offices belonging to the revenue department. They are quiet, industrious, and saturnine; but are often represented by travellers as crafty, fraudulent, and revengeful. All, however, allow that they show a capacity and dispositions which, under more favourable circumstances, would raise them to a respectable rank in the scale of civilized nations.

(See Description de l'Egypte; Denon, Voy. dans l'Egypte, Paris, 1802; Hartmann's Beschreibung von Ægypten, Hamburgh, 1799; Volney, Voyage, i. ch. vi. p. 74. For the language; Adelung's Mithridates, iii. 64; Quatremère, Recherches sur la langue, &c. de l'Egypte, Paris, 1808. sec. 1 and 2; Didymi Taurinensis (i. e. Thomæ Valpergæ) Literaturæ Copticæ rudimentum, Parmæ, 1783; Christ. Scholtz Gramm. Ægyptiaca, Oxon. 1778; La Croze, Lexicon Ægyptiaco-Latinum, Oxon. 1778; P. E. Jablonskii Opuscula, Ludg. Bat. 1804.)

COPTANK, the same as copatan. See Cop. Mr. Nares produces an instance of it written coppletank; and another coppin-tank. Other Examples are given by Mr. Steevens, in his Note on Copetan.

Ulysses revileth not Thersites with these termes. Thou halting and lame squire, thou bald-pate, thou coptank; thou art camel-backt, crump-shouldered: but rather reproacheth him with his vaine babbling and indiscreet language.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 39.

For he went not without breeches, nor did wear a long gown trayling on the ground, nor a high coptanct hat, but took a mean apparel between the Medes and the Persians.
North. Plutarch. Alexander the Great.

COPTIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Polyandria, order Polygynia, natural order Ranunculaceæ. Generic character: calyx none; corolla, petals five or six; nectaries five or six, hood-shaped; pericarps six to ten, four to six-seeded.

This genus, divided from Helleborus, contains two species, natives of North America. Linn. Soc. Trans. vol. viii.

CO'PULATE, v. Co'PULATE, adj. COPULA'TION, Co'PULATIVE, adj. Co'PULATIVE, n. COPULA'TIVELY. Lat. copulare, atum. Vossius, Συμπλοκὴ, a πλοκὴ, sive πλοκὰ, (from πλέκ-ειν, plect-ere, nect-ere,) and by metathesis copla: or it may be from the Hebrew. Scheidius thinks copula is co-apula, from apio, i. e. necto.

To connect, to conjoin, to unite; and sometimes restricted, as couple is, to the conjunction or union of two only. See to Brace.

He shal be born by the copulation of the father and mother, as other men: not, as some say, of a lone virgin.
Strype. Memorials. A Popish Discourse of Antichrist.

This man is so cunning in his inclusiues & exclusiues, that he dyscerneth nothing betwene copulatiues and disiunctiues.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 943.

Great feasts were made in Holland, and great sport,
Because of this new match of copulation,
But greater shall in Zeland by report,
For which there was great care and preparation.
Harrington. Orlando, book ix. st. 87.

For the conjunction καὶ is not to be taken here for a copulative, but, as vau is frequently in the Hebrew, for a conjunction casual.
Mede. Works. Discourse 24. book i.

But if the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate, and conjoyned, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon. Essays. Of Custom and Education, ess. 39.

By this rule it is also, that words are taken and construed, sometimes by extension; sometimes by restriction; sometimes by implication: sometimes a disjunctiue for a copulatiue; a copulatiue for a disjunctiue.
State Trials. The Case of the Postnati.

Otherwise I suppose it would have been joyned to the word "strangers" by a conjunction disjunctive, which is usual where the words are of one sense; and not by a copulative, as here it is.
State Trials. The Great Case of Impositions.

Then the promise in the same tenour copulatively. And will give unto thee (still with the same specialty) the keys, &c. and whatsoever thou, &c.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. fol. 384.

But, I suppose, we owe this benefit wholly to the growth and progress of Christianity in the North, by which early and undistinguished copulation, or multitude of wives, were either restrained or abrogated.
Sir William Temple. On the United Provinces, ch. i.

And for the same reason I understand the Israel of God, to be the same with those who walk by this rule, though join'd with them by the copulative καὶ, and; no very unusual way of speaking. Locke. Works. Galatians, ch. vi. 11—18. note 16.

Like land animals they have warm blood, copulate, bring forth, and suckle their young, shewing a strong attachment to them.
Pennant. British Zoology. Cetaceous Fishes.

The other season in which it is dangerous to come in their [bears] way, is at the time of their copulation, which is generally about this time of the year.
Cook. Voyage, vol. vii. book v. ch. v.

CO'PY, v.
Co'PY, n.
Co'PYING,
Co'PY-BOOK,
Co'PY-HOLD,
Co'PY-HOLDER,
Co'PY-MONEY,
Co'PY-RIGHT,
Co'PIER, or Co'PYER,
Co'PYIST,
Co'PIST.

Fr. copier; It. copiare; Sp. copiar; Dutch kopieren. Copiam dare, copiam facere exscribendi, describendi. See Junius, Skinner, and Menage. To copy is To multiply writings; i. e. to write from another writing what is there written; to write, to transcribe, describe or delineate from any pattern, model or example; to describe or delineate in imitation or resemblance; to imitate; to strive to resemble,—to follow an example.

But neither I, neither all the frēdes I could make, might attaine any copie, but onely one written copie, whiche as it seemed was drawen out in great hast: notwithstandyng I can not well iudge what the cause should bee, that his boke is kept so secret.
Frith. Workes, fol. 108.

For your vntruthe, now are ye shent
Yo bare yourself, somwhat to bold,
Therfore ye lost, your copy-hold.
Skelton. Against the Scottes.

Then with relaxed rein admonishing
Her smoaking steeds; they snatch'd her coach away
With sparkling, foaming fervor, copying
Her hasty indignation.
Beaumont. Psyche, can. 5. st. 250.

KAT. Faire as a text B. in a coppie-booke.
Shakspeare. Love's Labour Lost, fol. 137.

For one and twenty yeeres, or for three liues,
Chuse which thou wilt, I'll make the a copy-holder,
And thy first bill vnquestion'd.
Ben Jonson. The Staple of Newes, act ii. sc. 2.

These, and a thousand more, the fane adorne;
Their fates were painted, ere the men were born,
All copied from the heavens, and ruling force
Of the red star, in his revolving course.
Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

Let the faint copier on old Tiber's shore,
Nor mean the task, each breathing bust explore,
Line after line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace.
Tickell. To Sir Godfrey Kneller.

This order has produced great numbers of tolerable copyers in painting, good rhimers in poetry, and harmless projectors in politicks. Tatler, No. 166.

I need not enlarge on this relation; it is evident from hence, that the Sorbonists were the original, and our schismaticks in England were the copiers of rebellion; that Paris began, and London followed.
Dryden. Vindication of the Duke of Guise.

This person suddenly going for Africk before the transcript had been examined, and not taking care to leave all the first copy, the author found one or two [blanks] where he was not able to repair the copist's omissions.
Boyle. History of Cold. The Publisher to the Reader.

Now whether the writer be poet, philosopher, or whatever kind; he is in truth no other than a copist after nature.
Shaftsbury. Advice to an Author, part iii. sec. 3.

Learn hence for ancient rules a just esteem,
To copy nature, is to copy them.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

These form the body of Roman law, or corpus juris civilis, as published about the time of Justinian; which, however, fell soon into neglect and oblivion, till about the year 1130, when a copy of the digests was found at Amalfi in Italy.
Blackstone. Commentaries. Introduction, sec. 3. p. 81.

The sale of literary copies for the purpose of recital or multiplication, is certainly as ancient as the times of Terence, Martial, and Statius. Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 407.

I was always the favourite of my mistress; she used to call me to read and show my copy-book to all strangers, who never dismissed me without commendation, and very seldom without a shilling. Johnson. The Idler, No. 26.

The differences of these inferiour tenants were decided in the lords' court, in which his steward sat as judge; and this manner of tenure probably gave an origin to copy-holders.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History.

This primary or original copying, which in the ideas of Philosophy is imitation, is, in the language of criticism, called invention. Hurd. Works. Poetical Imitation, sec. i.

Notwithstanding that prediction, it does not appear that, besides the copy-money, any advantage accrued to the author of a poem, written with the elegance and energy of Pope.
Murphy. Life of Johnson.

Lee had thy [Dryden's] fire, and Congreve had thy wit
And copyists, here and there, some likeness hit
But none possess'd thy graces, and thy ease;
In thee alone 'twas natural to please!
Hart. The Visions of Death.

But as all these copyists were not equally dexterous in effacing and cleaning these manuscripts, I have seen some in which a part at least of the former writing might be read.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

COPY-HOLD, in Law, a tenure for which the tenant hath nothing to show but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of the Lord's Court, on such tenants being admitted to parcel of the lands belonging to the manor. Sir Edward Coke, and almost all the writers on this subject, have derived the tenure of Copyholds from the state of Villenage. It is probable that it originated at a time when the Lords and Barons of the Kingdom had tracts of land granted out to them by the Crown to hold by feudal tenure; which, from their extent, they were unable to cultivate, and consequently they allotted small portions to their Vassals and Bondsmen, as rewards for their services in intestine wars, or as a consideration for performing certain services to their Lords; as cultivating the portion of land retained in the Lord's own hands, which was called Demesne Land; granting to their retainers the freehold of the remainder to be held of them by military or other free services, and this was called Seigniory Lordship or Manor.

The acquiescence of Lords of Manors to their Villeins, holding their lands as long as they performed their services, and in permitting their children to succeed to them, advanced the pretensions of the Villeins in opposition to the absolute rights of the Lords, so as to give them a kind of presumptive or customary right to their possessions; which, in course of time, was noticed by the Courts of Justice, and, under their sanction, became at length a part of the Common Law. These tenants, having no other title to their estates but custom, and admission in pursuance of such custom, entered on the rolls of the Lord's customary Court, or copies of such entries, they were called Tenants by Copy of Court-roll, and their tenure itself a Copy-hold or customary estate

PY-HOLD. — UET.

A Copy-hold estate may therefore be described to be part of the demesnes of a manor, held at the will of the Lord, according to the custom of the manor; which customs are infinite, and vary in almost every manor, by a grant from the Lord, and an admittance of the tenant entered on the rolls of the manor Court. And there are four circumstances necessary to the existence of a Copy-hold estate: a manor, a Court, the lands must be parcel of, and situated within the manor of which they are held, and they must have been demised or demisable by Copy of Court-roll from time immemorial. The first mention of tenant by Copy of Court-roll, is in the latter end of the reign of Edward III.

Copy-hold tenants are prevented voting at the election of Knights of the Shire, by 31 George II. c. xiv. Mr. Cruise, in his Digest, vol. i. p. 293, treats on the incidents to Copy-holds, of fines, and herriots, as connected with them, and of the forfeiture, extinguishment, and suspension of them; to which, and Mr. Scriven's Treatise, we must refer our readers for much interesting information connected with them.

COQUE'T, v.
Co'QUET, n.
Co'QUETTE, adj.
Co'QUETTY,
Co'QUETTISH.

Cocket, brisk, apish, pert. North. Grose. Perhaps, as Skinner thinks, from the Fr. "coqueter, i. e. to chuck, as a cock among hens; also to strowt it, like a cock on his own dunghill." Cotgrave, who in V. Coquardise, uses cocketness, as its English equivalent. Coquetry is applied to Assumed, pretended, affected, forced liveliness, vivacity, or cheerfulness; to insincere attempts—to please or be pleasing, to be agreeable, attractive or alluring.

> Phillis, who but a month ago
> Was marry'd to the Tunbridge beau,
> I saw coquetting t' other night
> In public with that odious knight.
> Swift. Cadenus and Vanessa.

The coquet is in particular a great mistress of that part of oratory which is called action, and indeed seems to speak for no other purpose, but as it gives her an opportunity of stirring a limb, or varying a feature, of glancing her eyes, or playing with her fan. Spectator, No. 297.

> The vain coquette each suit disdains,
> And glories in her lover's pains.
> With age she fades, each lover flies;
> Contemn'd, forlorn, she pines and dies.
> Gay. Fables. The Father and Jupiter, fab. 33.

> Coquet and coy at once her air,
> Both study'd, though both seem neglected;
> Careless she is with artful care,
> Affecting to seem unaffected.
> Congreve. Amoret.

If a man considers that all his heavy complaints of wounds and deaths rise from some little affectations of coquettry, which are improved into charms by his own fond imagination, the very laying before himself the cause of his distemper, may be sufficient to effect the cure of it. Spectator, No. 377.

COQUET. — COQUIMBO

The most steady foresight and predisposing order to have every body and every thing ready in its place, and prepared to take advantage of the fortunate figurative moment in this coquetting climate of ours. Burke. On Scarcity.

Leviculus discovered that this coarseness was nothing more than the coquetry of Cornhill, and the next day returned to the attack. Johnson. The Rambler, No. 182.

> So you with coy coquettish art
> Play wanton round your lover's heart
> Invisible and free:
> Love's balmy blessing would you try,
> No longer sport a butterfly
> But imitate the bee.
> P. Whitehead. The Butterfly and the Bee.

COQUIMBANES, three Islands so called, which lie off the coast of Coquimbo, and are named Maxillones, Totoral, and Pajaros. They are each about six or eight miles in circumference, but are uninhabited. Totoral is in longitude 29° 20′ south, Maxillones in 29° 30′, and Pajaros is a short distance southward of the latter, forming with the islets a chain from Point Yerva Buena to a little above the cape on the northern side of the Bay of Coquimbo.

COQUIMBO, the name of a Province of Chili, containing about 15,000 people, and also of its chief Town. This Province is the second in descending the shores of the Pacific from Peru, and that Ocean washes its eastern boundary, the Andes limit it on the west, Copiapo bounds it on the north, and Aconcagua and Quillota on the south. Its climate is mild, and the air pure and healthy. Gold, copper, and iron exist in abundance throughout its confines, and silver, lead, sulphur, and salt are found in considerable quantities, whilst the soil yields most productively vines, olives, and every kind of European, as well as of tropical plants.

The largest copper mine in this part of Chili is situated on the Cerro Verde, which rises from the plain in a conical form, and serves as a land-mark to the Port of Coquimbo.

Coquimbo, in a broken and uneven surface of about forty-five leagues in length by forty in breadth, possesses many small rivers, of which the Coquimbo, Tongol, Chuapa, and Limari are those only which are worthy of notice.

It has, like all the other Chilian departments, a series of volcanoes on its Andean frontier, the most noted being those named Coquimbo and Limari.

There are few places of importance in this Province. Coquimbo, the Capital, also called La Serena, from the place in Spain where Valdivia, who founded it in 1544, was born, is situated in latitude 30° south and in longitude 71° 18′ west, on the banks of the Rio Coquimbo, about a mile from the junction of that river with the Pacific, and commanding extensive views of the ocean, river, and country, which are very picturesque. The streets are wide, but ill-built, and intersect each other at right angles, so as to form regular squares and gardens; each house being provided with ground well filled with fruit trees and esculent vegetables, to which, during the earthquakes, the inhabitants resort for safety. There is a parish Church, five large conventual Churches, a Town-house, and a College built by the Jesuits; the number of inhabitants does not, however, probably exceed 3000.

This town possesses a good port, about two leagues distant; the Bay of Coquimbo being reckoned almost the only good one on the coast, ships lying safely in it, as they are sheltered by several islands. The English cruisers took Coquimbo many times during the wars between Spain and England.

COQUIMBO. — CORACIAS.

About twenty-two miles of Coquimbo southward, and in latitude 30° 17′ south, is another harbour formed by the river Tongoi, where there is a settlement, at which vessels for Peru load with hides, copper, tallow, fruit, wine, oil, and dried meats.

CORAAGE, coraagium, (corus, a Jewish measure, containing a Camel's load, about thirty bushels,) an extraordinary impost, probably discharged in corn. It is explained by Bracton, to be one of those contributions quæ nec servitia dicuntur nec de consuetudine veniunt, nisi cum necessitas intervenerit, vel cum Rex venerit, xi. 116. 8. Du Cange, however, (ad voc.) is inclined to read Cornagium (q. v.) in this passage.

CORACIAS, from the Greek κορακίας, corvo similis, Lin.; Roller, Pen. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Conirostres, order Passeres, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak strong, compressed at the base, and the point slightly hooked; nostrils oblong, placed at the edge of the feathers, but uncovered by them; feet short and strong.

This genus belongs to the Old World, and very nearly resembles the Jay (Corvus Glandularis) in its habits, and the loose feathers on the forehead; their plumage is very vivid and beautiful; their note very unharmonious. They have been divided into three subgenera by Cuvier.

α Rollers Proper.

Have the beak straight, and deeper than it is wide.

C. Gracula, Lin.; le Rollier, Buff.; Roller, Pen. Is the only British species, and very rare here; it is about the size of the Jay, and has the bill black, straight, and slightly hooked at the point, with five pairs of bristles at the base; a bare spot behind each ear and about the eyes; head, neck, breast, and belly of a light bluish green; back and feathers of the wings nearest it of a reddish brown; coverts on the ridges of the wings deep blue, beneath them pale green; upper parts and tips of the quill feathers dusky; tail consisting of twelve feathers of a light bluish green, the outer one on each side tipped with deep blue; legs short, and of a dirty yellow. It is a very wild bird, although sociable with its own species; builds in birch trees, and feeds upon worms, grain, and roots. It makes a chattering noise, whence its name Garrulus. The young do not obtain their bright plumage till the second year. It is most common in the warmer parts of the Old Continent, particularly in Africa, but has been found as far north as Sweden.

C. Benghalensis, C. Indica, Lin.; le Cuit ou Rollier de Mindanao, Buff.; Bengal Roller, Lath. Very similar to the preceding, but the colours more vivid; the whole wing varied with deep and light blue, forming five bands; the rump and upper division of the tail of a deep blue, the middle pale green, and the tips deep blue; its two middle feathers of a dull green. Native of India.

C. Abyssinica, Lin.; le Rollier du Senegal et d'Abyssinie, Buff.; Sheregrig, Bruce's Travels; White-fronted Roller, Shaw. Its wings marked with bars of deep and light blue; at the root of the beak the feathers are white; the two outer tail feathers longer by five inches than the others, and the projecting part of a deep blue; legs reddish brown. Native of Abyssinia. This species is the same as the Swallow-tailed Indian Roller, of Edwards, and the C. Senegalensis, of Linnæus.

C. Cyanogaster, and C. Viridis, belong to this division.

β Colares.

Beak shorter, more arched, and wider at the base than deep.

C. Orientalis, Lin.; le Rollier des Indes, Buff.; Oriental Roller, Shaw. About the size of a Jay, but of a heavy shape and greenish brown colour; bill dull yellow; wings reaching to the tip of the tail, barred with deep blue, sea-green middle, and black tips; base of the tail deep blue, remainder of it black; legs brown. Native of the East Indies.

C. Madagascariensis, Lath.; le Rollier de Madagascar, Buff.; Madagascar Roller, Lath. Of an inelegant shape, but beautiful plumage, purple, ferruginous above, and inclining to blossom colour beneath; quill feathers blue black; rump, vent, and tail blue green, tipped with blue and black; bill dull yellow; legs reddish brown. Native of Madagascar.

C. Afra, Lath. Very nearly resembles the last species, and Dr. Shaw seems inclined to think it merely a variety.

γ Mainates.

Beak of the last subgenus; fleshy tubercles on some parts of the head instead of feathers; the feathers covering the nostrils having a velvet-like appearance.

C. Religiosa, Cuv.; Gracula Religiosa, Lin.; le Mainate, Buff.; Minor Grakle, Lath.; Minor or Mino, Edwards. Is about the size of a Thrush, of a beautiful black colour; the beak and caruncles on the head yellow; the feathers on each side point into the bill as far as the nostrils, and those on the occiput resembling hairs or velvet, in fineness; the bottoms of some of the quills white, forming a white spot on the middle of the wing; legs and feet yellow. Native of India. They are remarkable, as being the best imitators of the human voice. Edwards describes two varieties of them, the Lesser and the Greater; the bill of the former being red at its base, and yellow at the point, whilst in the latter it is all yellow.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ à Gmelin; Buffon, Histoire Naturelle des Oiseaux; Pennant's British Zoology; Shaw's General Zoology.

CORACLE, Brit. crwg, a trunk; a boat used by fishermen on the Welsh rivers. It was employed at the time of Cæsar's invasion; and Cæsar himself profited by his observation of it, to extricate himself when his bridges had been broken down by a storm, and his troops were enclosed between the rivers Sicoris and Cinga, without any adequate supply of provisions. Quum in his angustiis res esset, atque omnes viæ ab Afranianis militibus equitibusque obsiderentur; nec pontes perfici possent: imperat militibus Cæsar ut naves faciant, cujus generis eum superioribus annis usus Britanniæ docuerat. Carinæ primum ac statumina ex levi materiâ fiebant; reliquum navium corpus viminibus contextum, coriis integebatur. (De Bell. Civ. l. 54.) Pliny informs us that the Britons ventured a six days' voyage to the Island of Mictis (be this what it may) in these frail barks; vitilibus navigiis corio circumsutis, iv. 30; vii. 57; Solinus, in his paraphrase of the last of the passages here referred to, (22) derives vitilis not from vimen, but from viere, a word used by Ennius and Varro, and signifying to hoop or bind with twigs. The vessels used by the Armenians, in voyaging down the Euphrates to Babylon, though differing in size, and constructed for other purposes, were built on the same principle, (Herod. i. 194,) and the similarity has been noticed by Lucan.

Primum cana salix madefacto vimine parvam
Texitur in puppem, cæsoque inducta juvenco
Vectoris patiens tumidum superenatat amnem.
Sic Venetus stagnante Pado, fusoque Britannus
Navigat Oceano; sic cum tenet omnia Nilus
Conseritur bibulâ Memphitis cymba papyro. iv. 131

Carabus is the name under which the Coracle is described by later Latin writers: Carabus parva scapha ex vimine facta, quæ contexta crudo corio genus navigii præbet, Isiod. xix. 1; and Papias, as well as Lucan, mentions that they were employed on the Po. Carabus navicula discurrens in Pado, id est linter. Est autem ex vimine et corio. Hence probably is derived the Dutch Caravel, q. v.

The form of the Coracle is nearly oval, flattened at one end like the keel of a common boat; its length is usually from five to six feet, its breadth about four. The frame is formed of split rods plaited like basket-work, and covered on the outside with a raw hide, or with strong coarse flannel rendered water-tight by a thick coating of tar. The fisherman sits on a narrow board fastened across the middle, and thence guides his vessel with a paddle. It holds only one person with convenience; and it is carried to and from the water, strapped on the back of its owners. Its usual weight is 40 or 50 pounds, though a Welsh proverb describes it as much heavier, Llwyth gwr ei gorwg; His Coracle should be a man's load.

CO'RAL, n.
Co'RAL, adj.
Co'RALLINE,
Co'RALLOID, adj.
Co'RALLOIDAL,
Co'RAL-CROWNED,
Co'RAL-GROVE,
Co'RAL-PAVEN,
Co'RAL-ROCKS,
Co'RAL-SAND,
Co'RAL-STRING.

Lat. corallium; Gr κοράλλιον; of unsettled Etymology. Vossius produces various conjectures, and among them, that contained in the passage quoted from Holland's Translation of Pliny, q. v.

Of small corall aboute hire arm she bare
A pair of bedes, gauded all with grene;
And theron hong a broche of gold ful shene.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 158.

And al the mount was set ful of christal coralles, & rich rockes of rubie curiously counterfaited & full of roses & pomgranates as though thei grewe. Hall. Henry VIII. The nineteenth Yere.

A little mouth with decent chin, a corall lip of hue;
With teethe as white as whale his bone
ech one in order due.
Turbervile. Praise of his Loue.

Besides which fuci, the Dr. tells me, he observed vessels and seed in coralloid shrubs.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book x. note (p.)

It is said that this plant [corall] whilst it groweth and is alive, if a man touch it never so little, becomes as hard immediatly as a stone. The fishers therefore to prevent that inconvenience (as knowing the nature thereof) either pluck it up with their nets, or cut it with some sharpe edged yron tooles: which is the cause that it is commonly called curalium, as some make interpretation of the word. (ὅτι ἐν ἀλὶ κυρεῖται, because it is cut and shorne (as it were) in the sea.) Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 429.

CLEON. These be but weeds and trash he brings,
I'll give thee solid costly things;
His will wither and be gone
Before thou well can'st put them on;
With coral I will have thee crown'd,
Whose branches intricately wound
Shall girt thy temples every way.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium. Nymphal 2.

——————— Those that keep
Amongst the coral-groves in the Virgevian deep.
Id. Poly-olbion, song 10.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may endurate under water without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions.
Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. v.

When instantly he pluck'd out of his pocket a coral-string, with lac'd beads of gold, and put it about her neck.
Shelton. Don Quixote, ch. ix. vol. iv. p. 69.

It is a tradition amongst naturalists that coral grows soft at the bottom of the sea, but when it is brought up into the open air, though it retains its bulk and figure, it hardens into a stony concretion. Boyle. History of Firmness.

But sounding again at one o'clock in the morning, August 1, we had but 25 fathom, coral-rocks;—for at two in the morning we had 26 fathom coral still, at three we had 28 coral-ground.
Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1699.

The sea-gods from their pearl embroider'd beds,
Who to great George the green dominion gave,
No longer lift their coral-crowned heads,
But dive distress'd beneath the trembling wave.
Cunningham. On the Death of his late Majesty.

A goddess from thy mossy brink
Asks of thy crystal stream to drink:
Lo! Pallas asks the friendly gift;
Thy coral-crowned tresses lift.
Warton. Ode for Music.

With spiral shell,
Full-blasted, tell
That all your watery realms should ring;
Your pearl-alcoves,
Your coral-groves,
Should echo theirs, and Britain's king.
Young. Ocean.

Emerging from their coral-paven cave,
Thetis and Doris walk upon the wave.
Fawkes. A Description of Man.

The weather being squally, with rain, I anchored, at the approach of night, in fifteen fathoms' deep water, over a bottom of coral-sand, and shells.
Cook. Voyage, vol. v. book ii. ch. iii.

CORALLIUM, in Zoology, a genus of the Polypi vaginati, of Lamarck. Generic character: polypary fixed, plant-shaped, not jointed, covered with a cortical crust; central stem, branched, stony, solid, striated on the surface; crust consisting of a soft fleshy substance, containing the polypi; when dried, porous and hardened; cells scattered, eight-valved; tentacula eight, ciliated, and radiate at the mouth of the polypi.

The only species of this genus is the Isis nobilis, of Linnæus, so well known under the name of Red Coral, and which is manufactured into various ornaments. It is the production of the ocean in general in warm climates.

The Red Coral (C. rubrum) was well known to the ancients. It was, however, only in later ages that its true nature was understood. Theophrastus mentions it as a precious stone. Pliny, who frequently translates the words of Dioscorides, speaks of its natural history, and mentions the haunts of the Coral fishers, the medicinal properties which it was supposed to possess, as well as the use to which it was applied as an ornament. The Indians, he says, have the same value for the little grains of Coral which are frequently found thrown upon the shore, as the Europeans have for pearls. They are considered by the diviners and jugglers as amulets of power, and are worn by them as ornaments pleasing to their Gods. The Gauls ornament their armour as well as their dresses of ceremony with Coral; and the Romans hang it about their children, as a charm to ward off the diseases and other evils to which infancy is subject. The merits of Coral as a medicine were much vaunted, and it was considered as a remedy for sicknesses of the most opposite kinds. Priests and physicians, augurs and poets, alike celebrated its virtues and its beauty, (xxxii. 11.)

CORALLIUM.

After the dark ages, during which no notice appears to have been taken of this production, it again occupied the attention of men of real or pretended science. It was then first debated to what kingdom of nature it might belong; and whilst by Guysonius, and others, it was reckoned amongst mineral productions, it was considered by the celebrated Tournefort as a marine plant. Marsigli followed the same opinion, and his work, obtaining a rapid and extensive circulation in the little scientific world of that day, produced an universal concurrence in his opinion. The beautiful discovery of Peysonnel, of marine Polypi, and that of Trembley, of those of fresh-water, opened a new field of inquiry to Naturalists, and the false notion of Marsigli was soon detected. Since that time it has been ascertained that Coral is no other than a habitation for minute animals; and the observation of Reaumur, of B. de Jussieu, of Donati, Ellis, and others, having established this fact, its real situation in the animal kingdom has been satisfactorily shown by Linnæus, Bosc, Peron, Cuvier, Lamarck, &c.

The Red Coral is found in various parts of the Mediterranean and Red Seas. The latter has even been said to take its name from the colour of its sands, which are tinged by the broken fragments of this substance. It grows on rocks, and on any solid submarine body; and it is necessary to the well-being of the little animals which produce and inhabit it, that it should remain fixed to its place. On being broken from its foundation, it soon looses the cortical soft substance with which the calcareous stem is enveloped, and the animals are consequently destroyed. It requires eight or ten years to arrive at its greatest size; and it becomes subsequently pierced in all directions by different marine animals which perforate rocks, shells, and every other calcareous, and even siliceous substance upon which they fix. The depth at which this beautiful production is obtained varies very considerably; but it seems necessary to its perfection, that the rays of the sun should readily penetrate to the place of its habitation; thus, it grows nearer to the surface in those parts where the sun is intercepted by precipitous shores, than in those situations to which the heat penetrates without interruption. It is found, therefore, not only that the finest Coral is to be obtained in situations to which the rays of the sun have the most ready access, but that it there comes to perfection also in a much shorter period. The consequence of this variation of colour and size, is that there are several varieties of Red Coral distinguished in merchandise, which differ in value, according to the depth and brilliancy of the colour, &c.

COR. LIU

The implements which are used in the Coral fishery, are described at large in the works of Donati, of Marsigli, in Poiret's Voyage en Barbarie, and by other authors. The best appear to be those invented by M. J. J. Berard, who describes two of them, one applicable to the Coral which is found at the bottom of the sea, the other to that which covers the sides of submarine rocks, and other similar situations.

The divers in Provence have two different implements, which they employ for the purpose of obtaining Coral. The first is used to tear it from the rocks; it consists of a large wooden cross, to the centre of which is attached a heavy weight of lead, which sinks it readily, and it is held by a long thick cord. To each extremity of the cross is fixed a round network, or parcel of loose cords. When they have thrown this instrument into the sea, in places wherein the divers have previously ascertained that there are a number of cavities in the rock, well filled with Coral, the one who has the management of the machine, pushes some of the network into these interstices, and in this way the Coral becomes entangled, and the persons in the boat then break it off, and draw it out of the water.

The other instrument is employed in obtaining the Coral from deep caverns, and consists of a very long beam of wood, to the extremity of which is attached a circle of iron of a foot and a half in diameter, with a large reticular sack, with two round nets placed on each side. This beam is fixed by two long cords to the stem and stern of the boat; it is sunk by means of a large plummet of lead, and is drawn about the bottom of the sea in different directions by the movements of the boat. The iron ring breaks off the small branches of Coral which are attached to the sides of the caverns, and the other parts are entangled in the nets; sometimes, though rarely, they obtain in this way branches weighing three or four pounds, and this would more frequently be the case, were it not that the people who fish for Coral are permitted to repeat their operations too often.

It is only of late years that the Red Coral has been banished from the Pharmacopœia. It was long used in medicine as an absorbent, although, as such, it does not appear to possess any advantage over other calcareous productions. Gansius, of Frankfort, who has written very fully on its properties in his Coralliorum Historia, 1630, thinks it a specific to be employed in cases of Typhones, Tempestates, Grando, Sterilitas agrorum, Incantamenta, Dæmones, Spectra, Obsessio, and Fulmina. In this notion he is supported by Marbodæus.

> Fulmina, Typhonas, Tempestatesque repellit
> A rate vel tecto. * * * *
> Umbras dæmonicas et Thessala monstra repellit;
> Collo suspensus pellit de ventre dolorem.
> De Lapidibus pretiosis, xx.

But on this point the reader may find all the information which he can require in Jonstoni Thaumatographia Naturalis, iv. 12. Few mothers, who now hang the Coral and bells round their children's necks, are aware that they are following a Roman custom; that they are providing them with firm set teeth, and "making an easier passage for them." Sir T. Brown, v. 23; Pliny, loc. cit. The following, an admirable remedy against dæmoniacal possession, is extracted from Gansius:

AL- M. NTO

℞. Corall. rubr.
albi
Dentium hominis mortui an. dr. j.
Herbæ et sem. antirrhyni dr. ij.

This powder is to be thrown upon hot coals, and the patient is then to be exposed to the fumes.

The use of Coral is now confined to ornaments of dress, and for these it is as universally employed as in the days of Pliny. Every quarter of the globe, and every class of society, the ladies of Europe, the Corsair of Africa, the Bedowin, the Musulman, the Circassian, and the Negro, have all evinced the same fondness for this elegant ornament, although Gansius (xi.) has given sufficient reason against its use for necklaces and bracelets. Venerem stimulare creduntur, si collo aut brachiis adligata gestentur: quod si ita se habet haud scio an fœminis licentia permittenda est Corallii collo et brachiis gestandi, cùm vel sine illis satis appetentes videantur.

When polished it sometimes becomes white and porous, and it is said to recover much of its beauty by being soaked in a composition of oil and vermillion. Buttner, Corallographia; Dillenius, Historia Muscorum; Spallanzani, Travels in the Two Sicilies, iv.

CORALLINA, in Zoology, a genus of Polypi vaginati, of Lamarck. Generic character: polypary fixed, plant-shaped, much branched, consisting of a central stem, incrusted interruptedly with a dense, calcareous, cortical substance; cells inconspicuous; polypi unknown.

There is still considerable obscurity with regard to the exact situation of the animals of this group of Corals in the natural system, arising from the very slight knowledge which is possessed of them. They have, it is true, been seen by Lamouroux and by Ellis, but in so uncertain and undefined a point of view, that the observations of those Naturalists have thrown but little light upon the relations which they bear to the other groups. To the naked eye the cortical substance of the Corallines in a dry state, present not the slightest appearance of those little cellules, which in other genera are known to be the habitations of the animals; it is, however, asserted, that when recently taken from the sea, these pores may be observed over the whole surface of the articulations.

CORANICH, the singing formerly customary in Scotland at the late-wake, or watching of the corpse of the dead. The song was in praise of the deceased and his ancestors.

CORANTO, or Corranto, Fr. courant; It. córrere; a swift and lively dance, cited by Shakspeare (Henry V. iii. 5) as of the same kind as the lavolta, in which, as Hanmer gravely observes, "there was much turning and much capering." Sir John Davies, in his Orchestra, describes it as follows:

> What shall I name these Current traverses,
> That on a triple dactyl foot do run,
> Close by the ground, with sliding passages,
> Wherein that dancer greatest praise hath won,
> Which with best order can all order shun:
> For every where he wantonly must range,
> And turn and wind with unexpected change. st. 69.

Whitelock, the author of the Memorials, a grave lawyer, one time Commissioner of the Great Seal, and an Ambassador, relates in the manuscript memoirs of his own life, that with the assistance of Mr. Ives he composed a Coranto, to which he gave his own name; that it became so popular, that whenever he went to the play-house at Blackfriars, the musicians immediately on his coming in would play it; that the Queen having heard it, would scarcely believe it was composed by an Englishman, being so full of life and sport; and that the common musicians used it all over the kingdom for 30 years afterwards. Sir John Hawkins has printed this Coranto in the History of Music, iv. 51, and remarks, of the Coranto in general, a fact which would not be predicated from its name, that it is the most solemn of all dance tunes. CORANTO — CORBULA

CORB, n. } "Fr. courbe; curvus, curva, curba."
Corb, adj. } Menage. "Fr. courbe, adj. crooked, bowed, vaulted, arched, bent, arch-wise." Cotgrave.

> Hir front was narowe, hir lockes hore,
> She loketh foorth, as doth a more: [Moor]
> Hir necke is short, hir shulders courbe,
> That might a man's luste distourbe.
> Gower. Conf. Am., book i. fol. 17.

> It was a bridge ybuilt in goodly wise
> With curious corbes, and pendants grauen faire.
> Spenser. Faeric Queene, book iv. can. 10.

> Or siker thy head very tottie is,
> So on thy corbe shoulder it leanes amisse.
> Id. Shepherd's Calendar. February.

CORBAN, κορβᾶν, Mark, vii. 11; Hebrew, קרבן, a gift. The Jews frequently consecrated themselves, or their possessions, or part of them, to God; and Moses recognises this dedication in various forms, Lev. xxvii. An abuse of this vow is reprehended by our Saviour in the above passage in St. Mark; and the parallel to it Matthew, xv. 5. It seems that when parents applied to their children for support, the reply sometimes given was, "It is Corban," that is the succour which you request of me is already devoted to God, therefore I cannot profane it by giving it to you. It is probable that this vow of Corban might be adopted for a present purpose, such as enabling the son uncharitably and undutifully to refuse his parent, and afterwards be bought off; for Josephus (Ant. iv. 4) has stated the fines by which either men or women might be redeemed from personal Corban. Most of the opinions on the above passage of St. Mark have been collected by Dr. Campbell, in an extensive note ad loc. in his translation of the Gospels.

Corbana is used, Matthew, xvii. 6, for the Treasury of the Temple. Among the Copts the Eucharist is called Corban. Junii Acta SS, v. 72.

CORBEL, Fr. corbeille; a basket-shaped piece of sculpture, sometimes representing fruit or flowers; sometimes the bust of an image, from which spring the groins of arches. In Gothic Architecture there are endless varieties of Corbels.

CORBIS, in Zoology, a genus of bivalve shells, (Acephala testacea,) of the family Nymphacea tellinaria. Generic character: shell transverse, equivalve, without any irregular marginal flexure; nates incurved; hinge teeth two, lateral teeth two, the hinder one nearest the hinge; muscular impressions simple.

Type, C. fimbriata.

This genus is distinguished from Tellina, by the absence of the flexure of the margin, and from Lucina by the muscular impressions being differently formed, indicating a distinction between the animals.

CORBULA, in Zoology, a genus of bivalve shells, (Acephala testacea,) of the family Corbulæa. Generic character: shell regular, inequivalve, inequilateral, nearly closed; one cardinal tooth in each valve, conical, curved, with a lateral cavity; lateral teeth wanting; ligament internal, inserted in the depressions.

Type, C. nucleus, Lam.

CORCHORUS. CORD.

CORCHORUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Polyandria, order Monogynia, natural order Filiaceæ. Generic character: calyx five-leaved, deciduous; corolla, petals five; style very short; stigmas one to three; capsule pod-shaped, two to five-celled, two to five-valved, many seeded.

Thirteen species. The beautiful shrub known in gardens by the name of C. Japonicus, does not belong to this genus. See KERRIA.

CORD, v. / CORD, n. / CO'RDAGE, / CO'RDED, adj. } Gr. χορδὴ, intestinum; and hence chorda, i. e. fides ex intestino contorto et arefacto; applied to the strings of a musical instrument, because made of the cords or intestines of animals. Lennep and Vossius. And thence applied, says Junius, ad funem simili ratione contortum.

Fr. corde; It. corda; Sp. cuerda; Dutch, korde. Applied to

A string or rope wreathed or twisted,

> He set him up withouten wordes mo,
> And with his axe he smote the cord atwo;
> And doun goth all.
> Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3818.

> ——————— And therupon
> Downe goth the corde into the pit,
> To whiche he hath at ende knit
> A staffe, wherby he saide, he wolde,
> That Adrian hym shulde holde.
> Gower. Conf. Am., book v.

> Like to currant fire, that renneth
> Upon a corde, as thou hast sene.
> Id. Ib., book vii. fol. 143.

Thanne knyghtes kittiden awei the coordis of the litil boot, and suffriden it to salle awei.
Wiclif. The Dedis of Apostles, ch. xxvii.

Of the same wool, being mixed with one third part of horse haire they make all their cordage.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i. fol. 89.

> His corded ladders readily prepar'd.
> Drayton. The Barons' Wars, book iii.

> I willingly on some conditions come
> Into their hands, and they as gladly yield me
> To the uncircumcis'd a welcom prey,
> Bound with two cords; but cords to me were threds
> Toucht with the flame.
> Milton. Samson Agonistes, p. 87.

For when the strengths are gone by which faith is held, and it does not stand firm by the weight of its own bulk and great constitution, nor yet by the cordage of a tenacious root; then it is prepared for a ruin. Taylor. Holy Dying, sec. 3.

From this self-same tree [the palm-tree] there is drawn a kind of fine flax, of which people make their garments, and with which in the East India they prepare the cordage for their ships.
Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. ii. sec. 12.

> PRO. Know (noble lord) they haue deuis'd a meane
> How he her chamber-window will ascend,
> And with a corded ladder fetch her downe.
> Shakspeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, fol. 29.

It is very observable, that the same word which in the Greek text is rendered by ὠδῖνας, and in the English by pains, in the Hebrew signifies not only pain, but also a cord or band, according to which it is very easy and proper to conceive, that the resurrection discharged Christ from the bands of death.
South. Sermon 8. vol. iii.

There is no country has better land or water for flax and hemp; and I do very believe, the navy may be provided here [in Ireland] with sailing and cordage cheaper by far than in England.
Locke, vol. iii. Molyneux to Locke.

Of the leaves of these plants, with very little preparation, they make all their common apparel; and of these they make also their strings, lines, and cordage for every purpose, which are so much stronger than any thing we can make with hemp, that they will not bear a comparison.
Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. book ii. ch. viii.

CORDATE, heart-shaped, from cor, cordis, the heart.

The young birds vary in having on their breasts transverse bars instead of cordated spots.
Pennant. British Zoology. Gentil Falcon.

The belly with cordated spots.
Id. Ib. The Jack Snipe.

CORDELIER, a grey frier, says Minsheu, of the order of St. Francis, so called because he weares a coard about his middle full of twisted knots.

> 'Twas there then in civil respect to harsh laws,
> And for want of false witness to back a bad cause,
> A Norman, though late, was oblig'd to appear,
> And who to assist, but a grave cordelier?
> Prior. The Thief and the Cordelier.

CORDIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Boragineæ. Generic character: calyx tubular, five-toothed; corolla funnel-shaped; style forked; seed-vessel a drupe; nut two-celled.

Eighteen species, natives of both hemispheres. Willd.

CO'RDIAL, adj. / Co'RDIAL, n. / Co'RDIALLY, / CORDI'ALITY, / Co'RDIAL-WISE, / Co'RDIAL-WATER. } Cordial, or that which comforteth the heart. Fr. cordial; It. cordiale; Sp. cordial; Lat. cor, cordis, a general name given to those medicines, which purge not, but only comfort the heart, and the bodie decayed. Minsheu. Applied met. to Any thing that comforts, or cheers the spirits.

Cordial, the adj. hearty.

> For gold in phisike is a cordial;
> Therfore he loved gold in special.
> Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 445.

Al things whiche be cordiall, that is to say, which do in any wise comfort the heart, do resist pestilẽce, vehement anger, or heauinesse, &c. Sir Thomas Elyot. The Castel of Helth.

Within that [cocoa-shell] againe a certaine cleare liquor, which being drunke, you shall not only finde it very delicate and sweete, but most comfortable and cordiall.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Sir Francis Drake, vol. iii. fol. 731.

The first doth encourage my fainting harte, and the seconde doth begin (already) to employ my vnderstanding, for (alas my good lord) were not the cordial of these two precious spiceries, the corosyue of care would quickely confound me.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

> And first behold this cordial julep here
> That flames, and dances in his crystal bounds,
> With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mix'd;
> Not that Nepenthes, which the wife of Thone
> In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
> Is of such pow'r to stir up joy as this,
> To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst.
> Milton. Comus, l. 672.

> Many restoratiues, of vertues rare,
> And costly cordialles shee did apply,
> To mitigate his stubborne malady,
> But that sweete cordiall, which can restore
> A loue-sick hart, she did to him envy.
> Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 5.

> But pitying Magd'lens honest sorrow, He
> Whose single potent word all clouds can clear,
> In love's mild tone, the only musick she
> Could cordially relish, treats her ear.
> Beaumont. Psyche, can. 16. st. 164.

DIAL. — OR- DVA.

That the practice of the ancients had any respect of cordiality or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted, if we consider their rings were made of iron.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iv. ch. iv.

But whilst things are in hand, old Chiltern (for his life)
From prodigal expense can no way keep his wife;
Who feeds her Thame with marle, in cordial-wise prepar'd,
And thinks all idly spent, that now she only spar'd
In setting forth her son.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 15

For highest cordials all their virtue loose,
By a too frequent and too bold a use;
And what would cheer the spirits in distress,
Ruins our health when taken to excess.

Pomfret. The Choice.

It must indeed be owned that, the greater the number of John's disciples had been, the greater influence it would have had upon the cause of the Messiah, if all of them had cordially received their master's testimony concerning Him.

Hoadly. Works. Sermon 14. vol. iii.

Sor. I had been a traytor, indeed to have betray'd thee to the swallowing of a gallon: but a thimble-full of cordial-water is easily sipt off. Dryden. Amphitrion, act iii.

That our most bitter foes (so much depends
On men of name) are turned to cordial friends.

Churchill. The Candidate.

And when disease assaults the heart,
When sickness triumphs over art,
Reflections on a life well past,
Shall prove a cordial to the last.

Cotton. Visions in Verse.

Then would Britain and Ireland have but one interest; and it is rank absurdity in politics to expect any cordiality between them, whilst their interests are separate.

Anecdotes of the Life of Bishop Watson, vol. i. p. 212.

CORDOVA, a Province of Spain, now forming a part of Andalusia, though formerly constituting an independent Kingdom. It is bounded on the north by Estremadura and La Mancha, on the east by Jaen and Grenada, south by Seville, and west by Seville and Estremadura. It occupies a space of about 4580 square miles; supports a population of more than 250,000; and is divided into two parts by the Guadalquivir, which flows from north-east to south-west. The part on the north-west of that noble stream, is chiefly occupied by the great range of mountains called the Sierra Morena, and some of its collateral branches. These often consist of ranges of steep and bare rocks, some of which are covered with perpetual snow, and are separated by narrow and fertile vallies, which with the sides of the lower hills either yield abundance of fruit, or afford pasture for flocks and herds. On the opposite side of the river, the country chiefly stretches into a wide and fertile plain, which is one of the richest districts of the Peninsula, and though but indifferently cultivated it has long been noted for its abundance of grain, fruit, wine, and olives. The Guadalquivir, too, being navigable, augments its commerce, and promotes its prosperity. Several tributary streams flow into this river, particularly from the south, which contribute both to the beauty and fertility of the country. From the situation and varied surface of Cordova, its climate is diversified, and the temperature ascends through all gradations from the piercing cold which sweeps over the perpetual snows, to the heated air that rests on the sultry plains. Cordova was a Moorish Kingdom, which was founded in the VIIIth century, and lasted till 1236, when it was conquered by Ferdinand of Castile, and has ever since been attached to that Kingdom. The chief Towns are Cordova, Lucena, and Montilla. COR- DOVA.

City of Cordova.

Cordova, the Capital, is pleasantly situated at the foot of a ridge of high mountains, and at the entrance of a spacious plain. It stands on the northern bank of the Guadalquivir, which winds along the south side of its walls, in the form of a crescent. The shape of the Town is rectangular, extending from east to west. Cordova was founded by the Romans, and Silius Italicus says, before the second Punic War. Strabo attributes its establishment to Marcellus, known in the civil wars between Pompey and Cæsar, and affirms, that it was partly peopled by a Roman colony, and partly by the inhabitants of the country. It was at first called Corduba, and afterwards Colonia-patricia. This City passed from the hands of the Romans to those of the Goths. When the Moors invaded Spain, it made an obstinate resistance, and was besieged in vain, till it fell by the treachery of a shepherd, who introduced the beseigers into the town, through a kind of drain. On this, the governor and garrison fortified themselves in the church of St. George, where they resisted all the efforts of the enemy for three months, but were at last overpowered. Under the Moors, Cordova was at first subject to the Caliphs of Damascus; but a favourable revolution took place, and Abderame usurped the sovereignty, and made Cordova the Capital of his new Empire. It is surrounded by walls, flanked with towers; part of its fortifications are ascribed to the Romans, and part to the Arabs. The walls include a great space of ground, but much of it is laid out in gardens and orchards. Its suburbs are also extensive and handsome, and resemble distinct towns. Most of the streets, as in many other old towns, are narrow and dirty; but the Plaza Mayor, or principal square, is noted for its size, regularity, and handsome piazzas. In the time of the Moors, a great number of fine buildings and superb Mosques were erected, but most of those which they left, with a great part of the Town, were overthrown by an earthquake in 1589. The Cathedral is the most remarkable edifice now remaining at Cordova, and is a magnificent monument, unique of its kind; it is, in fact, an old Mosque, which still retains its original name, and is called Mezquita. Herbelot states, that the Arab Schanah asserts it to have been built in the year 170 of the Hegira, 786 of the Christian era. It stands on the site of the ancient Cathedral built by the Goths; and there also stood in the time of the Romans a Temple of Janus. This Mosque was converted into a church after the conquest of Cordova by the King of Castile, and was consecrated by Raimond, Archbishop of Toledo. It is an insulated edifice of immense size, situated at the opening of four handsome streets, and is five hundred and thirty-four feet long, and three hundred and eighty-seven feet wide. The materials of which this structure is composed are of the most valuable kinds, the ornaments profuse, and the number of rich and variegated columns exceeds a thousand. The Moors entertained such veneration for this Mosque, that they came from very distant parts, even from Africa, to visit it; and persisted in the custom after it was converted into a Christian Church. Besides this sacred

CORDOVA. edifice, there are sixteen other Churches in Cordova, as many Hospitals, about forty Convents, and two Colleges; and several of these edifices are distinguished either for their architecture or paintings. The bridge across the Guadalquivir was built by the Moors, and is supported by sixteen arches. The ancient Palace of the Moorish Kings is large and beautiful, but has now been converted into stables, in which a great number of fine Andalusian horses are kept. Cordova was formerly a place wherein the various Arts and Sciences were much cultivated, both under the Romans and the Moors; and among its natives are enumerated the two Senecas, Lucan, Averroes, Gonzalves, and Ferdinand de Cordova. It gives name to a particular kind of leather, called Cordovan or Cordwain. The population of this City is said to have been very great in the time of the Moors, and both the extent of its walls, and the ruins of its edifices, evince that it once contained far more inhabitants than its present number, which is only 35,000 or 40,000. Cordova is about seventy-five miles north-west of Seville, in latitude 37° 52′ north and longitude 4° 46′ west.

Lucena. Lucena is situated nearly thirty miles south-southeast of Cordova; it contains several Churches, numerous Convents and Hospitals, and about 12,000 inhabitants. It is an open Town, and has some manufactures of soap, linen, and woollen cloth, besides the adjacent salt-works of Jarales. Latitude 37° 32′ north and longitude

Montilla. 4° 29′ west. Montilla is the next Town of magnitude, but it does not contain much above half the population of Lucena. It stands about twenty miles nearly south of Cordova, and like the other places in Spain, its chief edifices are the ecclesiastical buildings.

Cordova, a Province of La Plata, or the Buenos Ayrean Republic, of about 300 miles in length and 210 in breadth, bounded by the Province of Buenos Ayres on the east, by Tucuman on the north, by Cuyo on the west, and by the vast Pampas or Plains on the south. This Province is crossed by mountains so lofty, as generally to be enveloped by perpetual congelation on their summits. A vast chain, called Yacanto, Campachin, and Achala, intersects its whole length, and is supposed to equal the Chilian Andes in altitude. About sixty miles from the Capital at Ramanso, is a saline plain, 210 miles long, in which nothing grows but the Salsola kali, reaching a height of almost four yards, amid glittering incrustations of fossil salt. Cordova is celebrated for its woollen manufactures, and for its breed of horses and cattle; it receives in return for these articles of trade, wine and grain from Cuyo and Chili, brandy from San Juan de la Frontera, brought in leathern bags, on account of the difficulty of the roads; and it supplies itself with fruits and meat. The Torcera is the chief river in this Province; it joins the great La Plata in that portion of its course wherein it is called the Parana. The Quarto and the Quinto, are supposed to be the upper sources of the Saladillo, which flows into the estuary of the Plata, near Cape San Antonio.

There are several Towns in this extensive District, the Capital of which, Cordova de la Nueva Andalucia, is in latitude 31° 30′ south, longitude 63° 15′ west, 156 leagues west of Buenos Ayres, on the banks of the Rio Primera, or Pucara, and at the feet of a branch of the Andes. It stands on a marshy, but very rich soil, which its inhabitants are chiefly employed in cultivating; the adjacent country producing plenty of corn, fruits, and vegetables, and being well supplied with cattle and good pasture. Cordova lying on the high road from Buenos Ayres to Lima, enjoys, in peaceable times, all the benefits of the trade between Peru and La Plata, and sends immense numbers of a strong and serviceable kind of mule to the Peruvian mines, together with much woollen and cotton cloth and salt. This city possesses several fine public buildings; the Cathedral, in particular, being a large and very handsome edifice; there is also a spacious market-place, three conventual Churches, a Bishop's Palace, several ecclesiastical establishments, an University, and a College. The streets are also regularly paved and clean, and few places in the New World, inhabited by Spaniards, display equal wealth, whilst both the Europeans and the Creoles are noted for their industry. The Spaniards and their descendants were computed by Helms at about 1500, the Negroes at about 4000.

COR DOV.

The vicinity being very woody, an intense heat reigns at Cordova during summer, even much greater than at Buenos Ayres. The granitic mountains not far from this City contain veins of lead and copper, wherein much silver is mixed. This ridge, composed of red and green granite, is very thickly inhabited, but there exists a great scarcity of water for purifying its valuable ores.

There are also a few vineyards near this Town, and corn might be raised in abundance, if a proper system of farming was adopted. A gold mine was once found in the vale of Punillia, near Cordova; and its riches might be much further increased by exporting the wild basil, as the natives ignorantly call it, (Alvanhacca del campo,) which is in fact a prototype of the tea-plant, and grows in the vallies of Calamochita, and at the foot of the mountains Achala and Yacanto, in a most luxuriant manner.

Falkner, in his Journey to Patagonia, (Hereford, 1774, now become a scarce work,) thus describes this plant, which will probably be soon introduced into Europe: "It is a shrub from a yard to above two yards high. Its trunk seldom exceeds an inch in thickness, and is often less. It has no suckers near the root, but many long branches. Its leaves grow by three and three, in the manner of trefoil, they are of a beautiful green, and very smooth. It shoots out a long spike of blue flowers, something like lavender, but not so long, nor so well scented. To each of these flowers succeeds a small husk, each of which contains a seed not bigger than a third part of a lentil, shaped like a kidney-bean. After it is dry, on infusing it in water, it tinges the water in the same manner as green tea. Its taste and flavour are exactly the same, excepting that it is somewhat stronger, and is not so rough; but this difference is most probably owing to the freshness of it when gathered, or perhaps may arise from the different method of preparing it, or from not drying it on copper plates, as is said to be done in China. In the drying, I could not make it become twisted and shrivelled, like the Oriental tea. As I and several of my acquaintance gathered some bags of this tea, and freely distributed it to many persons, I had an opportunity of trying its effects, and found that it created a good appetite and digestion, cured many headaches and inveterate apepsias, (want of appetite,) and anorexias, (want of digestion,) which had not yielded to any other remedies; in these particulars far excelling the tea of China. It is very remarkable that, in the parts where this tea-plant grows, there is the same kind of stone as that of which the China-ware is made."

Cordova will probably become, whenever the civil wars of La Plata cease, a place of considerable trade, as it can supply Brazil with mules and cattle, and Europe with the tea above mentioned, as well as with many other very valuable articles, precious drugs, and cabinet woods of a most beautiful variety, being the spontaneous productions of its fertile soil.

CORDOVA, also the name of a large City of the Republic of Mexico, in the State of Vera Cruz, in latitude 18° 50′ north and longitude 96° 56′ west, 150 miles east-northeast of the Metropolis. It contains several fine structures, surmounted by handsome domes, towers, and steeples, good streets, paved, and mostly built of stone, with a magnificent Church, the architecture of which is celebrated throughout Mexico. There is also a fine market square, surrounded on three sides by Gothic arcades, the Cathedral being on the fourth, and a large fountain of pure water in the centre. The neighbouring country is very rich, the soil being a deep clay, on which both the European and Tropical fruits grow to perfection. Cordova, in conjunction with Orizaba, is noted chiefly, however, for being the place, wherein almost all the tobacco for the home consumption of Mexico is cultivated.

Cordova stands near the celebrated Pico de Orizaba, The sugar cane grows so well in its neighbourhood, that above thirty mills have been at work at one time, in making that necessary article. The inhabitants are not, however, so numerous as might be expected, in a spot wherein nature has done so much to assist man. 3000 or 4000 Spaniards, Mestizoes, Mulattos, and Indians, being the total population, according to recent inquiries.

CORDO'VAN, n. / CORDO'VAN-SKIN, / CO'RDWAIN, n. / CO'RDWAINER. } Cordovan or cordwaine, variously written; sometimes following the Fr. and Sp. cordovan, and sometimes the Dutch kordewaine; It. cordovano.

Leather, so called from Corduba in Spain. Junius and Menage.

His here, his berde, was like safroun,
That to his girdle raught adoun,
His shoon of cordewane.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sir Thopas, v. 13662.

Cordouan skinnes tanned white, to be made blacke, of them great quantity, and also course wooll to make beds.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Gasper Campion.

If ye were made faire and cleere cordwainers' waxe, and sweete to sauour, that ye might be drawen out at length it were well dooen, but ye are but as fruicte of almondes, seemyng drie without, and wourme eaten within.
Golden Boke, C c. lii.

For as a poore man is as well of y^e^ churche as is the pope, so is a cordener as wel an English man or a French man, as is the kingeof either other countrye.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 772.

In this yere was also an act made by auctoritie of the comon cotsayll of Lōdon, that vpon y^e^ Sondaye shuld no maner of thynge within the fraunchise of y^e^ cytee be bought or solde, nother vytayl nor other thyng; nor none artificer shuld bryage his ware to any man to be worne or occupyed that day, as tayllours' garmentes or cordwayners' shoys.
Fabyan. Henry VI. Anno 1545.

Buskins he wore of costliest cordwaine,
Pinkt vpon gold, and paled part per part,
As then the guize was for each gentle swaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 2.

The shepherd wore a sheep-gray cloak,
Which was of the finest lock,
That could be cut with sheer,
His mittens were of bawzons' skin,
His cockers were of cordiwin.
Drayton. Pastorals. Eclogue 4.

ANO. You musk cat,
Cordevant-skin, we will not take your answer.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Loyal Subject, act iii. sc. 6.

CORDUROY, Fr. corde du Roi, a manufacture originally of silk cloth, but now very extensively imitated in cotton in the clothing districts of England. Thicksett, Velveret, and Velveteen, are varieties of this manufacture.

CORDYLA, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Diptera, family Tipulida. Generic character: antennæ twelve-jointed, thickened and obtuse at the extremity; eyes entire.

Type, C. fusca, Meigen.

CORDYLIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Monadelphia, order Polyandria. Generic character: calyx bell-shaped, four-cleft, inferior; corolla none; style one; berry one-celled, many seeded.

One species, C. Africana, a large tree, native of the east part of Africa. Persoon, Syn.

CORDYLINE, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: corolla pubescent on the exterior; filaments inserted into the base of the corolla; stigma swelled; berry top-shaped, one-celled.

One species, C. hemichrysa, native of the Isle of Bourbon. Persoon.

CORDYLOCARPUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetradynamia, order Siliquosa, natural order Cruciferæ. Generic character: calyx erect, petals with claws; seed-vessel a round pod, jointed, last cell dilated to a globular shape.

One species, C. muricatus, native of Algiers. De Candolle, Reg. Veg.

CORE, n. Fr. cœur; It. cuore; from the Lat. cor, q. cor fructus, (the heart of the fruit,) quoniam instar cordis in medio situm est. Seeing that like the heart it is placed in the centre.

And saith, dede flesh must nedes
Be cut out of the core;
For rotten wither'd wedes
Can heale no greuous sore.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer lamenteth that he would forget loue and cannot.

The core of rebellion, as you have seen by this, and read of other rebellions, are the universities, which nevertheless are not to be cast away, but to be better disciplined.
Hobbs. Behemoth, part i. fol. 516.

Taste not, said God, 'tis mine and angels' meat,
A certain death doth sit,
Like an ill worm, i' th' core of it.
Cowley. The Tree of Knowledge.

Such fruit, I ween, did once deceive
The common parent of mankind,
And made transgress our mother Eve:
Poison its core, though fair its rind.
Prior. Nonpareil.

For oft engender'd by the hazy north,
Myriads on myriads, insect armies waft
Keen in the poison'd breeze; and wastefnl eat,
Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core,
Their eager way. Thomson. Spring.

COREIGNERS. CO-REIGNERS, reigners or rulers, in union or conjunction with others. Lat. regnare, from reg-ere, to rule.

COREA. For which cause they are called not only by Maximus Tyrius συνάρχοντες θεῷ, co-rulers with God, but also by Plato himself, τῳ μεγίστῳ δαίμονι συνάρχοντες, the co-governours and co-reigners with the Supreme God.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 246.

COREOPSIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Frustranea, natural order Corymbiferæ. Generic character: receptacle chaffy; calyx double, many leaved; down horned; seeds compressed, emarginate.

Twenty-five species, natives of the East Indies and Carolina.

CORETHRA, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Diptera, family Tipulariæ. Generic character: antennæ about eleven-jointed, the inferior joints conico-ovoid, with bundles of hairs in the male; the two last joints slight and elongate.

Type, Chironomus gibbus, Fabr.

COREUS, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Hemiptera, family Corisiæ. Generic character: antennæ inserted above a line drawn from the eyes to the origin of the labium, almost always thickened at the extremity, and straight.

Type, C. marginatus, Fab. &c.

COREA, a large Peninsula on the north-eastern side of China, separated from the country of the Mancheûs by the Ch'hang-pĕ-shán (Long White Mountains) or Eastern Alps, lies between the 34th and 43d parallels of north latitude, and the 125th and 130th meridians east of Greenwich, measuring about 500 geographical miles from north to south, and 200 from east to west, and comprehending an area of nearly 100,000 square miles. A stockade of wooden piles extending far beyond the limits of Corea, forms the division between it and the Province of Lyao-tong; and the river Tú-men, running from the snowy chain into the Japanese Sea, is its north-eastern boundary. A branch of the Alpine range, skirting along the eastern coast till it reaches latitude 37° north, and then taking a bend to the south-west, crosses the Peninsula and terminates in a cape at its south-western extremity. This chain of mountains divides the whole country into two parts; and lower ranges branching out from it in different directions, form, together with the streams to which they give rise, the natural barriers between the provinces into which this Kingdom is divided.

The southern coast is rocky, and thickly beset with islands; and its south-eastern head-land is not more than fifty geographical miles from Niphon; but the eastern coast is open and easy of access, offering great facilities to commerce, of which the jealousy of the Chinese Government will not allow the inhabitants to take advantage.

The climate, like that of Japan and the north of China, is colder than it is in Europe under the same parallels of latitude. La Perouse observed snow still lying on the hills in the month of May; but in the low lands near the sea, the heat is occasionally very considerable; and the animals and plants of tropical regions are indigenous. Jing-seng, (Panax quinquefolia,) the panacea of the Chinese, and a tree resembling a palm, which produces a valuable gum, are the most prized among the vegetable productions; the former being a native of the cold mountainous regions. The gum yielded by the latter furnishes a fine yellow varnish, said almost to equal gilding. COR

A small breed of ponies only nine hands high, and long-tailed fowls, perhaps of the pheasant tribe, and a species of alligator are mentioned as the most remarkable animals of Corea; but its minerals are various, abundant, and valuable, including the precious metals. Our knowledge however of this country is extremely limited, as it is inaccessible to Europeans, and even the Chinese accounts, which would give some notion of its state and productions, have not yet been translated into any of the western languages. The fisheries on the coast afford a large supply of food and oil, for whales are not uncommon; and if the report be true that they are sometimes taken with European harpoons sticking in their sides, it is manifest that there is a communication with the Polar Seas through Behring's Straits, but such reports must be received with extreme caution. The paper and painting-brushes manufactured by the Coreans are much valued by the Chinese; the former, when oiled, is used instead of glass in the windows, and as a lining for clothes; the latter, made of the hair from wolves' tails, serve instead of pens, for persons who use the Chinese character, which is drawn, and not written.

This Peninsula is called Solgo by the Mancheûs, and Chao-syan or Kao-li (whence Corea) by the Chinese: but the people of Japan call its inhabitants Syèn-pi; "a name," says M. Klaproth, (Asia Polyglotta, 334,) "which indicates their origin; for the Syèn-pi anciently fed their flocks on a chain of hills in Mongolia, to the north-west of Pĕ-king, now occupied by the Karachin;" that district, however, is to the north-east of Pĕ-king in Father De Mailla's map. Gi-rin or Ki-lin, another name given to this people by the Japanese and Chinese, is also that of the upper part of the Sung-gari-úla, a river which flows through a territory immediately to the north of Corea. This Peninsula was entirely overrun by the Kao-li or Kao-kyu-lí about two centuries before the commencement of our era, and petty Sovereignties were established in different places. After various alterations of fortune, one of their Princes subdued all the others, near the close of the XIVth century, and his descendants still hold the Sovereignty as a fief under the Chinese Emperor. The language of the Kao-li, as far as any opinion can be formed from the vocabularies furnished by the Chinese and Japanese writers (Asia Polyglotta, 335—343,) is original, and bears no affinity to any other known dialect.

The Coreans are a strong, hardy, and brave people, docile and gentle, but much addicted to thieving, and licentious in their intercourse with women. Their laws and learning seem to have been entirely derived from the Chinese, whose dress and usages they have in a great measure adopted. But their women are less restricted, their marriages less compulsory, and their funeral ceremonies peculiar to themselves. The corpse is kept unburied, and the mourning is continued for three years, if the deceased be a parent, but only for three months if a brother or sister, at the close of which period the body is put into the ground, and the clothes, horses, carriages, &c. of the defunct are placed around the grave, to be carried off by those who attend the funeral. The religion of Budd'ha, better suited to the intellectual condition of a people so little advanced in civilisation, than the sublime doctrines of Confucius or Tao-tse, is almost exclusively prevalent.

The Government of Corea is an uncontrolled despotism, for the Emperor of China never interferes in the internal management of this Kingdom. It is subdivided into eight Provinces: 1. Ping-ngan, and 2. Hyen-kin, on the north; 3. Kyang-ywen, and 4. Hwang-haï, on the east and west; 5. Kin-shan, 6. Tswen-lo, and 7. Chu-sin, on the south; with 8. King-ki, (the Court province) containing the Metropolis, King-ki-tao, in the centre. Kyang-ywen, (River's source) the eastern province was, at a very remote period, inhabited by the Mè; Hwang-haï, on the Yellow Sea, whence it takes its name, was part of the Kingdom of Cháo-syan, another of the ancient divisions of this Peninsula; and Ping-ngan (the Pacific) was another Province of the same State. At a subsequent period the southern half of this country was occupied by three tribes of Han; Ma-han occupying the fourth and seventh, Pyan-han the sixth, and Skin-han the fifth of the provinces enumerated above; and the north-eastern part of the Peninsula was then occupied by the Kao-kyn-li or Kao-li, who subsequently made themselves masters of the whole, which still bears their name.

The original authorities for Corea, are Father Regis, in Du Halde's Description de la Chine, Paris, 1735, fol. vol. ii.; and Hamel's Journal in the Recueil de Voyages, &c. aux Indes, publié par Fr. Bernard, Amsterdam, 1718, tom. iv.; Journal van de ongelukkige voyagie van't jacht de Sperwer, &c. in't jaar 1653; mede een beschryvinge der landen, &c. in't koningkryk Corea, door Hendryk Hammel, Rotterdam, 1668, 4to.; and a few notices of the coast, in De la Perouse's Voyage autour du monde, Paris, 1797, (an. 5.) 4to. and 8vo. vol.

A good abstract is given in Mod. Univ. Hist., book xiii. vol. viii.; and Grosier's Description de la Chine, Paris, 1818, i. 340; but the best and most concise is that of M. Malte-brun in his Précis de la Géographie Universelle, Paris, 1812, 8vo. iii. 447.

CORFE CASTLE, a Borough and Market Town in the County of Dorset. It stands about the centre of the peninsula of Purbeck, at the foot of a range of hills declining to the east. The Town is unnoticed in Domesday-book. It is a Borough by prescription. Sir Christopher Hatton, to whom the whole Isle of Purbeck belonged, obtained a charter from Queen Elizabeth, by which the inhabitants of Corfe Castle were invested with the same privileges as those of the Cinque Ports. The government of the Borough is vested in a Mayor and eight Barons; the Barons being such as have served the office of Mayor. It returns two Members to Parliament. The Town consists of two mean streets, containing 1465 inhabitants, most of whom are employed in digging and preparing clay for the Staffordshire potteries, and in working the stone quarries. The Church is a Rectory, in the gift of Henry Bankes, Esq. owner of the Castle.

The Castle stands a little north of the town opposite to the Church, on a very steep rocky hill, mingled with hard rubble chalk-stone. It is commanded by the neighbouring hills, but its walls are so massive, and the ascent to them so precipitous, that before the invention of artillery it must have been impregnable. It is separated from the town by a strong bridge of four very high narrow arches, crossing a moat of considerable depth. Its foundation is generally ascribed to King Edgar. It was here that his widow, Elfrida, resided, and perpetrated the foul murder of his son and successor, Edward, A. D. 979. (Gul. Malms.; Hutchin's Dorsetshire, 1.) King John appears to have made this Castle his occasional residence, and Edward II. was imprisoned in it on his removal from Kenilworth. During the Civil wars of Charles I. time it was gallantly defended, in 1643, against the rebel troops by the Lady of Lord Chief Justice Bankes, during a six weeks' siege, in which more than one hot attempt at storm was repulsed with great loss to the assailants. (Mercurius Rusticus, xi.) Unfortunately, three years afterwards, it was betrayed to the Parliamentary forces, who mindful of their former disgrace before it, undermined and demolished the greater part of its walls.

Corfe Castle is eighteen miles south-southwest from Poole, four south-southeast from Wareham, and 116 south-west from London.

CORIACIÆ, in Zoology, a family of insects of the order Diptera, consisting of the genera Ornithomyia, Hippobosca, Melophaga, formed from the Linnæan genus Hippobosca. They are parasitical animals, and in their habits have considerable analogy to the different species of Tick, Flea, Louse, &c.

CORIANDRUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Digynia, natural order Umbelliferæ. Generic character: corolla radiate, petals inflexed, cloven; general involucre of one leaf; partial involucres going but half-way round; fruit spherical.

But two species of this genus are known. C. sativum, producing the Coriander seeds, is a native of the South of Europe, but is naturalized in some parts of England.

CORIARIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dioecia, order Decandria. Generic character: male flower, calyx five-parted; corolla none; glands five; anthers two-parted: female flower, calyx five-parted; corolla none; glands five, placed among the germens; styles five; capsules five, one-seeded.

Five species, natives of Europe and South America.

CORINTH, the fruit now commonly called currant. Swe. Corinthiane; Fr. raisin de Corinthe.

> The ruby tinctur'd corinth clustering hangs,
> And emulates the grape.
>
> Somervile. Hobbinol, can. 3.

Corinth, anciently the Capital of a small State bearing the same name, was placed on the declivity of a rising ground overlooking a rich and extensive plain to the north and west, nearly two Olympic stadia (about a mile and three quarters) from the sea, at the southern extremity of the isthmus which separates the Peloponnesus from the rest of Greece. It is much nearer to the Gulf of Lepanto, (the Halcyonian or Crissæan Sea,) than that of Egina, (the Saronic Gulf,) and about the distance already mentioned from the narrowest part of the Isthmus, in latitude 37° 53′ 24″ north, and 23° 2′ 35″ east. According to Pausanias, (l. ii. c. 1, p. 110,) this City was first called Ephyra, from its foundress, a sea Nymph, and afterwards Corinth, from Corinthus one of her immediate successors. It was subsequently governed by Sisyphus, son of Æolus, who succeeded either Jason and Medea, or Creon, (A. M. 2676, B. C. 1328,) and was the founder of a Dynasty called after him, the Sisyphidæ. Its citadel, called Acrocorinthus, a little to the south-east of the town, was said to be sixty stadia (seven miles and a half) from each shore of the Isthmus. (Meletii Geogr. Ant. et Nov. ii. 376.) Advantageously situated near both seas in a commanding position, which made it the key of Peloponnesus, it soon became one of the first cities in Greece It is termed "the Wealthy Corinth" by Homer, about 400 years after its foundation; and "the Emporium of Greece" by Thucydides, nearly 450 years later. Its commerce was extended over the whole of the Mediterranean; and its colony, Syracuse, long survived as a monument of the greatness of the parent State. The extravagance and voluptuousness of its inhabitants were proverbial; and few cities afforded richer spoils to the Roman soldiers, for its inhabitants were mad enough to provoke the vengeance of Rome, and it was therefore razed to the ground when taken by L. Mummius, B. C. 146.

Topography.

CORINTH

Ancient history.

Corinthian brass.

Corinth was long a favourite abode of the Arts; and its vases of earthenware and bronze, excelled those of every other country. The material of which the latter were made consisted of copper mixed with a small alloy of gold and silver, the brilliance and colour of which rendered this "Corinthian brass," as it was termed, one of the first objects of luxury among the ancients. Pliny, (xxxiv. 3,) attributes the formation of this composition to the accidental mixture of various fused metals during the sack of the City, and in this notion he is supported by Florus. (ii. 16.) Pliny also divides the Corinthian brass into three kinds: the first nearly white, as having a greater quantity of silver than of any other substance; the second yellow, in which gold predominates; the third in which there is an equal mixture of the three constituent metals. Antony is said to have proscribed Verres, on account of certain Corinthian vases, (ibid.;) and Suetonius (Aug. 70) records an inscription on the base of the statue of Augustus, alluding both to the employment which his father followed, and to his own passion for Corinthian vases, which he had shown by an act of injustice similar to that of Antony, Pater Argentarius Ego Corinthiarius. One of Cicero's good sayings, (and it is among the best) recorded by Pliny, (xxxiv. 8,) and by Plutarch in his Apophtheg. Rom. confirms the account of the taste of Verres for this manufacture. Hortensius was used to carry about with him a sphinx of Corinthian workmanship, which had once been the property of the Sicilian plunderer. On one occasion, when endeavouring to impute obscurity to some legal argument used by Cicero, he had observed, that he could not unravel riddles; his opponent archly retorted, that his sphinx then was useless. It seems probable, however, that the Corinthian metal and workmanship had always been of superior quality, and only became better known to the Romans when they had subdued the City. Pancirollus, i. 34, reckons Corinthian brass among the deperdita.

Modern history.

Corinth never recovered its ancient splendour, though the colony sent thither by Julius Cæsar, about the beginning of our era, again made it a place of considerable importance. The Church of Corinth, which was founded by St. Paul himself, was soon one of the most considerable in Greece, and was raised to the dignity of a Metropolitan See, after Christianity had become triumphant. On the decline of the Greek Empire, this City experienced the same desolating and rapid vicissitudes of fortune as the rest of Greece; and at a later period was alternately in possession of the Venetians and Turks, till A. D. 1716, when the former were ultimately driven out of the Morea. The narrow and mistaken policy of Venice repressed the energies of her foreign subjects, so that none of her possessions in the Levant recovered, while under her dominion, the prosperity they had formerly enjoyed; and Corinth, when Meletius wrote his Geography (about A. D. 1697) had "few inhabitants," (iii. 377.) "A straggling town," says Dr. Clarke, (Travels, vi. 547,) "now occupies the site of the ancient City." Within a mile of it, on the road to Lechæum, its ancient port, he observed a fountain in a cavern, formed by a dripping rock, consisting of a soft sandstone; this he supposes to be one of the fountains of the Nymph Priene mentioned by Pausanias, (l. ii. c. 3, p. 117, ed. Kühn. Lips. 1696.) Even the wrecks of its former grandeur are now so delapidated, as to leave scarcely any thing to awaken the imagination of the antiquary; but above the Bázár, which was probably the ancient Forum, there are some fine remains of a Temple, which the same writer supposes to have been erected in honour of Octavia, the sister of Augustus, to whom the Corinthians were indebted for the restoration of their City, (Pausan. l. ii. c. 3, p. 116.) It is of the Doric order, and in Wheler's time had eleven pillars standing, (Journey, London, 1682, p. 440;) but four of them had been blown up for the sake of their materials, by the Governor of the fortress, a short time before Messrs. Clarke and Cripps visited the place. Five, out of the seven still remaining, support an entablature, and each consists of one entire piece of stone; but their dimensions do not appear to have the true Doric proportion; a fact which, if clearly established, would militate against the supposition that they are of the Augustan age.

Description.

Corinth had anciently two harbours, Lechæum on the western and Cenchreæ on the eastern sea; each of which were united with the City by two walls, so that, when at the zenith of its glory, Corinth might be said to cover the whole southern side of the Isthmus, an interval of nearly eight miles. The principal part of the ancient City occupied a natural platform, overlooking the plain which forms the western side of the Isthmus, and itself protected by the Acrocorinthus. "That stupendous rock, which from whatever part of the Isthmus it is viewed," says Dr. Clarke, (vi. 567, 8vo. ed.) "appears equally conspicuous, opposing so bold a precipice, and such a commanding eminence high above every approach to the Peninsula, that, if properly fortified, it would render all access to the Morea by land impracticable." The prospect from its summit, at the sun-set of a bright day, (and few are the days which are not bright in Greece,) is "the most agreeable," says Sir George Wheler, (Trav. 422,) "that this world can give." Of Cenchreæ, the eastern port of Corinth, Pausanias has given a full description, (p. 114, ed. Kühn.) with which the remains still existing exactly correspond. On the way to it lies the village of Hexamilia, still bearing its ancient name, but in the plural number, a favourite peculiarity of the modern dialect. The Isthmus was here, as the name of this town implies, only six miles across; and "near to it," says Meletius, (ii. 373,) "between Cromyon and Cenchreæ on the shore of the Saronic Gulf, was the Town and Port of Schœnus, where the Isthmian Games were celebrated." A passage which confirms Dr. Clarke's opinion as to the site of this celebrated place, respecting which Chandler was so strangely negligent. (Travels in Greece, 243.) "Its ruins are found," he says, "near the spot where the INTH Isthmian wall makes a sudden turn from the Corinthian (or Crissæan) to the Saronic Gulf, bearing away towards Mount Oneus, and embracing the whole of the port of Schœnus. The ruins of the Temple, Stadium, Theatre, together with wells, and other indications of the Isthmian town, surround this port, and are for the most part situated upon its sides, sloping towards the sea. The remains of the Temple of Neptune are to the west end of the Isthmian wall; and a Greek chapel, also in a ruined state, now stands upon the area of the Temple. It is built of white lime-stone; and the workmanship of its ornamental parts is extremely beautiful. It appears to have been of the Corinthian order; but all its columns and entablatures have fallen. To the south wall of its area adjoined the Theatre; the coilon of which, almost filled and overwhelmed by the ruins of the Temple, yet remains, facing the port. West of the Theatre is the Stadium, at right angles to the Isthmian wall; it has very high walls, and the stone front-work, with some of its benches, remain at the upper end. It extends east and west, parallel to one side of the area of the Temple. Just at the place where the Isthmian wall joins Mount Oneus there is a Tumulus, which is, perhaps, that supposed to contain the body of Melicertes, in honour of whom the Isthmian Games were celebrated, above thirteen hundred years before the Christian era. It stands on a very conspicuous eminence above the wall, which here passes towards the south-southeast, quite to the port." There are also the remains of several more ancient Temples; and in no part of Greece does the Antiquary meet with a greater variety of ancient coins, the natural result of the concourse from all the different States assembled every three years on this spot. "But among all the remains," at Palæon Castron, for so the Romæan Shepherds now call the ruins of Schœnus, "perhaps the most remarkable, as corresponding with the indications left by Pausanias, is the living family of those pine-trees, sacred to Neptune, which he says grew in a right line, upon one side, in the approach to the Temple; the statues of the victors in the Games being upon the other side. Many of these, self-sown, are seen on the outside of the wall, upon the slope of the land facing the port." It is a variety of the Pinus sylvestris, by some writers called the Sea-pine.

nian The Isthmian wall passed in a straight line from the western shore near Lechæum, till, as mentioned above, it took a sudden bend at the back of Schœnus. It crossed from sea to sea, where the breadth of the Isthmus is about six miles, and was thence called Hexamilion, a name still given by the Greeks to the whole Isthmus. It was first built by the Peloponnesians, as a protection against the invasion of Xerxes, (Herod. viii. 81,) but was rebuilt at different periods; in the middle ages by Justinian, and afterwards by Emmanuel Palæologus, (A. D. 1413.) It was razed by order of Murád (Amurath) II., in 1427, but restored by order of the Venetian commanders, in 1453. The whole was completed in fifteen days by the labour of 30,000 men. It was enclosed by a double fosse, and strengthened by 136 towers; but proved to be no sufficient barrier against the Turks, and was very soon afterwards abandoned on the approach of Dáúd Páshá, Begler-beg of Mórah, (Morea,) at the head of 80,000 men. It was again repaired by the Venetians while they held the Peninsula, from 1687 to 1715 It is therefore by no means surprising that there are still "distinct traces of the old vallum, and the ruins of a fortress at its termination upon the Corinthian side of the Isthmus," (Clarke, vi. 562,) in the more ancient parts of which stones of an immense size may be observed, (Id. 567.) CORINTH — CORIVAL.

The remains of another wall may be also traced beyond this to the north-east; and a wide, deep channel running from south-west to north-east, nearly half a mile across the neck of the Isthmus, which is the bed of the unfinished canal commenced by order of Nero.

Bellin, Descript. du Golfe de Venise, Par. 1771, 4to.; Coronelli Descript. de la Morée, Paris, 1687, fol.; Wheler's Journey; Spon, Voyages et Reponse à Guillet; Chandler's Travels in Greece, London, 1776, 4to.; Voyage pittoresque de la Grèce par le Comte de Choiseul Gouffier; Gell's Itinerary of Greece; Dodwell's Classical Tour in Greece, London, 1819, 1820, 4to.; and Μελετίου Γεωγρ. παλαια και νεα. Βεν. 1807, 4 tomes, 8vo.

CORIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx spiny; corolla of one irregular petal; capsule superior, five-valved.

One species, C. Monspeliensis, native of the south of Europe.

CORISIÆ, in Zoology, a family of insects of the order Hemiptera, containing the following genera. Scutellera, Pentatoma, Coreus, Neïdes, Lygæus, Capsus, Miris, Myodocha.

The genera Scutellera and Pentatoma live chiefly on plants, the juices of which they suck through the rostrum, though it appears they occasionally attack insects, and feed on their juices in the same manner. They are possessed of very disagreeable odour, which is communicated to bodies with which they come in contact.

The larvæ and pupæ are not remarkably different from the perfect insect, except in the former being wholly without wings and elytra, and the latter having only the rudiments of these parts.

De Geer mentions a curious circumstance in the habits of a species of Pentatoma, several females of which he found in the month of June, each accompanied and followed by their young, from the number of twenty to forty. They appeared to take much care of them, protecting them with great anxiety from the males, which are their greatest enemy. The young do not leave the mother until they no longer require her protection.

CORISPERMUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Monandria, order Digynia. Generic character: calyx none; corolla, petals two; one seed, oval, naked.

Two species, natives of Tátary. Willd.

CORI'VAL, or CORRI'VAL, v. CORI'VAL, n. CORI'VAL, adj. Lat. rivalis, from rivus, a river. Simplicius est rivales dici, quia ut agricolæ rivum habent communem, de usu aquæ, ut de aquæ ductu, et aliis, sæpe contendunt. Vossius. And in Ulpian, quoted by Gesner, it is said, Si inter rivales, id est, qui per eundem rivum aquam ducunt, fit contentio de usu aquæ, &c. And then applied, generally, to those

Who contend or strive for the same object

Warner uses co-rive.

> It lesser greeueth he should grudge
> That I with him co-riue,
> Than his so presumptorie speach
> In your dispite to wiue.
> Warner. Albion's England, book iii. ch. xv.

CORIVAL. — CORK.

The king's three sons had notice of
Their father's leiman now,
So had the queene, and they of such
Coriuing disallowe.
Warner. Albion's England, book viii. ch. xli.

Then Scotland warr'd on England, and
In that same warre did end
The knight that had coryued; so
The ladie lost each frende.
Id. Ib. book vii. ch. xxxvi.

——— Where's then the sawcy boate,
Whose weake vntimber'd sides but euen now
Co-riual'd greatnesse? Either to harbour fled,
Or made a toste for Neptune.
Shakspeare. Troylus and Cressida, fol. 81.

For, sooth to say, weare all saide false,
It were indeed a hell
To have a loue's coryuall, and
As none could brooke it well,
So none should aske, and none should yeeld
To alter loue begun.
Warner. Albion's England, book vii. ch. xxxvi.

Let be your bitten vine, we heare
A blisfull vintage gayne,
That did, and doth, and euermore
Vnblasted may remaine:
For this coriual seede begot.
England English againe. Id. Ib. book v. ch. xxiii.

About this time Cardinal Pool, sent for by the king and queen, came over into England; and had come sooner, but that the emperor, fearing he might prove a corrival with his son Philip, had used means to stop his passage.
Baker. Queen Mary. Anno 1555.

And as the title and right to the crowne of England, and the jurisdiction thereof hath thus from time to time beene decided and settled in and by our parliaments, so hath the title and jurisdiction of the crowne of Scotland, beene frequently discussed and setled in our parliaments, upon appeales made to them by the kings of Scotland, and their corrivals to that crowne.
Prynne. Soveraigne Power of Parliaments, part i. p. 98.

CORIV — COR

To reproach the Roman Church for this idolatrous corrivalry, or rather prelation, of the virgin in religious worship before Christ. More. Expos. of the Seven Churches, (1669,) Pref.

By the corrivalship of Shagad his false friend, Rustan was destroyed. Sir Thomas Herbert. Travels, p. 149.

It is cleare that our Saviour never meant to compare one tradition with another, as approving some, rejecting others, but with indignation cõplains, that traditions were obtruded to God's people, in a corrivaltie with the written word.
Hall. The Old Religion, ch. xvi. sec. 9. vol. ii.

CORIXA, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Hemiptera, (section Heteroptera,) family Hydrocorisæ. Generic character: anterior feet very short, curved; their tarsi one-jointed, compressed, ciliated, without pincers; the other feet elongate, the tarsi biarticulate; pincers of the middle feet very long.

Type, Sigara striata, Fabr.

These insects inhabit the water, keeping themselves suspended at the surface by the hinder parts, but precipitating themselves in an instant to the bottom on the slightest alarm. They fly and swim well, but walk clumsily. They are carnivorous.

CORK.

CORK, v. CORK, n. CO'RKY, CO'RKING-PIN, CORK-FLOAT. } Dutch, korck; Ger. corck; Sp. corcho. All, by contraction, from the Lat. cortex, the bark; for it is in truth the (cortex arboris) bark of a tree. Skinner. (Cortex ex corium et tego, quia quasi corium tegat. Isidorus.)

Corky; of or pertaining to; having the qualities of a cork; light as a cork.

Tyr'd with pinn'd ruffs and fans and partlet strips,
And busks and verdingales about their hips;
And tread on corked stilts a prisoner's pace.
Hall. Satire 6. book iv.

The swelling sea seethes in his angry waves,
And smites the earth that dares the traitors nourish;
Yet oft his thunder their light cork outbraves,
Mowing the mountains, on whose temples flourish
Whole woods of garlands.
P. Fletcher. Christ's Victory in Heaven.

For 'tis impossible for him, who hath fully valued the weight of his general guilts, each of which hath lead enough to sink the most corky, vain, fluctuating, proud, stubborn heart in the world; 'tis impossible, I say, for him either wilfully to run into any actual sins, or insolently to hold up his head in the pride of his integrity. Hammond. Works. Sermon 12. vol. iv.

When you fish, thus,—use a large cork-float, and lead your line about nine inches from the bottom, otherwise the minnow will come to the top of the water.
Walton. Angler, part i. ch. xii.

After this a canoe was left fixed to a grapnel in the middle of the harbour, with a bottle in it well corked, inclosing a letter to Mr. Hughes. Anson. Voyage round the World, book ii. ch. xiii.

Or haply on some river's cooling bank,
Patiently musing, all content I stand
To hook the scaly glutton. See! down sinks
My cork, that fearful monitor.
Somervile. Field Sports.

While my pint-bottle, op'd by help of fork,
With wine enough to navigate a cork,
My sober solitary meal shall crown,
To study edge the mind, and drive the vapours down.
Smart. The Horatian Canons of Friendship.

They twist each easy fool about,
Nor let them in nor let them out,
But keep them twirling on the fire
Of apprehension and desire,
As cock-chafers with corking-pin
The school boy stabs to make them spin.
Lloyd. A Familiar Letter of Rhymes

The Quercus suber, which grows wild in the south of Europe, furnishes from its exterior bark the substance known as CORK. The tree is first barked in the fifteenth year of its growth; and as it rapidly grows up again, and improves by age, the bark may be stripped every eight years afterwards. The Cork tree was known to the Greeks under the name of Φελλὸς. It is described by Theophrastus (iii. 16) among the oaks; he states that the bark requires stripping every three years, and represents it not as an evergreen, in this place, though in another (iii 4,) he admits it to be so. Beckmann (Hist. of Inv. ii.) has reconciled this contradiction, by showing that one species of the Cork tree is really deciduous.

The uses to which suber was applied by the Romans are mentioned by Pliny, (xvi. 13,) 1st, ancoralibus maxime navium, that is, as Beckmann has explained the word, with great probability, for buoys; 2dly, piscantium tragulis, for fishermen's floats; 3dly, cadorum obturamentis, for bunging casks; 4thly, hiberno fœminarum calceatis, for ladies' waterproof soles; though the sneerers at the sex have left it on record, that appearance was as much regarded as health, in the application of Cork. Clemens Alexandrinus has quoted from the Comic Poet Alexis, Τυγχάνει μικρά τις ἅσα, φελλὸς ἐνεγκάττυται.

Beckmann thinks that Cork was not generally used for stoppers till the XVIth century. A Cork jacket is mentioned by Plutarch, in his life of Camillus, as having been used by the messenger whom that General sent to his fellow citizens when besieged in the Capitol, and who was obliged to swim across the Tiber, because the bridge was in possession of the Gauls

When the bark is first stripped it is placed with the convex side next a fire, and pains are taken by swelling it to fill up any accidental holes; or, otherwise, it is straightened by being first laid under heavy piles of stone, and afterwards charred. It is then stacked, and considered fit for sale. It is seldom sufficiently roasted for the cutter's use by these processes, and it generally undergoes a more complete laying after importation.

CORK, a County of Ireland, in the Province of Munster, and occupying the most southern part of the country. It is bounded on the east and south-east by the County of Waterford and St. George's Channel; on the north by the Counties of Limerick and Tipperary; on the west by Kerry; and on the south and south-west by the Atlantic Ocean. Cork is the largest County in Ireland, and contains nearly a twelfth of the whole island. Its greatest extent from north-east to south-west is about ninety English miles, and its extreme breadth about fifty. The superficial area has been stated, in the summary of the late census, at 1638 Irish square miles, equivalent to 2653 English, or 1,697,920 English acres. This space is divided into twenty-five baronies and districts, containing 150 parishes and eighty parts of others, forming the three Dioceses of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross. The population of this County in 1821 was stated at 802,535, which exceeds 300 individuals to each square mile. The outlines of Cork are deeply indented towards the sea by the force of the Atlantic Ocean, which often beats with incredible fury against its rocky shores, where vast masses of rock form several prominent headlands. Many of the views in this part of the County are bold and striking; and those about Cork harbour are singularly varied and beautiful. The prevailing character of the coast, however, is wild and naked, and full grown trees are scarce. The creeks and bays which abound so much here sometimes contain rocky islets, frequently sheltered by the headlands. Among the various inlets which indent the shores of this County, Bantry Bay, with the harbours of Cork and Kinsale deserve particular attention. The first has already been noticed, and the others will be described in connection with the towns to which they belong. Much of the surface of the County is varied. Towards the west the scenery is bold, rugged, and mountainous, and often approaches the sublime. Towards the north and east the surface is more level and fertile, though no great extent of flat country is to be met with in any part of the County. About a fifth part of the whole consists of bogs, mountains, or waste lands. Several ranges or upland districts run chiefly from east to west, but they exhibit the most abrupt and precipitous character towards the latter extremity. The richest tract is in the northern part, where limestone soils most abound. Some fertile vales likewise divide the ridges in the eastern quarter; but here lime is less common than in the former district, and none is found towards the south-west. This latter district, however, is not destitute of good tillage land, though most of it is of an inferior quality to the limestone tracts. The great increase of inhabitants in the County of Cork within the last half century, has indeed subjected many parts of the surface to the operations of the spade and the plough, which had before remained unbroken. The sub-stratum of the soil is a hard rock, which lies near the surface, except in a district north of the Blackwater, which consists of a deep argillaceous soil, as far as it has yet been penetrated. Coal of a sulphureous kind has been found in this tract, but in all other parts of the County, the rock which approaches the surface being of an earlier formation than coal, precludes the hope of finding the latter mineral. In addition to these minerals, marble and slate, iron and lead have likewise been found. The County of Cork is watered by several rivers, which increase both the beauty and fertility of the tracts through which they flow; but from the rapidity of their currents, and the rockiness of their beds, they scarcely serve the purposes of navigation beyond the points at which the tide ceases to flow. The chief of these rivers are the Blackwater, the Bandon, the Lee, and the Awbeg; the first two of which have already been noticed. The Lee rises in the southern part of the County of Kerry, and flowing towards the east, meets the tide at Cork harbour. The Awbeg has been immortalized by Spenser, under the poetical appellation of the Mulla. It was at Kilcoleman, a place on the banks of the Awbeg, that he for some time fixed his residence, and it is supposed that the greater part of his Faerie Queene was written there. The climate of this County is usually considered as mild and moist. The wind varies between the south and north-west nearly three-fourths of the year; the medium temperature is from 51 to 53°; and the average quantity of rain that falls in the neighbourhood of Cork is about thirty-eight inches.

Cultivation

Minerals.

Rivers.

Lee.

Awbeg.

Temperature.

Rain.

This southern part of Ireland presents but little that differs from the adjacent districts in its rural economy. There is the same minute division of tillage lands, the agricultural implements are equally rude, and potatoes constitute the same prominent article of subsistence. Most of the cottages are miserable cabins, abounding with filth, poverty, and indolence. Some wheat and oats, with a little flax, are also cultivated; but neither turneps or clover are often seen. In addition to the produce of the farm-yard, lime, sea-sand, and sea-weed, are commonly used as manure. Dairy farms also occupy some of the districts in the neighbourhood of Cork, and the number of cows kept on each generally varies from thirty to forty. Sheep are only kept in small numbers, nor can they become an object of importance to the County while the land is so minutely divided. Besides agricultural employments, the chief objects of industry are the manufacture of sail-cloth, duck, canvas, and Osnaburgs, with a few coarse woollens. Several distilleries

Vegetable products, &c.

Manufactures.

CORK. are employed in the City of Cork and its neighbourhood, where alone gunpowder is made. There is, however, only one establishment for making the latter article, and that belongs to Government.

Cork. Cork is not only the Capital of the County, but the second City in the Kingdom, and may be considered as both the metropolis and the grand emporium of the southern part of the Island. The old City stood wholly upon an Island, formed by two branches of the river Lee, which divided above the Town, and united again just below it. These included a considerable space of low ground, which was subject to inundations at high tides and floods; and besides the two principal branches of the river, which encompassed the city, several minor channels intersected, and gave it a great resemblance to some of the Dutch towns. Most of these have now been arched over, and the main channels are crossed by several bridges. The new and principal part of the Town also stands on the south side of the river. The streets of the old Town are uncommonly narrow and dirty, and in some of the lanes two persons can scarcely walk abreast. The appearance and conveniences of the new Town are very different from those of the old. Its stately Cathedral was built from the foundation between the years 1725 and 1735, and the expense defrayed by a duty on coals. Cork contains several handsome Parish Churches, a fine Exchange, with a new and beautiful Custom-house, a Town-hall, Hospitals, Barracks, and various other public buildings. The chief export of this great commercial City is salt provisions; and during the slaughtering season, which is from September to the end of January, there have been 100,000 cattle killed. The other exports are tallow, hides, butter, pork, wool, linen and woollen yarn, worsted, and linen. The number of inhabitants at the late enumeration exceeded 100,000; many of whom are engaged in commercial transactions, or the manufacture of coarse woollen cloth, sail-cloth, leather, paper, glass, and a few other articles. Cork is supposed to have been originally founded in the VIth century by the Danes, and in the XIIth it acknowledged the sovereignty of Henry II. After the revolution in 1688, it was occupied by King James II., but was besieged and taken by the Earl of Marlborough. It is at present governed by a Mayor, Sheriffs, and Common Council, and returns two Members to Parliament. Between the Town and the sea, is the spacious opening called the Harbour, which is not only the principal naval station in Ireland, but is frequently the rendezvous of the West India and Mediterranean fleets, while either waiting for convoy, or detained by contrary winds. Vessels of 120 tons come up to the Town, but larger ships lie at Passage, a few miles lower down. The entrance to this Harbour is deep and narrow; it is defended by a fort on each side; and the anchorage is secure from currents and storms. Cork is situated about fifteen miles from the sea, in latitude 51° 53′ 54″ north and longitude 8° 28′ 15″ west.

Kinsale. Kinsale is situated about twelve miles south of Cork, and near the mouth of the river Bandon, which forms a spacious basin, called the Harbour of Kinsale, to which the Town is indebted for its chief importance. Kinsale is an old Town, and was first incorporated by charter in the reign of Edward III. In the reign of Charles II. a strong fort was built commanding the harbour; and when James II. came from France, he landed at Kinsale on the 12th of March, 1688. In 1690, the Earl of Marlborough took Charles Fort by storm, and the town was in consequence incapable of further defence. Kinsale is built under Compass-hill, and extends about a mile in length. The situation is singular, as the principal street runs round the hill, and communicates with others above it by narrow lanes; and on the opposite side of the river stand the two well-built villages of Cove and Scilly. The Town and liberties of Kinsale include six Parishes, and the population is about 10,000. The harbour is of an oval form, and perfectly secure, being completely land-locked by hills, and capable of admitting a great number of vessels; but large men of war are prevented by a bar from entering it. Since the peace, Kinsale derives but little advantage from its harbour, as its foreign commerce is chiefly carried on through the medium of Cork, which in return it furnishes with large supplies of fish, the taking of which occupies three or four hundred boats of about twenty tons each. In the bathing season, Kinsale is a place of fashionable resort. It sends one Member to Parliament. Its distance from Dublin is 136 miles nearly south-west. Latitude 51° 43′ north and longitude 8° 30′ west. CORK.

Bandon. Bandon has already been described; and the only remaining Town that requires notice is Youghall. Youghall which is situated at the base of a hill, on the south of the river Blackwater. A bar renders the entrance of this river difficult, but within, the space is safe and commodious. The chief part of the Town consists of one large street. The Custom-house is a convenient building, and the Collegiate Church is an ancient Gothic structure, containing several tombs and monuments. Youghall was besieged by the Earl of Desmond in 1579; Cromwell embarked there, after his great success in Ireland; it was incorporated by Edward IV., and the Corporation proclaimed Charles II. King of England, in 1648. A Franciscan Monastery was founded there in 1224; and another for Dominicans, on the north side of the Town, a few years afterwards, of which only a few fragments now remain. The first potato planted in Ireland was at this place. Youghall is about thirty miles south-west of Waterford, and twenty-five east of Cork.

The other Towns of this County are, Mallow, Fermoy, Cove, Bantry, Middleton, Charleville, and Doneraile. Cove is situated a few miles from Cork, Cove. and was formerly only a fishing village, but from the great resort of fleets during war, it has been raised into a large and handsome Town, with quays and other conveniences for shipping. It has also become a resort for sea-bathing, which in some measure supplies the advantages lost by the peace. Charleville is situated on the great road from Cork to Charlev Limerick, and before the Union returned two Members to the Irish Parliament. It is very near the northern borders of the County. Fermoy stands near the Fermoy Blackwater, and was merely an obscure village till 1791, when Mr. John Anderson projected a new town, and was assisted in his undertaking by Government. This was laid out on a regular plan, and has advanced rapidly. There are a handsome Church, a classical School, with spacious Barracks, and other large edifices, and a population of about 6000 individuals. Doneraile is situated on the Awbeg, and formerly sent Doneral two Members to the Irish Parliament It is about

CORK. twenty miles north-west of Cork. Mallow is much CORN. frequented on account of a mineral spring, which has a great similarity to the Bristol waters, both in taste and effect. It sends one Member to the Imperial Parliament, and is situated on the ddleton. Blackwater. Middleton stands near the north-eastern extremity of Cork harbour. The Town of
yne. Cloyne is a small place, about twelve miles east of Cork. A Church was erected there as early as 604, and the place was afterwards raised into the See of a Bishop, who is Suffragan of the Archbishop of Cashel. For further particulars respecting this County, see Smith's Natural and Civil History of Cork; Wakefield's Statistical and Political Account of Ireland; Townsend's Statistical Survey of Cork; Mason's Parochial Survey of Ireland; and Sir John Carr's Travels in Ireland. CORK. CORN.

CORMASS, or KERMESSE, the names of a festival in the Netherlands, annually held in almost every village; it is the celebration of the Saint's day to whom the particular village is dedicated, though not usually kept on the fête of the Saint. In Roman Catholic countries every person celebrates his Jour de fête, or birth-day; and the Cormass is the custom applied to places. It is usually held in the summer or autumn, and villages adjacent to each other arrange that their respective Cormasses should not fall on the same day. After the usual religious ceremonies of the morning, processions take place, the itinerant mountebanks or showmen display their exhibitions, and the day closes with a ball, and a variety of rural sports. The recurrence of the Cormass is looked forward to, and hailed with as much delight by the villagers of the Low Countries, as the annual Wake or Races by our English rustics. In Dunkirk the Cormass was formerly celebrated with great splendour; and at Bruges it is held at the period of the great fair.

CO'RMORANT, n. } Corvus marinus, mergus, the CO'RMORANT-LIKE. } sea-crow. "Fr. cormoran; It. corvo marino; Sp. cuervo marino; ob notabilem voracitatem." Junius. See CORVORANT.

The vulgar name of Pelicanus Carbo.

Cormorants are just like young ducks in shape, having such feet and bills; they are black with white breasts, and live on small fish, which they take near the shore, or on worms, which they get out of the mud at low water, they taste very fishy, yet are indifferent good meat, they being very fat.

Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1676.

It is that which makes a man perfectly useless in the world, and he lives to no other purpose than, cormorant-like to devour the fruits of the earth.

Sharp. Works. Sermon 5. vol. v.

A shag, or cormorant, flew several times round the ship. As these birds are seldom, if ever, known to fly far out of sight of land, I judged that some was not far distant.

Cook. Voyage, vol. vi. book v. ch. xii.

CORN, v. } Goth. kaurn; A. S. corn; Dutch,
CORN, n. } koren; Ger. kern. Martinius thinks
CO'RNY. } from the Latin granum, (a gerendo, Varro,) by metathesis; "And with him," says Skinner, "I fully agree." Junius; fortassè a κορέω vel κορέννυμι, satio, saturo.

Corned meat; A. S. go-corned: sale conditus.

To corn; to form into corns or grains.

That water suththe beye aros, & mucha in lond seaneto,
And mo then ten thousend men wonderliche adrencte.
The thridde time, tho grene corn in somer saolde curne,
To foule wormes muchedel the eres gonne turne.

R. Gloucester, p. 148.

Vpon the wardein besily they crie,
To yewe him leve but a litel stownd,
To gon to mille, and seen hir corn yground:
And hardily they dorsten lay hir necke,
The miller should not stele him half a pecke
Of corn by sleighte, ne by force hem reve.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4006 and 4007.

Now I have dronke a draught of corny ale,
By God I hope I shal you tell a thing,
That shal by reson be at your liking.

Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12390.

Thanne he seide to hise disciplis, sothely ther is myche ripe corn but fewe work-men. Therfore preye ye lord of the ripe corn that he sende work-men into his ripe corn.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. ix.

The wylie labourer in one yere laboureth to geat cornes togither, and in an other yere he soweth and gathereth.

Golden Boke, U. 5.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn
His shadowy flail had thrash'd the corn.

Milton. L'Allegro, l. 108.

——— And these scarce blown
Forth flourish't thick the clustring vine, forth crept
The smelling gourd, up stood the corny reed
Embattell'd in her field.

Id. Paradise Lost, book vii. l. 323.

He brought me sulpher and salt-petre, and I weighed a portion of each of these, and of coals I gathered up in the hearth, and beat to powder. While his man mixed these in a little engine, I made a small sieve of parchment, which I pricked full of holes with a small iron made hot, and this was to corn it.

Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1688.

His angel 'twas, that did before you go,
Tam'd savage hearts, and made affections yield
Like ears of corn when wind assaults the field.

Waller. To the King. On his happy return.

——— And bringing home the corny ear,
By what instruction does she bite the grain,
Lest, hid in earth, and taking root again,
It might elude the foresight of her care.

Prior. Solomon. Knowledge, book i.

CORN, in Composition.

Therefore I say, that sooner some of them
Shal scale the walles whiche leade vs up to heauen,
Than cornfed beasts, whose bellie is their God,
Although they preach, of more perfection.

Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

Do not thou tryumphe, O Israel, make no beastynge more then the heathen, for thou haste commytted aduoutrye agaynst thy God: straūge rewardes haste thou loued, moore then al the cornefloures.

Bible, 1551. Osee, ch. ix.

Corne-chandlers (the most avouchable authors in this point) will inform you that when Hartford-shire wheat and barley carries the credit in London, thereby much is meant (though miscalled) which is immediately bought in and brought out of Hartford-shire, but originally growing in Bedford-shire, about Dunstable and elsewhere.

Fuller. Worthies. Bedfordshire.

CORN.

And at this hour we see, the share and coulter tear,
The full corn-bearing glebe, where sometimes forests were.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 19.

Hence travelling through a good corn-country, inhabited by an obscure nation, called the Scythini, they came to a rich town, the lord whereof, and the region adjoining, used them friendly.
Ralegh. History of the World, book iii. ch. x. sec. 11.

We have no reason at any time to call the red sea-barbel λιτ-φάγεφα that is to say corn-devourer.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 638.

A fât mutton corn-fed, or whose wool is well growen, at xxd.
Strype. Life of Parker. A Dictatory for the price of Victuals, &c. Anno 1315.

And indeed he performed it; for he entred France in armes, and set many towns and corn-fields on fire.
Baker. William I. Anno 1087.

Our shop-bookes are our pastures, our corn-grounds.
Ben Jonson. The Divell is an Asse, act iii. sc. 1.

That corn-heaps, fowl and fish, with carriages and other commodities, may remain for hospitality to the bishops.
Strype. Life of Parker. Appendix, No. 10.

For near this batt'ning isle in me is to be seen,
More than on any earth the plover gray and green,
The corn-land loving quale, the daintiest of our bits.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 25.

He is tearmed the maior of the bull ring, of an iron ring that sticketh in the corne-market, to which the bulles that are yearlie bated be vsuallie tied.
Holinshed. Ireland. Anno 1551.

Moreover he said, like as you see these corn-masters bringing a sample of their corn in a dish or napkin to shew you, and by that little do sell all they have: so I think you will all wonder, that delivering of us you shall also deliver yourselves into the hands of your enemies.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch. Demosthenes.

By this practice, and by defrauding servants a portion of their daily foode, and by accusing the corne-mongers and exposing them to the furious yre of the people, he had with all his hard courses and sharp inquisitions rather laid open, than eased the present neede and necessitie.
Holland. Livius, fol. 148.

And a voyce was heard out of the corn-mowe saying, Lay no hands on the corne, for the archbishop, and all that he hath, is the diuelles. Stow. Henry III. Anno 1235.

The corn-devouring weezel here abides,
And the wise ant her wintry store provides.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgic 1. 270.

For the ἀκροθίνια, the top or chief of their corn-heaps they were wont to consecrate unto him who had blessed their fields with encrease. Barrow. Sermon 8. vol. i.

A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn-loft through a chink;
But having amply stuff'd his skin
Could not get out as he got in.
Pope. Horace. Epistle 7.

——————— The rank stote
Thirsting, ah, savage thirst! for harmless blood;
The corn-devouring partridge; timorous hare.
Dodsley. Agriculture, can. 1.

The dill is not beaten out with the corn-drag; nor is the wheel of the wain made to turn upon the cummin.
Lowth. Lecture 10. Allegory.

The latter feeds on seeds and berries, the former is confined to corn-land; in no instance are they observed together.
Pennant. British Zoology. Red-legg'd Partridge.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,
To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms,
Thick rows of spears at once, with sudden glare,
A grove of needles, glitter in the air.
Tickell. Kensington Garden.

CORN,
CO'RNAGE,
CO'RNEOUS,
CORNI'GEROUS,
CO'RNICLE,
CO'RN-CUTTER.

CORN

Corns on the feet, so called because hard, like horn, (instar cornu. Skinner.) Cornua a curvore dicta, quod pleraque curvantur. Varro.

For such as have corneous or horny eyes, as lobsters and crustaceous animals, are generally dim-sighted.
Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xviii.

If they be dextrously dissected, there will be found on either side two black filaments or membranous strings, which extend into the long and shorter cornicle upon protrusion.
Id. Garden of Cyrus, book iii. ch. xx

By the same trick it hath been clearly shown,
That Venus moon-like grows corniculate
What time her face with flusher light is blown.
More. On the Soul, part ii. book iii. ch. iii. st. 62.

That therefore the deer is no short-lived animal, we will acknowledge: that comparatively, and in some sense long-liv'd we will concede; and thus much we shall grant if we commonly account its dayes by thirty six or forty; for thereby it will exceed all other cornigerous animals.
Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. ix.

And therefore we observe, that nature in other cornigerous animals, hath placed the horns higher and reclining, as in bucks.
Id. book v. ch. xxix.

But in the ventricle of porpuses there are three divisions. In many birds a crop, gizard, and little receptacle before it; but in cornigerous animals, which chew the cudd, there are no lesse then four of distinct position and office.
Id. Garden of Cyrus.

But as for such as naturally have their bones not hollow, but whole and solid, they be very rare and seldom sene, and called they are in Latine cornei, i. hard as horne.
Holland. Plinie, fol. 166.

PYG. To find out a good corn-cutter.
TAY. Out on him.
Ben Jonson. The Divell is an Asse, act iv. sc. 4.

I have known a corn-cutter, who with a right education would have been an excellent physician. Spectator, No. 308.

I committed him into the hands of Dr. Thomas Smith in King-street (my own corn-cutter) who attended in an outer room, and wrought so speedy a cure upon him, that I thought fit to send him also away without his cane. Tatler, No. 103.

Tenure by cornage, which was to wind a horn when the Scots or other enemies entered the land, in order to warn the king's subjects, was (like other services of the same nature) a species of grand sergeantry.
Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. ii. p. 74.

As every body has CORNS, more or less, it may be better to treat this troublesome affection of the feet under its familiar, rather than its scientific, denomination. The Chiropodist may recognise the profounder terms Spinæ pedum, Calli, Condylomata, and Tyllomata, and may be pleased with Dr. Cullen's definition of a Corn, as a lamellated hard thickening of the cuticle, to be ranked in the class Locales, and order Tumores; but our present purpose is more with the cure than the description. As Corns arise from irritation and pressure, the first step is to get rid of all tightness; a plaster of soap or litharge, with a little opium, may then be placed over them, for four or five days, to make the surface soft. The part which appears sodden may then be pared away, especial care being taken not to touch the skin, or in other words not to pare till the foot bleeds. The plaster and paring may be renewed alternately till the Corn is eradicated. The part may also be soaked in bran and hot water before each paring. Hog's gall dried in the bladder, spread thinly upon a rag, and applied to the place, though productive of pain, destroys the Corn. We might extend to an almost infinite length the list of infallible receipts which have been offered for the cure of Corns; but the most certain preventive, as well as remedy, and that without which a return of the complaint is inevitable, is an avoidance of tight boots and shoes. The excision of Corns, though often pompously announced, is a dangerous and uncertain operation. See Low, Chiropodologia; Lion, Treatise on Spinæ Pedum; Carlisle, Observations in Med. Facts, vii. 29.

CORN. — CORNER.

CORNAGE, besides the tenure in the passage quoted above from Blackstone, also signified a certain mode of transferring inheritance by the gift of a Horn. Thus, among many others, Ulphus's ivory Horn, which is still preserved in the Vestry of York Minster, was presented by him in token of his bestowing upon God and St. Peter all his land, &c. The custom prevailed till after the Conquest. Archæologia, vol. iii.

CORNEMUSE, or CORNAMUTE, It. cornimusa, a bagpipe. Prevost, Lexicon Manual.

The hoby, sagbot deepe, recorder, and the flute;
Even from the shrillest shawme unto the cornamute.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 4.

CO'RNER,
Co'RNERED,
Co'RNER-CREEPER,
Co'RNER-CREEPING,
Co'RNER-CUPBOARD,
Co'RNER-HOUSE,
Co'RNER-STONE.

"Fr. cornière, angulus; anguli enim instar cornuum protuberant." Skinner. Of similar origin is angulus. See ANGLE.

——— And belly chere ỳ coruen
With crochetes on corneres.
Piers Plouhman. Crede, B 4.

But he biheelde hem: and seide, what thanne is this that is wrytun, the stoon which men bildinge repreueden this is madd into the heed of the corner? Wiclif. Luke, ch. xx.

And he behelde them and sayde: what meaneth thys then that is wrytten: the stone that the bylders refused, the same is made the head corner-stone. Bible, 1551.

This plaine lyes quite vnknown, and corners saulf to lurck within,
Whether on the left hand, or the right the battayle you begin.
Phaer. Æneidos, book xi.

But the fore part of their miter is not so hollow within as the hinder part: neither is it sharp pointed or cornered at the toppe.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars, vol. i. fol. 116.

But thee alone (Bartoldoes noble sonne)
This little corner keepes, exiled farre
From all the world, buried in sloth and shame,
A carpet champion for a wanton dame.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, book xvi. st. 32.

Every hedde of college to weare when they goo abrode, longe gownes, or hodes, or typetts, and square or four cornered capps, as the lawdable custome hathe bene heretofore.
Strype. Life of Parker. Appendix, No. 40.

Eternal God, (for whom whoever dare
Seek new expressions, do the circle square,
And thrust into straight corners of poor wit
Thee, who art cornerless and infinite)
I would but bless thy name, not name thee now.
Donne. Upon the Translation of the Psalms.

Whose learned pens have pulled downe more of the wals of Rome, than all the corner-creeping Brownists in the world shall ever be able to doe, while Amsterdam standeth.
Hall. Apology against Brownists, sec. 57. vol. i. fol. 582.

Resolve to believe, that many witnesses are rather to be believed than none at all; that credible, judicious holy witnesses are rather to be trusted for the report of their own times, than some giddy corner-creeping upstarts, which come dropping in some sixteen hundred years after.
Id. Episcopacy by Divine right, vol. iii. part i. sec. 14.

He that would doubt whether such an epistle were written, may as well doubt whether Pope Zachary wrote to Bp. Boniface in Germany a directiō when to eat bacon: may doubt whether Paul the Fifth wrote to his English Catholicks to perswade them not to sweare they would be good subjects; may doubt whether spider-catcher, corner-creeper C. E. pseudo-catholike priest, wrote a scurrilous letter of above two quire of paper, in a twelve years' answer to three leaves of J. H.
Bishop Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergy.

And certainly confession, as it is the strongest foundation of justice, so it is a kind of corner-stone, whereupon justice and mercy may meet.
State Trials. Trials of the Murderers of Sir Thomas Overbury.

We learn from hence, what is the true use and end of miracles: They are not private, but public proofs; not things to be done in a corner, for the sake of single persons, but before multitudes, and in the face of the sun.
Atterbury. Sermon 2. vol. ii.

He answered me, that he always found those [rough diamonds] that had any constant (or, as he meant regular) figure, to be, in his own expression, six cornered.
Boyle. Experimenta et Observationes Physicæ, tome i. ch. ii.

GOM. Whereabout did you see this most incomparable young lady? my mind misgives me plaguily.
LOR. Here man just before this corner-house.
Dryden. The Spanish Fryar, act i.

Suffice it that my Goody's care
Brought forth her best, though simple fare,
And from the corner-cupboard's hoard
Her stranger guest the more to please,
Bespread her hospitable board,
With what she had—'twas bread and cheese.
Lloyd. The New-River Head.

Who laid foundations for the spacious earth?
Who on its surface did extend the line,
Its form determine, and its bulk confine?
Who fix'd the corner-stone?
Young. A Paraphrase on part of Job.

CORNER — CORNET

CO'RNET, n.
Co'RNETCY,
Co'RNETTER.

Fr. cornet; It. cornetto, buccina. From cornus, q. d. cornulus, i. e. cornus instrumentum musicum.

A cornet of horse; sc. the number of horse accompanied by a cornet, the instrument: then, applied to the officer commanding them; also, to the flag or ensign borne by him.

A cornet of paper; in which a grocer (says Cotgrave) makes up his parcels of spice, &c.; so called from the shape into which it is twisted. And, for the same reason;—a cornet of bread. Also applied to a doctor's tippet; and to a head-dress used in old time, and at this day by some old women. Cotgrave.

I never sawe my lady laye apart,
Her cornet blacke, in cold nor yet in heate,
Sith fyrst she knew my griefe was growen so greate.
Surrey. Complaint that his Lady, &c.

They altogether wente from thence tylle before Syracuse; hauynge their shyppes in order in fourme of a cornette, whereof they sente tenne bifore towardes the greate porte.
Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 162.

FOL. The way is windy and narrow: for, look you, I do but wind this cornet, and if another answer it, she comes.
Ford. The Sun's Darling, act ii. sc. 1.

NYMPHS. Euterpe, next to thee we will proceed
That first found'st out the music on the reed,
With breath and fingers giving life
To the shrill cornet and the fife.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium. Nymphal 3.

He taketh the assay with cornetts of trencher bread of his owne cuttyng, and that is thus: He taketh a cornet of bread in his hande, and toucheth three partes of the dyshe, and maketh a flourishe over it, and giveth it to the aforenamed persons to eat,

CORNET. — CORNUCOPIA.

and of every stewed meate, rosted, boylde, or broylad, beying fyshe or fleshe, he cutteth a little thereof, &c.
Leland. The Inthronization of Archbishop Nevill, vol. vi. p. 9.

It was the goodliest shew and the fullest of solicitous curiosity, that you might know a God was to be buried; so great was the rabble of trumpetters, cornetters and other musitians, that even Claudius himselfe might haue heard them.
Hakewill. Apologie, fol. 429.

These brigands, then having espied our armie afarre off, and heard the trumpetters and cornettiers sound, stayed their march, and stood still a prety while.
Holland. Ammianus. Gallus and Constantius, fol. 6.

And after them upon a nag,
That might pass for a forehand stag,
A cornet rode, and on his staff
A smock display'd did proudly wave.
Butler. Hudibras, part ii. can. 2.

The CORNET is a musical instrument of the Horn species. Mersennus describes three sorts of Cornets; namely, Treble, Tenor, and Bass. The tube of the Treble, and of the Tenor Cornet, is but slightly curved; the Bass Cornet exactly resembles the modern Serpent. These instruments were once employed in orchestras; but the Treble Cornet has been superseded by the Hautboy, the Tenor Cornet by the Clarionet, and the Bass or Serpent is now chiefly confined to military bands. The latter instrument, however, has very fine qualities; it is more powerful than the Bassoon, while, in the hands of a skilful performer, it is susceptible of the greatest delicacy of tone. On these accounts, it is to be regretted that the Serpent should be neglected by Composers.

CORNICE, Fr. corniche; It. cornice; Sp. cornija; and these, says Skinner, from corniculum, quia instar corniculorum prominent.

The brow of a wall, pillar or other piece of building.

——————— Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures grav'n.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 716.

And particularly observing that it was then running along a wooden cornice, which blazed fiercely, and would immediately communicate the flame to a great distance, he ordered his people to begin with tearing away that cornice.
Anson. Voyage round the World, book iii. ch. x.

Among the ladies who please themselves with splendid furniture, or elegant entertainments, it is a practice very common to ask every guest how he likes the carved work of the cornice, or the figures of the tapestry.
Johnson. The Rambler, No. 126.

CORNIDIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Octandria, order Tetragynia. Generic character: calyx of three obtuse angles, entire; corolla, petals four; styles diverging; capsule three-celled, three-valved; seeds numerous.

One species, C. umbellata, a tall tree, native of Peru. Persoon, Syn.

CORNUCOPIA, the horn of Plenty.

First Ceres, in her chariot seated high,
By harness'd dragons drawn along the sky;
A cornucopia fill'd her weaker hand,
Charg'd with the various offspring of the land,
Fruit, flowers, and corn.
Hughes. The Triumph of Peace.

Casaubon finds little light from antiquity of these beginnings of poetry amongst the Grecians, but only these representations of Satyrs, who carried canisters and cornucopias full of several fruits in their hands, and danced with them at their public feasts.
Dryden. The Origin and Progress of Satire.

One of the goats of Amalthæa, the Nymph who nursed Jupiter in Crete, broke off its horn against a tree. The Nymph having wreathed it with flowers, and filled it with fruit, presented it to the God. Jupiter when in power called Amalthæa to the skies, and made the horn an emblem of fertility. So sings Ovid, Fasti, v. 110. In the Metamorphoses, ix. 84, he derives the CORNUCOPIA from a horn of the River God Achelous, broken off by Hercules, and consecrated by the Naiads. So also Strabo, x.

CORNUCOPIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Triandria, order Digynia, natural order Gramineæ. Generic character: involucre one-leaved, funnel-shaped, crenated, many-flowered; calyx two-valved; corolla one-valved.

Two species, Grasses, C. cucullata, native of the East of Europe, and C. alopecuroides, native of Italy.

CORNULARIA, in Zoology, a genus of the Polypi vaginati, of Lamarck, of the section Vaginiformes. Generic character: polypary fixed by the base, horny; twigs simple, funnel-shaped, erect, each containing a single polypus; polypi solitary, terminal; mouth with eight pinnate tentacula, disposed in a single series.

There is but one known species of this genus, Tubularia Cornucopia, of Pallas.

CORNUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Monogynia, natural order Caprifoliæ. Generic character: calyx four-toothed; corolla of four petals; drupe inferior, nut two-celled.

Willdenow describes twelve species, natives of Europe and North America. C. sanguinea, the Dogwood, and C. Suecica, are natives of England.

CORNU'TE, CORNU'TED, CORNU'TO, CORNU'TOR. Lat. cornutus, horned or having horns; Fr. cornard, a cuckold, or horned beast. For various conjectures respecting the origin of this application of the word, see Menage, in V. Cornard.

A lawyer's wife in Aristænetus, because her husband was negligent in his businesse, quando lecto danda opera, threatned to cornute him. Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 601.

FAL. No, (M. Broom) but the peaking cornuto her husband (M. Broom) dwelling in a continual larum of ielousie, comes in the instant of our encounter.
Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, fol. 52.

He that thinks every man is his wife's suitor
Defiles his bed, and proves his own cornutor.
Jordan. Poems, 2. b.

Of every sect, whigs, papists, and high-flyers,
Cornuted aldermen, and hen peck'd squires.
Somervile. The Bowling-green.

CORNUTIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia, natural order Vitices. Generic character: calyx five-toothed; stamens longer than the corolla; style very long; berry one-seeded.

Two species, natives of the West Indies. Willdenow.

CORNWALL, the County which occupies the south-western extremity of England, and stretches its rocky frontier into the Atlantic. It is encompassed by the sea, except on the east, where it joins Devonshire. A few miles of the northern part of this boundary is formed by an arbitrary line, while in all the rest the separation of the Counties is marked by the river Tamar. Cornwall is therefore a promontory stretching towards the south-east, through a space of about Situatic and bo daries.

CORN-WALL.

tent and pulation.

ninety miles, while its greatest breadth from north to south seldom exceeds forty miles. The English Channel washes its shores on the south, and the Bristol Channel on the north; while the celebrated point denominated the Land's End constitutes its western extremity. The Lizard Point is another promontory on the south coast; while Ram Head constitutes the western boundary of Plymouth Sound. The area of Cornwall is stated at 1327 square miles, and the population at 262,600 individuals. This is nearly 198 persons to each square mile, which is, therefore, twenty-six less than the general average for the whole of England. The rate of increase of this population, during the last and present centuries, has been the following:

crease of pulation.

Years.	Population.	Increase.
In 1700	105,800	27 per cent.
1750	135,000	44 per cent.
1801	194,000	15 per cent.
1811	223,900	17 per cent.
1821	262,600

face.

The surface of Cornwall is chiefly composed of hills and vallies, rising and falling in rapid succession. A range of sterile mountains, though not of great height, runs through the centre of the County; yet the highest point is less than 1400 feet above the level of the sea. This tract is interspersed with heaths and moors, while many of the intervening vallies are picturesque and fertile; sometimes fringed with wood and at others waving with corn, or enamelled with meadows. The basis of this County is granite, huge masses of which often raise their naked summits to a considerable height. Its acclivities are frequently steep, and appear like walls to the vallies below. The stupendous rocks, which form the grand barrier against the ocean, particularly near the two great landmarks, the Land's End and the Lizard Point, are well adapted to inspire the mind with sublime conceptions; while the deficiency of trees and hedges in all the elevated parts of the County, gives it a naked and barren appearance. In several parts of this County the hills are crowned with artificial Cairns, or natural rocky aggregations. A greater number of Druidical remains, and many of these in a more perfect state of preservation, are also spread over Cornwall, than are to be found in any other part of Europe.

ns.

nate.

The climate is mild, moist, and healthy. The wind blows from points between the south and west for the greater part of the year; and being saturated with vapours from the Atlantic, the hills break the progress of the clouds, and cause frequent rains. Storms are also more frequent, and sometimes more violent, than in most other parts of England, particularly from the north-west; but the winds from this quarter are generally dry, and accompanied by fair weather. Snow seldom lies in any part of the County for more than two or three days together, and frost is not often either severe or of long continuance. The myrtle, the balm of Gilead, and several other tender plants which require the shelter of the green-house in most other Counties of England, flourish in the open air; yet the most hardy trees suffer greatly from the violence of the storms, and the effects of the sea breeze; in consequence of which plantations are not easily raised, and those which have been reared have but a languid appearance. Almost the only shrub that thrives well near the sea is the tamarisk, which grows to the height of ten or twelve feet in seven years. The soil of the higher parts is a light black earth, that on the gentle declivities is chiefly a light loam, mixed with slaty matter; while, in the lower tracts, clay of different qualities is often met with. Of this, one kind is made into bricks which are much valued for furnaces, and another is worked into moulds for casting metals. The common agricultural products of other parts of England are raised in most of the lower districts, while good cider is made in that part which borders on Devonshire; but agriculture being considered merely as a minor concern compared with other branches of industry, is pursued with little vigour. Many of the farms are small, and few of the estates large, except some of those belonging to the Duchy lands, which were originally reserved as a provision for the heir apparent of the Crown. These were first set apart for that purpose by Edward III. for his son, the Black Prince, whom he created Duke of Cornwall. These lands are generally leased for three lives, the lessee paying a fine at the time of the grant, with a reserved rent during the term of the lease. Leases are also frequently granted of the farms on the private estates, very few of which exceed a rental of £3000. a year, independently of the mineral treasures they may contain. The native breed of sheep, which was one of the worst in the Kingdom, has been almost entirely superseded by other kinds. Horses and mules are often used in transporting articles of various kinds from one place to another, instead of carts. Sea sand, sea-weeds, and damaged Pilchards, are the most common manures near the sea.

CORN-WALL.

Soil.

Agriculture, &c.

The principal rivers in Cornwall are the Tamar, the Lynher, the Looe, the Fowey, the Camel or Alan, and the Fal. The Tamar is the largest stream, and rises near the north-west extremity of the County; and flows towards the south, on the borders of Devonshire. After being increased by several tributary streams, it falls into the spacious basin, called the Hamoaze, and is subsequently joined by the waters of the Plym, when their united streams form the noble road called Plymouth Sound. The narrowness of the County allows few of the other streams to attain importance, except as forming considerable estuaries before they enter the sea. Such are the Fowey and the Fal, on the south; the former of which falls into the sea below Fowey, and the latter near Falmouth. The Camel rises north of Camelford, and flows southward nearly to Bodmin, on the west side of which it winds to the north-west, and enters the sea near Padstow.

Rivers.

Tamar.

Fowey, Fal, &c.

The circumstances, however, by which this County is most distinguished, are its mineral treasures; particularly tin and copper. The mines of the first of these metals were worked at a very early period, and formed an extensive and lucrative trade to the Phœnicians before the Christian era. The strata of both tin and copper extend from west to east, from near the Land's End to Dartmoor Hills in Devonshire, intermixed with granite and a species of grawacke, which the miners call Killas. The chief mines at present worked, are in the vicinity and on the west of St. Austle, where they occupy a space of about seven miles in breadth, not far from the northern coast. These metals are principally found in veins, or fis-

Minerals.

CORN-WALL.

sures, called Lodes; the sides of which are sometimes hard stone, and at others nearly as soft as clay. Smaller veins diverge from these larger ones, like the branches of a tree, till they are lost in mere threads. The situations of these larger veins are discovered by various indications, as scattered pieces of metal, the metallic taste of springs, and other circumstances. Many rich lodes have also been discovered by working drifts across the country from north to south, which therefore intersected the veins nearly at right angles. Tin is found both in veins or seams of ore, or interspersed in grains and small particles in the natural rock. These veins, after being perpendicular for several fathoms, sometimes become horizontal.

Tin.

Tin is most generally met with in this County in an indurated, or glass-like form; and its most usual matrix is either an argillaceous or siliceous substance, calcareous matter being seldom found contiguous to the ore; and the oxides of iron and arsenic are those which are most commonly mixed with it. When the ore is raised, it is pounded and washed from the exterior substances, and then conveyed to the smelting-house, where the metal is cast into blocks, weighing from nearly three to almost four hundred weight each; but before these can be sold, they must be assayed by the proper officer, and stamped with the seal of the Duchy, which is denominated Coining. These coinages have been regularly held four times a year, since the reign of Henry VIII., at the Stannary towns of Launceston, Lostwithiel, Truro, and Helston; Penzance was added to the number by Charles II. The quantity of tin annually obtained in this County is about 25,000 blocks; and a duty of four shillings a hundred weight is paid to the Duke of Cornwall, on all that is coined, which produces a revenue of about £10,000. The whole amount of the annual coinage is, therefore, 2500 tons.

Copper.

Copper is another distinguished product of Cornwall. The ores are of various kinds, and are often found in great abundance. Veins are sometimes discovered in cliffs laid bare by the sea; and one of the strongest indications of a rich ore is a reddish coloured earthy stone, which crumbles like the rust of iron. The ore does not lie at any particular depth, but is the richest at some distance below the surface. When the metal is properly refined, it is poured into moulds, and this formed into bars of about 150 pounds weight each. The whole quantity of ore annually obtained was, a few years ago, estimated at 40,000 tons, which yielded about a ninth or a tenth part of pure metal.

Lead, &c.

Lead mines are also worked, in which the metal is found in the state of galena, or pure sulphuret of lead, which is both crystallized and in masses. Silver is said to have been formerly obtained there in considerable quantities; but of late the researches for this metal have proved fruitless. Gold has also been discovered, but not in sufficient quantities to defray the expense of working. Besides these, bismuth, zinc, antimony, cobalt, arsenic, manganese, and some of the other inferior metals, are found in considerable abundance in this County. According to the Map of the Mines of Cornwall, published by Mr. Phillips, some years since, there were working at that time forty-five mines of copper, twenty-eight of tin, eighteen of copper and tin, two of lead, one of silver, one of lead and silver, one of copper and silver, one of copper and cobalt, one of tin and cobalt, and one of antimony; making a total of ninety-nine mines. Good slates are likewise obtained, with free stone, resembling the Portland stone; besides the celebrated soap rock, between the Lizard Point and Mullion, used in the manufacture of porcelain, particularly in that made at Worcester. But a still more noted product of this kind is the China stone, found near St. Austle, and employed as a principal ingredient in the Staffordshire potteries. This substance is also made at Truro into retorts and crucibles. Transparent quartz, called Cornish diamond, is met with in some parts; besides a peculiar stone of a cellular structure, which is found in some of the copper-mines, and called the Swimming stone, from its being lighter than water.

CORN-WALL — CORO

Fisheries.

Most kinds of fish common to the other shores of England are met with near the shores of Cornwall, which is also frequented by the grampus, the shark, the sunfish, and conger eels of great size, sometimes weighing 120 pounds each. Mackarel are caught in great numbers; but the Pilchard fishery is at once the most peculiar and important: of this we have already given an account under the head Clupea.

Cornwall is divided into nine hundreds, and contains a greater number of Parliamentary Boroughs than any other County in England. The Members it returns exceed forty; but in many of the places the number of electors is small. A distinct body of militia is raised for the County, and another for the Stannaries. Cornwall forms part of the Diocese of Exeter, and contains 203 Parishes, with an average population of about 1300 persons to each parish. Launceston is usually esteemed the Capital of the County, but the Assizes are held alternately there and at Bodmin. Falmouth, however, is the most important place; from its good harbour and excellent road for shipping, as well as from being the principal station for the packets which sail thence to almost all the distant parts of the world.

Among other works on the subject of this County, the following may be consulted with advantage, viz. Carew's Survey; Borlase's Natural History; Historical and Monumental Antiquities; Beauties of England and Wales, vol. ii.; Wogram's General View of the Agriculture of Cornwall; and the Transactions of the Geological Society.

CORO, a Province of the department of Zulia, in the Republic of Colombia, embracing the coast of the Caribbean Sea, from the Gulf of Venezuela, or Maracaibo, to the Golfo Triste; and bounded by Truxillo on the south; by the Cordillera of Coro and Caracas on the east; and by the lake or inland sea of Maracaibo on the west.

A range of lofty mountains encircle the whole of the eastern and northern limits of this Province, giving rise to several small rivers, of which the Seco and Guiges running into the Gulf of Venezuela, and the Aroa Tocuyo and Yaracuy into the Caribbean Sea, are the most useful.

The Guiges falls into the ocean, sixteen leagues west of the city of Coro; and the Tocuyo twenty-five leagues east of the Guiges, rising in the mountains fifteen leagues south of the town of Carora, at the distance of nearly 180 miles from the ocean, and is navigable as far as the village of Banagua, 120 miles from its mouth, its banks furnishing abundance of timber of the largest size, and fit for every kind of building.

CORO. Coro is still in an uncultivated state, for the most part, but it is capable of much improvement; it contains the towns of Carora, San Felipe, Carovita, Barquisimeto, and Tocuyo, with many large settlements, and the Capital, Coro, which was for a long time the Metropolitan city of Venezuela. This is situated in latitude 11° north and in longitude 72° 30′ west, on an isthmus which divides the Gulf of Maracaibo from the Caribbean Sea, being 240 miles west of Caracas. It was founded in 1527, and was the second settlement made by Europeans on this coast. The site of this place is unhealthy, being on a barren sandy plain, three miles from the ocean. The only plant which flourishes in its neighbourhood, is the Indian fig; and as the plain is destitute of water, fruits and vegetables are brought to market from a distance exceeding nine miles; and water, for culinary and domestic purposes, is sold by the barrel, being fetched from springs two miles off. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, it is so conveniently placed for a contraband trade with the Dutch at Curaçoa, and with the English West India Islands, that Coro contains a population of 10,000 souls; but, from their inactivity and other causes, they are in general poor, though their trade might be very valuable, as it consists in exporting mules, hides, goats, pottery ware, cheese, &c. The streets of Coro are regular, but the houses are mean, and the city is not paved; its public buildings being few in number and unworthy of notice. Its port, at a league's distance lies open from north to north-east, and its accommodations are so trifling, that it will probably never reach a higher rank than that of a flourishing entrepôt for smugglers.

A singularly-shaped peninsula, named Paragoana, runs out for several leagues into the main ocean, north-west of this city, and is inhabited by Negroes and Indians, who raise large quantities of live stock on it, to supply Curaçoa, which is visited daily by some of their boats for that purpose.

Carora, the next Town of this Province, is situated in latitude 90° 50′ north, in the interior, and has been already described.

Carovita is in latitude 11° north, at the elbow of a range of mountains, which divide two smaller rivers, that afterwards unite, and enter the ocean at Point Manzanilla; but of its population we have no account.

Tocuyo is a large Town, in latitude 9° 35′ north and longitude 70° 20′ west, 270 miles south-west of Caracas, in a fine valley, through which the River Tocuyo flows, between two ranges of very high mountains, which cause an occasional alteration in the air, so as to render the climate cold at irregular intervals; but, in general, it is very mild and salubrious. The inhabitants amount to about 10,200, and are chiefly artizans, traders, graziers, and agriculturists. This city is built in the Spanish style, and is very regular; the streets being all wide and straight, with a fine church, some chapels and monasteries; and it is so advantageously situated for the exportation of the produce in its neighbourhood, that the wheat of Tocuyo furnishes bread to almost all the interior settlements of Venezuela and Coro. Manufactories of woollens are also established, in which blankets and coverlids are made, and sent to Maracaibo, and even as far as Carthagena. The preparation of leather also supplies employment to a great portion of the citizens, who work up as much of the raw materials as they can find hands to manufacture, and export the rest; whilst their industry gives them the monopoly of salt, which they procure from the salt ponds of Coro. CORO.

Barquisimeto, another rich and populous Town, has been already described. COROLLARY.

San Felipe, or Cocorata, stands in latitude 10° 15′ north, fifty leagues west of Caracas, on the River Yaracuy. It contains 6800 inhabitants, and is well built; the surrounding country being very fertile in cacao, indigo, coffee, cotton, and sugar cane; seven leagues south-west of it is Nirgua, in latitude 10° north, built in the early period of the conquest, on account of its mines, but now in a decaying state, being inhabited only by about 3200 Sambos, the race derived from Indians and Negroes.

The Province of Coro is less known than any other division of the Venezuelian portion of the Republic of Colombia, much of its surface bring occupied by the aboriginal race, who are yet in a state of freedom, as is the case with most of the Indian tribes, surrounding the inland sea of Maracaibo.

The most recent authors, after excluding these nomades, give 30,000 as the number of Creoles, Mestizoes Negroes, Indians, and mixed races inhabiting the Province of Coro.

CORODY, or Corrody, Lat. corrodo, in Common Law, signifies a sum of money, or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the King from an Abbey, or Religious house, of which he was the founder, for the support of any of his servants on whom he thought fit to bestow it. The difference between a Corody and pension appears to be, that the former was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the King's servants in an Abbey; the latter was given to one of the King's Chaplains for his support, till he was provided with a benefice. In Fitz. Nat. Brev. 231, the names of the Corodies and pensions payable to the King, by the Abbies and Priories in England, as extracted from an ancient roll in the Exchequer, are set out, and the law with regard to them is fully stated.

In the Monasticon Anglicanum may be found the form of a Corody.

COROLLARY, n. Lat. corollarium, est additum præterquam quod debitum: ejus vocabulum fictum a corollis, (garlands or chaplets,) quod hæ, cum placuerunt actores, in scend dari solitæ. Varro. And see the Example from Chaucer.

Fr. corolaire; surplusage, overplus, addition to; and it is thus used by Shakspeare, Tempest. As now generally applied, it is

That which follows over and above the proposition demonstrated.

Upon these thinges then (q[d] she) right as these geometriciens, when they haue shewed their proposicions, been wonte to bringen in thinges, that they cleapen porismes, or declarations of foresaide thinges right so woll I yeue thee here, as a corallarie or a mede of crowne. Chaucer. The third Booke of Boecius, fol. 226.

For a corollary, in this not unfit place, I will transcribe a piece of the gloss out of an old copy, speaking thus upon a passage in the prophesy. Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 2.

Pro. Well.
Now come my Ar.ell, bring a corolary,
Rather than want a spirit; appear, and pertly.
Shakspeare. Tempest, fol. 14.

Sure I am, if his assertion be true, as I believe it is, a corollary may presently be deduced from it, which, if it were embraced, cannot, in all reason, but do infinite service both to the truth of Christ, and the peace of Christendom
Chillingworth. Rel. Prot. Church, ch. iv. part i.

COROLLARY. — CORONE.

From whence he draws several corollaries, as that, Hence may be given a reason why an eagle is swifter than a tortoise, viz. because it moves faster.

Boyle. An Explication of the Rota Aristotelica.

Let me only add one corollary to our believing adversaries, as a farther support of this part of the proposition.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iv. sec. 6.

COROMANDEL is the name given to the eastern coast of the Peninsula of India, from the mouths of the Krishna in 15° 43′ north to Kali-mera Point in 10° 15′ north. It is the eastern boundary of the Carnatic Province, according to the present division of the British dominions in India, and was formerly more properly written Choramandel; for Chóla-mandala, the Sancrĭt compound, of which this name is a corruption, signifies the circle or district of Chola, either from a Dynasty which anciently reigned over the Kingdom of Tanjore, or from sorghum, (Chóra,) the commonest grain in that country. (Hamilton's Hindostan, ii.; and Fra Paolino's Travels.)

CORO′NE, Co′RONAL, adj. Co′RONALLY, Co′RONAL, n. Co′RONARY, CORONA′TION, CORONA′TION-DAY, Co′RONET, n. } Corone is written by some writers; also coronement. Fr. and Sp. coronel; Lat. corona. Veteres chorona dixere a χορώνος, quod ipsum est a χοροῖς, quia coronati choreas agerent χορευτὰι, sive saltatores scenici. Vossius.

"Commissure coronate; the coronal suture or seame, which compasses the forehead, or forepart of the skull, in form of a half circle." Cotgrave.

A garland, wreath or chaplet.

Wharfor þe barons granted him ilkone,
Knoute to be corouned, & haf it alone.

R. Brunne, p. 49.

He was purfild wit peloure. non purer in erthe
And coronede in a corone.

Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 24.

þe next yere þere after his coronment,
þe Walsh men, þat luf no pes, on him ran & brent.

R. Brunne, p. 28.

Partly by your counsell,
Garnysshed with laurell
Was my fresshe coronell.

Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Out of whiche [a goodly tower] sodaynly apperyd iii. ladyes rychely clad in gold and sylke, with coronettes vpon theyr heddes: wherof the firste was named dame Nature, the seconde dame Grace, and the third dame Fortune.

Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1532.

And hark, how merrily they sing,
That makes the neighbouring meadows ring,
And Beta comes before alone, clad in a purple pall
And as the queen of all the rest, doth wear a coronal.

Drayton. Pastorals. Eclogue 2.

As the oyle was poured coronally or circularly upon the head of kings, so the high priest was anointed decussatively, or in the form of a X. Sir Thomas Brown. Garden of Cyrus, ch. i.

Upon my often calling to have the oaths at the coronation of King James and King Charles compared, some of them repaired again to my study at Lambeth, to search for all such copies of coronation-books as could there be found.

State Trials. Trial of Archbishop Laud. Anno 1644.

Whereas it appears in my diary at January 31, that the Bishops were not alone trusted with this coronation-business, sed alii proceres, but other great and noble men also?

Id. Ib. Anno 1644. May 22.

Afterwards, under the reign of King Edward the First it was held by sergeantry, namely, by holding the laver or cure for the king to wash in, upon his coronation-day.

Fuller. Worthies. Dorsetshire.

CORO — CORONATION

——— He (and who could better judge than he?)
Did then more greatness in him see,
More lustre and more majesty,
Than all his coronation-pomp could show to human eye.

Cowley. Ode on his Majesty's Restoration and Return.

The people of Norwich obtained of the king to have coroners and bailiffes: for before that time, they had no other officer, but a serjeant for the king that kept courts.

Stow. King Stephen. Anno 1142.

The eldest son in a desperate lunacy murthered himself, and was found to have done so, by the coroner's inquest.

Baker. Richard III. Anno 1448.

He ordained moreover, in the honour of Jupiter Capitoliaus, quinquennal games of three fold maisteries, musike, horseriding and gymnicke exercises; and in the same, rewarding victours with coronets.

Holland. Suetonius. Flavius Domitianus, fol. 262.

But here again the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley. Sermon 4.

This is just such a great action as that of the champion's on a coronation-day, who challenges all mankind to dispute with him the right of the sovereign, surrounded with his guards.

Tatler, No. 17.

Your may-pole deck with flow'ry coronal;
Sprinkle the flow'ry coronal with wine;
And in the nimble-footed galliard, all,
Shepherds and shepherdesses, lively join.

Thompson. An Hymn to May.

Insomuch that he [the King of England] is bound by oath at his coronation to the observance and keeping his own laws.

Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. i. p. 234.

The first English CORONATION of which any circumstantial relation has been given, is that of Richard I., which may be found in the History of Matthew Paris. That of Henry IV., is detailed by Froissart; that of Richard III., by Hall and Grafton; in later days, we have Ogilby's Relation of the Entertainment of his Majesty Charles II., in his passage through the City of London to his Coronation, &c. 1661; Dowglass's Form and Order of the Coronation of Charles II., as it was acted and done at Scoon, on the 1st January, 1651, 1660; Sandford's History of the Coronation of King James II., 1687; Menin's Historical and Chronological Treatise of the Anointing and Coronation of the Kings and Queens of France, &c. and of all the Princes of Europe, 1723; and there is a work of great splendour and magnificence now in progress, descriptive of the Coronation of George IV. It is printed by Whittaker, in letters of gold on vellum, and is richly illuminated with portraits of the chief personages engaged in the ceremonial, and views of different parts of the procession. The form and ceremonial itself may be most accurately learned from a manuscript in the possession of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, Liber Regalis. This curious volume, besides a Calendar, Rubric, and Offices, contains an exact ordinal of the Coronation, together with the Chants and Anthems used thereat. An illumination at the beginning bears a close resemblance to the portrait of Richard II., still preserved in the Jerusalem Chamber; and the Book itself is supposed to have been drawn up for the instruction of the Prelates who attended the Coronation of that Monarch, and to have been procured and presented to the Church of Westminster by Nicholas Lytlington, who was Abbot thereof from A. D. 1362 to 1386. Strutt, in his Complete View of the Manners, Customs, &c. of the People of England, vol. iii. has given an abstract of the Ceremonies contained in the Liber Regalis.

CORONER, so called because he deals principally with the pleas of the Crown, or such which more immediately concern the King. Coroners are very ancient officers at Common Law, and formerly were the principal conservators of the peace within their Counties.

Coroners are of three kinds, Virtute officii; Virtute cartæ sive commissionis; Virtute electionis. The Coroner Virtute officii is the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, who is Chief Coroner of England, and may exercise his jurisdiction of Coroner in any part of the Realm. Coroners Virtute cartæ sive commissionis are where, by a grant to a Lord or a Corporation, they have power to make, or be Coroners, within their franchise. Thus, the Mayor of London is by charter Coroner of London. The Bishop of Ely has by charter, Henry VII., power to make Coroners within the Isle of Ely; and the Cathedral Church of Westminster has by charter, James I. (1605,) the power of making a Coroner for the City of Westminster. There are also two great precincts that by the King's grants have power to nominate Coroners: viz. the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty, and the Verge; the former for inquisitions of death on the high seas, the latter within the Verge; the Coroner of the Admiralty was formerly appointed by the Lord High Admiral; the appointment of Coroner of the Verge is settled in perpetuity in the Lord Steward or Lord Grand Master of the King's house, for the time being. Coroners Virtute electionis are those who by Statute West. 1, ch. 10, and Statute 28 Edward III. ch. 6, are eligible by the County in the County Courts by the King's writ De Coronatore eligendo. The 3 Edward I. ch. 10; 14 Edward III. Statute 1, ch. 8; and 28 Edward III. ch. 6, enact the necessary qualifications for Coroners, and the mode of their election; namely, that they should be sufficient men in respect of property, and be elected by the Freeholders of the County in full County Court. The authority and duty of Coroners in taking inquisitions, is fully laid down by the Statute 4 Edward I. Statute 2, commonly called the statute De officio Coronatoris. In all cases of murder, sudden or accidental death, an Inquest must be held; and the cause of such death, after viewing the body, fully inquired into by the Coroner and a Jury, to be summoned by him for that purpose. After the Jury have found their verdict, the Coroner enrolls, and returns the inquisition to the Justices of the next Gaol delivery of the County, or certifies it into the King's Bench. The authority of Coroners is Ministerial as well as Judicial. Judicial, as stated in cases of violent death, and to take and enter appeals of murder, pronounce judgment upon outlawries, &c. and to inquire of lands and goods, and escapes of murderers, treasure trove, wreck of the sea, deodands, &c. Ministerial, where the Coroner executes the King's writs, on exception being taken to the Sheriff, as by his being a party to the suit, kin to either of the parties, or on the Sheriff's default. Coroners are chosen for life, but may be removed by being made Sheriffs, or chosen Verderors, offices incompatible with the other; or by the King's writ De Coronatore exonerando, a cause being therein assigned, as incapacity arising from sickness or years, &c.; and by Statute 25 George II. ch. 29, extortion, neglect, or misbehaviour, are made causes of removal. The Statute 3 Edward I. ch. 10, prohibited Coroners from receiving any remuneration for doing their offices; this was in affirmance of the doctrine at Common Law, that no one connected with the administration of justice should take any fee. The Statute 3 Henry VII. ch. 1, allowed the Coroner 13*s.* 4*d.* for each inquisition. This sum was increased to 20*s.*, and 9*d.* a mile for his travelling expenses from the place of his abode, by the Statute 25 George II. ch. 29.

CORONEL, Colonel so written. See COLONEL.

Heagist and Horsus, were appointed with the British commissaries for a certeine summe of monie to take vp their prescribed number of men, and to receiue charge of them as coronels, as well for their conuaie ouer into Britaine, as also for their seruice there, after their arriual.

Holinshed. History of Scotland. Dongall.

Thus Annæus Serenus, captaine of the Emperour Nero his guard, came by his death, with diuers coronels and centurions, at one dinner. Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 133.

On the 4th of March the L. lieutenant saw the Earl of Essex coronel, and Sir William Russell coronel, muster and trayne by Harlem to the number of 200 horse.

Stow. Queen Elizabeth. Anno 1586.

CORONILLA, in Botany, a genus of the class Diadelphia, order Decandria, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx two-lipped, petals with claws; seed-pod nearly round, jointed.

Eighteen species, mostly natives of the south of Europe.

CORONOPUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Siliculosa, natural order Silicuosæ. Generic character: calyx perianth four-leaved; corolla petals four; stamen filaments six, two, or four, sometimes wanting; germ heart-shaped; style superior, very short, permanent, stigmas obtuse; seed one in each cell.

Two species, natives of England and other parts of Europe.

CORONULA, in Zoology, a genus of the class Cirripedes, order Acamtosomata, family Coronulidæ. Generic character: "shell subcylindrical or subconic, depressed; base much wider than the apex; lips of the operculum very prominent, with two large shelly valves before, and one small one on each side of the legs." Leach.

Type, C. diadema, Lam.; Lepas Diadema, of Authors.

The opening of these shells is always regular, elliptical, slightly hexagonal; and the valves of the operculum, which rather belong to the animal than to the shell, are inserted near the base of the internal parietes of the shell. The substance of the shell is divided in the interior into a number of cells, separated by their shelly plates, and arranged in a radiated position. The base is not closed by a calcareous plate, but by a membrane formed by the animal.

The Coronulæ, like others of the family, are generally found on the surface of marine animals, as Whales, Turtles, &c. and they partially bury the base of the shell in the skin of the animal to which they are fixed, where it is sufficiently soft.

See Plate of CIRRIPEDES.

CORONULIDÆ, in Zoology, a family of the class Cirripedes, order Acamtosomata, consisting of the genera Tubicinella, Coronula, Chelonobia. They are generally parasitical.

COROPHIUM. COROPHIUM, in Zoology, a genus of the class Crustacea, order Malacostraca, family Gammarinæ. Generic character: inferior antennæ very thick, not terminated by a thread, and composed of four articulations; the two anterior feet terminating in a movable finger or hook.

Type, Cancer grossipes, Lin.

CORPORATE.

CORPORAL, Fr. caporal; It. caporale; Sp. caboral. Junius and Skinner think from caput, the head; caput decuriæ militaris. But Menage says the old French word was corporal; and this Junius thinks was derived from a body of soldiers living in the same tent, sub uno decurione. Concorporales, used by Ammianus, is rendered by Holland, fellow-soldiers, p. 179, and 344.

Likewise the dukes assigne places unto every millenarie, or conducter of a thousand soldiers, the millenaries unto each captaine of 100, the captaines unto euery corporall of ten.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartars.

A corporal fierce, a nurse, and child that cried,
And a fat landlord fill'd the other side.
Fawkes. The Stage Coach.

CORPO'RATE, v.
CO'RPORATE, adj.
CO'RPORATELY,
CORPORA'TION,
CO'RPORATURE,
CO'RPORAL, adj.
CO'RPORAL, n.
CORPO'RALITY,
CO'RPORALLY,
CO'RPORAS,
CORPO'REAL,
CORPO'REALIST,
CORPO'REALLY, CORPO'REOUS,
CORPORE'ITY.

Fr. corporel; It. corporale; Sp. corporal; Lat. corporalis, from corpus, body. Vossius has various conjectures. Martinius decides; corpus est, quod carpi potest in partes. Schedius; corpus, quod carpitur, depascitur, opp. ad mentem, quod manet.

Stow uses the verb corporate, as we now use incorporate;—to embody.

Bodily, pertaining to the body; opposed to spiritual or mental.

Corporale, quo domini corpus, i. panem consecratum, tegebant. Junius. Hence "Corporal oath," from the custom of touching this corporal; which is also sometimes called corporas.

Now also to the preiudice of the corporation of the maior, communalties and citizens of our citie of London, now to the preiudice of any person or persons, body politique, or corporate, or incorporate.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Queen Marie's patent, vol. i. fol. 270.

Also aboute the same tyme he [Kynge Stephen] founded the abbey of Fcuersham in Kent, where he nowe corporally restyth.
Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 233.

Than they departed and went into the feldes, and this squier had with hym the patent and corporal.
Froissart. Cronycle, ch. 200.

All corporall domages, that chaunce to mortall men, are by medicines healed, or by reason remedied, or by length of time cured, or els by deth ended. Golden Boke, C. 10.

For into hym are not certayne giftes deriued, as oute of the ryuer a litle water runneth into the dyche, but in hym resteth and dwelleth corporally the hole fulnes of the Godhead, so that yf ye haue hym, ye need not to seke either for the shadowes of Moses law, or the subtile conveyaunce of worldly wisdome.
Udall. Colossians, ch. ii.

And nowe wyth this I shall make an ende, shewynge you in that, how you maye see, and folowe Christe no lesse at this present tyme, than yf he were corporallye walkynge afore you, as Andrewe sawe him: whiche is to folowe his commandements.
Strype. Memorials. Cardinal Pole's speech to the citizens of London.

To that face [of a popish mass] belongeth a superaltare, a chalice, a cover, a cake, a corporas, cruats, candlesticks, censers, and lights: which we have none.
Id. John Bale from Basil, to Mr. Ashley.

COR. PORAT

Of such small qualities as God hath endued mee withall, I render to his goodnes my most humble thankes, intending with all my witte and diligence to get and acquire to me such notable vertues and princely qualities as you haue alleaged to be corporated in my person. Stow. Henry VIII. Anno 1545.

We doo will and grant that the said schollers in the saide towne corporat vnder our protection and defense doo safelie and securelie abide, and there exercise and doo such things, as to such scholers shall belong.
Fox. Martyrs. Edward I. to Maior of Northampton.

Of this we find some footsteps in our law,
Which doth her root from God and nature take;
Ten thousand men she doth together draw,
And of them all one corporation make.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, sec. 8.

For whose corporature, leneaments of body, behaviour of manners, and conditions of mind, she must trust to others, and put in hazard and adventure, whether after she shall like them or not.
Strype. Life of Sir Thomas Smith. No. 4. Appendix.

First, God in thee a liuing soule inspires,
Whose glorious beames hath made thee farre more bright,
Than is the sunne, the spring of corp'rall light.
Beaumont. On Ascension Day.

While she so many strokes heaps in excesse,
That fond grosse phansie quite for to suppresse
Of the souls corporal'ty.
More. On the Soul, part ii. book ii. can. 3. st. 29.

Whence may be guess'd what their function was: was it to go about circled with a band of rooking officials, with cloak-bags full of citations, and processes to be serv'd by a corporalty of griffin-like promoters and apparitors?
Milton. Of Reformation.

Now at the laste M. Hardinge draweth neere the mater, and bringethe foorthe the olde fathers with these very termes, really, substantially, corporally, carnally, &c., and allegeth these fewe, as he saithe, insteede of many, hauinge in deede no more to bring. Jewell. A Replie to M. Hardinge, fol. 340.

If anie fall vpon the superalter, he should doo penance three daies: if upon the linen corporas-cloth foure daies.
Fox. Martyrs. The 10 first persecutions, fol. 48.

Psellus a Christian, sometimes tutor (saith Cuspinian) to Michael Parapinatius, emperour of Greece, a great observer of the nature of devils, holds they are corporeall, and have aerial bodies, that they are mortall, live and dye.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 40.

The affections being more gross and corporeous (from thence called the heels of the soul) and so easily chained and fettered.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 10.

A second hindrance was the grosseness and earthiness of their fancy, which was not able to conceive God to be any thing but a corporeous substance. Id. Ib. Sermon 12

When I consider how deeply in this state we are immersed in the body. I can methinks scarce imagine, that presently upon the quitting on't, we shall be stript of all corporeity, for this would be such a jump as is seldome or ever made in nature.
Glanville. Pre-existence of Souls, ch. xiii.

But now to come to the answer of the first, and in appearance, most powerful objection, against the corporeity of light; which urges, that its motion is perform'd in an instant, and cannot belong to what is material and clothed with quantity.
Digby. Of Bodies, ch. viii.

A new set of charters and corporation men, if those now named should not continue to be still as compliant as they were at present, was a certain remedy, to which recourse might be easily had. Burnett. Own Times, Anno 1685.

But the most absurd pretence of this kind and the most opposite to the doctrine delivered, is, that famous miracle of the corporal presence in the eucharist; which is done so much in the dark, that nobody ever did or can see it, either before or after it was done, or even while it is doing; no not the doer himself, as loudly as he may boast of it.
Atterbury. Sermon 1. vol. iii.

CORPORATE. — CORPORATION.

Lest any man should mistake my words, and think that I mean, that altho' Christ be not corporally in the outward and visible signs, yet he is corporally in the persons that duly receive them; this is to advertise the reader, that I mean no such thing.
Sharp. Works. Sermon 15. vol. vii.

Poor heart, no more the spring of vital heat!
Curs'd be the hands that tore thee from thy seat!
The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal prison freed.
Dryden. Theodore and Honoria.

The first poets and theologers of Greece and the east considered the generation of things, as ascribed rather to a divine cause, but the Physici to natural causes subordinate to, and directed still by a divine; except some corporealists and mechanics who vainly pretend to make a world without a God.
Berkley. Works. Siris, sec. 259.

But we cannot so certainly and positively tell what kind of spirituality that of the angels is, whether it be void of all manner of corporeity, as modern divines generally hold, or joined with some certain corporeity, not of the grosser sort.
Bishop Bull. Works. The Existence of Angels and their nature.

The municipal or corporate towns in Italy were governed by magistrates of their own, who probably made much the same sort of figure in their rural senate as our burgesses in their town hall. Melmoth. Cicero. To Marcus Marius, note 9.

Thus schools were erected in many places, and various priviieges were conferred upon the students; and these sodalities became corporations or smaller republics with a jurisdiction of their own. Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

For truth, the greatest of intellectual goods is the produce of undisturbed reason; and health, the greatest of the corporeal, is the blooming fruit of temperance; and yet we can be content to be deprived of both, for the sordid pleasure of a riotous, unmeaning jollity.
Warburton. Works. Sermon 22. vol. x.

They heard Jesus use a word in their vulgar idiom which signified to see corporeally; and common sense led them to conclude he used it in the vulgar meaning
Id. Occasional Reflections, part ii. rem. 5.

The Corporale, or cloth upon which the Eucharist is deposited, is an object of great reverence in the Romish and Greek Churches; it is known by the names Καλυμμάτιον, Palla, Sindon, Antimensia. Autisiodorus, in his Work De celebratione Missæ, gives as a reason why it should be of pure white linen, that it was in such a substance that Joseph of Arimathæa wrapped our Lord's body. For the same reason the Romanists forbid any decoration to it: the Greeks on the other hand embroider a Calvary in the centre, bearing three crosses, and the corpse of our Saviour recumbent at the foot; at the four corners also, they insert the four mystical beasts of the Evangelists. Bernardus, in his MS. Consuetudines Cluniensium, 37, states, that a Corporale was always kept near the altar in case of fire, contra quem, si forte contigerit, creditur a multis quod multum valet expandi. This practice, however, was afterwards forbidden. The folding and unfolding of the Corporale by the Priest at the altar was accompanied with great ceremony, and was supposed to involve some very high mysteries. Durandi Rationale; Macer, Hierolexicon; Du Cange, Glossarium.

Corporation, in Law, a Body politic or incorporated for the advancement of religion, learning, or commerce. Corporations are either Aggregate or Sole. Aggregate, where they consist of persons united together into one Society, and are kept up by a perpetual succession of members, so as to continue for ever; such as the Mayor and Commonalty of a City, the Head and Fellows of a College, the Dean and Chapter of a Cathedral. Sole, where they consist of one person only and his successors, who are incorporated by Law, in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had. In this sense the King is a Sole Corporation. Bishops, some Deans and Prebendaries, distinct from their several Chapters, Parsons, and Vicars, are also Sole Corporations. Corporations are either Ecclesiastical or Lay. Ecclesiastical Corporations are composed of spiritual persons entirely, and are erected for the furtherance of religion, and perpetuating the rights of the Church. Lay Corporations are of two sorts, Civil and Eleemosynary. The Civil are such as are created for temporal purposes. The King, for instance, is made a Corporation to prevent the possibility of the Throne being vacant, and to preserve the possessions of the Crown entire. Other Lay Corporations are erected for the good government of towns, as a Mayor and Commonalty, Bailiff and Burgesses, &c.; some for the advancement and regulation of Commerce, as the trading Companies of London; some for better carrying on special purposes, as Churchwardens, for the conservation of the goods of the Parish. The College of Physicians, and Company of Surgeons in London, for the improvement of Medical Science. The Royal Society, for the advancement of natural knowledge; and the Society of Antiquaries, for promoting the study of antiquities. Eleemosynary Corporations are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of free alms or bounty of the founder of them, such as Colleges and Hospitals. No Corporation can be erected without the King's consent being either expressly given or implied: express consent is either given by Act of Parliament or by Charter; implied, is to be found only in Corporations which exist by force of Common Law, to which, on their foundation, it is supposed the concurrence of former Kings was obtained; or by prescription, where Corporations are of such high antiquity, that the Law considers, that although they may at the present time be unable to produce their Charter, they were formerly well created. When a Corporation is erected, a name must be given to it; such name may be considered the very being of its constitution. When formed and named it acquires many powers, rights, capacities, and incapacities: such as having perpetual succession, to sue and be sued, implead or be impleaded, grant or receive by its Corporate name, and do all other legal acts; to purchase and hold lands for the benefit of themselves and their successors, to have a common seal, to make by-laws or private statutes, agreeably to the laws of the land, for their own better government. These five powers are inseparably incident to all Aggregate Corporations. Visitors are provided by the Law to inquire into and correct all irregularities in Corporations Aggregate, and to take care that they do not deviate from the end of their institution. In Ecclesiastical Corporations the Ordinary is the visitor; in Lay Corporations the Founder. Corporations may be dissolved by Act of Parliament, the death of all its members, the surrender of its franchises into the King's hands, and forfeiture of its Charter through negligence or abuse.

CORPORATION.

COR-PORIFY.

CO'RPORIFY, v. Corps, Corpse, Co'rpulent, Co'rpulence, Co'rpulency, Corpu'scle, Corpu'scular, Corpu'scularity, Corpu'scularian.

Lat. corpus. See Corporal, above.

To embody, to bring to a bodily state.

Corpulence; bigness of body; fatness.

Corps or corpse, also written Corse, (q. v.) a body, a mere body, i. e. a lifeless, a dead body, a carcass. Also applied, to a body of men; of soldiers.

On a tombe is all the faire above,
And under is the corps, swiche as ye wote;
Swiche was this hypocrite both cold and hote.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10833.

Julus eke ravyshed out of his armes;
Drisen to call for helpe, that he may see
The giltlesse corpses of his folke lie dead.
Surrey. Æneis, book iv.

The order of buriall was, that when any died, he was carried naked to a great caue, where he was propped vp against the wall standing on his feet. But if he were of any authority among them then had he a staffe in his hand, and a vessell of milke standing by him. I haue seen cases of 300 of these corpses together, the flesh being dried vp, the body remained as light as parchment.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. Thomas Nicols, vol. ii. fol. 6.

With ouer liberall and wanton diet, he waxed somewhat corpulent and bourly, but neuerthelesse not vncomely.
Hall. Edward V.

They prouided mee alwayes of a strong horse, because I was very corpulent and heauy; but whether he ambled a gentle pace or no, I durst not make any question.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. The Tartare, vol. i. fol. 112.

To mee, who with eternal famin pine,
Alike is Hell, or Paradise, or Heaven,
There best, where most with ravin I may meet;
Which here, though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this maw, this vast unhide-bound corps.
Milton. Paradise Lost, l. 601.

——— That he should
Yield his free-living youth a captive for
The freedom of his aged father's corpse,
And rather choose to want life's necessaries,
Liberty, hope of fortune, than it should
In death be kept from Christian ceremony.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, act ii. sc. 1.

Men naturally cannot understand any thing but by phantasms, and those still mixing in the contemplation of God, make men phansie God μετ' ὕλης with matter and corpulency; and the mathematicks are a necessary means to help us to abstract from that. I would to God we had some such engine, or crane, or pully to elevate our fancies, to make it possible to think any thing pleasure, which is not corpulent and carnal.
Hammond. Works. Sermon 7. vol. iv.

To what a cumbersome unwildiness
And burthenous corpulence my love has grown.
Donne. Love's Diet.

——— Not all
Minims of Nature; some of serpent kinde
Wond'rous in length and corpulence involv'd
Their snakie foulds, and added wings.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book vii. l. 483.

[Spring water] seems to contain in it besides the steams of several bodies wandering in the air, which may be supposed to impregnate it, a certain spirituous substance, which may be extracted out of it, and is by some mistaken for the spirit of the world corporified, upon what grounds, and with what probability, I may elsewhere, perchance, but must not now, discourse to you.
Boyle. The Sceptical Chymist.

The hall is heap'd with corps: the sprinkled gore
Besmears the walls, and flotes the marble floor.
Dryden. Cymon and Iphigenia.

You'll find your rhyming kinsman well in case,
For ever fix'd to the delicious place.
Tho' not like I—with corpulence o'ergrown,
For he has twenty cares, and I but one.
Pitt. Epistle to J. Pitt, Esq.

COR-PORIFY. COR-PULENT. CORPUS CHRISTI.

And therefore almost the whole musculous flesh of the body is bestowed upon the back, and serves for the vibration of the tail, the heaviness and corpulency of the water, requiring a great force to divide it.
Ray. On the Creation, part i.

From some such commotions of the air I imagine it is, that at Grand Cairo the plague immediately ceases as soon as the Nile begins to overflow; although Mr. Boyle attributes it to nitrous corpuscles.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book i. ch. ii. (note 2.)

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the oldest, as well as the best in the world, hath lain buried for many ages in contempt and oblivion; till it was happily restor'd and cultivated anew by some excellent wits of the present age.
Bentley. Sermon 7.

I writ [to Pyrophilus] some kind of introduction to the principles of the mechanical philosophy, by expounding to him as far as my thoughts and experiments enabled me to do, in a few words, what, according to the corpuscularian notions, may be thought of the nature and origin of qualities and forms.
Boyle. The Author's Discourse to the Reader, vol. iii.

The day following I received an express from Pansa, to attend him at Bononia; but in my way thither, being informed of his death, I immediately returned back to join my little corps.
Melmoth. Decimus Brutus to Cicero. Letter 17. book xix.

Some labour fasting, or but slightly fed
To lull the grinding stomach's hungry rage
Where nature feeds too corpulent a frame
'Tis wisely done.
Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health, book iii.

My mother conjured me to make my escape at any rate, which, as I was young, I might easily effect; as for herself, she said, her age and corpulency rendered all attempts of that sort impossible.
Melmoth. Pliny to Corn. Tacitus.

CORPUS CHRISTI, a Festival of the Romish Church, instituted by Urban IV. A. D. 1264, in honour of the Eucharist, and observed on the first Thursday after Trinity Sunday. Thomas Aquinas was employed to draw up the service for this commemoration. (Moreri, Urban IV.) Before the Reformation, on the day of the Feast, and those succeeding it, Mysteries were represented in many parts of England. One, the Ludus Coventriæ, acted by the Minorites or Mendicant Friars, is still extant, and a copy of it may be found in the Cotton Library in the British Museum. (Vespasian, D. viii.) The prologue to this drama is delivered by three persons, called Vexillatores, who speak alternately; they deliver the arguments of the forty pageants or acts from which the piece is constituted, each representing some detached subject from Holy Writ, beginning with the Creation and extending to Dooms-day. In the first pageant God is represented sitting alone on his throne. He makes a speech of forty lines, beginning, Ego sum de A et Ω principium et finis.

My name is knowyn God and kynge,
My werke for to make now wyl I wende,
In myself restyth my reyneynge,
It hath no gynnyng ne non ende.

The Chorus of Angels then chaunts the Te Deum, on which Lucifer inquires whether the hymn is in honour of God or of himself. The Angels are divided, and Lucifer takes possession of the throne. From this he is speedily expelled, and sentenced with his associates to the bottomless pit.

CORPUS CHRISTI. On this day also the Host was carried about in procession magnificently enshrined. In Drakard's History of Stamford, (253,) is given a curious extract from the Will of William Bruges, first Garter King at Arms, A. D. 1450, bequeathing "a solempnitie of aray for the fest of Corpus Christi."

CORRECT.

CORRADIATION, Lat. radius; Gr. ῥάβδος, from ῥάσσ-ειν, amputare, abscindere. Est enim ramusculus longior ab arbore resectus. Martinius. Thence transferred to other things having longitudinem virgæ, and among these, says Vossius, lineis, quas sol ejaculatur

A union, combination or convergence of rays.

It seemeth that the impression of colour is so weak, as it worketh not but by a cone of direct beames, or right lines; whereof the basis is in the object, and the verticall point in the eie; so as there is a corradiation and conjunction of beames.
Bacon. Natural History, Cent. 3. sec. 277.

Plato attributeth it to the corradiation or conjunction of light, for that the light of the eyes reacheth a good way within the aire of like nature, and the light likewise issuing from the visible bodies, cutteth the aire between, which of itselfe is liquid and mutable, and so extendeth it together with that fiery power of the eye, and this is it which is called the conjunct light or corradiation of the Platonicks. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 6.

CORREA, in Botany, a genus of the class Octandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rutaceæ. Generic character: calyx bell-shaped; corolla, petals four, reflexed at the apex; capsule four-celled, four-valved, cells one-seeded.

Of this beautiful New Holland genus eight species have been discovered; they are desirable green-house plants, particularly C. speciosa, flowering early in the spring.

CORRE'CT, v. CORRE'CT, adj. CORRE'CTABLE, CORRE'CTION, CORRE'CTIONER, CORRE'CTIVE, CORRE'CTLY, CORRE'CTNESS, CORRE'CTOR, CORRI'GIBLE. Fr. corriger; It. corregere; Sp. corregir; Lat. corrigere, correctum; (con, and regere, to rule or order.)

To make or fashion according, or conformable to, rule or order; to bring within, or reduce to, rule or order; to reform; to free from error, from faults; to improve, to amend; sc. by chastisement, by punishment; and thus, to chastise, to punish.

Chaucer uses corrige, from the Fr. corriger.

Any man myght thinke that the maners of shrewes ben cariged and chastised by vengeaunce, and that they be brought to the right way by the drede of tourment.
Chaucer. The fourth Booke of Boecius.

But all for nought, I sette not an hawe
Of his proverbes, ne of his olde sawe;
Ne I wold not of him corrected be.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6244.

Then had he thurgh his jurisdiction
Power to don on hem correction.
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 6904.

Under what maner therefore should I now submit this booke to be corrected and amended of them, whiche can suffer nothyng to bee well. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 237.

Eschewe thou a man eretike after oon and the secounde correccioun, witynge that he that is such a maner is subvertid and trespasith, and is dampned by his owne doom.
Wiclif. 2 Tyte, ch. iii.

And thus (vnder correction bee it tolde)
Hath Gascoigne gathered in his garden molde.
Gascoigne. Hearbes.

And is not the abbot now worthy to be corrected, which, al this notwithstanding hath caused the monk contemptuously stil to continue his lecture? Had not I been worthy correction, if I had contemptuously disobeyed your letter lately addressed unto me, having the equivalency of an inhibition?
Strype. Memorials. Shaxton Bishop of Salisbury to Cromwel.

And of Aristotel it is named in Greke Diorthotice, which is in Englishe corrective. Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, p. 159.

And when he once became the kinges corrector & master, ye rather hys king & empror (saith the text) by her meanes he was elected bishop of Winchestre after the decease of Elphegus.
Bale. English Votaries, part i. ch. i. p. 64.

In answer St. Austin himself granted that those among them, who sought the truth, being ready, when they found it, to correct their error, were not hereticks, and therefore notwithstanding their error, might be saved.
Chillingworth. Rel. Prot. Church, ch. vii. part i.

Some maintain, that the coldness and windiness (easily correctable with spice) is recompensed by temperate looseness, caused by the moderate drinking thereof.
Fuller. Worthies. Gloucestershire.

Hee could not forbeare so much as in the public theaters and shew places, but that he would both fall a singing with the tragedian as he pronounced, and also counterfaite and openly imitate the gesture of the player, as it were by way of praise or correction.
Holland. Suetonius. Caligula, fol. 148.

I will not be too forward in censuring the works of others; nor will I ever do any, that I will not submit to judgment, and correction; yet so, as I will be able to give a reason why I have order'd them, as the world sees. Feltham. Resolve 26.

You filthy famish'd correctioner, if you be not swing'd, I'le forsweare halfe Kirtles.
Shakspeare Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 99.

If it [knowledge] be taken without the true corrective thereof, hath in it some nature of malignity, or venome full of flatuous symptomes. This antidote, or corrective spice, the mixture whereof tempers knowledge and makes it so soveraigne, is charity.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, book i. ch. i.

Peter Chapot first was a corrector to a printer in Paris, after he had been at Geneva, to doe good to the church of Christ like a good man, hee came with bookes of holie Scripture into France and dispersed thē abroad vnto the faithfull.
Fox. Table of French Martyrs, fol. 822.

Considering therefore, that he is not corrigible, we are driuen to the verie extremitie of the lawe, and with great heauinesse of heart wee now proceede to the publication of the sentence definitiue, against him.
Id. Martyrs. The Lord Cobham's Condemnation.

But there are in nature some things which are the instruments of vertue and vice too: some things, which of themselves indeed are culpable, but yet such which do minister to glorious events, and such which as they are not easily corrigible, so they are not safe to be done away. Taylor. On Repentance, ch. viii. sec. 8.

According to my promise, I here send you a few observations concerning some plants, seldom used in medicine, being esteemed poisonous, which if truly corrected or exactly dosed, may perhaps prove the most powerful and effectual medicines yet known. Having then given an account of some of their correctives, he gives the following examples.
Derham. Physico-Theology, book ii. ch. vi.

Where the copies of any author are numerous, tho' the various readings always increase in proportion; there the text by an accurate collation of them made by skilful and judicious hands, is ever the more correct and comes nearer to the true words of the author. Bentley. Free-thinking, p. 92.

As to the bishops, though some of them were learned and conscientious, yet the rest, and the greater part, were such that there could be no good discipline exercised, for the restraint of sin, and for the due correction of swearing, rioting, neglect of God's word, and other scandalous vices.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

But humanly speaking and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails, but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow. South. Sermons, vol. i. p. 490.

But in such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That shunning faults, one quiet temper keep,
We cannot blame indeed, but we may sleep.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

You see fire, life, and spirit run through the whole, and at the same time correctness, which shows he is used to writing.
Tatler, No. 91.

Fiftlly, nor can they (he says) be assured that the transcribers, and printers, and correctors of the press have carefully and faithfully done their part, in transcribing and printing the several copies and translations of Scripture aright.
Tillotson. The Rule of Faith, part ii. sec. 3.

A satyr should expose nothing, but what is corrigible, and make a due discrimination between those who are, and those who are not, the proper objects of it. Spectator, No. 209.

It was his manner to intermix his literary pursuits in such sort as to make the lighter relieve the more serious; and those again, in their turn, temper and correct the other.
Warburton. Life by Hurd.

Along with much evil, there is some good in monarchy itself; and some corrective to its evil from religion, from laws, from manners, from opinions, the French monarchy must have received.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Like Vinci's strokes thy verses we behold,
Correctly graceful, and with labour bold.
Hart. To a Young Lady.

Yet does my soul complacence find;
All, all from thee,
Supremely gracious,
Corrector of the mind!
Id. Contentment, &c. under the Divine Will.

CO'RRELATE, n., CORRE'LATIVE, adj., CORRE'LATIVE, n., CORRE'LATIVELY. Lat. con, and past participle relatus; re, and latus, raised; from tolo, tolatum, tlatum, latum. Vossius, de Analogia, c. 37.

For the particular kind of relation, or mutual and reciprocal relation to which this word is applied, see especially the Examples from Clarke and Hume.

This conclusion is corelative with the first article of our faith, I beleeue in God the Father Almighty, &c.
State Trials. Protestation of John Wiclif.

For the signe & the thinge signified bee correlatiues, one answering the tother or els must it be but a false and a dissymbling signe which these papistis so stoughtly defende with fyre & fagots.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. iii.

We confess the name [merit] might be admitted, if taken in the large and more general sense, for any work having relation to a reward to follow it; or whereby a reward is quocunque modo obtained; in a word, as the correlate indifferent either to merces gratiæ or justitiæ, the reward of grace or of justice.
Mede. Works. Discourse 27. book i.

Spiritual things and spiritual men are correlatives, and cannot in reason be divorced. Spelman. On Tythes, fol. 141.

For where no inferior is, there can be no superior, for so much as these togither are correlatiues and inferre necessarie respect mutuallie.
Fox. Martyrs. Letter of Gregorie to the Patriarch at Alexandria.

Our Saviour is a king three manner of wayes, and so correlatively hath three distinct several kingdoms.
Hall. Rem. part i. p. 161.

But, that any thing is, and that there is a real reason in nature why it is, rather than is not; these two are as necessaryly connected as any two correlates whatever, as hight and depth, &c.
Clarke. On the Attributes, p. 490.

Concubine is, no doubt a relative name, as well as wife; but in languages where this, and the like words, have not a correlative term, these people are not so apt to take them to be so, as wanting that evident mark of relation, which is between correlatives, which seems to explain one another, and not to be able to exist, but together.
Locke Works of Relation, book ii. ch. xxv. sec. 2.

For giving being a relative action, (and so requiring a correlative to answer it.) Giving on one part transfers no property unless there be an accepting on the other.
South. Sermons, vol. i. p. 297.

It is an universal observation, which we may form upon language, that where two relative parts of a whole bear any proportion to each other, in numbers, rank, or consideration, there are always correlative terms invented, which answer to both the parts, and express their mutual relation.——Thus man and woman, master and servant, father and son, prince and subject, stranger and citizen, are correlative terms.
Hume. Essay 11. note 10.

CORREPTION, Lat. corripere, reptum; (con, and rapere, to seize, apprehendere, and metaphorically reprehendere.)

Reprehension, reproof, chiding, admonition.

Meaning that all contumacious sinners, that upon admonition and ecclesiastical correption, refuse to repent, are to be accounted enemies and strangers to the rights and promises of the Gospel, enemies to the religion, and separate from God, and given over to a reprobate sence.
Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book iii. ch. iv.

'Twill not be amiss to premise that there is a double correption or admonition; the former, paternal or authoritative; the latter fraternal or charitative. The former is to be lookt on as an office of singular trust referred to the parents, as a peculiar duty of theirs, required of necessity, to make that being, which under God they have bestowed on their children, to become a benefit or advantage to them. Hammond. Works, vol. i. fol. 291.

CORRESPO'ND, v., CORRESPO'NDENT, adj., CORRESPO'NDENT, n., CORRESPO'NDENCE, CORRESPO'NDENCY, CORRESPO'NDENTLY, CORRESPO'NDING, CORRESPO'NSIVE. Fr. correspondre; Sp. corresponder; It. correspondere. Varro, de Vitiis, says, correspondeo improbum est pro respondeo, consono. Respondere; re, and spondere, to pledge. Spondere ex eo est, quia sponderent in σπονδῇ, quo libatio, vel libamen, item fœdus notatur. Nam in fœdere libabant, quod σπένδειν, Græcis. Vossius.

To correspond, generally, is

To answer one to another; to have or hold an interchange, or intercourse, in answer one to another; to be or act in answer or return; to answer or be answerable to; suitable, or agreeable to, according with; and thus,—to suit, to fit, to be adapted or proportioned to.

Ye will now so acquit your self, as shall correspond to the perfect expectation, and firm opinion that we have of you.
Burnett. Records. The King's Letter to his Ambassadors, to hinder an Avocation of Suit.

Whose maners also and conuersation being correspondent to the same, were such that all they which knewe him, reputed, and esteemed him to bee a man of most vertuous disposition, and of a life vnspotted Tyndall. Life by Fox.

Not doubting but that ye will now above all other things, look vigilently hereunto, and so acquit yourself in the same, as it may well appear that your acts shall be correspondent to our firm trust and expectation.
Burnett. Records. The King's Letter to the Ambassadors, about his appearance before the Legates.

Thirdly these kynges shuld geue vnto these chosen & lerned men their new names correspōding their vertewe and offices.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. i.

——— Self-knowing, and from thence
Magnanimous to correspond with heav'n,
But grateful to acknowledge whence his good
Descends. Milton. Paradise Lost, book vii. l. 511.

——————————— I
Have also tasted, and have also found
Th' effects to correspond, opener mine eyes,
Dimm erst, dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead.
Id. Ib. book ix. l. 875.

CORRES-POND.

——————— There placed is
Mischief's old Master! close about him clings
A curl'd knot of embracing snakes, that kiss
His correspondent cheeks.
Crashaw. Sospetto d'Herode, book i.

But after these, as men more civil grew,
He did more grave and solemne measures frame,
With such fair order and proportion true,
And correspondence ev'ry way the same,
That no fault-finding eye did ever blame.
Davies. On Dancing.

——————— He holds
That correspondence, there, with all that are Neere about Cæsar, as no thought can passe
Without his knowledge.
Ben Jonson. Sejanus, act iv.

Vpon the tombe of D. John Beckingale sometime Bishop of Chichester this is engrauen, which I set here for rare correspondency of the rime.
Camden. Remaines. Epitaphes, p. 363.

And he was to sanctifie others of mankind, and this he had not so fitly and correspondently according to the law of nature done, had not both they and he been all of one.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. part iii. fol. 56.

——————— Priam's six-gated city
Darden and Timbia, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenonidus with massie staples
And correspondue and fulfilling bolts
Stirre vp the sonnes of Troy.
Shakspeare. Prologue to Troylus and Cressida.

Each object must be fix'd in the due place,
And differing parts have corresponding grace:
Till, by a curious art disposed we find
One perfect whole, of all the pieces join'd.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

They who have skill to compare, in the original, certain passages in the Books of Chronicles, with the correspondent places in the Book of Kings, will be able to find instances of these things, and very often also to see plainly how and whence they happened. Clark. On the Attributes, p. 425.

Whenever a person was baptized, he was not only to profess his faith in Christ's death and resurrection, but he was also to look upon himself as obliged, in correspondence therewith, to mortify his former carnal affections, and to enter upon a new state of life. Sharp. Works. Sermon 12. vol. i.

The correspondencies of types and antitypes, though they are not themselves proper proofs of the truth of a doctrine, yet they may be very reasonable confirmations of the foreknowledge of God; of the uniform view of Providence under different dispensations; of the analogy, harmony, and agreement between the Old Testament and the New.
Clark. On the Attributes, p. 419.

The practice of benignity, of courtesie, of clemency do at first sight, without aid of any discursive reflection, obtain approbation and applause from men; and correspondently uncharitable dispositions and practices (malignity, harshness, cruelty) do offend the mind with a disgustful resentment of them.
Barrow. Sermon 28. vol. i.

——————— There to perform
Their various motions, corresponding all
To one harmonious plan, which fablers feign
The mystic music of the distant spheres.
Cooper. The Harmony of Music, Poetry, &c.

We have placed these correspondent histories of the progress of the human mind, in nature and grace, thus near one another, that by comparing the parts of them together in the same view, we may see whether there be any objections to the truth of new discoveries in religious matters, that do not equally hold against the truth of new discoveries in natural.
Warburton. Works. Sermon 1. vol. ix.

You accuse me, then, of being a negligent correspondent; but, believe me, I have never once omitted writing, whenever any of your family gave me notice that a courier was setting out to you.
Melmoth. Cicero. To Cornificius, book xi. let. 26.

Having no general apostolical mission, being a citizen of a peculiar state, and being bound up in a considerable degree, by its public will, I should think it at least improper and irregular for me to open a formal publick correspondence with the actual government of a foreign nation, without the express authority of the government under which I live.
Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

CORRES-POND. — CORREZE

I make bold to tell him, that a similitude and correspondency between the event and the transaction which prefigured it, is not enough to shew this dependency, to the satisfaction of unbelievers.
Warburton. The Divine Legation. Notes, book vi. 25. K.

CORREZE, a Department of France which occupies the lower or southern part of the former Province of Limousin. It is bounded on the north by Creuse, on the east by Puy-de-Dôme and Cantal, on the south by Lot, on the south-west by Dardogne, and on the north-west by Vienne. It takes its name from the small river by which it is watered; is divided into the three Arrondissements of Tulle, Brives, and Ussel, and includes an area of nearly 2300 square miles, with a population of 254,270 individuals. In addition to the Correze, the rivers Dardogne and the Upper and Lower Vezere flow through this Department; but none of them are well adapted to the purposes of navigation. The northern districts of the Department are mountainous; nor are the lower tracts very fertile, yet they produce tolerable crops of rye, buck wheat, hemp, chestnuts, mushrooms, and wine. The meadows support numbers of cattle and horses; and large heaths, partly covered with juniper, afford pasturage for numerous flocks of sheep. Nor are the mountainous parts of Correze devoid of mineral treasures, which principally consist of iron, lead, copper, antimony, coal, slate, limestone, and free stone. Besides the sources of industry which are supplied by the agricultural and mineral products of this Department, some manufactures are carried on in its chief towns. The articles produced are chiefly confined to wool, silk, cotton, brandy, paper, oil, and leather; but in none of these is the number of people employed great, or the trade extensive. The three principal Towns, are those from which the Arrondissements are named, Tulle, Brives, and Ussel. Tulle, the Capital of the Department, and the former metropolis of the Province of Limousin, is a considerable town situated at the confluence of the Correze and the Solane. It stands partly upon an acclivity, and partly at the foot of a mountain, and is surrounded by heights and precipices. The streets are irregular and crooked, and the town in general badly built. None of the edifices attract notice, except the Churches and Hospital. The population consists of about 9000 individuals, part of whom are employed in the different kinds of manufacture above mentioned. Tulle is also the See of a Bishop; vases and other antiquities have been found in the neighbourhood.

Situation, &c. Extent and population. Productions. Manufactures, &c. Chief towns. Tulle.

Brives is a neat small Town, situated in a beautiful plain, on the river Correze; and contains nearly 6000 inhabitants, who are partly employed in manufactures of muslin, gauze, and various kinds of cotton and silk stuffs, wax candles, and copper utensils. It has also a trade in wine, oil, grain, and timber, which are the products of the vicinity. Distant about fourteen miles south-east of Tulle.

Brives.

Ussel is a still smaller Town, and contains about 3100 people, who are chiefly employed in the manufacture of linen and leather, with the bleaching of wool. Its distance from Tulle is about thirty miles, nearly north-east.

Ussel.

CORREZE — CORRO BORATE.

Correze is situated within a few miles of Tulle, but is not more than half as populous as Ussel.

CORRIDOR, Fr.; It. corridore, from correre, a gallery in the interior of a house, into which separate chambers open. Palladius (xii. 7) has applied the term to a balustrade.

CORRIGIOLA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Trigynia, natural order Portulaceæ. Generic character: calyx, five-leaved; corolla, petals five; one seed, triangular.

Two species, C. littoralis, native of Europe, and C. Capensis, of the Cape of Good Hope.

CORRIVA'TE, v. } Con, and rivus; Gr. ῥέ-ειν, to CORRIVA'TION. } flow.

To flow or cause to flow together; to conflow, q. v.

And rare devises to corrivate waters.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 276.

Admirable cost and charge is bestowed in the low countries on this behalfe, in the Dutchy of Milan, territory of Padua in France, Italy, China, and so likewise about corrivations of waters to moisten and refresh barren grounds, to drean fennes, hogges, and moores. Id. Ib. Democritus to the Reader, fol. 57.

CORRO'BORATE, v. } Fr. corroborer; Sp. corroborar; It. and Lat. corroborare. Con, and robur, strength. Gr. ῥώω, whence ῥωννύω, ῥωννύμι, roboro, firmo. Vossius.
CORRO'BORATE, adj.
CORRO'BORANT, adj.
CORROBORA'TION,
CORRO'BORATIVE, s.
CORRO'BORATIVE, adj.

To strengthen, to confirm, to establish, to make strong, firm or stable.

Then Barnes answered, I spake nothing but the truth out of the Scriptures, according to my cõcience, and according to the olde doctours: and then he deliuered him vi. sheetes of paper written, to confirme and corroborate his sayinges.
Barnes. Life.

This, with all other such matter as may serve to the purpose, ye shall extend as well as ye can, and by that meanes get and attain as much to your purpose for the corroboration and surety of all things to be done here as is possible.
Burnett. Records. Another Dispatch of the Cardinals concerning Divorce.

Our Saviour himself when in his agony was corroborated by an angel. Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book v. ch. iv.

A decoction thereof doth corroborat any member or part of the bodie which groweth to bee sencelesse or benummed, if the same be fomented therewith. Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. fol. 178.

It would be the matter of new discourse, if I should consider concerning the variety of God's grace; his preventing and accompanying, his inviting and corroborating grace; his assisting us to will, his enabling us to do.
Taylor. Sermon 25. part ii.

And therefore as Machiavel well noteth (though in an ill-favoured instance) there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom.
Bacon. Essays. Of Custom and Education, ess. 39.

There be divers sorts of bracelets fit to comfort the spirits; and they be of three intentions; refrigerant; corroborant; and aperient. For corroboration and comfortation, take such bodies as are of astringent quality, without manifest cold.
Id. Natural History, Cent. 10.

So having these mighty and noble puissances to their assistance, and the corroboration of their acte, it is facile to thinke the other could bee of no validitie, ne haue or take any maner of place.
Fox. Martyrs. Instructions to the King's Orateur at Rome, fol. 905.

Nay what shall the Scripture itselfe? Which is like an apothecaries shop, wherein are all remedies for all infirmities of minde, purgatives, cordialls, alteratives, corroboratives, lenitives, &c.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 280.

And this shall suffice for an example of the errors which are brought into the church, from the entities and essences of Aristotle: which it may be he knew to be false philosophy; but writ it is a thing consonant to and corroborative to their religion; and fearing the fate of Socrates.
Hobbes. Leviathan, part iv. ch. xlvi. fol. 401.

CORRO BORATE — COR-RODE

The absence of such assurances [of innocence] at a time when a person is laying his heart open to his friends, and professedly shewing them where the strength of his defence must lie, is undeniably a corroborating evidence, and a very strong one, of his own consciousness, that the accusation against him is true.
Hoadley. Letters signed Britannicus, let. 32.

If men could be brought to look upon the agenda of Christianity as suitable, they would never judge the credenda of it irrational. There is a strange intercourse and mutual corroboration between faith and practice.
South. Sermons, vol. iv. p. 476.

We shall endeavour to make appear: 1st, that wit and humour are corroborative of religion, and promotive to true faith.
Shaftesbury. Miscellaneous Reflections, misc. 2. vol. iii.

Joy amidst ills corroborates, exalts;
'Tis joy and conquest; joy and virtue too.
Young. The Complaint. Night 9.

Having considered the evidence given by the plays themselves, and found it in their favour, let us now enquire what corroboration can be gained from other testimony.
Johnson. General Observations on Shakspeare's Plays.

CORRO'DE, v. } Fr. corroder; Lat. corrod-ere; con, and rodere, to gnaw; of uncertain origin.
CORRO'DENT, n.
CORRO'DIATE, v.
CORRO'DIBLE,
CORRO'SIVE, v.
CORRO'SIVE, adj.
CORRO'SIVE, s.
CORRO'SIVELY,
CORRO'SIVENESS,
CORRO'SION, n.
CORRO'SIBLE,
CORRO'SIBILITY,
CORRO'SIBLENESS.

To gnaw, or eat into; to prey upon, wear away, consume or waste away, by gnawing or eating.

Corrosive appears to have been strangely corrupted by our old writers: corsie, corosie, corsive, corasive, corrasive, corrosive.

Now he that goeth about to quiet his conscièce, and to iustifie him selfe with the law: doth but heale hys woundes with freatyng corosyes. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 16.

But God which hath begon to cure me and hath laid that corsey vato my sores, goeth forth in his cure, and setteth hys sonne Jesus before me, and all his passions and death.
Id. Ib. fol. 330.

The law driueth out the disease, and maketh it appeare, and is a sharpe salue, and a freatyng corsey. Id. Ib. fol. 383.

For so he might procure
wealepublick by his paine:
It was no corsie to this knight long trauaile to sustaine.
Turbervile. Of the death of Sir John Tregonwell.

And yet for to vnbind
The corsey anguish of her geste with sightes of daintie fare:
Not hurded pulse, nor longe stalk'd otes,
(the prodigal) doth spare.
Drant. Horace. Satyre 6.

Wote you not why? corrosyue style,
is corsey to the eye.
Id. Ib. Satyre 4.

Those evil lucks in numbers many are,
That to thy footsteps do themselves apply;
And still thy conscience corrosiv'd with grief
Thou but pursu'st thyself, both robb'd and thief.
Drayton. The Barons' Warr.

Her maimed words shal show how my heart half dies
Consum'd with corrosives of care carastred in mine eyes.
Stirling. Elegie 3.

CORRODE.

According as the salts are stronger, so this corrosive virtue encreases in them; even so much, as neither silver nor gold are free from their eating quality

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xv.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad.

Donne. To the Countesse of Bedford.

Lastly, it is likewise true that some have delivered a crocus martis, that is, steel corroded with vinegar, sulpher, or otherwise, and after reverberated by fire.

Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. ii.

Some by a violent dry heat, as mettals, which although corrodible by waters, yet will they not suffer a liquation from the powerfullest heat, communicable unto that element.

Id. book ii. ch. i.

And more than all the rest, this griev'd him chief,
And to his heart a corsive was eternall,
To think that Avarice should her entice,
Vpon her chastity to set a price.

Harrington. Orlando, book xliii. st. 83.

——— The soft delicious air
To heal the scarr of these corrosive fires
Shall breathe her balme.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 401.

Or if his mercy still continues and goes on in long-suffering, it shall be by such vexatious instruments, such causticks, and corrosives, such tormenting and desperate medicaments, such which in the very cure will soundly punish thy folly and ingratitude.

Taylor. Sermon 12. part ii.

And this is that the chymists mainly drive at in the attempt of their aurum potabile; that is, to reduce that indigestible substance into such a form as may not be ejected by siege, but enter the cavities, and less accessible parts of the body, without corrosion.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xxii.

The physick of the good Samaritan in the Gospel, wherein there was a corrodent and a lenient, compunction, and consolation.

Bishop of London. Vine Palatine, (1614,) p. 17.

Styx is a fountain of Arcadia, whose waters are so deadly, that they presently kill whatsoever drinks thereof; so corrodiating that they can only be contained in the hoof of a mule.

Sandys. Christ's Passion, notes, p. 95.

How much corrosive salts may dulcify themselves by corroding some bodies, you may easily try, by pouring distilled vinegar, or moderate spirit of vitriol, upon a competent proportion of corals, or crab's eyes, or pearls.

Boyle. A Physico-Chymical Essay, sec. 37.

The second qualification of a corrodible body is, that its consistent corpuscles be of such a bulk and solidity, as does not render them incapable of being disjoined by the action of the insinuating corpuscles of the menstruum.

Id. Of Corrosiveness and Corrosibility, sec. 2.

Though at first it tasted somewhat corrosively (perhaps because the proportion betwixt the nitrous spirit and the pot-ashes was not duly observed) yet after it had a while remained upon the tongue, the taste of it much emulated that of saltpetre.

Id. A Physico-Chymical Essay, sec. 11.

The strange stories related by Skeakius, and other eminent physicians, of the corrosiveness of some juices, do very much incline us to believe, that the generality of former physicians have ascribed too much to the humours.

Id. The Usefulness of Natural Philosophy, part ii. ess. 2.

I presume to employ corrosiveness in a greater latitude, so as to make it almost equivalent to the solutive power of liquors, referring other menstruums to those, that are corrosive or freting, (though not always as to the most proper, yet) as to the principal and best-known species.

Id. About the Mechanical Origin of Corrosiveness and Corrosibility.

Sallad-oil is generally reputed to consist of fat and unctious particles, and therefore to be a greater resister of corrosion.

Id. Usefulness of Natural Philosophy, part ii. ess. 5.

I have seen men between twenty and thirty, whose fore teeth have been consumed almost down to the gums, though no two of them were exactly of the same length and thickness, but irregularly corroded like iron by rust.

Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. book iii. ch. ix.

In vain, alas! the gentle virgin wept
Corrosive anguish nipt her vital bloom;
O'er her soft frame diseases sternly crept,
And gave the lovely victim to the tomb.

Falconer. Occasional Elegy.

CORRODE, CORRUPT.

The rough file grates; yet useful is its touch,
As sharp corrosives to the schirrous flesh,
Or to the stubborn temper, keen rebuke.

Jago. Hedge-hill, book iii.

Though it [peevishness] breaks not out in paroxyms of outrage, nor bursts into clamour, turbulence, and bloodshed, it wears out happiness by slow corrosion, and small injuries incessantly repeated.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 74.

CO'RRUGATE, v. Co'RRUGATE, adj. CORRUGA'TION. } Fr. corrugation; a wrinkling or furrowing of the skin. Cotgrave. Lat. corrugare; con, and rugare, from ruga, a wrinkle; which Vossius thinks is from ῥύ-ειν, ἐρύ-ειν, trahere; for ruga is nothing more than the skin contracted into wrinkles or furrows.

To wrinkle or furrow; to draw or contract into wrinkles or furrows.

Cockeram has, "Corruge; to frown, to wrinkle."

The cramp (no doubt) commeth of the contraction of sinews; which is manifest in that it commeth either by cold, or drinesse; as after consumptions, and long agues; for cold and drinesse do (both of them) contract and corrugate.

Bacon. Natural History, Cent. 10. sec. 964.

And this rising of it is also further'd by the wrinkling up and shortning of the upper part of the stomach; which still returns into its natural corrugation, as the masse of liquid meat leavs soaking it.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxiv.

Extended views a narrow mind extend;
Push out its corrugate, expansive make,
Which, ere long, more than planets shall embrace.

Young. The Complaint. Night 9.

The full lips, the rough tongue, the corrugated cartilaginous palate, the broad cutting teeth of the ox, the deer, the horse, and the sheep, qualify this tribe for browsing upon their pasture.

Paley. Natural Theology, ch. xii.

CORRU'PT, v. CORRU'PT, adj. CORRU'PTER, CORRU'PTFUL, CORRU'PTIBLE, CORRUPTIBI'LITY, CORRU'PTIBLY, CORRU'PTING, n. CORRU'PTION, CORRU'PTIVE, adj. CORRU'PTLESS, CORRU'PTLY, CORRU'PTRESS, CORRU'PTRICE. } Fr. corrompre; It. corrompere; Sp. corrompir; Old English, corrump; Lat. corrumpere, ruptum; (con, and rump-ere, to break.) Corrupt, from the past participle.

To break, to destroy; Cotgrave thus strongly and fully gives the usages;

"Fr. corrompre; to corrupt, rot, putrifie, taint, mar, spill, spoyle; deprave, infect, viciate, invert, pervert, mislead; also to bribe, suborn or win by gifts."

The clotered blood, for any leche-craft,
Corrumpeth, and is in his bouke ylaft,
That neyther veine-blood, ne ventousing,
Ne drinke of herbes may ben his helping.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2749.

For nature hath not taken his beginning
Of no partie ne cantel of a thing,
But of a thing that parfit is and stable,
Descending so, til it be corrumpable.

Id. Ib., v. 3012.

To distrie hem that corrumpiden the erthe.

Wiclif. Apocalips, ch. xi.

Corrupt was all this world for glotonie.

Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12438.

The pipes of his longes gan to swell,
And every lacerte in his brest adoun
Is shent with venime and corruptioun.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2756.

For the elementes ben seruisable
To man: and ofte of accidence,
As men maie see the experience,
Thei ben corrupt by sondrie weye.
Gower. Conf. Am., book v. fol. 88.

But these men blasfemen whateuer thingis thei knowen not, for whateuer thingis thei knowe kyndeli as doumbe beestis in these thei ben corrupt. Wiclif. First Epistle of Judas, ch. i.

But these speake euil of those thinges which they know not: and what thyng they know naturally: as beastes whyche are wythout reasō, in thō thinges thei corrupt thē selues. Bible, 1551.

Nay that is not faith, but rather a folish blind opinion springing of their owne corrupt nature, and is not giuē them of the spirite of God, but rather the spirite of the deuill.
Tyndall. Workes, fol. 379.

She should haue bene broght into an high mountaine, & there throne down headlōges, her corruptour being biheaded.
Bale. English Votaries, part i. p. 21.

For it bihoueth this corruptible thing to clothe uncoruption, and this deedli thing to put awei undeedliness.
Wiclif. 1 Corinthians, ch. xv.

For thys corruptyble must put on incorruptibilyte: and thys mortall must putte on immortalyte. Bible. Anno 1551.

But when our members are fully mortified, that is, when he hath subdued our corruptible body, and our flesh cōmitted to rest in the earth, then cease the purgatories that God hath ordeined, & then are we fully purged in his sight.
Frith. Workes, fol. 5.

As though all the false religion that ever was amonge the heathen, was not a corrupting & deprauation of the true religiō of God. Caluine. Four Godlye Sermons, serm. 1.

For he that sowith in his fleisch, of the fleisch he schal repe corruptioun, but he that sowith it in the spyryt, of the spyryt he schal repe euerlastynge lyf.
Wiclif. Galathies, ch. vi.

He that soweth in his fleshe, shall of the flesh reepe corruption. But he that soweth in the spirite, shall of the spirite reepe life euerlastynge. Bible, 1551.

Though I tary neuer so much, yet the graue is my house, and I must make my bed in the darke. I call corruption my father, and the wormes call I my mother & my syster.
Id. Job, ch. xvii.

Alas! Master Pole, what lack of learning & prudence was this, so corruptly to judge the matter; without al respect of time & person, so foolishly it to handle?
Strype. Memorials. Starky to Pole.

Hight Lopez he, that was for physick's skill,
Highly respected in the princes grace,
Corrupted was her loued life to spill.
Mirrour for Magistrates, fol. 858.

No, doubtless; for the mind can backward cast
Upon herself, her understanding's light;
But she is so corrupt, and so defac'd
As her own image doth herself affright.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul. The Introduction.

They knew them to be the main corruptors at the king's elbow; they knew the king to have been always their most attentive scholar and imitator, and of a child to have suck'd from them and their closet-work all the impotent principles of tyranny and superstition. Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

Yet can I not my loue haue nathemore;
For, she by force is still from me detained,
And with corrupted bribes is to untruth mistrained.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 11.

Ne dare looke up with corruptible eye,
On the dread face of that great DEITIE.
Id. Hymn of Heauenly Beautie.

HEN. It is too late, the life of all his blood
Is touch'd, corruptibly.
Shakspeare. King John, fol. 21.

But besides their innumerable corruptings of the fathers' writings; their thrusting in that which was spurious, and like Pharaoh, killing the legitimate sons of Israel, though in this, &c.
Taylor. A Dissuasive from Popery, ch. i. sec. 1.

The enducing and accelerating of putrefaction, is a subject of a very universal enquiry: for corruption is a reciprocall to generation: and they two, are as natures two terms or boundaries; and the guides to life and death.
Bacon. Natural History, Cent. 4. sec. 328.

Whosoever is found variable, and changeth manifestly, without manifest cause, giveth suspicion of corruption.
Id. Essays. Of Great Place, ess. 11.

For before God had made up all the rest,
Corruption enter'd and deprav'd the best,
It seiz'd the angels.
Donne. Funeral Elegies. An Anatomy of the World.

Which is so far from being verefied of animals in their corruptive mutations into plants, that they maintain not their similitude in their nearer translation into animals.
Sir Thomas Brown, book ii. ch. vi.

In good sooth, this is no true dealing. No maruell it is that you haue not sette downe my booke, seeing you deale thus corruptely with it. Whitgift. Defence, fol. 89.

And considering thus with myselfe that the end of a lawfull and righteous government, is the profit and welfare of obedient subjects, I have beene evermore, as ye know, inclined to peece and quietnesse, banishing from mine acts and proceedings all licencious libertie, the corruptrice of states, and manners both.
Holland. Ammianus. Julianus, fol. 266.

He [Cato the Elder] procured in the senate, that Carneades the Academic, and Diogenes the Stoic, embassadors from Athens, should immediately be dismiss'd, that they might not corrupt the youth. Bentley. Of Free-thinking.

Tho' the devil and our own corrupt natures, may tempt us strongly one way; yet the spirit of Christ, and his invisible attendants, that pitch their tents round about us, do incline us as much the other way. Sharp. Works. Sermon 15. vol. iii.

Want of exercise is a great prejudice to their health, and a corrupter of their minds, by raising vapours and melancholy, that fills many with dark thoughts, rendering religion, which affords the truest joy, a burthen to them, and making them even a burthen to themselves. Burnett. Own Times, vol. iv. p. 417.

Or (darker prospect! scarce one gleam behind
Disclosing) should the broad corruptive plague
Breathe from the city to the furthest hut,
That sits serene within the forest shade.
Thomson. Liberty, part v.

——— Then with the spoil
Of cassia, cynamon, and stems of nard,
(For softness strew'd beneath) his funeral bed is rear'd:
The borders with corruptless myrrh are crown'd.
Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book xv.

A reward, which nothing but that necessity which the consumption of my little estate in these wild pursuits had brought upon me, hindered me from throwing back in the face of my corruptor. Johnson. The Rambler, No. 28.

They systematically corrupt a very corruptible race (for some time a growing nuisance amongst you) a set of pert petulant literators, to whom instead of their proper, but severe, unostentatious duties, they assign the brilliant part of men of wit and pleasure, of gay, young, military sparks, and daughters at toilets.
Burke. To a Member of the National Assembly.

That the frequency of elections proposed by this bill has a tendency to increase the power and consideration of the electors, not lessen corruptibility, I do most readily allow; so far it is desirable.
Id. On the Bill for shortening the duration of Parliaments.

This is the Indian name of the avocato, avocado, avigato, or as the English corruptly call it Aligator-pear.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, book i. v. 45

CORRUPT. CORSE.

Now, says Mr. Warburton, the consequence of this was, that when the laws were remissly or corruptly administered, good and ill would sometimes happen unequally to men.
Warburton. Rem. on occasional Reflections.

The Italian are good for nothing but to corrupt the taste of those who had no familiarity with the noble antients.
Hurd. On Chivalry and Romance, let. 9.

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD is where a person is attainted of Treason or Felony, by means whereof his blood is said to be Corrupted, and neither his children nor any of his blood can be heirs to him or any other ancestor. The King's pardon is not sufficient to restore blood that is Corrupted by attainder; an Act of Parliament alone can do so. See ATTAINDER.

CORSAIR, "Fr. corsaire or coursaire; a courser, a rover, a pyrate, a sea-thief." Cotgrave.

A course not without danger, as well in respect of the Turks' corsaires, as likewise smallness of the vessels prepar'd for transport of passengers. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 652.

Long mourn'd his band, whom none could mourn beside;
And fair the monument they gave his bride:
For him they raise not the recording stone—
His death yet dubious, deeds too widely known;
He left a corsair's name to other times,
Link'd with one virtue, and a thousand crimes.
Lord Byron. Corsair, can. 3. st. 24.

CO'RSE, n. Co'RSELET, v. Co'RSELET, n. Co'RSE-PRESENT. } Lat. corpus, a body. See CORPORAL, and CORPS. A body, a mere body; i. e. a lifeless, a dead body or carcass. Corselet; to cover the body. For Corse-present, see the Example from Blackstone.

That ye sayd ii. deed corses were drawē downe the steyers without pytie, and layed in ye court that all men myght beholde that myserable spectacle.
Fabyan. King John. The eighth Yere.

A sepulchre she builds
(But for a liuing corse)
And praide the Gods on sister's soule
To tak a iust remorse.
Gascoigne. The Complaynt of Phylomene.

The 20. day we manned our fiue boats, and also a great boat of the Frenchmen's with our men and the admirals, 12 of them in their murrains and corslets, and the rest all well appoynted.
Hakluyt. Voyage, &c. M. Will. Tourson.

Soone as the royall virgin he did spy,
With gaping mouth at her ran greedily,
To haue attonce deuour' her tender corse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 3.

These ranne together for the corse, and closde with horrid cryes,
Their armours thundering with the claps, laid on about the prize.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xvi. fol. 229.

1 Qu. The more proclaiming
Our suit shall be neglected, when her arms,
Able to knock Jove from a synod, shall
By warranting moon-light corslet thee.
Beaumont and Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, act i. sc. 1.

Oh, it was a noble sight to behold the tent of Timoleon the general, how they environed it all about with heaps of spoiles of every sort: among which there were a thousand brave corcelets gilt and graven with marvellous curious works, and they brought thither with them also ten thousand targets.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch. Timoleon, fol. 233.

——— From his void embrace,
Mysterious heaven! that moment, to the ground,
A blacken'd corse, was struck the beauteous maid.
Thomson. Summer.

He said, and pois'd in air the javelin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corselet pierces, and his garment rends,
And, glancing downward, near his flank descends.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, book iii.

No longer seek him east or west,
And search no more the forest thorough;
For, wandering in the night so dark,
He fell a lifeless corse in Yarrow.
Logan. The Braes of Yarrow.

CORSE. CORSICA.

And now the world unrivall'd they enjoy'd
In proud security: the crested helm,
The plated greave and corselet hung unbrac'd.
Dyer. Ruins of Rome.

It was anciently usual in this kingdom to bring the mortuary to church along with the corpse, when it came to be buried; and thence it is sometimes called a corse-present; a term which bespeaks it to have been once a voluntary donation.
Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. ii. p. 425.

CORSICA, called Cyrnos by the Greeks, and Corsica by the Romans, is one of the largest islands in the Mediterranean, lying immediately north of Sardinia, from which it is separated only by a strait. It stretches through about 110 miles from north to south, crosses the forty-second parallel, and projects in a narrow peninsula opposite the Island of Elba, and the coast of Etruria. The breadth is very unequal, being greatest in the middle, where it is about fifty miles, and least towards each extremity; the area is 4300 square miles. The population was lately stated at 175,000 individuals, which is about forty-one persons to each square mile. Corsica has been successively possessed by the Carthaginians, the Romans, the Goths, the Saracens, the Franks, the Pope, the Pisans, the Genoese, the English, and the French, to the last of which it was transferred in 1796. It was incorporated with the Empire, under Buonaparte. It is principally a region of mountains, the two most elevated summits of which, are Monte Rotondo, and Monte d'Oro; the former rising 9000 and the latter about 8720 feet above the level of the sea. Many of the elevated peaks are covered with snow during more than half of the year. The air in the vallies is often foggy, and is in some places considered as unhealthy; but the heats of summer are tempered by the sea breezes; while the mountainous nature of the country renders the winter more severe than is usually experienced in the same latitude. Corsica is watered by numerous streams and rivulets, and by several lakes, the principal of which are Creno, Ino, and Stagno di Diana. The soil, though stony, and but little cultivated, yields corn, wine, oranges, lemons, figs, and various other kinds of fruit. Its principal wealth, however, consists in oil, chestnuts, timber, and minerals; chiefly silver, copper, lead, and iron. Salt-petre and alum are also among the products of the Island. The forests are often extensive, and much silk is also produced, which is sent raw either to Genoa or Lyons. The fisheries near the coast are also valuable.

Situation. Extent and population. Mountains, &c. Productions.

The Corsicans obviously possess many natural advantages, which, in the hands of an industrious and frugal people, might easily be converted into sources of comfort, and ultimately into the means of opulence; but they are poor and indolent, raising scarcely sufficient grain to supply their own wants, having no manufactures of importance, and carrying on but little trade. They are zealous professors of the Roman Catholic religion, and superstitiously attached to its exterior ceremonies. Literature has made but little progress, and the fine Arts are scarcely known among them. Education, however, has lately been improved. The chief Town in the Island is ADJAZZO, (the ancient Ursinum,) which has already been described, as has Manners and customs. Chief Towns. Adjazzo.

CORSICA. CORTUSA

Bastia also, the former Capital of the Island. Porto Vecchio is only a small Town, situated on a Gulf of the same name, but it has an excellent harbour, capable of containing a great number of vessels. It stands about sixty miles south of Bastia, but is so encompassed with marshes as to render the air unhealthy, and the population is therefore only about 1250. Caliri is also another small Town in this Island.

Caliri.

CORSNED, "A. S. corsned; offa execrata, alias, judicialis; from cors, (curse,) execratio, maledictio, and sned vel snid, offa, bolus. A piece of bread, first by the Priest execrated, and then offered to the suspected, guilty person, to be swallowed in a way of purgation." Somner. But this bread was also called Ned-bread, i. e. need-bread; the bread which it was needful for the suspected person to take, which he was compelled to take. The form of the Exorcismus may be seen in Spelman's Glossarium, p. 439.

Another species of purgation, somewhat similar to the former, but probably sprung from a presumptuous abuse of revelation in the ages of dark superstition, was the corsned or morsel of execration: being a piece of cheese or bread, of about an ounce in weight, which was consecrated with a form of exorcism; desiring of the Almighty that it might cause convulsions and paleness, and find no passage if the man was really guilty; but might turn to health and nourishment, if he was innocent.

Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. iv. p. 345.

Ingulphus (198) states that Earl Godwin was choked by the Corsned. Cum Godwinus Comes in mensâ Regis de nece sui fratris impeteretur, ille post multa sacramenta tandem per buccellam deglutiendam abjuravit et buccellâ gustatâ continuo suffocatus interiit. The same story is told at greater length by Philippus Mouskes in his Historia Francorum, and more briefly by Vacces in his Roman de Rou. Du Cange, ad voc. Barley bread was used in preference to any other, apparently for no reason but that, being more difficult of mastication, it had more chance of choking.

CORTESIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx inferior, ten-toothed; corolla, five-parted; style, two-parted; stigma, globular-peltate; berry, two-seeded.

One species, C. cuneifolia, native of Buenos Ayres. Persoon.

CO'RTEX, Co'RTICAL, Co'RTICATED.

Lat. cortex, ex corium et tego; quia quasi corium tegat; because it covers like a hide. See Vossius. The bark or rind, the outward covering.

It being necessary for them that they be furnished not only with what preparations were required in the other, but also with a special hardiness of enduring to see the cortex of the Mosaick letter, as it were to break in pieces, to render up this recondite kernal for them to feed upon.

More. Philosophic Cabbala. Appendix, fol. 126. ch. vi.

Much after the same manner, as they have been observed, in the cortical and medullary parts of the brain.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book i. ch. v.

Which [the salamander] is a kind of lizard, a quadruped corticated and depilous, that is, without wool, fur or hair.

Sir Thomas Brown, book iii. ch. xiv.

This tree grows on the tops of hills, as well as in valleys; its hard cortical part makes very durable laths for houses.

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, book iv. v. 523.

CORTUSA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Lysimachiæ. Generic character: corolla wheel-shaped, tube very short, the mouth forming an elevated circle, segments ovate, acute; capsule one-celled, oval, apex five-valved. CORTUSA

This genus of Alpine plants, allied to Primula, contains two species, natives of Austria and Siberia. Persoon. CORVA

CORVEN, i. e. carven, or cut out. See Carve.

Tho was he corven out of his harneis,
And in a bed ybrouht full faire and blive,
For he was yet in memorie, and live,
And alway crying after Emelie.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2696.

CORVETTE, Fr. a small vessel of war, mounting less than twenty guns.

CORUNDUM, in Mineralogy, a species which includes the Adamantine Spar from India and China; and the precious Sapphire, the Oriental Ruby, Oriental Topaz, and Oriental Amethyst. Some of its varieties are used for cutting and polishing other hard stones and metals, being itself inferior in hardness only to the Diamond.

CORUNNA, a noted Sea-port of Galicia, in Spain, situated on the north-west coast, and standing on a small peninsula, at the entrance of the Bay of Betanzos. The harbour is safe and extensive, in the form of a crescent, and defended on each side by a castle. The fort of St. Anthony stands on an insulated rock, which commands both the harbour and a part of the road, and is so strong as to be used as a State Prison. A light-house also stands upon the adjacent heights, and is seen from a great distance at sea. The Town itself stands partly at the base, and partly on the acclivity of the hill, and is defended by a strong citadel. The upper part is walled round, the streets are narrow and steep, but in the lower division they are more spacious. The chief objects worthy of notice are the Royal Arsenal and an ancient Tower, which has attracted notice for its height and solidity. The population of Corunna, independent of sailors and military, is said not to exceed 4000, but including these, the total of the inhabitants is nearly three times that number. It is the residence of a Captain-General and a Provincial Intendant, as well as the seat of the supreme Court of Justice for Galicia. The commerce of this Port has greatly increased since the trade between Spain and her late transatlantic colonies was laid open to the public of the mother country; and it was lately the principal channel of communication between the Peninsula and those distant parts of the globe. Packets sailed monthly from Corunna to Havannah and New Spain, as well as every alternate month to Buenos Ayres, Chili, Peru, and the Philippine Islands. The intercourse between Spain and England is also chiefly carried on by the packets, which sail between Falmouth and this place. It was near this place that the engagement took place on the 16th January, 1809, between the French under Marshall Soult, and the English, after their painful and difficult retreat, commanded by Sir John Moore, who, after a most obstinate contest, was killed in the very arms of victory. Corunna is about twenty-eight miles north of Compostella, in latitude 43° 23′ 32″ north and longitude 8° 20′ 23″ west.

CORVORANT, the Cormorant, (q. v.) so called. Corvus marinus.

We know that the otter, the corvorant, and the grebes, soon perish, if caught under ice, or entangled in nets.

Pennant. British Zoology. Swallows.

ORVO-ANT.

ORVUS.

And the two last also frequent the sound. They are of the common sorts; the shags being our corvorant or water-crow.

Cook. Voyage, vol. vi. book iv. ch. ii.

CO'RUSCATE, v. CO'RUSCANT, adj. CORUSCA'TION. } Lat. coruscare, atum, to glitter; Martinius thinks from κόρυς, galea, a helmet, quæ splendida erat.

To glitter, to flash, dart, throw forth or emit, rays or sparks of light.

His praises are like those coruscant beams
Which Phœbus on high rocks of cristal streames.

Howell. Letter 49. book iv.

That if burning-glasses could be brought to great strength, (as they talk generally of burning-glasses that are able to burn a navy,) the percussion of the air alone, by such a burning-glass, would make no noise; no more than is found in coruscations, and lightnings without thunders.

Bacon. Natural History, Cent. 2. sec. 121.

As flaming fire was more coruscating and enlightening than any other matter, they invented lamps to hang in the sepulchres of the rich, which would burn perpetually.

Greenhill. Art of Embalming, p. 331.

But if I did press hard upon it with my finger, at the very instant that I drew it briskly off, it would disclose a very vivid, but exceeding short livid splendor, not to call it a little coruscation.

Boyle. Observations on a Diamond that shines in the dark.

Should any man pursue his acquaintances to their retreats, he would find few of them listening to Philomel, loitering in woods, or plucking daisies, catching the healthy gale of the morning, or watching the gentle coruscations of declining day.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 135.

CORVUS, from the Greek κόραξ, a Crow, Lin.; Crow, Pen. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Conirostres, order Passeres, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak strong, more or less flattened laterally, and having the nostrils covered with stiff, bristly feathers pointing forwards.

The birds which form this genus do not differ from the others in the family Conirostres in any material circumstance, except their size; their internal structure being the same. With respect to their habits, they are generally very cunning, and when domesticated are fond of stealing and hiding things for which they have no use, as pieces of money, &c. Some species are gregarious in a wild state, and a kind of government seems formed amongst them: a sentinel is usually set, who warns them of the approach of danger or the attack of an enemy, in which case, if they are strong enough, they muster in a body and repel him; otherwise they avoid him by taking to flight before his too near approach prevents their escape; this circumstance is well known to the sportsman, as the birds fly off before he can get within shot of them, and hence has arisen the vulgar notion of Crows smelling powder; a circumstance, however, probably depending on the extent of their vision, and not the keenness of their scent. Their note is harsh and unpleasant; but most of them may be taught to imitate the human voice, at least in some words. They build usually in trees, and lay from four to six eggs. As to food, they live principally on the grubs of Chafers and other insects, and also upon grain, but they are not such destroyers of seed as is commonly supposed.

They are divided by Cuvier into five subgenera, according to the arching of the beak, the length of the tail, and the existence of a tuft.

a Crows.

CORVUS.

Beak stronger in proportion, and its culminating edge more arched than in the others; tail round or square.

C. Corax, Lin.; le Corbeau, Buff.; Raven, Pen. Is the largest of all the birds belonging to the Passerine order, and equals the Domestic Cock in size, being about two feet in length. The beak is arched from the base to the tip, and black; its plumage black, glossed with blue, except the belly, which is dusky; the tail is rounded. The Raven lives more retired than the other species of this genus, amongst the woods in the neighbourhood of towns; he feeds upon carrion and other offal, which he scents at a great distance, and he lives to so great age, that in many languages expressions are borrowed from him to designate longevity. They fly at a great height, and usually in pairs, during fine weather, making a deep loud noise, different from their usual croaking. These birds are much attached to their old habitations; and Mr. White, in his History of Selborne, relates, that a pair of Ravens had fixed their residence in an old oak for so many years, that it acquired the name of the "Raven Tree;" nor were they disturbed by any endeavour to get at them, but built in the same tree year after year, till it was cut down, which being done whilst the female was sitting on her eggs, she was thrown out and killed. The female builds early in spring, lays five or six pale bluish eggs spotted with brown, and during the time of incubation (about twenty days) is closely attended by her mate, who provides her with food, and takes her place on the nest when she leaves it. When taken young, the Raven is easily tamed, and becomes very familiar, but is much addicted to thieving. During the times of ignorance, the croaking of the Raven was considered ominous, and portending some calamitous event: examples are too frequent to need citation, and we will refer to Shakspeare only:

"The Raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements."

C. Corone, Lin.; la Corneille, Buff.; Carrion Crow, Pen. The Crow is not half the size of the Raven, but very nearly resembles it in colour; its beak, however, is not so much arched, nor the tail so square. They are more numerous than Ravens, and live in pairs in the woods; like them also they live upon carrion, worms, insects, and different kinds of grain. Their croaking was considered by Virgil as foreboding rain:

Tum CORNIX plenâ pluviam vocat improba voce.

And like the Raven is believed to be a bird of ill omen.

Sæpe sinistra cavâ prædixit ab ilice CORNIX.

It seems that England is a more favourite residence for Crows than some other countries, as Linnæus mentions that he never knew more than one to be shot in Sweden. During the reign of Henry VIII., Crows were so numerous, and thought to do so much mischief to the farmer, that an Act was passed, by which every village was compelled to furnish Crow-nets for ten years, and the villagers to assemble at stated periods for the purpose of destroying them. Willughby says the Crow can be taught to speak very distinctly.

C. Frugilegus, Lin.; le Freux, Buff.; Rook, Pen. The Rook in size and plumage resembles the Crow, but it differs from it in having the base of the bill

CORVUS. covered with a rough scabrous skin, which in the old birds is white. Rooks live principally upon insects, or rather upon the grubs of insects, particularly that of the Dor-beetle, or Cockchafer; and it has been observed, that better crops have been obtained from patches of ground on which Rooks have alighted in search of food, than others from which they have been driven; so that they make ample compensation for the mischief they do in corn-fields. Rooks are gregarious, and are the only birds of this genus which are so; during the day they are out in large flocks in quest of food, but at night they return home to the rookery, which has been beautifully described by Virgil:

> ——— E pastu decedens agmine magno,
> Corvorum increpuit densis exercitus alis.

Before going to roost they may be observed wheeling about, and diving in a playful manner through the air, at the same time exerting their voices in a manner, which by many persons is considered very agreeable, and more particularly if at a distance. During the breeding season, which is about April, they build their nests close to each other, and not unfrequently in large towns. These Rookeries, however, are often disturbed by the contests of their inhabitants, any new settlers being driven away from their nests by the old ones. A curious instance of this occurred at Newcastle, in 1783. A pair of Rooks, after making an attempt to settle in a Rookery near the Exchange, were at last compelled to give up the contest; they, however, took up their residence on the vane of that building, upon which they made their nest, undisturbed by the noise of the passengers beneath, and the motion of the vane, which carried round the nest and its inhabitants with every change of the wind; they returned yearly, and built in the same place till 1793, soon after which the spire was taken down. As they are so much attached to their old haunts, they do not allow other birds to make a settlement among them; and a short account of a fierce contest between a flock of Rooks and Herons, the latter of which were anxious to dispossess the old tenants, has been adverted to, in speaking of the genus Ardea.

C. Cornix, Lin.; la Corneille mantelée, Buff.; Hooded Crow, Pen. Is rather larger than the Rook; the head, forepart of the neck, wings, and tail, black; the back and all the under-parts pale ash-coloured; it frequents the shores, and lives principally upon shell-fish. They leave us, to breed in other countries, in the spring, but return with the Woodcock, and are often seen mixing with Crows.

C. Jamaicensis, Lath.; Corneille à duvet blanc, Daud.; Chattering Crow, Sloane. It differs little from the Carrion Crow, but has a white down at the base of the feathers; it utters a chattering noise different from the European Crows.

C. Dauricus, Pall.; White-breasted Crow, Lath. About the size of a Jackdaw; has the neck and chest white, but sometimes cinereous. It is a native of Africa and Asia, where it assembles and migrates in vast flocks.

C. Albicollis, Lath.; le Corbeau Vautourin, Le Vaill.; South Sea Raven, Lath. Rather smaller than the Raven, and having the plumage of a dusky black, with a white patch on the neck, lessening as it comes forward, and forming a narrow collar; tail rather cuneiform, and the wings extending beyond it. The bird, according to Le Vaillant, is very common in the interior of Africa, where it assembles in large flocks, and preys upon carrion. It does not migrate, according to the same traveller; but it is also found in the South Sea Islands. The female is smaller than the male, and of a duller colour. CORVUS.

C. Monedula, Lin.; le Choucas, Buff.; Jackdaw, Pen. Is a much smaller bird than the Rook, not measuring more than thirteen inches in length; the general colour of the plumage glossy black above and dusky beneath; the head and neck greyish; eyes white; bill and legs black; the head is large in proportion to the body, and Willughby hence "argues them to be ingenious and crafty." The Jackdaw is very common in England, and builds in church towers or ruins, in large flocks; it rarely builds in trees, but has been occasionally found in Rabbit burrows. They are easily tamed, and taught to speak some words.

β Magpies.

Not so large as the Crows; the upper mandible more arched; the tail long and cuneiform.

C. Pica, Lin.; la Pie, Buff.; Magpie, Pen. Is about the size of the Jackdaw; the head, neck, and breast, of a deep black, whilst the under-parts and scapulars are white, and form a beautiful contrast; as the neck and back feathers are very long, they only leave a small ash grey-coloured space between them, and the tail coverts, which are black; the general colour of the plumage is of an iridescent green and purple, which catches the eye in different lights, and gives the bird a very beautiful appearance; the tail is very long and cuneiform. The Magpie is very careful in building her nest, defending it externally with sharp thorns, and leaving but a narrow entry, whilst she lines it within with wool. The bird is notorious for its mischievous propensities, and is very familiar; it also may be soon taught to speak. The Magpie seems confined to the temperate and northern regions.

C. Senegalensis, Lin.; le Piapiac, Le Vaill.; Senegal Crow, Lath.; Senegal Magpie. Very nearly resembles the Magpie; it is of a violet black colour, and has the tail longer and sharper. It is a native of Africa.

C. Ventralis, Shaw; la Pie à culotte de peau, Le Vaill.; Rose-bellied Crow, Shaw; Rose-bellied Magpie. About the size of a Blackbird; general colour black, with a rose-coloured belly; tail half as long again as the bird, and very cuneiform. Native of the South Seas.

C. Erythrorhynchus, Gmel.; la Pie bleue, Le Vaill.; Red-billed Jay, Lath.; Red-billed Magpie. About the size of the Jay; general colour greyish brown, with a violet cast on the wings and tail; forehead, front of the neck, and breast, deep black; occiput greyish white, under-parts pale ash-colour; edges of wing feathers tipped with white, forming, when closed, a double row of white crescents along the back; tail feathers very long, and of a violet colour, crossed by a broad black bar, and tipped with white; the bill is rather orange-coloured than red. Native of China, where it is domesticated, and much esteemed for its beauty and docility.

C. Cayanus, Lin.; Cayenne Jay, Pen.

C. Cyanus, Pall.; Blue Crow, Lath.

C. Peruvianus, Lath.

C. Rufus, Lath. All belong to the subgenus Magpie.

γ Jays.

Mandibles not very long, and terminating in a sudden curve; when the tail is closed it becomes rather longer; the tuft on the forehead composed of narrow lanceolated plumes, and movable.

C. Glandularius, Lin.; le Geai, Buff.; Jay, Pen. This, though one of our most common birds, is remarkably beautifully; it is about thirteen inches long; neck, back, and breast of a light cinnamon colour; belly and vent nearly white; bill black; eyes white; the head feathers white, streaked with black, and forming a tuft, which can be elevated or depressed at pleasure; a broad black streak under each eye extending from the junction of the mandibles; lesser wing coverts bay, greater barred with black, little blue and white alternately; quills black, but those next the body chestnut; rump white; tail black and edged with brown. The Jay builds her nest on the top of underwood, laying a foundation of coarse sticks, and afterwards the fine fibres of the roots of trees; and the young follow the parent till the following spring. They live upon acorns during the winter, whence their specific name, but during summer make great havock amongst peas and cherries. Their note is very harsh, but when domesticated they will soon imitate many words and sounds. Bewick mentions one which imitated very completely the sound of sawing; whilst another learnt the trick of whistling a dog upon cattle at their return home. They are very cunning, and give the alarm when a sportsman approaches by their discordant cries.

C. Cristatus, Lin.; le Geai bleu de l'Amerique Septentrionale, Buff.; Blue Jay, Catesby. Is less than the English Jay; the general plumage a fine blue; the wings and tail barred with black, and the neck having a black collar. It is a native of North America, and said to be a great destroyer of maize.

C. Stelleri, Lin.; Stellers Crow, Lath.

C. Sibiricus, Buff.

C. Canadensis, Lin.; le Geai brun de Canada, Buff.; Cinereous Crow, Shaw.

C. Auritus, Lath.; le Petit Geai de la Chine, Sonnerat.

C. Galericulatus, Le Vaill.

All belong to this subgenus.

δ Nutcrackers.

Both mandibles pointed and straight.

C. Caryocatactes, Lin.; le Casse Noix ordinaire, Buff.; Nutcracker, Bewick. This bird is about thirteen inches long; it has been shot in England, but is very rare; the head and back part of the neck are black; the general colour brown spotted with white; the wings black, and the greater coverts tipped with white, as is also the tail, but the rest of it is black; legs and claws black. It lives in the holes of trees in mountainous districts, and feeds on all kinds of fruit and insects.

ε Temias.

Beak rounded, and furnished with fine velvet-like feathers at its base; tail similar to the Magpies.

C. Temia, Le Vaill.; Temia. Is the only species found in this subgenus; it is about the size of the Thrush, with black bill and legs; the feathers surrounding the root of the bill short and velvet-like, as are also those on the throat; the general colour is a greenish bronze, and the tail long and cuneiform. It is a native of Africa.

The other species described formerly in this genus are by Cuvier assigned to different genera, with the exception of the C. Eremita, which he does not believe exists. The C. Graculus, or Red-legged Crow is an Upupa.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ; Cuvier, Règne Animal; Buffon, Histoire des Oiseaux; Bewick, History of British Birds; and Pennant, British Zoology.

CORYBANTICK, adj. Cotgrave has, "Corybanter; madly to run up and down, playing on a cymbal, and wagging his head like one of Cybele's Priests." Various Etymologies have been offered for this word,—Corybantes. Strabo, lib. x., says, that they were so called ἀπὸ τοῦ κορύπτονται βαίνειν, quia cum saltatione incederent.

True divine zeal is no corybantick fury, but a calm and regular heat, guided and managed by light and prudence.
Cudworth. Sermon, p. 92.

The Mythology of the Corybantes as connected with the Cabiri, has been investigated under the latter head; but the title must generally be understood as descriptive of the Priests of Cybele. He who would fully comprehend the nature of the Corybantick fury, must study it in the Atys of Catullus, a Poem not to be surpassed in its kind, and of the spirit of which it were hopeless to attempt any adequate conveyance in translation.

CORYCIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Gynandria, order Monogynia, natural order Orchideæ. Generic character: corolla ringent; petals four, erect, the lateral ones swelling at the base; lip of the nectary inserted into the style, above the adnate anthers, capsule oblong, seeds many.

Four species, natives of the Cape of Good Hope. Willd.

CORYDALIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Diadelphia, order Octandria, natural order Fumariaceæ. Generic character: calyx two-leaved; corolla, petals four, irregular, inferior petals linear, superior, with spurs at the base; seed-vessel flat, two-valved.

Twenty-eight species, natives of the Northern Hemisphere. De Candolle, Reg. Veg.

Corydalis, in Zoology, a genus of insects of the order Neuroptera, family Megaloptera. Generic character: wings lying horizontally; antennæ simple, mandibula very long, and directed forwards.

Type, Hemerobius Cornutus, Fabr.

Native of South America. De Geer, tom. iii. p. 359. pl. 27. fig. 1.

CORYLUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Monœcia, order Polyandria, natural order Amentaceæ. Generic character: male flower, calyx, the scale of the catkin three-cleft; corolla none; stamens eight: female flower, calyx cloven, torn; corolla none; styles two; nut ovate, of one cell, clothed with the bark-like calyx.

Five species, natives of Europe and North America. C. avellana, the Hazel-nut, of which the Filbert is a variety, is a native of England and of Europe, generally affording with its companion the "hedge row Elm," protection to the farmer.

CORYMBIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx inferior, two-leaved; corolla funnel-shaped, superior; anthers united; seeds involved in a cottony substance.

CORYMBIUM. CORYPHÆNA.

Four species, natives of the Cape of Good Hope.

